Mr. SCHENCK. Well, the cream and the skim-milk together. [Laughter.] Now, I propose by this amendment I have offered to reach only the manufacturer, the large manufacturer, the same as we would any other manufacturer.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have but a word or two to say on this subject. I trust the committee will not follow the lead of my distinguished and vigorous colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] on this matter, and for this reason: it has been decided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that a person who raises a certain amount of farm products in the form of cheese or butter, unless the law specifies to the contrary, is a manufacturer, and as such must take out a special license, or, as we now term it, must pay a special tax. Now, by the law of last year we declared that in case his manufacture of these articles did not exceed $1,000 a year the farmer should be exempt from tax.

But it is found that a very large number of farmers throughout the country manufacture annually each a little more than $1,000 worth. If the law is left as it now is, and a farmer should happen to manufacture $1,010 worth of butter and cheese, he would have to pay the special tax; while the farmer who manufactured $990 worth would pay no tax at all. We have adopted as a general principle the principle of not taxing agricultural products which form the necessities of life; and I have no doubt Congress is ready to reverse its legislation hitherto against those articles.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky. I move to amend by inserting after the words "five hundred dollars" the following:

Provided, That distillers who manufacture less than one hundred barrels per annum shall pay $100.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division, there were—ayes 26, noes 57; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky, and Mr. GARFIELD, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 42, noes 57.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the following:

In paragraph sixteen strike out "$100," and insert in lieu thereof "$500."

I understand the object of this bill to be to raise revenue at reduced rates of taxation. This is not a temperance bill, and I understand the chairman of the committee, [Mr. MORRILL] who reported the bill, to say that his purpose was to reduce instead of increasing the tax. Yet, strange to say, this provision proposes to raise the tax on distillers from $100 to $500.

Now, what will be the effect of that? The amount of $100 was so large a tax that the small distillers, who made good, honest whisky, could not afford to pay it. If you raise it to $500 you will confer a monopoly upon the large distillers, destroy all the small manufacturers, and cut off the revenue to the extent of the tax upon all the liquor that could be made by the small distillers. And while the manufacture will all be in the hands of the large distillers, it should be borne in mind that the quality bears a fair inverse proportion to the quantity manufactured.

Instead of encouraging the manufacture of pure good whisky, made by the little distillers, whisky which a man can drink regularly three times a day and live to be a hundred years old, you allow the monopolists to make a sort of liquor that will poison and kill a man at the distance of a hundred feet. What propriety can there be in this? The man with small means ought to be put upon an equal footing with the man of large means. One man has as good a right to make one hundred barrels of whisky in a season as another has to make five thousand barrels in a season. I know how this thing operates. [Laughter.] I am inclined to think, Mr. Chairman, that these gentlemen understand it also, or they would not take the hint so quickly.

In my own district, sir, whisky is manufactured extensively. The county in which I reside will, it is estimated, pay a million and a half of dollars into the Treasury this season upon the manufacture of whisky. But this proposition will cut out all the smaller manufacturers. It will greatly reduce the quantity manufactured in my own section of country. It will largely diminish the revenue of the Government; and it will condemn all you gentlemen, who smile when I say that I understand this proposition, to drink rank and poisonous whisky instead of consuming the pure and wholesome article.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two in regard to this clause of the bill. The Committee of Ways and Means desired very much to protect our friends in Kentucky and others similarly situated in the manufacture of whisky by means of their small distilleries. But from the experience which has been had in the administration of the law with reference to distilled spirits, it is perfectly apparent that, unless we adopt more stringent provisions on this subject, it will be impossible for the Government to raise anything like the adequate amount of revenue from this source. Notwithstanding the fact that there have been manufactured during the last year from sixty to ninety million gallons, which ought to have yielded the Government from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and eighty million dollars, the Government has received from this source but twenty-nine millions.

Now, sir, one means whereby we seek to prevent fraud is by requiring each man who manufactures distilled spirits to procure a license for that purpose, so as to cut off illicit distillation by those who have no license whatever. Therefore the committee have deemed it prudent to recommend that the license for distillers shall be increased to $500 instead of $100, as now provided by law. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that this provision will operate harshly upon a class of small distillers who may be worthy men; but on this question of raising revenue the interests of these men must yield to the public necessity, which requires that the Government shall raise a large amount of revenue from this source, thus relieving the great producing and manufacturing interests of the country from onerous and burdensome taxation. I hope, therefore, that the House will sustain the Committee of Ways and Means in their efforts to make a stringent law on this subject of whisky.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I am disposed, Mr. Chairman, to aid the Committee of Ways and Means so far as I can in their effort to make a stringent law to prevent fraud in the manufacture of whisky. But I believe that committee were at the last session of Congress laboring under a great delusion, and I think that delusion is not yet dispelled. The legislation adopted at their instance during the last session proceeded upon the principle that if we would crush out all the small manufacturers of whisky and monopolize the manufacture in the hands of the large concerns we would prevent fraud. I think the result has been this: while the small distillers were permitted to go on and manufacture, they defrauded the Government out of about one half the tax; and since the manufacture has been concentrated in the hands of the large manufacturers they defraud the Government out of the whole tax. With this experience, it seems to me it is about time that we should reverse our system and abandon the policy of trying to crush out the small manufacturers.

Why, sir, when the tax was but twenty cents per gallon we derived an annual revenue of $28,000,000, and when the tax was put up to two dollars a gallon, under this system of concentrating all this business in the hands of large manufacturers, I understand we only get about eighteen million dollars of revenue, while one hundred and fifty million to one hundred and sixty million dollars is lost to the revenue through the frauds perpetrated upon the Government by these large manufacturers. I want the House to understand that.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman who has just addressed the House is somewhat under a delusion himself. I am not aware that the Committee of Ways and Means has yet been able to concentrate this business in the hands of any one; but I am aware in large places that these small distilleries with no license run stills in garrets and cellars. They not only do not pay any tax upon their whisky, but they do not even pay a license tax.

Mr. MAYNARD. How is it, if they evade this $100 tax, they will not also evade a tax of $500, five times as much?

Mr. MORRILL. We propose so far as possible to increase the risks, so as to deter men from any violation of the law; and as one step in that direction we put the amount of the license tax so high that the man who runs a ten-pot distillery will not go into the illicit business with a heavy penalty like that we impose hanging over him.

We have changed the law, and now impose not only fine, but imprisonment. We think that parties cannot afford to run the risk.

The question in regard to the amount of revenue collected does not concern the small distilleries any more than the large ones. If the gentleman were arguing against the tax of two dollars a gallon I could conceive such reference would be pertinent.

Mr. THAYER. I ask the gentleman from Vermont if the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin, in reference to the amount of revenue collected, is correct?

Mr. MORRILL. It is not absolutely correct.

Mr. THAYER. Is the disparity so great as $18,000,000?

Mr. MORRILL. The amount we have received under the largest tax is a little larger than we received under any other.

Mr. SLOAN, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DARLING. I move to strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. Chairman, in the course of investigation by my committee in New York, Philadelphia, and Brooklyn, we have discovered that in New York and Brooklyn alone there are four thousand illicit distilleries, and the fact stands upon record only one hundred licenses were taken out in New York and seventy-one in Brooklyn. And, sir, a great many of those licenses have been given to distilleries that have not returned forty gallons for one month, which paid eighty dollars tax, while $125 was paid to the inspector. This being so, how then are they supported but by fraud? In the district of Brooklyn, before September, 1866, there were nearly one hundred licenses taken out, and the same number continued on after September, but only thirty-three took out licenses. These illicit distilleries formed a part of that "ring" in which the officers of the Government were implicated with Devlin & Co. These illicit distilleries only paid into the Treasury of the Government $3,300, when according to their capacity of production they should have paid $20,000 per day.

Now, sir, I contend the only way in which the Government is going to enforce its revenue and to suppress these illicit distilleries is to surround and hedge in the manufacture with all the instruments of power we possess, by the imposition of large license tax, enacting severe regulations, and requiring short periods for inspection and report.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DARLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it true, as I have heard reported, this Devlin & Co. are now under indictment and yet are still selling alcohol for a little more than two dollars a gallon when the tax is four dollars? Is that true?

Mr. DARLING. They have been selling alcohol, but that is the product of whisky which they got from illicit distillers, and as it takes about two gallons of proof whisky to make one gallon of alcohol, of course the tax on the alcohol would be about four dollars, but really the tax is only two dollars.

Mr. GRINNELL. I would suggest whether, instead of it being Devlin & Co. who are doing this cheating, it is not Devil & Co. [Laughter.]

Mr. DARLING. As I did not see the horns nor tail I cannot answer that question. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROMWELL. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from New York proposes to lay a further tax on honest distillers who take out licenses in order to punish the men who transact business without a license. I ask him if these men do not distill now in spite of the law without a license? Now, what will be the effect to raise the license on the men who do take it out? Will there not be still greater inducement for men to distill illicitly? The gentleman says there are four thousand illicit distillers. What is the cause of it? It is a want of honesty somewhere. Will the addition of $400 to the cost of the license increase the vigilance or honesty of the inspectors? Is it not because the men who are appointed to look after these things have gone hand in hand with illicit manufacturers that we have to complain? How, then, can the additional tax to be imposed on the men who have violated no law affect the conduct of the agents of the Government and the illicit manufacturers? It seems to me if nothing can be done to guard against illicit manufacture now, when the inducements are less than they would be under this proposition, nothing can be done in the future by such an amendment as this.

Besides, every time that a new embarrassment is laid on the small manufacturer he is driven from the business, and it only tends to monopolize the business. It goes into fewer hands, that have more money to buy up the agents, and in the end the community have to pay much higher prices, while the manufacturer pockets more money in proportion to what the Government gets. The result is a greater degree of demoralization and dishonesty on the part of the manufacturers.

Now, if this amendment was one which looked at the character and morals of these men, at infusing more vigilance and honesty into these agents, I would favor it. The gentleman from Iowa speaks of providing every protection against this illicit business. What protection is it against the fraud of A that B is taxed the more? What protection is it against frauds if you tell a man that he must pay $400 more for a license?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I think we have discussed this subject far enough, and I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate on the pending paragraph.

The question being put, there were—ayes 47, noes 26; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and McKEE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 50.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOWWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that when the House again resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union all debate on the pending paragraph be terminated in ten minutes.

Mr. McKEE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division, there were—ayes fourteen.

Before the noes were counted, Mr. McKEE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and McKEE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes thirty-five, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that in order to avoid the delay of taking the yeas and nays he agree to let the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKEE] have all the time till the recess.

Mr. MORRILL. I have submitted that proposition to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKEE] and he has declined to accept it.

Mr. McKEE. So far as I am individually concerned I should not want more than ten minutes; but there are other gentlemen who desire to be heard, and therefore I am opposed to the proposition to close all debate upon the pending paragraph in ten minutes.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 59, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Baldwin, Baxter, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Broome, Cobb, Cook, Darling, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kellogg, Ketcham, Ladin, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McKuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Porham, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Nelson Taylor, Trowbridge, Upton, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Bergen, Bingham, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Campbell, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Delane, Bekley, Eldridge, Finck, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Hise, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Phelps, Platts, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Whaley, and Williams—59.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Banks, Beaman, Bidwell, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culom, Culver, Deftoes, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Jonckes, Jones, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Loan, McCullough, McIndoe, Morris, Moulton, Newell, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Woodbridge, and Wright—60.

So the motion that all debate upon the pending paragraph of the tax bill be closed in ten minutes was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 157) in relation to ocean mail service between San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in Oregon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed without amendment bill of the House No. 452, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BOUTWELL in the Chair) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon the pending paragraph has been ordered by the House to close in ten minutes. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DARLING] to increase the tax on distillers from $500, as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, to $1,000.

Mr. MORRILL. The committee is probably unaware of the effect which will be produced by the proposed change in the existing law. I will therefore call attention to the two provisos which will remain unchanged should the amendment be adopted. The first proviso is as follows:

Provided, That distillers of apples, grapes, or peaches, distilling or manufacturing fifty and less than one hundred and fifty barrels per year from the same, shall pay fifty dollars; and those distilling or manufacturing less than fifty barrels per year from the same shall pay twenty dollars.

That will remain unchanged even if the proposed amendment be adopted. The next proviso is as follows:

And provided further, That no tax shall be imposed for any still, stills, or other apparatus used by druggists and chemists for the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical and chemical or scientific purposes which has been used in those processes.

Now, after having made these provisions in relation to the distillers of grapes, apples, and peaches, I think we may be quite content to raise the amount of license tax upon those who distill alcohol from molasses or grain.

Having said all that I desire to say upon the subject, I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. SCHENCK. As all debate is to be stopped upon this paragraph in a few minutes, I will say very briefly, of course, what I desire to say upon this subject.

The House having settled the principle that where persons carry their milk, the product of their farms, to an establishment to be made into cheese and butter, he shall not be exempt from taxation. I now wish to extend that principle to other things.

In my district we produce a great many grapes, which are manufactured into wine. Our wine-makers are all obliged to take out a license as manufacturers. At the proper time I shall move to amend by inserting after the word "butter" the words "hominny, brooms, cider, bread, sausages, sauerkraut, wine."

[Laughter.]

Mr. SPALDING. I suggest to my colleague that he add butter-milk.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the Speaker resumed the Chair, and the House took a recess till half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock.

TAX BILL.

Agreeably to order, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1161) to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. DARLING, to strike out in line forty-six the words "five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand," so as to make the tax to be paid by distillers $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House five minutes remain for general debate on the pending paragraph.

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky, obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. With the consent of the gentleman from Kentucky, I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman who has charge of this bill. There is manifestly not a quorum present; and as this is an important section I would suggest that it be passed over for the present, to be considered when a quorum shall be here, and that we proceed now with that portion of the bill to which there is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKEE. I object.

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the reasons urged by various gentlemen with reference to the amount of license to be required of distillers; and I confess that the reasons which have been presented are in my judgment wholly insufficient to justify the House in rejecting the amendment which I have presented. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DARLING] seems to think that the license ought to be increased as a sort of penalty upon men for practising frauds upon the revenue. I would suggest to him that if he wants to punish frauds upon the revenue he had better attach the penalty to that clause which imposes the punishment for the violation of the law. By imposing this excessive charge for a license, the man who has never violated the law and has no purpose to violate, it is required to pay a penalty. You impose the penalty upon the innocent in order to punish the guilty. I desire to suggest also that it is the certainty of punishment, not its severity, which insures the execution of a law. It is the universal experience of all men that when you impose extraordinary penalties, the law is always difficult of execution, and the penalty is seldom inflicted.

I pass on to consider for a moment the reasons urged by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. MORRILL] who reported this bill. For his financial ability I entertain the highest respect, and I know that it is deservedly held in high esteem by the House; yet the reasons which he has urged in this case are, it seems to me, utterly insufficient to justify the House in voting against my amendment. Now, what is it? He urges in this amendment an imposition of $500 as a license tax instead of $100, as provided by existing law. Well, let us see how it works in figures. As I remarked before the recess, I come from a locality where the people are engaged extensively in the manufacture of whisky. If this amendment to charge $500 for license be adopted you will cut off at least ten small distilleries in my own county that will make on the average fifty barrels a season, five hundred barrels at forty gallons a barrel, twenty thousand gallons in all, from which, at two dollars a gallon, you derive $40,000 of revenue. Adopt this amendment, and what do you get in the shape of revenue? You reduce the number of distilleries in that county to about ten or fifteen, and you get $400 in addition to the present license tax, or $6,000 in all. You lose $40,000, and in return only get $6,000.

The gentleman's allusion to apples, peaches, and grapes was only a begging of the question. There is no sort of grain which enters into that manufacture. It does not touch the small distilleries.

You reduce the revenue by this amendment. What else do you do? You create a monopoly besides reducing the revenue, and you poison the whole universal earth with mean whisky; and besides that, as is suggested, you open the door to fraud. It does seem to me the amendment is obviously improper.

It appears, Mr. Chairman, whenever any deficiency happens in the revenue you fall back upon whisky manufacturers. What have they done that they should be made the scapegoat for everybody on the face of the earth who wants to get rid of some liability?

Mr. SCOTFIELD. They can stagger under a pretty heavy load. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. If you keep this amendment in, you will have such an infernal whisky that it will depopulate your party. [Renewed laughter.]

The question recurred on Mr. DARLING's amendment, to strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000."

The amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. WARD, of Kentucky, to strike out "$500" and leave the license tax at $100 as now.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. WARD, of Kentucky, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw my opposition, but shall ask for a vote in the House.

The amendment was considered as adopted.

Mr. ELIOT. I have an amendment which the Committee of Ways and Means do not object to. Page 8, line forty-nine, after the word "cheese" insert, "or of any tender of wind-mills for grinding grain."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to insert before the word "cheese," the words "hominny, brooms, cider, bread, sausages, sauerkraut, and wine." [Laughter.]

The amendment was adopted, with the understanding there should be a vote on it in the House.

Mr. McKEE. I move on page 8, line forty-five, after the word "less" to insert:

That section seventy-nine be amended, as follows: In paragraph five strike out the words "twenty-five dollars" and insert "five hundred dollars."

It is in relation to the tax on retail dealers and coffee-house keepers.

The committee divided, and there were; ayes 19; noes 50—no quorum voting.

The Chairman ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. WARD, of Kentucky, and Mr. ALLISON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 19, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DARLING. I move on page 8, line forty-five, after the word "less," to insert:

In paragraph eighteen, section seventy-nine, strike out "twenty-five dollars," wherever it occurs, and insert "five hundred dollars."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after the word "cheese" the words "from skippers of fishing vessels," commonly called "market fishermen."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section ninety-four be amended as follows: Strike out in the paragraph relating to gas the words "and until the 30th day of April, 1867."

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to strike out the paragraph just read. I would like to hear from the chairman of the committee what reason can be assigned for extending relief to the gas company at the expense of the consumers? Last year, when the tax bill was passed, it was claimed that the expense of making gas was very great. There were some companies in New York that had placed themselves under a contract to furnish gas for a certain period of time, and it was thought no more than just by a majority of this House that they should be relieved. The relief, however, was obtained at the expense of the consumer. Now, the manufacture of gas can be carried on for considerable less than it could be a year ago. It was thought necessary last year to relieve certain companies from their contracts, under which they claimed they were suffering. Now it seems to me if we are to look to the interest of the consumers rather than the interest of gas companies we had better visit some portion of the burden of this tax bill upon the owners of stock in these corporations that are paying from fifteen to forty per cent. dividends every year. I think we had better bestow our attention to the relief of the people rather than the relief of wealthy corporations. I hope, unless some good reason can be given, that the committee will strike out this provision and make these companies pay their own tax instead of putting it all on the consumer.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say to the gentleman that the reasons which induced the committee to introduce this amendment were the same that induced them to report the same proposition last year, when the House chose to insert this limitation. I will state briefly what the facts were.

In a very large number of cities and villages of the United States the gas companies had been organized on certain conditions; for instance, that they should furnish the gas at certain fixed rates. They were organized under a contract. Now, there have been fluctuations in the price of gold, and in many instances it has cost a great deal more to make their gas than it did before the war when their contracts were made. It was found that while they were bound by their contract or by the act of incorporation to furnish gas at the same rate they furnished it before the war, the rise in the price of gold had made it very difficult for them barely to live. Now, the Government of the United States comes in and adds the Federal tax over and above all their other taxes and burdens, and in many instances, especially in the case of small companies in villages, it actually made the tax upon them so heavy that with their other expenses they were actually losing money every month.

Now, as we by law had changed the condition of their contract for furnishing gas, it was deemed no more than just that we should also by law authorize them to tax the addition upon their consumers. The committee is perfectly well aware that in some of the large cities where the manufacture of gas is very profitable, perhaps this works injustice to the consumer and gives more profit to the gas companies than they ought to get. But if we do not allow this to be done in the law as we have here proposed, it is a very heavy burden upon a very large number of smaller companies, especially in the villages.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Will the gentleman inform us what State imposes any prohibition upon the price of gas furnished by gas companies?

Mr. GARFIELD. My own State, and I understand also the State of New York. It was stated before the committee that in many States they were chartered by special act, and their charter limited the price at which they should furnish the gas.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Allow me to state that in New York there is no law limiting it. There is one company in the city that has a prohibition upon it, which was made because it asked for another franchise. The State gave it another franchise, but imposed upon it the condition that they should sell the gas at a certain price.

Now, there is not a single company in the State of New York that is thus limited except this one. The other companies are prohibited simply because this one is compelled to sell its gas at a certain price. And to-day the stock of this company is worth in the market more than two hundred per cent.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say that I have just expressed the reasons which induced the Committee of Ways and Means to take the action they have. We have brought the subject before this House, and do not make the slightest point upon it, except to state the fact. We simply feel that when we have placed a wrong burden upon a company we ought to take off that wrong as far as we are able.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out the words "strike out." I do this for the purpose of saying that this strikes me as an old acquaintance. Last year a bill was reported here making a most odious and atrocious distinction in favor of gas and railway companies against all others, by permitting them to charge their tax over against their consumers and patrons; thus making it a tax upon the people and not a tax at all upon the companies and their business. We defeated that distinction at the last session. Here it is now revived again, and I hope it will be again defeated by this Congress.

What is the pretense for this proposed action? Why, that these gas companies are limited by law in the amount of their charges. Is not the rate of interest on money loaned limited? The Legislature permits a man to charge six or seven per cent. upon promissory notes or upon money loaned. And yet you charge him a tax upon his income arising from that source; and that tax comes out of the man who receives the interest. Now, if when you charge him a tax upon his income from interest you allow him to add so much more to the interest, he would not care how much you charged him.

The idea should be to charge these gas companies and their business, and not charge the people. But the provision as here reported has been so contrived as to make the people pay the tax. I do not know that the Committee of Ways and Means have introduced the same relief for railroad companies as they did last year. But I repeat that this is an atrocious, odious, and infamous distinction attempted to be made, by which certain companies shall escape the tax entirely and make the people pay the tax for them. I hope that no such legislation will be permitted by this House this year.

Mr. DAVIS. I have heard the agrarian sentiments uttered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] too often upon this floor to be alarmed by their expression at this time. I say that we are here, as the Congress of the United States, to do justice to capital invested for the benefit and for the interest of the people and of the communities of this country. And I wish to remind the gentleman from Ohio, and every other gentleman in this House, that corporate capital is invested in gas companies and in railroad companies to accomplish great public purposes which cannot be accomplished by individual capital. Now, I ask gentlemen to tell me of a single instance in which private enterprise is engaged in production, manufacture, or anything else, where it may not impose upon the purchaser of the articles of its production, which it sells in the market, any tax which is imposed upon it by the Government.

Now, I undertake to say, although I have not one dollar of interest in the world in the gas companies of this country, that there is no gas company whose price is limited by its charter or by contracts made with cities or other corporations to $2 50 per thousand feet, which is the case with many gas companies, than can live up to its contract. I will take, for instance, the Manhattan Gas Company of New York city: that company has a capital of $4,000,000, and has been going on under a contract with the corporation of the city of New York and the limitations in its charter supplying its consumers for the last two years. And the operations of that company for the last year, the year 1866, show that without receiving one single cent upon the capital invested, which is $4,000,000, it has made a profit of sixty-six cents on its business over its expenses.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What is the stock of the company worth?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not care what it is worth.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is it not worth two hundred and twenty per cent. on the dollar?

Mr. DAVIS. I venture to say it is not worth any such sum.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Is it not so quoted by the brokers?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not here as a stock-jobber at all; that is a business in which the gentleman from Buffalo [Mr. HUMPHREY] is more interested than I am. I undertake to say that there is not a single stock company in the State of New York whose stock is worth any such sum.

Now, sir, there is a gas company in the city of Pittsburg whose report I have before me; and by this report it appears that this company supplies the city with gas by contract at $1 60 per thousand feet. For sixteen million feet of gas furnished by the company to the city the company receive $2,625, while the tax on that quantity is $4,000. The result is, that the company pays about thirteen hundred dollars for the privilege of furnishing the city with gas for nothing.

A MEMBER. Why do they not apply to the Legislature?

Mr. DAVIS. The company has applied to the Legislature; and the same narrow, mean, petty opinions which are expressed by the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] operate upon the Legislature to prevent the company from getting any relief.

Now, sir, I wish to meet this question as an American legislator, looking to the interests of the whole people and to every interest of capital, whether invested by private individuals or by public corporations.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DELANO. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word of the paragraph. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to a proposition which I desire to submit whenever a suitable opportunity may offer. The law as it now stands allows gas companies to charge over the tax to their consumers. On the 1st of April next this privilege will expire; and the proposition is now made to strike out from the existing law the words providing for the limitation, so that this privilege shall be permitted to continue.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to adopt the conclusion that it would be wise to allow that privilege to all the gas companies in the country indefinitely. I would, therefore, prefer an amendment which I shall offer, should the proposition to strike out be voted down, providing that this privilege shall be allowed to those companies only whose consumption does not exceed one hundred and fifty thousand feet per month. Those who know anything about this matter know that where companies manufacture gas largely the business is exceedingly profitable, and the stock of such companies is valuable. But gas has become such a necessary convenience that it is manufactured in many of the smaller towns of the country; and the companies manufacturing it in those towns can with difficulty sustain themselves.

I hope, therefore, that the House will consider this question, looking to the interest of the consumer and to the interest of these small companies, and will reject the amendment proposing to strike out the clause of the bill, and will afterward adopt the amendment which I have already indicated and which I shall offer. If this amendment be adopted our small interior towns of three or four thousand inhabitants can enjoy the benefits of gas at a moderate price. Unless some such modification be adopted we shall break up or very seriously embarrass these small companies.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] to add to his amendment, when offered, the following words, "and those companies that are limited by their charter as to the price of gas."

Mr. DELANO. I accept the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] that in regard to a company that is not limited in its charter as to the price of gas, neither the Legislature nor this Congress has a right to interfere. Hence the amendment suggested would amount to nothing. It is only where there is a limitation that Congress can interpose for relief.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to suggest to the gentleman from New York the proposition, as modified, will leave the question with this proviso stricken out.

Mr. DELANO, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to strike out the word "gas." I feel under obligations to my distinguished friend from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] I intended to make the motion myself. I made a fight on this question last winter. You will recollect distinctly, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] will recollect, that the only way exception was made in this bill of gas and railroad companies was on the theory they wanted to get the State Legislatures to act in their behalf at home. On that theory and that theory alone was it allowed them to be an exception. It was on that theory we made the limit the 1st day of April, 1867. We supposed that would be sufficient.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire, in answer to the gentleman, to say it was distinctly stated during the last session it was useless to go to the Legislatures of many of the States for relief, because there was the same local prejudice against corporations there as here.

Mr. EGGLESTON. If my distinguished friend has corporations in his own State which are so odious to his own people who know all the facts that they will not bear them there, I should like to know how he can make an argument for us to bear them here. The Manhattan Company to which my distinguished friend alluded, I understand did go to the Legislature and have a bill passed for its relief, but the Governor of that State vetoed it.

Mr. DAVIS. The one-man power against the people.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I ask whether we are going to set aside Governor Fenton's knowledge? I ask whether our party is going to put itself again upon the record as legislating in favor of corporations and against the people? I hope not.

My distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] has well illustrated this subject. He has told you this is a tax upon the consumer and not a manufacturer's tax; and there is no article taxed in this way but this one. Take a man who manufactures pig iron, and suppose he has a contract to keep a foundry running for five years, with one hundred tons a day at a certain stipulated price, have you not the same right to say that man shall put the manufacturer's tax upon that article because he has a contract?

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me to say we have frequently done so. We have interposed between the contractor and the purchaser.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I do not wish to consume the time of the House. I know about this subject of gas companies, and if I consulted my own interest I would go for this measure. It is to my pecuniary interest to vote for this, but I cannot vote for it because I know it is wrong. I know the principle is wrong, and that we ought not to do this thing. No man should allow his interest, be it much or little, to carry him away in a matter of this importance. I do not think we ought to do wrong in favor of the corporation and against the individual. I do not think we ought to let the corporation stand aside when the individual manufacturer is compelled to pay the tax.

Mr. PLANTS. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to make a speech, but I have a compromise that I think will satisfy every person. Add at the end of line fifty-six: "And that every person liable to be charged with any tax whatever shall be permitted to make his next neighbor pay it." [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask two questions. Have we the power to alter the charter of a State corporation and to declare it may do what the law of its life prohibits it from doing? That is the first question, and it is a very important one. The next question is this: whether it be constitutionally competent or morally possible for the Congress of the United States to make a contract for any man?

Now, if I know anything about this subject, and I think I do, a contract made by this Congress is not the contract of the parties, and therefore within the legal intendment is no contract at all. What is it? If I recollect the legal definition, a contract is an agreement between two or more persons upon sufficient consideration to do or not to do a particular thing. Now the Constitution aside, I would like to know whether the bargain with a company which we make is the contract of the parties. In other words, is it competent or possible for us to do this thing? Why, what may the parties say? Non in hæc fœdera veni. "I did not make the contract." How is it that you undertake to interfere in a hard case by a sort of equitable power? These are serious questions, and if there is any gentleman on this floor who can answer them I would like to hear the answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted; and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DAWES. I renew it simply for the purpose of making an inquiry of the gentleman on the committee who had charge of this matter at the last session. I would like to know what was the reason why this was limited in the law to the 30th of April, 1867.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In answer to the inquiry, I will say that the agents of these companies came before the committee and complained that at the late period at which we had this subject under consideration they had not an opportunity to apply to their State Legislatures for this relief—that they were controlled by their State Legislatures, and not being aware that this question was to be decided in Congress they asked that the time might be put off for the enforcement of this tax until the period named in the law, in order to give them an opportunity to make the application to the Legislatures for the relief which they asked of Congress. I think I have answered the inquiry.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to put a question to the gentleman, and that is: what reason do they give for asking the enactment of the provision of this bill suspending or repealing that limitation to the 30th of April, 1867?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think I stated the reason—that it was too late to get an amendment of their charter from the State Legislature. The action of Congress they said was taken after their Legislatures had adjourned, leaving them no opportunity to apply to those Legislatures for relief.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Have not all these Legislatures been in session this winter?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. DAWES. I renewed it, and these gentlemen have been speaking in my time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise for the purpose of endeavoring to set this matter straight before the committee, and I want to reply to my colleague, who represents pretty much the same constituency that I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the constitutional question? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORHEAD. The gentleman has made a constitutional argument. It will be recollected by some that I had an argument with him on the law of post limine some time ago, and I do not know but he got a little advantage of me on that debate. [Laughter.] I do not propose now to go into the discussion of the constitutional question, but I would like to ask him and the committee whether when Congress puts this tax on a corporation in Pennsylvania it has not a right to relieve them. Why should they look to the State? The State Legislature does not put it on them.

I desire to have read some extracts from the charter of the Pittsburg Gas Company, showing that they are bound to furnish a large amount of gas for the public lamps free of charge, and are limited to $1 60 per thousand feet for gas furnished to other consumers. Now Congress has imposed upon them a tax of twenty-five cents a thousand feet. Deduct that from $1 60 and you have left $1 35, at which price, as everybody knows, they are not able to manufacture and furnish gas. No company can produce at that price and make any profit. I hope, therefore, that this limitation to the 30th of April, 1867, will be stricken out, or if that is not done that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will be adopted. I now ask that the Clerk may read the extracts from the charter which I send up to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] a question.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I want to have this paper read before I answer any question. I would call the attention of my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the fact, that it is all plain, straight English; there is no Latin in it. [Laughter.] My colleague got off some Latin, as I understood it; but I was not near enough to be able to hear it very distinctly, and could not tell exactly what it was.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Extracts from charter of Pittsburg Gas Company.—They shall also have the power to regulate the price of gas furnished to private consumers, but such price shall not exceed $1 60 for each one thousand cubic feet of gas, and they shall make and prescribe proper rules and regulations for the supply thereof."

"That the said company shall also furnish all the gas required for consumption in the public street lamps, market houses, council chambers, and public offices of the city at the following rates; that is to say, any quantity not exceeding twelve and one half millions cubic feet of gas annually free of charge, and any excess over that quantity that may be required annually, at a rate not exceeding seventy-five cents for each one thousand cubic feet of gas in such excess, the price of such excess so furnished, together with the cost of constructing, erecting, and keeping in order the public lamps and burners in the streets, shall be paid to the company quarterly by the city corporation."

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to ask my friend a question.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I will hear the question.

Mr. ALLISON. If this tax is an onerous burden upon this company, why does not the city of Pittsburg relieve the company from this contract to furnish gas to the city free of charge?

Mr. MOORHEAD. The company is obliged to do so by the terms of its charter, and the city of Pittsburg cannot relieve the company of these terms. Besides, the people of the city who have to pay the taxes of the city will not consent to that.

I now move that the committee rise, for the purpose of closing debate on this paragraph.

Mr. DELANO. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion for the purpose of allowing me to read an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. DELANO. I give notice that at the proper time I shall move the following amendment:

Amend section ninety-four as follows: insert after the words "fixed by law," the following: "and whose consumption does not exceed an average of one hundred and fifty thousand feet per month, and whose net profits did not for the preceding year exceed ten per cent. per annum on the capital stock actually paid in."

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask that the Clerk read, for information of the committee, an amendment to the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. DELANO,] which I propose to offer. I do not desire to make any remarks upon it at this time.

Mr. DELANO. I suppose it is one of my friend's witticisms.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided also, That in those States where the rate of interest on money loaned is limited by law, the lender of money shall be allowed to collect of the borrower any amount of tax charged on his income derived from interest on money so loaned.

Mr. DELANO. It is as I expected. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORHEAD. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ORTH) having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 1161, to amend the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that when the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, all debate upon the pending paragraph be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend the existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending paragraph of this bill will terminate in five minutes.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. HUMPHREY, to strike from the paragraph amendatory of section ninety-four of the present law the following:

Strike out in the paragraph relating to gas the words "and until the 30th day of April, 1867."

Mr. GARFIELD. In closing the debate upon this subject I desire to say but a few words, and then I will leave it to the determination of this committee. There were two classes of companies to which the Committee of Ways and Means had reference in recommending this proposed amendment of the existing law. The first class embraces those companies who are limited by their charters in reference to the price they are allowed to charge consumers of the gas they manufacture. The second class embraces those who, two or three or more years ago, made contracts, to run ten years perhaps, to deliver gas at a certain price. We have now come in, and by our legislation have changed the terms of their contracts. The State Legislatures could not change those contracts; they could not by anything they might do relieve these companies; and therefore we felt that we who have changed the terms of those contracts were bound to afford them relief by taking from them this additional burden.

Now, one word more. One gentleman who has spoken here to-night [Mr. EGGLESTON] has said that the great principle of our revenue law is that the manufacturers ought themselves to pay the tax upon their commodities. I answer the gentleman that all manufacturing establishments, the price of whose products is not restricted by law, charge the tax over to the consumers. If we impose a tax upon the manufacture, for instance, of any kind of implement, that tax is at once added to the price charged for the implement; and thus the purchaser pays the tax. In the cases we have now under consideration the companies are limited either by their contracts made five, six, or ten years ago, or by the terms of their charters, and they cannot charge this tax over, unless we permit them to do so by the provisions of our law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to favor in the least degree monopolies, but I am opposed to doing wrong to a corporation for no other reason than that it is a corporation. While there are gas companies in the United States that do not deserve this relief and ought not to have it, there are many that ought to have it, and we do these companies wrong if we do not grant it.

Mr. BRÖMWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. If, in his opinion, the Legislature of the particular State cannot take this burden off a gas company, what authority has this Congress to do it? And I also ask him what difference there is in the position of a gas company that is bound by a contract made several years ago and the position of a man who has lent his money ten years ago and is waiting to collect it, or any other business man who has made contracts which he must execute, although they may be unprofitable to him?

Mr. GARFIELD. I can answer the gentleman I think very distinctly. Where a gas company has made a contract a year or two ago, running, for instance, ten years, the Legislature of the State cannot change the terms of the contract if it is between the gas company and a municipal corporation. But when we come in and impose a tax, we do in point of fact change the contract, unless we adopt such a provision as the Committee of Ways and Means recommend.

The amendment of Mr. HUMPHREY was agreed to.

Mr. DELANO. I move to amend by inserting in lieu of the provision just stricken out the following:

That section ninety-four be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, That gas companies whose consumption does not exceed an average of one hundred and fifty thousand feet per month, or whose net profits do not for the preceding year exceed ten per cent. per annum on the capital stock actually paid in, may charge the tax to consumers.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move to amend the amendment by adding the following additional proviso:

Provided also, That in those States where the rate of interest on money loaned is limited by law, the lender of money shall be allowed to collect of the borrower any amount of tax charged on his income derived from interest on money so loaned.

Mr. THAYER. I rise to a point of order, and submit that this amendment is not germane to the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCHENCK. My amendment is the same in principle as the other.

The amendment of Mr. DELANO was not agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend by adding the following:

Also in the paragraph relating to petroleum, commencing "on illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oils," strike out the word "twenty" wherever it occurs and insert "ten."

I am not going to discuss the amendment, for I know everybody understands it. I went before the Committee of Ways and Means and endeavored to get them to reduce the tax from twenty cents a gallon, as it now stands, on refined rock-oil, and although they are reducing everything else they refused to do it. I wish the sense of the House on the proposition, and I suppose that sense does not need any illumination from me.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope this amendment will not prevail. I know my friend has always given us illumination on this subject whenever we came to it year after year. He will recollect that we relieved crude petroleum from tax; and, sir, many persons have thought, and now think, it should bear some tax. Indeed, an effort has been made to restore that tax. This refined article is very valuable. It is a thing that is produced in large quantities, and the price is low, lower than before. We have the monopoly of the world. It furnishes a large amount of our exchange with other nations, and has brought in a handsome revenue to the Treasury last year. I hope no change will be made in the bill in this respect.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The charge for freight on this article is very heavy. Although the demand is coextensive with the world, still the charge for freight is heavy, and the article itself is so volatile, no cask or package yet being found that will prevent its leaking, it is so subject to fires and accidents of almost every kind that you cannot carry it from the place of production without a large percentage of loss. If the tax were to come out of the people I represent I would not say a word, but all the members here are more interested in it than I am, the freight on the article making it come high with them, while we get it in the neighborhood so low we can afford to pay the tax.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will add one word, showing the amount of revenue we have received from this article, and which the gentleman now proposes to cut off. In the year 1863, at the beginning of this production, we received a revenue of $3,000,000; in 1864 it was $2,250,000; in 1865 it was again $3,000,000; in 1866 it rose to five and one third million dollars.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Can you not be liberal to such an extensive customer?

Mr. GARFIELD. We took off a dollar a barrel on crude petroleum which goes abroad. If this tax were made lower it would simply be a decrease in the revenue.

Mr. SCOFIELD. There never yet has been any tax on the article sent abroad, whether crude or refined. The very reason we have been able to send it abroad is because there is no tax on it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is there any competition?

Mr. SCOFIELD. Any amount of competition abroad. I do not mean of course from just this kind of article, and especially has there been great competition since the expiration of the patent for making oil from shale, except in reference to that class of consumers who can pay a little higher price for a better article.

Mr. GARFIELD. In 1865 we exported twenty-three million eight hundred thousand gallons, while in 1866 we exported sixty million gallons, almost three times as much as in the year 1865.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, strike out the paragraph commencing "on oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole" down to the words "ten cents per gallon," inclusive.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to add at the end of line fifty-nine the following:

from petroleum for illuminating purposes at less temperature or fire-test than one hundred and ten degrees Fahrenheit, such persons shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof by indictment or presentment in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than three years.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, I will explain this amendment in a very few words. Naphtha now pays a tax of ten cents a gallon, while illuminating oil pays a tax of twenty cents a gallon. The consequence is that naphtha, being a cheap article, is mixed with illuminating oil, and people, unconscious of the fact they are buying a different article, purchase this fraudulent article, for it is such, a mixture almost as explosive as gunpowder. Now, there is no objection to taking off the tax from naphtha, because though not fit to be mixed with illuminating oil, yet it in some degree supplies the place of spirits of turpentine and enters largely into the arts as raw material. It is useful for many other purposes, and ought to have either a low tax imposed upon it or none at all. But just in proportion as you make it cheap by taking the tax off you increase the temptation to mix it with illuminating oil and make a compound which is destroying lives and property. The only way therefore, I think, is to take the tax off or reduce it and make the article cheap for legitimate purposes, but punish the use of it severely when mixed with illuminating oil. I have had my attention attracted to this matter, and have communicated with persons familiar with this subject, and I find this is about the only practical way of heading off that practice.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. This amendment is a very proper one.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The amendment should be so modified that only those who sell knowingly shall suffer the penalty. As I understand it, the penalty would attach to the retailer.

Several MEMBERS. They all know it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. They may not all know it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I suppose the scienter would be taken into consideration by any court; but I will insert the word "knowingly," so that it will read: "shall mix for sale or knowingly offer for sale."

Mr. ALLISON. The proviso is proposed to be attached to a paragraph just stricken out of the original law.

Mr. SCHENCK. I believe the gentleman is right. I will therefore have to withdraw my amendment and offer it at some other place.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move to strike out this paragraph:

Also, strike out the paragraph commencing "on oil, naphtha, benzole, benzine," down to the words "ten cents per gallon," inclusive.

And to amend the original law by inserting in it "five cents" instead of "ten cents;" so that it will read as follows:

On illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oils, marking not less than thirty-six nor more than fifty-nine degrees Baumé's hydrometer, the exclusive product of the refining of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, asphaltum, peat, or other bituminous substances, not otherwise provided for, five cents per gallon.

It is proposed to take the tax off from coal oil that is distilled largely in New England from Nova Scotia coal or shale, which can be had for nothing, and upon which there is no tariff. There is a large manufactory in Boston of this oil, which is called kerosene, and which is so valuable that it has led the country people to apply that name to the whole class of rock and coal oils. Many have taken the trade-mark of this one manufactory and applied it to all these oils.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he has mistaken the section of the original law to which this paragraph in the bill applies. It is the section immediately following the one he has cited, as follows:

On oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole, or gasoline, marking more than fifty-nine degrees Baumé's hydrometer, the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances, a tax of ten cents per gallon.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I believe the gentleman is right.

Mr. GARFIELD. A single suggestion. There is no illuminating oil marked more than fifty-nine degrees Baumé's hydrometer; all above that is of the nature of gasoline and substances that are not used for illumination at all. This oil, naphtha, above fifty-nine degrees we propose to put on the free list.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Then I understand the tax on illuminating oil distilled from coal and shale is retained.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not touched, except the product marking more than fifty-nine degrees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, [amend section ninety-four by striking out the paragraph relating to "sugars and sugar refiners," and insert in lieu thereof the words "on all sugars produced from the sugar-cane, and not from sorghum or imphee, other than those produced by the refiner, a tax of one cent per pound; on refined sugars, and on the products of sugar refineries, not including sirup or molasses, a tax of two per cent. ad valorem; Provided, That every person shall be regarded as a sugar-refiner, and pay the taxes required by law, whose business it is to advance the quality and value of sugar upon which a tax or duty has been paid, by melting and recrystallization, or by liquoring, claying, or other washing process, or by any other chemical or mechanical means, or who shall by boiling or other process advance the quality or value of molasses, concentrated molasses, or melado, upon which a tax or duty has been paid."

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. I move to amend by striking out these words:

On all sugars produced from the sugar-cane, and not from sorghum or imphee, other than those produced by the refiner, a tax of one cent per pound.

The CHAIRMAN. This portion of the bill is being read by paragraphs for amendment. The paragraph referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WARD] having been read and passed by, it would not now be in order, without unanimous consent, to move to strike it out.

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. The Clerk read the paragraphs very rapidly; and I supposed all relating to sugars was to be considered as one paragraph. I ask unanimous consent of the committee to return to the paragraph I have quoted for the purpose of enabling me to move to strike it out.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, [amend section ninety-four,] in the paragraph relating to wood screws, by striking out the word "ten" and inserting "five,"

Also, by striking out the paragraph relating to "gunpowder" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "on gunpowder, canister powder, five cents per pound; sporting powder, in kegs, one cent per pound; blasting powder, in kegs or casks, one half cent per pound."

Also, in the paragraph relating to "copper and brass tubes," by striking out the words "five per cent. ad valorem," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one fourth of one cent per pound."

Mr. GARFIELD. I have here an amendment upon which the Committee of Ways and Means have agreed, which I desire to move in reference to the last paragraph read by the Clerk. I move to strike out the paragraph just read, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Also, [amend section ninety-four,] by striking out the paragraph commencing "on copper and brass tubes," and inserting in lieu thereof "on copper and brass tubes, nails, or rivets, one fourth of one cent per pound."

Mr. KASSON. I wish the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] would state the reasons for so essentially reducing, as I understand he now proposes to do, the tax upon those articles made of brass and copper, among which are many articles of luxury.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not a reduction of the tax at all, but a simple transfer from an ad valorem to a specific tax. Under the existing law these articles now pay an ad valorem tax of five per cent. It was thought that we would be more certain to get the tax if we made it specific. We therefore propose that it shall be one fourth of one per cent. per pound, which will be about equal to an ad valorem tax of five per cent.

Mr. KASSON. It is precisely upon that point that I think the gentleman is in error. I think the ad valorem tax is decidedly to be preferred, as these articles approach what may properly be called articles of luxury, such, for instance, as gas-fixtures, chandeliers, &c. The amendment he proposes would reduce the tax imposed under the existing law. I cannot of course go into the details, but my information is sufficiently accurate to justify me in making that statement.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee of Ways and Means made a careful estimate, and not only not intending to reduce the tax on these articles, they were of the opinion that the amendment I have proposed, instead of reducing it, if any change would result from its adoption, would cause a slight advance upon the present tax. And I believe all will agree that when we make a tax specific we can more certainly get it paid. The articles embraced in this paragraph include tacks, nails, rivets, and a large number of things, the exact valuation of which it would be very difficult to ascertain, in order to determine an ad valorem tax upon them. But you can very easily determine the tax when it is by the pound. It seems to me that it is a much simpler, safer, and better way for the Government to levy the tax in the way proposed in the amendment. The Committee of Ways and Means have considered this subject very carefully, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DARLING. I am opposed to the proposed amendment, and I will state how, in my judgment, it will operate if adopted. Copper or brass tubes of a highly finished character of say the length of two or three feet may cost perhaps one dollar and a half, two dollars, or three dollars each. When so finished they are very light, and would not weigh more than one or two pounds each at the most; therefore the tax proposed by this amendment would not exceed a quarter or a half a cent each, while under the existing law, at five per cent, it would amount to ten or fifteen cents each. Under the plan adopted here a year ago in respect to iron tubes, there has been a great evasion of the revenue, so that, as I am informed, one house in Philadelphia has realized a profit of over one hundred thousand dollars. I endeavored last year to get the law amended in that respect, but I failed. I hope Congress will not perpetuate it this year. Light pipes taxed so much per pound escape the tax almost entirely, while heavy pipes taxed by the pound are taxed very oppressively. The light-finished work should pay a percentage, and not pay by the pound. I could illustrate this further if it were necessary, but I presume it is not necessary. The only true and equitable way of taxing manufactured articles of this kind is to impose an ad valorem tax.

Mr. GARFIELD. What the gentleman states may be the fact. It is possible that the Committee of Ways and Means has fallen into a mistake in reference to this matter. I have simply sought to represent the action of the committee. In this case I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed over to be considered hereafter. I think it quite likely that the gentleman from New York may be entirely correct in his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this paragraph will be passed over to be considered hereafter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following:

Also, by striking out all from the words "cigarettes or small cigars," in the first paragraph relating to cigars, down to the words "twenty per cent. ad valorem on the market value thereof," in the last paragraph relating to cigars, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, cigars, cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute thereof, the market value of which, including the tax, is not eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when exceeding eight dollars per thousand in market value, including the tax, a tax of eight dollars per thousand.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "therefore" in line ninety-three down to the word "thousand," inclusive, in line ninety-seven, the part stricken out being the following:

The market value of which, including the tax, is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when exceeding eight dollars per thousand, in market value, including the tax, a tax of eight dollars per thousand," and add the words "a tax of five dollars per thousand."

I have for several years used my efforts to have abolished what I deem a very injudicious mode of collecting the revenue from tobacco and cigars, and sought to bring about the adoption of a specific tax upon the leaf. I have believed heretofore, and I believe now, that this is a fairer and better way of imposing the tax. It is better for the Government, because it would yield double the amount of revenue now derived from this source; and also better for the party who is obliged to pay the tax. I do not believe that if levied in this way the burden would fall first on the producer—the argument so strenuously urged against the proposition; the manufacturer would pay it as the article came out of bond. The adoption of this system would, in my judgment, obviate the incentive to fraud which has existed and still exists under our laws. But in reference to this matter I was somewhat in the position of the jurymen who found that the eleven other fellows were very obstinate indeed, and so concluded to yield gracefully.

As I cannot bring the House to my views in that respect, what I desire to accomplish by this amendment is the next best thing; and if we cannot get a specific tax upon the raw material, upon the leaf, let us have a specific tax upon the manufactured article. I agree with my friend from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the ad valorem system is pernicious and furnishes an incentive to fraud. And I not only hold this in theory both in tariff and tax laws, but wish to carry it out in practice. From year to year the Committee of Ways and Means bring in bills which they tell us every time are perfection. Yet year after year they come here and, by proposing numerous amendments, admit they have been wrong. On this question the system proposed in the bill of the committee very nearly follows the system of the last act. It proposes an ad valorem duty; it holds out an inducement to the manufacturer of cigars to put his cigars down below eight dollars in value in order to lessen the tax; and it, to say the least, tempts the inspector and assessor to value them below eight dollars. The committee on frauds in relation to the revenue have ascertained with respect to tobacco, and more especially in regard to whisky, that there have been immense frauds upon the Government. But I am not willing to charge this fact upon the people as a "national disgrace," while we who have the framing of the laws can in a great measure prevent the incentive to fraud.

If we did not allow the transshipment of whisky from one port to another within the United States or removal for redistillation without payment of tax when it leaves the bonded warehouse, we should not lose as we do $20,000,000 annually in that way. If we did not allow bonded warehouses to exist in the same building with distilleries we should not lose $20,000,000 more for that reason. If we did not direct inspectors to be paid by distillers and placed with them without check, where the bonded warehouse adjoins the distillery, and let the distillers keep possession of the certificates of tax paid, we should not lose $10,000,000 more by the branding of barrel after barrel with the same serial numbers.

If we change this law from an ad valorem duty and say that on all cigars there shall be a specific tax of five dollars, we certainly in a measure take away the temptation to such demoralization and fraud in respect to this article, prevent a great loss, and secure a legitimate income. I believe it is the best thing, and the cigar manufacturers and journeymen cigar-makers, tobacco dealers, and growers of the country petition for it. I send up to the Clerk one of these petitions from Philadelphia, and ask that the Clerk read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, cigar-manufacturers, journeymen cigar-makers, dealers in cigars, growers of and dealers in seed-leaf tobacco, would most respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that the present internal revenue law on cigars has proved to be utterly impracticable, as demonstrated by the present depressed condition of every branch of industry and trade connected therewith.

The present law, being both specific and ad valorem, affords such opportunities for fraud that our business will soon pass entirely into the hands of irresponsible men and fraudulent combinations unless a radical change is soon effected.

We have two hundred and forty collection districts, with the subdivisions under assistant assessors and inspectors. Most of these officers are unacquainted with the prices and values of cigars, and therefore we find numberless frauds and great diversity of assessments resulting therefrom. In some districts cigars are passed at two dollars; in others at four dollars, nine dollars, and ten dollars, for about the same grade of goods; while in the finer grades of goods we find greater discrepancies, and we have reason to believe that many seed and Havana cigars are passed as clear seed, paying only a nominal tax, while the true amount would be from three to four times greater. Such discriminations can only result disastrously to the general interest of our business, and under such the honest manufacturer cannot exist. We would therefore pray your honorable bodies to change the present tax to a specific tax of not more than five dollars per thousand on all domestic cigars, and that the stamp be made a revenue stamp, sold by the collector only to the licensed manufacturers in his district, with proper guards and checks to prevent frauds and counterfeits. Believing that the Government will find the revenue greatly increased thereby, and the law much more simple and practical, we solicit for our petition the favorable consideration of your honorable bodies.

Mr. DEMING. I am told that under the rule I cannot rise to advocate the proposition presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] without making a pro forma amendment. I therefore move to strike out from his amendment the word "cigars." My purpose, however, is to coincide with him thoroughly in the views he has expressed in regard to what should be the true nature of a tax on cigars; and I was about to say that I congratulate him and the great interest which he represents in Pennsylvania for having at this session arrived at the very kind of tax which I advocated at the last session, and which that interest, united with other tobacco interests in the country, so strenuously opposed.

This matter of an internal revenue tax is comparatively a new thing with this Congress. We never entered upon a system of internal revenue tax until the war commenced. It is therefore novel and intricate, and all theories, all experimenting ought to be abandoned. The only light to guide us which we can safely invoke in this matter is the light of experience. And what light does experience throw upon the taxation of cigars? We commenced in the Thirty-Eighth Congress with a graduated schedule of specific rates and a graduated schedule of ad valorem rates upon cigars. But that provision proved to be an utter and abominable abortion. Accordingly, the very next report we received from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue contained advice to discard the whole system as a mistake, and adopt the only true system, namely, that of specific rates on cigars. He also informed us that under this mixed system of an ad valorem tax and a specific tax upon cigars innumerable frauds were perpetrated, and that the honest manufacturer was sacrificed to the fraudulent.

We therefore, upon mature consideration, at the next session of that Congress, adopted the rate of ten dollars per thousand upon all kinds and classes of cigars, and the testimony, coming from all sources, as contained in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue presented to this Congress, is that no tax which has been levied has been so fruitful of revenue and so satisfactory to the manufacturer as the specific rate of ten dollars per thousand.

That brings us down in the history of this tax to the last session of the last Congress. Then for the purpose of encouraging—no, I will not say for the purpose, but an amendment was introduced, the effect of which was, and designed to be, to encourage the manufacture of cheap cigars and discourage the manufacture of dear ones. Without learning anything or profiting at all from the experience of the past, we resorted to the old system again, and adopted a mixed rate of ad valorem and specific duties upon cigars. Gentlemen now present will remember I warned them at the time that if that provision was adopted we should have the same parties coming here at this session of Congress invoking us to return to the specific rate.

Now I represent a district which ranks sixth in the Union in the amount of internal revenue paid upon cigars alone. There are five districts which exceed mine, namely: the first district of Pennsylvania, the first district of California, the first district of Ohio, a district in Maryland, and another in Missouri. This interest, once the most flourishing and thriving of all, is now prostrated by the mistaken rule which you have adopted enabling fraudulent manufacturers to succeed against the honest manufacturer. The true system is to come back to the specific rate of duties which we found to work so well in practice, and which I find in the last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is thus alluded to:

"The tax of ten dollars per thousand upon all domestic cigars imposed by the act of March 3, 1855, was more uniformly paid than the tax under any previous law. Fewer cigars escaped taxation and there was no opportunity for fraud when their full number was returned to the assessor."

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a few words upon this subject of the tax upon cigars. There is no subject that has presented itself for the consideration of the Committee of Ways and Means which has given us more trouble than this question of the tax upon cigars. We have had more difficulty in adjusting the tax upon cigars than perhaps upon any other article except distilled spirits. Now, I can very well understand why cigar manufacturers desire a uniform tax upon cigars of five dollars per thousand. Of course the result of that would be that the manufacturer who imports his tobacco from Cuba and manufactures it into cigars in this country would pay a tax of but five dollars per thousand upon cigars, which if imported already manufactured would pay a tariff duty of from thirty to forty dollars per thousand.

The Committee of Ways and Means believed that the ad valorem system adopted partially at the last session of Congress was ineffectual; and in accordance with the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue they have proposed in this bill the adoption of a specific tax; and in order that the cigar manufacturers in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and other parts of the West may not be completely crushed out by those who manufacture cigars in the district of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DEMING] and in other districts, we have proposed two specific rates in this bill. One rate is intended to apply to the cheap cigars of two dollars per thousand, while the other rate is intended to apply to all cigars valued at not more than eight dollars per thousand, including the tax.

Mr. MYERS. Will the gentleman explain how those rates are specific?

Mr. ALLISON. They are regulated by the market price or value of the cigars.

Mr. MYERS. Would not they depend upon the knowledge or the skill which the customer or the assessor may exercise?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all. And I would call the attention of gentlemen to another provision affecting this subject of cigars. The old provision authorized the transportation of cigars in bond, whereby a thousand cigars might be appraised at one price in Louisville, and at another and a very different price in New York or Philadelphia, thus giving occasion for endless difficulties in the settlement and adjustment of the tax. This bill provides that the tax shall be paid by the manufacturer upon the sale of the products of his manufacture. Therefore I think that by this provision we have substantially guarded against the frauds which were practiced under previous laws; and we have also provided rates of taxation whereby those who manufacture cheap cigars in the West can continue to do so out of the cheap tobacco that is raised there.

I object to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] because it will tend to reduce the revenue derived by the Government from this tax. A tax upon cigars of five dollars per thousand, in my opinion, is not high enough. I would myself prefer a uniform tax of ten dollars per thousand, which, I have no doubt, would yield us more revenue than any other rate of tax. But I find my distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] who fought that specific rate so vigorously and successfully at the last session of this Congress, is again fighting the committee upon the subject at this session. Therefore, to reach the class of manufacturers in the West, we have provided a lower rate of duty for those cigars.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ORTH) having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, amending the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1146) giving an additional pension to Samuel Downing, one of the last survivors of the revolutionary war;

An act (H. R. No. 1056) for the relief of Samuel Worster;

An act (H. R. No. 1055) for the relief of John Moreau, of Machias, New York;

An act (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of Hiram Hedrick;

An act (H. R. No. 1052) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Clements; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 206) in relation to pensions of the widows of revolutionary soldiers.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of Daniel Frederick Bakeman, a revolutionary soldier;

An act (H. R. No. 1058) for the relief of the minor children of Solomon Long;

An act (H. R. No. 1044) for the relief of John Grey, a revolutionary soldier; and

An act (H. R. No. 788) to establish and protect national cemeteries.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan;

An act (S. No. 580) granting a pension to Charles N. Weiss;

An act (S. No. 554) granting a pension to John Carter;

An act (S. No. 512) for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien;

An act (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Slocum;

An act (S. No. 497) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline M. Gould;

An act (S. No. 558) for the relief of Mary Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, widow of Alexander D. Smith, deceased;

An act (S. No. 556) for the relief of Caroline McGee, of Green county, Tennessee, widow of Lemuel McGee, deceased;

An act (S. No. 514) for the relief of Charles Appleton;

An act (S. No. 715) granting a pension to Mrs. Ernestine Becker; and

An act (S. No. 594) to provide for the payment of compound-interest notes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BUCKLAND: The petition of H. S. Wenner, A. T. Barnes, and 41 others, citizens of Tiffin, Ohio, for the repeal of the five per cent. tax on manufactures.

By Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio: The petition of John G. Wilson and others, of Fayette county, Ohio, remonstrating against reducing the national currency, &c. Also, the petition of Darius Waters, and others, of Fayette county, Ohio, remonstrating against reducing the national currency, &c.

By Mr. COBB: The petition of citizens of Monroe, Green county, Wisconsin, for removal of the five per cent. tax on manufactures.

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of C. A. Holmes and others, cigar manufacturers and dealers, praying for specific tax on domestic cigars.

By Mr. FARNSWORTH: The petition of citizens of Sycamore, Illinois, for repeal of five per cent. tax on manufactures.

By Mr. FERRY: The memorial of George E. Steele, William Steele, E. E. Kirkland, D. B. Spencer, and 18 others, citizens of Homestead, Renzie county, Michigan, praying for inquiry into the official conduct of Andrew Johnson, acting President of the United States, and for his impeachment if proven facts shall justify the same.

By Mr. HISE: The petition of Anthony & Eubanks, of Allen and Simpson counties, Kentucky, for compensation for their property used by the Government during the late war.

By Mr. KASSON: The petition of citizens of Guthrie county, Iowa, against further curtailment of the currency, and against further restrictions on national banks.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of E. E. Bourne and others, asking a modification of the postal laws, so as to allow postage on pamphlets, papers, documents, and books forwarded to historical societies to be paid on delivery, and that postage on such pamphlets, &c., to such societies be reduced fifty per cent.

By Mr. MORRIS: The petition of H. A. Metcalf, Esq., of Ontario county, New York, and many others, praying that the present Congress may pass a tariff bill substantially retaining that portion of House bill No. 718 which relates to wool and woollens, which passed the House at its last session.

Also, four like petitions, largely signed, from York, Livingston county, New York.

By Mr. PERHAM: The petition of Sally Allen, widow of Isaac Allen, for arrears of pension.

By Mr. SPALDING: The petition of numerous citizens of Lake county, Ohio, for an increased tariff on wool.

By Mr. UPSON: The petition of Terriere & Strong and 177 others, citizens of Buchanan, Berrien county, Michigan, praying for the removal of the five per cent. tax on manufactures.

Also, the petition of G. L. Askins and 36 others, citizens of Allegan county, Michigan, praying for an amendment of the Constitution, so that there shall be no inequality recognized by law on account of race or color.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 15, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENTRY AND CLEARANCE OF VESSELS.

Mr. BLAINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to authorize the entry and clearance of vessels at the ports of Booth bay and St. George, Maine; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to inform this House what States now represented in Congress have ratified the amendment to the Constitution proposed to the several States by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and sent notice of such ratification to the State Department, in addition to the States named in his letter of the 15th February, instant, communicated to the House by the President in his message of the 6th instant, in response to a resolution of the House of the 4th instant, calling for information relative to the ratification of said amendment by the States.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for executive information, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration on this day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a private nature, and the Committee of Claims is entitled to another morning hour. On the last private bill day the House had under consideration and left undischarged a joint resolution reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] from the Committee of Claims, entitled "Joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Almanson Eaton, receiver of public moneys for the land office at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin." The question is on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution, which was read at length, provides that the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the proper accounting officers in their Departments, in settling the accounts of Almanson Eaton, receiver of public moneys for the district of lands subject to sale at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin, shall, upon satisfactory evidence being made and filed, allow and credit to Eaton the sum of $2,092.72, the amount of public money destroyed by fire in the burning of the offices, books, papers, and public money of the register and receiver at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin, on the night of December 29, 1865.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH F. CHIPMAN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased; which was read a first and second time.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, it was read at length. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Chipman $125, for a horse lost by her husband in the military service August 18, 1863.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely upon the following, which were laid on the table: petition of Victor Denver; petition of Lord & Eveleth; a bill (H. R. No. 863) for the relief of Alonzo Hyde; a bill (H. R. No. 723) for the relief of John T. Taylor, late postmaster at Gallatin, Missouri; and joint resolution for the relief of Mary Johnson, of Belmont county, Ohio.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 206) in relation to the pensions of widows of revolutionary soldiers;

An act (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia;

An act (H. R. No. 1125) granting an additional pension to Samuel Downing one of the last surviving soldiers of the revolutionary war;

An act (H. R. No. 1146) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Fletcher;

An act (H. R. No. 1052) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Clements;

An act (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of Hiram Hedrick;

An act (H. R. No. 1055) for the relief of John Moreau, of Machias, New York; and

An act (H. R. No. 1056) for the relief of Lemuel Worster.

MRS. SUE MURPHY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I am directed by the Committee of Claims to report back adversely Senate bill No. 418, for the relief of Mrs. Sue Murphy, of Decatur, Alabama.

The SPEAKER. That bill, by unanimous consent of the House, on motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. It has gone to the Committee of Claims by mistake.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I ask that the adverse report also go upon the Private Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, also reported adversely on the following cases; and they were severally laid on the table: Petition of J. B. Fellows & Co., of Mobile, Alabama, for indemnity for forty-seven thousand six hundred and sixty pounds of cotton sold at New York by the Government, May 13, 1865, for $14,298 in gold; claim of George W. Graves and John Creamer, of Baltimore, Maryland, for compensation for the loss of the schooner Fanny Davis, &c.; and petition of F. P. Salas, for return of duty upon imported goods.

Mr. WARD, of New York, from the same committee, also reported adversely on the following cases; and the same were laid on the table: An act (H. R. No. 954) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the claim of William M. Ellis & Brother; petition of William Milner, jr., and others, of Danville, Montour county, Pennsylvania, asking for relief for said William Milner, jr.; petition of Reuben Porter and Frederick Schade, of Tennessee, in behalf of citizens of Knoxville, for compensation for the loss of a church destroyed by General Burnside's army; and petition of Mrs. Mary A. Filler.

J. T. JACKSON.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I am directed by the Committee of Claims to report back adversely the bill and papers in the case of J. T. Jackson, and move that they be laid upon the table.

Mr. RITTER. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. WARD, of New York. It is a claim for provisions furnished to the Army in Kentucky. This man Jackson was a resident of that State, and was directed by the commander of an organization known as the "Home Guard" to furnish it with provisions, and this claim is for compensation for the provisions so furnished.

Mr. Speaker, I am asked to move that this case be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DELANO. I hope that will be done, as the business of that committee will not justify us in taking up the morning hour with this matter.

Mr. RITTER. I do not see why this should not be taken up at this time.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were ayes 43, noes 18; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. WARD, of New York, and Mr. RITTER.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 22.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. RITTER demanded the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. WARD, of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. RITTER. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LE BLOND. If the committee will not assign any reason why this case should be reported on adversely I will call the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes ten.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. LE BLOND and WARD, of New York.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-four.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DELANO. Allow me to make a suggestion. There is a large amount of business in the hands of the Committee of Claims that ought to be brought before the House this morning. The claim that is now occupying the attention of the House is of but small amount. The committee have acted upon it; they may have erred, but they think it is not meritorious. I beg of the gentleman from Ohio to allow this to be withdrawn and go back to the committee, and let us go on with our other business and accomplish something this morning. If that is done I will take the case in my own hands, hear it patiently again, and if I can report upon it favorably I will take the earliest opportunity to do so.

Mr. LE BLOND. One word in explanation of the course I have taken.

Mr. DELANO. I have no objection to the gentleman's course. Time is precious.

Mr. LE BLOND. I have no knowledge of the merits of this case, but the committee have reported upon it adversely without assigning a single reason why they do so.

Mr. DELANO. Will the gentleman accept my proposition?

Mr. WARD, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor and I propose to say a word. There was no desire on the part of the committee to smother this claim, nor was there any desire on their part to report against it without assigning reasons for so doing. I made the report at the request of the committee, and was about assigning reasons for it when I was interrupted by the chairman of the committee with the suggestion that it would take a great deal of time, that there were more important matters pressing, and we had better refer this case to the Private Calendar in order that it might come up in its order and be properly considered.

Mr. RITTER. Does the gentleman yield to me? The chairman of the committee agreed I should occupy ten minutes in explanation of the bill and then have a vote upon it.

Mr. DELANO. I hope the gentleman from New York will allow that as the shortest way of getting out of the difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is no bill on the Clerk's table—nothing but a petition. If it is not a bill it can be referred to the Committee of the Whole, or any committee of the House, but it cannot be passed.

Mr. WARD, of New York. If it is simply a petition I ask leave to withdraw the report.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered, it can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

No objection being made, it was accordingly withdrawn.

MARY J. DIXON.

Mr. McKEE, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely on Senate bill No. 503, for the relief of Mrs. Mary J. Dixon, of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, widow of the late Turner Dixon, deceased; which was laid on the table.

JOSEPH H. J. RUTTER.

Mr. McKEE, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Joseph H. J. Rutter, of Baltimore, Maryland; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $500 in full for services rendered by the claimant in the secret service of the United States, during the months of April, May, June, and July, 1861.

Mr. ROSS. I believe that contains an appropriation and will have to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is an appropriation bill, and the gentleman having raised objection it must go to the Committee of the Whole.

ALEXANDER F. PRATT.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported back Senate bill No. 485, for the relief of Alexander F. Pratt, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claimant $530 in full for pursuing and capturing one Elijah J. Janner, convicted of counterfeiting United States coin.

The amendment reported by the committee strikes out $530 and inserts in lieu thereof $300.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES CLARK.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, also reported back Senate joint resolution No. 146, for the relief of Charles Clark, marshal for the District of Maine, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, in the settlement of the accounts of Charles Clark, marshal of the United States for the District of Maine, to allow him credit for such sum of public money as was in his charge as marshal, not to exceed $3,028, as the Secretary may be satisfied was burned in said marshal's office in the custom-house building at Portland, Maine, on the 4th of July last.

The joint resolution was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELIZABETH R. SMITH.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported back Senate bill No. 451, for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth R. Smith, with a recommendation that the same be indefinitely postponed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the usual practice of the House is to lay matters upon the table, instead of pursuing the usual practice of the Senate to indefinitely postpone them.

Mr. DELANO. Then I move that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 451 was laid on the table. I make this motion for the purpose of having the bill referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DELANO. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the vote laying the bill on the table will be regarded as reconsidered, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

There was no objection; and the bill was referred accordingly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted upon their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 453, regulating the tenure of certain civil officers, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and have appointed Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. BUCKALEW to act as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 598) for the relief of William H. Harmon;

A bill (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon;

A bill (S. No. 421) to authorize the construction of a submerged tubular bridge across the Mississippi river at the city of St. Louis;

A bill (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Oliver W. Cannon;

A bill (S. No. 584) for the relief of Elias Beale, late captain of company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry;

A bill (S. No. 535) for the benefit of Mrs. Jerusha Page;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 421) for the relief of Martha McCook; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment of West Virginia volunteers.

THOMAS W. FRY, JR.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, also reported a joint resolution for the relief of Thomas W. Fry, jr., late captain and assistant quartermaster at Alton, Illinois; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The preamble of the joint resolution states that on the 11th of May, 1865, at the city of Alton, Illinois, the office and safe of Thomas W. Fry, jr., captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers, was burglariously entered and robbed of the sum of $10,815 09 of public money of the quartermaster's department of the United States Army, then and there properly in the custody of said quartermaster, and for which he was and is lawfully responsible; also, that it appears that said robbery was perpetrated without the fault or neglect on the part of said officer.

The joint resolution, therefore, directs the proper accounting officers, in settling the amount to be allowed to Thomas W. Fry, jr., late captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers, to allow to him such sums as may be satisfactorily proven to have been stolen at the time and place stated in the preamble.

Mr. PRICE. I would ask if there is any report in this case?

Mr. DELANO. A report was prepared by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WASHBURN,] a member of the committee, in whose hands this case was placed. He has been called away from the city, and I have reported the case for him. I will send his report to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. PRICE rose.

Mr. DELANO. I am afraid I shall have to allow this joint resolution to go on the Private Calendar if its consideration is to take much time.

Mr. ORTH. I hope not.

Mr. PRICE. I do not desire to occupy more than three minutes of time.

Mr. DELANO. Very well.

Mr. PRICE. I called for the reading of the report because I wished to ascertain whether the party who seeks this relief had made use of all means in his power for the preservation and safe-keeping of this money. Again and again we are called upon to relieve parties who have been in possession of the public money and public property. Now, I think the danger is that we are not sufficiently careful. I know nothing of this case beyond what is disclosed in the report; but I do know that in the city of Alton there are a great many good vaults in which this money might have been safely kept. I do know, in addition, that in other cities of the same size where there have been places where money could be safely kept it has been the custom for paymasters and quartermasters of the Army to keep their moneys in such places. If this money had been so kept it would not have been lost, and the Government would not have been called upon to sustain that loss. I want to say that, although I have great confidence in the ability and integrity of the Committee of Claims, yet I think too much vigilance cannot be exercised in reference to claims of this kind; and in my opinion we ought not to extend relief to parties who might have kept the public money safely and have not done so.

Mr. DELANO. I agree fully with all that the gentleman has said. The views which he has expressed are, I believe, entertained by all the members of the committee and have guided them in their action.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed: and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION FOR BOATS LOST.

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, I report back from the Committee of Claims House bill No. 178, entitled "An act to amend section two, chapter one hundred and twenty-nine of public acts of 1849," with a recommendation that it pass. It is a bill the passage of which is required by the public interest.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time, it was read at length. It provides that the section named in the title of the bill be so defined as to include only such boats as have been actually destroyed by the public enemy while in the Government service during the war of the rebellion; and it is provided that in all cases where a boat, steamer, or other vessel in the Government service by impressment or contract shall have been destroyed by the public enemy without the fault of the owner or his agent, the actual loss sustained shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, after the account and claim shall have been duly examined, audited, and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. DELANO. The object of this bill is to interpret a section of the existing law, to obviate a construction which has led in some instances, to large expenditures of money. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. STOKES. I would like to hear the bill again read.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would suggest that the Clerk also read the section which this bill proposes to construe.

Mr. DELANO. I shall have to withdraw this bill if it is to consume much time.

Mr. LE BLOND. Let the gentleman make a brief explanation.

Mr. DELANO. The section of the enacting law with regard to boats, &c., used in the conveyance of the Government property is liable to an interpretation which makes heavy drains upon the Treasury. The object of this section is to limit and control the present law so that boats only lost by destruction by the enemy during the war shall fall within the scope of existing law. That is the purpose of the bill, and I am satisfied it ought to pass.

Mr. NOELL. Does it provide for boats impressed into the Government service and lost during the time they were in that service?

Mr. DELANO. It expressly provides for them.

Mr. NOELL. Does it exclude payment for boats lost by capture of the enemy?

Mr. DELANO. It limits the present law to such cases.

Mr. NOELL. Does it also provide for boats destroyed by our own troops?

Mr. DELANO. It does not touch that question.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES J. HUDNELL.

Mr. THORNTON, from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution for the relief of James J. Hudnell; which was read a first and second time.

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed, in the settlement of the accounts of James J. Hudnell, collector of the sixth congressional district of Kentucky, to credit him with the sum of $1,900 for money lost by him in Petersburg, Boone county, Kentucky, on the 16th August, 1866.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is there any report in the case?

Mr. THORNTON. There is a report, but perhaps I can explain it in a few words. The claimant was collecting money in that district and while in attendance at Petersburg, forty miles from any bank, he deposited his money in a banking-house to which he was recommended and where the community mainly deposited their money. The bank safe was broken open during the night and his money was stolen as well as that of others. It is proved by the assistant assessor, as well as by half a dozen others, that this money was so deposited and stolen; and there is ample proof of the integrity of this party.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If I mistake not there was a special law providing these deposits should not be made in State banks.

Mr. THORNTON. This was a private bank and not a State bank. There was no bank nearer than Covington.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It seems to me this is not consistent with the action of the committee at the last session in the case of a deputy collector in my own district, who was also county treasurer. He deposited money in the safe provided by the county for the safe-keeping of its funds—some five or six hundred dollars of Government funds. That safe was blown open and the robber carried off the money. This case was referred to the Committee of Claims and they reported against it. If it is not as strong a case as the one now pending I cannot see it.

Mr. THORNTON. There is a difference between the two cases. In the case the gentleman refers to there was no proof, but only the statement of the claimant, as to the amount of money lost, while in this case there is abundant proof. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THORNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILWAUKEE AND ROCK RIVER CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. SLOAN, from the Committee of Claims, reported back Senate joint resolution No. 102, construing and giving effect to the joint resolution entitled "A resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin," approved July 1, 1864, with the recommendation that it do pass. The joint resolution provides that the resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin, dated July 1, 1864, be so construed as to entitle the Milwaukee and Rock River Canal Company to reimbursement, out of the canal land fund therein mentioned, for the amounts which are proved to have been paid out by it for interest in carrying on the work mentioned in said former resolution in the same manner as for other sums by it expended. Also for the amount which is proved to have been expended by it in necessary repairs and management of the canal after the date of the resolution, but before the date of the settlement made thereunder, provided said company shall not receive more than the amount of the residue of the trust fund arising from the sale of the canal lands charged against the State in the settlement and not heretofore paid over to said company; and the Secretary of the Department of the Interior shall complete the settlement by making said further allowance to the company up to the amount of the residue of the canal lands fund, and the same shall be paid to the company out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ROSS. I raise the point of order that it is an appropriation bill. It is rather an obscure bill, and I think it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SLOAN. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection. It can be easily explained.

Mr. ROSS. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. UPSON. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

L. C. HOUCK.

Mr. SLOAN, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Colonel L. C. Houck, of Tennessee; which was read a first and second time.

The bill recites that whereas the Secretary of War authorized the claimant to raise a regiment of infantry in February, 1862, and he proceeded to organize the third regiment of East Tennessee militia, and in doing so expended $1,868 20, therefore the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to him the said sum.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. ASHBURN.

Mr. THORNTON, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of George W. Ashburn; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $3,888 77 to the claimant in full for his equal part of the proceeds of certain property seized and condemned as the property of one Frederick Stewart, in the year 1863, in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I raise the point of order, that it is an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. It contains an appropriation, and must therefore go to the Committee of the Whole.

By unanimous consent, the accompanying report was ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS FOR WAR VESSELS.

Mr. SLOAN, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 220, for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following as a substitute:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the claims of the following contractors for building iron and iron-clad vessels of war and steam machinery for the same, namely: T. F. Rowland, Harrison Loring, Zeno Secor & Co., the Novelty Works, Posey, Jones & Co., William Perrine, James B. Eads, George W. Quintard, Z. & F. Secor, William Perrine and Z. & F. Secor, Alexander Swift & Co., and Niles Works, Snowden & Mason, Donald McKay, Miles Greenwood, McCord & Bestor, Donahue, Ryan & Secor, A. W. Denmead & Sons, the Stover Machine Company; and said investigation to be made upon the following basis: he shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government, which were not provided for in the original contract, but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work, rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor; and from such additional cost, to be ascertained as aforesaid, there shall be deducted such sum as may have been paid each contractor for any reason heretofore, over and above the contract price; and shall report to Congress a tabular statement of each case, which shall contain the name of the contractor, a description of the work, the contract price, the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, and the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as aforesaid, and the amount already paid the contractor over and above the contract price.

Mr. SLOAN. I present a report accompanying the bill, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, and before concluding the morning hour expired, and the bill went over until the next morning hour.

By unanimous consent, the substitute and report were ordered to be printed.

Mr. McKEE gave notice of the following amendment as a substitute, which, by unanimous consent, was ordered to be printed:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the contractors of vessels-of-war and steam machinery, on contracts made by the Navy Department during the years 1862 and 1863, the actual cost to each contractor incurred, over and above the contract price, and allowance for extra work, which cost was the result of delays, caused by the order of the Department, either from changes in plans and specifications, or from delays in furnishing the same: Provided, That none but those which have given satisfaction to the Department shall be considered.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That in the adjustment of these claims the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to appoint a board of three competent persons to examine into and report upon each separate case, as provided in the first section, and the award of losses so ascertained shall be paid to the claimants by the Secretary of the Treasury without further authority than that given in this resolution.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That the payments hereby authorized to be made shall be in full for all claims on the part of said contractors, and no moneys shall be paid until each party to whom an award is made shall execute to the Secretary of the Treasury a receipt in full, and releasing all claims against the Navy Department for further compensation on account of said contract or alterations thereto.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE gave notice of the following amendment as a substitute, which, by unanimous consent, was ordered to be printed:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the contractors of the following vessels the amounts awarded by the board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, under a resolution of the Senate of March 9, 1865, namely: Onondaga, G. W. Quintard contractor, $35,203 91; Tecumseh, Z. & F. Secor contractors, $119,020 57; Mahopac, Z. & F. Secor contractors, $119,020 57; Manhattan, W. Perrine & Z. Secor contractors, $119,020 57; Catawba, A. Swift & Co. contractors, $114,009 94; Onocota, A. Swift & Co. contractors, $114,009 94; Manayunk, Snowden & Mason contractors, $71,569 42; Naubuc, William Perrine contractor, $36,363 44. Also to pay Miles Greenwood $94,659 44, being the amount lost in building the Tippecanoe on account of alterations and additions made by the Navy Department. Also to Charles W. McCord $47,287 16, and to George C. Bestor $57,958 82, being amounts lost in building the monitors Etihad and Shiloh respectively; said losses being caused by alterations and additions ordered by the Navy Department.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be authorized and directed to appoint a competent board of not less than three persons to examine all contracts of ships-of-war and steam machinery, made by the Navy Department during the years 1862 and 1863, and where the losses have been sustained by the interference of the Government, that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amounts awarded by said board out of any money not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. INGERSOLL gave notice of the following amendment as a substitute, which by unanimous consent was ordered to be printed:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Charles W. McCord twelve per cent. upon the contract price of the monitor Etihad, and to George C. Bestor twelve per cent. upon the contract price of the monitor Shiloh, the said amount to be in full for losses incurred on account of alterations and enlargements ordered on said vessels by the Navy Department, the same to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely:

A bill (S. No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Governor of the State of New York, transmitting a copy of a joint resolution of the Legislature of that State ratifying the proposed constitutional amendment; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. ELDRIDGE presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin in relation to the Paris Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WISCONSIN RAILROAD LAND-GRANT.

Mr. ELDRIDGE also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Green Bay and Lake Pepin railway; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the House take a recess this day from half past four to half past seven o'clock p. m., for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the tax bill at the evening session.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to order that the evening session shall be devoted to the consideration of any particular subject. But the order for a recess can be made by a majority.

Mr. HOOPER. Very well; I submit the motion for a recess.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. DIXON, of Rhode Island, for one week.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and obtained leave of absence for one week for himself.

Mr. ECKLEY asked and obtained for himself indefinite leave of absence.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of House bill No. 836, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, being a bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines, who served in the late war for the Union.

The bill is as follows, the amendment of the committee being inclosed within brackets:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, instead of any grant of land or other bounty, there shall be allowed and paid to each and every soldier, sailor, and marine, who faithfully served as such in the Army, Navy, or marine corps of the United States, and who has been, or who may hereafter be, honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one third dollars per month, or at the rate of $100 per year, as hereinafter provided, for all the time during which such soldier, sailor, or marine actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 19th day of April, 1865. And in the case of any such soldier, sailor, or marine, discharged from the service on account of wounds received in battle, or while engaged in the line of his duty, the said allowance of bounty shall be computed and paid up to the end of the term of service for which his enlistment was made. And in case of the death of any such soldier, sailor, or marine, while in the service, or in case of his death after the discharge and before the end of his term of enlistment, if discharged on account of being wounded, as provided, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow if she has not been remarried, or if there be no widow, then to the minor child or children of the deceased who may be under sixteen years of age.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, or his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid, or payable under existing laws, by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, so that in no case shall the aggregate amount of bounty allowed and paid from all sources exceed eight and one third dollars for each month of actual faithful service, or at the rate of $100 per year. And in the case of any sailor or marine to whom prize money has been paid, or is payable, the amount of such prize money shall also be deducted, and only such amount of bounty paid as shall, together with such prize money and any other bounty paid or payable by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, amount in the aggregate to the sum allowed by this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no bounty, under the provisions of this act shall be paid to or on account of any soldier, sailor, or marine who served as a substitute in either the Army or Navy, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged on his own application or request, prior to the 9th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to reenlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and such person did actually so reenlist or accept promotion, or was so transferred. And no bounty shall be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically, under oath, and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty, either from the United States or from any other source, and what amount of prize money, if any, has been paid or is payable to the soldier, sailor, or marine, by whom or by whose representatives the claim is made.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That whenever applications shall be made by any claimant, through any attorney or agent, the post office address of the claimant shall be furnished, giving the name of the county and State in which it is situated, and the amount of commission or fee which the attorney or agent is to receive for his service in the settlement of the claim, which charges in no case shall exceed the sum of five dollars; and every such application shall be accompanied by the written affidavit of the attorney or agent, that he has not charged nor agreed for, and will not accept, more than such sum of five dollars for his services in the case. The Paymaster General or proper accounting officer of the Treasury, upon ascertaining the amount due, shall cause to be transmitted to such claimant the full amount thereof, less the fee to be paid to the attorney or agent, which fee shall be paid to the said attorney or agent in person, or transmitted to such address as the attorney may direct.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than five dollars for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall pay a fine not to exceed the sum of $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall be forever thereafter excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatever against the Government of the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That in case the payments shall be made in the form of a check, order, or draft upon any paymaster, national bank, or Government depository in or near the district wherein the claimant may reside, it shall be necessary for the claimant to establish, by the affidavits of two credible witnesses, that he is the identical person named therein; but in no case shall such checks, orders, or drafts be made negotiable until after such identification.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any soldier, sailor, or marine to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other papers, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act; and all such transfers, assignments, barters, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended so to be conveyed by any such soldier, sailor, or marine.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That, in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of this bill shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representatives of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive, in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Paymaster General shall prescribe.]

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any soldier, sailor, or marine, or of his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, shall be made unless the application be filed within two years from the passage of the act; and the settlement of accounts of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be made in the same manner as now provided by law.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That sections twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, approved July 23, 1866, are hereby repealed; but if any money shall have been paid to any person under the provisions of said sections so repealed, the amount thereof shall be deducted in each case by the proper accounting officer from any sum to be allowed under this act. And any application made for allowance of bounty under the said act of July 23, 1866, with all the evidence and papers submitted therewith, shall be taken and considered as filed under the requirements of this act, and shall be used hereunder for the benefit of the applicant, as far as the same may be applicable.

Mr. SCHENCK. For convenience I will ask that the bill, with the amendment reported by the committee, be regarded as together forming the bill to be acted on by the House.

No objection was made.

Mr. SCHENCK. By the intervention of a vast amount of business we have been kept so long from the consideration of this bounty bill that it may be well for me to inform gentlemen that they will find the bill upon their files as House bill No. 836, Printer's number 207. As I intend to occupy but a portion of my time, I will state in the first place, by way of explanation, that this bill is precisely the one which was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to the House at its last session, passed by the House and sent to the Senate. It did not receive the favorable action of the Senate, or perhaps any action at all in that body. Subsequently the same bill was passed, with the section stricken out which provides for taking into account local bounties to soldiers, in determining what shall be done in order to equalize their bounties; and that was made as an amendment to the appropriation bill. It was not agreed to by the Senate. Subsequently there was passed, as an amendment to an appropriation bill, some four or five sections, providing additional bounties to soldiers; which sections constitute the present law upon that subject. This bill, then, is precisely the bill first reported, and matured by various amendments, and which passed the House at the first session of this Congress, with two additions, which I will now indicate to the House. The first is the ninth section of this bill, which is as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of this bill shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representatives of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Paymaster General shall prescribe.

The other amendment is one which is intended to adapt this bill to the condition of things which will exist by the repeal of the present law, should this bill become a law. It is as follows:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That sections twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen, of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, approved July 23, 1866, are hereby repealed; but if any money shall have been paid to any person under the provisions of said sections so repealed, the amount thereof shall be deducted in each case by the proper accounting officer from any sum to be allowed under this act. And any application made for allowance of bounty under the said act of July 23, 1866, with all the evidence and papers submitted therewith, shall be taken and considered as filed under the requirements of this act, and shall be used hereunder for the benefit of the applicant as far as the same may be applicable.

The object of this is manifest. While we propose to repeal the existing bounty law, constituting a part of the appropriation law of last year, there is a provision that whatever may have been already paid under that law in any case shall be taken into account in any adjustment of bounty made under this bill, if it should become a law; with the further provision, in order to save expenses to applicants, that whatever papers they may have filed under that law, so far as they are applicable, may be used under this, if it becomes a law, without the applicants being compelled to renew their application, and being thus subjected to additional expense.

Here, then, is presented for the consideration of the House the bill which met its approval in the first session of this Congress, and which we think ought then to have received the assent of the Senate and become a law. Instead of this, however, we have upon our statute-book another law on the subject of bounties, resting upon an entirely different principle. This bill is one proposing to equalize to a certain degree the bounties of soldiers. The law as it now stands does not propose any equalization of bounties, but provides for additional bounties to be given to those who have already received, or are by law entitled to receive, certain bounties. For instance, the twelfth section of the appropriation law, the first section having any relation to the subject of bounties, provides:

"That each and every soldier who enlisted into the Army of the United States after the 19th day of April, 1861, for a period of not less than three years, and having served the time of his enlistment has been honorably discharged, and who has received, or is entitled to receive, from the United States, under existing laws, a bounty of $100, and no more; and any such soldier enlisted for not less than three years, who has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of his duty," &c., "shall be paid the additional bounty of $100 hereby authorized."

The next section provides that any soldier who has enlisted for a period of not less than two years, who has received or is entitled to receive under existing laws a bounty of $100, shall be entitled to fifty dollars additional.

Thus it will be perceived that the present law is not a law for equalization at all. It is a law for granting additional bounties to those who have received or are already entitled to receive certain bounties. The bill which we propose differs from this in principle, being a bill proposing to equalize bounties. How do we arrive at it?

I will state briefly the one leading idea which pervades the whole bill and distinguishes it particularly as a bill seeking to accomplish, as far as may be practicable, this object of equalization. It is well understood that neither the condition of the Treasury nor any claim which may properly be presented to that effect can justify Congress in attempting to bring every soldier up to the level of advantage occupied by those who received the largest bounty. Some soldiers received $1,000, $1,200, $1,500 bounty from various sources. It is utterly impracticable to adopt a bill which would bring every man up to that standard which would really be equalization. But it is perceived that without this, what seem to be the just expectations of the soldiers may be in some degree met by establishing some standard up to which we shall bring all the soldiers. The standard which has been adopted by the Committee on Military Affairs, after full consideration of this subject in all its aspects, and which met the approval of the House at the last session, is a standard which would secure to every soldier a bounty of as much as $100 for every year's service, or $8 33 per month. The committee, adopting this as the standard, have reported the bill now under consideration, proposing that every soldier who has received less than this sum, or who has received nothing at all, whether by any existing law entitled to bounty or not, shall be brought up to that standard. Thus this is really a bill proposing equalization of bounties, not, like the present law, an act to pay additional bounties to those who have already received certain bounties or are by law entitled to receive them. Now, how do we accomplish this? We personify the United States as the alma mater of all the soldiers. She calls her soldiers about her and says to them, "You have received your pay; some of you have received bounty in greater or less sums; some of you none at all. You have had secured to yourselves and families pensions. We now say to you, although you have had, or ought to have had, and will yet have the funds secured to you by contract with the Government, there is something more we feel capable of doing and desire to do for you, and that is to provide not one of you shall complain you have not received, during the time you served, whether short or long, and gives you in the way of bounty, gratuity, gift from the Government, $8 33 per month." Then the Government having brought these men around it, each one is asked, "Let me know, my man, how much you have had over and beyond your pay, over and beyond what the law has already secured to you or given to you; and if it be more than at the rate of $100 per year you cannot complain if we add no more to it. If it be less than $100, then we mean to bestow as much upon you as will bring you up to a level." That is the whole principle pervading this bill.

What objections are made to it? From certain quarters of the country it is said to be objectionable because it takes into account bounties paid by States, cities, counties, towns, local bounties as they are called, and, it is suggested, bounties offered by voluntary associations. I admit that is the case, and I admit that makes it objectionable to some persons and some Representatives upon this floor, representing the interests of their constituents connected with this matter. But let us look into the policy of the thing. Mark, it is not a bill for additional bounty, but a bill to equalize bounties, a bill the leading idea of which is not to give much or more to those who have already received much, but to take care of those who have received nothing at all or less than the amount the Government feels able to give to each. Following up that principle, it matters not where the soldier came from, it matters not to the public interest from what quarter these bounties have come, the object is, every man, by a generous and liberal Government, shall be provided for so as to be brought up to a certain standard in the amount of the gift now having reference to equalization.

But gentlemen say the effect of this is to take the money paid by the States, cities, counties, towns, and voluntary associations in the shape of bounty, and give the General Government the advantage of it. The reply to that is, in some shape or other, it all comes out of the people. We cannot bring all up to the same standard. The General Government ought to help these who have had less than this sum or nothing. If they have obtained more from other quarters, it becomes a question between them and those from whom they have obtained it.

Suppose you do not follow this principle up to its consequences, what then? Here is a man who has received $1,000, it may be, and upward, by successive enlistments. He has had from some State, county, city, or voluntary association some five hundred or one thousand dollars more. He has received altogether one thousand or fifteen hundred dollars in bounty. What is claimed? That no man who has served as long as he has, suffered possibly more, and has had less than $100 bounty, shall not have this $100 unless he also can receive it. I say, so far as the soldier is concerned it is not a favorable position in which to put him.

Then as to the State, county, and town bounties, if you take that principle and give to one soldier who has received one thousand or fifteen hundred dollars bounty, and to the soldier who has received nothing but this $100, will not this last soldier go back to his State, county, or city, and claim, the General Government having equalized the bounties, they shall also equalize them?

By this bill we save the counties, towns, and States to which the soldiers may return from claims of that kind. The very language of the bill disposes of that whole matter, and would, as we all know, meet with the sanction, approbation, and acceptance of the soldiers themselves. It begins with this language:

That, instead of any grant of land or other bounty, there shall be allowed and paid to each and every soldier, sailor, and marine, who faithfully served as such in the Army, Navy, or Marine corps of the United States, and who has been, or who may hereafter be, honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one third dollars per month.

This, then, without dwelling longer on that in the way of argument, is my answer to the proposition. I know there is plausibility in the objection that is made, but I say it is only plausible. I say that this bill, as a general adjustment of the whole matter, while it makes the condition of those who have been liberal to the soldiers no worse than it is now, carries out the idea of taking care of those who have received little or nothing, without feeling that we are constrained at the same time to give to those who have had more.

To come back to the point, therefore, with which I started, it is an equalization. If we adopt the idea that we are to pay without reference to other bounties from other sources, it becomes just like the present law, no longer an equalization bill, but a mere additional bounty bill, which is the object we seek to avoid. Now, then, keeping in view the idea that we say to the soldiers, "We wish to bring each of you up to a particular standard to which we feel the Government is capable and has the means of going, and having fixed the standard at $100, we propose to give to every one of you who has received less than $100 a year that much;" then to whom do we give it? By the present bounty law a man may have served an interval of two or three years or during the whole war and get no benefit of the law. He must be a man who was enlisted three years and got his hundred dollars, or his two years and got his fifty dollars. He must be one who has had a bounty already secured to him by law, so as to get an additional one. We hold that to be all wrong, and therefore have adopted the simple principle that to every man who served faithfully and has been honorably discharged, no matter how he came into the service, there shall be given, if he has been honorably discharged, a bounty proportioned to the length of the time of his service. If he has been in service one month he gets $8 33; if three months, $25; if a year, $100; if two years, $200. It is intended to cover all soldiers, sailors, and marines for whatever time they served as enlisted men.

Now, I had brought to my attention yesterday a case of this kind. A soldier who was entitled to receive the bounty under the existing law said to me, "I have a companion enlisted from my own State who served nearly three years; a month longer than I did, and who was as good a soldier as I. He was badly wounded and disabled, as I never was, and yet he receives nothing under the present bounty law, while I am entitled to $100. I have already had something like $1,200 and he had nothing; having enlisted at an early day when no bounties were given. He served and was discharged, and afterward reenlisted as a volunteer; and though his aggregate service was greater than mine he does not come within the provisions of the law." That case illustrates what we want to get rid of. It illustrates the propriety of following out, not only the idea of equalization, but giving to every man in proportion to the length of his service.

There is another class of cases—soldiers who were promoted to become officers, but by reason of accepting commissions are cut off from the bounty under the existing law. Now, we say that is wrong; we say that for the time they acted as enlisted men, they ought to receive bounties, if they have not already received them; and we have secured that to them by this bill. I give this as another illustration of the necessity of a rule of this kind.

Now, I will wait for propositions which gentlemen have to make, and then I will submit this whole bill for the action of the House, which I hope will be speedy. For that purpose I propose to demand the previous question upon the bill and see whether the House will sustain me in pressing it to a vote. Now, I ask gentlemen to bear in mind two or three propositions which I have attempted to illustrate. In the first place, the present bounty law operates most unequally; it gives more to those who have already had too much, and gives nothing to those who have not had anything in the way of bounty. The present law is a law for additional bounties; and not like this, a bill for the equalization of bounties. This bill proposes to establish a fair standard and bring those who are below up to it; but it proposes to give nothing to those who are already above the standard. In this way this bill proposes to equalize bounties according to the length of service, whether that service be short or long. These are the leading ideas of the bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SCHENCK. I will.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand the gentleman to say that he proposes to call the previous question upon this bill, which would shut out all amendments to it. Now, I have an amendment which I desire an opportunity to offer to this bill. I ask the gentleman to let it be read by the Clerk.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will hear the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section one, by inserting after the words, "or Marine corps of the United States," the following: "including those recognized by Congress in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes,' approved February 13, 1862, and including those borne on the rolls as slaves."

Mr. BENJAMIN. I can explain in a very few words the purpose of that amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; I will yield to the gentleman three minutes of my time for that purpose.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We have a class of troops in Missouri, and there is another similar class in the State of Maryland, to whom the amendment has reference; troops who were mustered into the service of the United States in 1862, and whom the Department up to this time has ruled out from the benefits of our bounty laws; both the original law authorizing the troops to be raised, and also the law authorizing the additional bounty. And the Department also rules out all those who have been enlisted during the war, that are upon the rolls as slaves. It is for the purpose of including these troops—volunteers that were mustered into the service of the United States during the term of their enlistment, and were honorably discharged from that service. The object is to bring them within the provisions of this bill. I am aware that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] entertains the opinion that they are included in the provisions of the bill as it stands. Now, I wish to make that so certain that there shall be no dispute about it, and that the Department may have no chance to cavil over the payment of the bounties to these men who are as much entitled to them as are any volunteers who entered the service of the United States during the rebellion.

I have the law before me which refers to these troops and the manner in which they were raised; but perhaps it is not necessary that I should have it read. I shall now merely repeat that I desire to have this amendment incorporated into the bill, for the purpose of making it sure that these troops shall not be excluded as they have been heretofore. If the previous question is sustained amendments are cut off, and there is of course no chance of this amendment being made to the bill. I trust, therefore, if the previous question is demanded the House will refuse to second it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I shall in a few words, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr.

BENJAMIN,] explain to him and to the House why I do not accept his amendment; and I trust the explanation I shall offer will induce him not to oppose, as he threatens, the demand for the previous question. This bill as it now stands provides for every man for whom he makes an appeal. Every man who has served and been honorably discharged, no matter who he may be, gets paid under the provisions of this bill. It includes the very men for whom he speaks. But the gentleman from Missouri says a decision has been made already. True; but the decision was under a law entirely different in its language from this one.

While this bill proposes to pay every one who served and who has been honorably discharged, the law as it now exists provides for the payment of additional bounty to those who have been enlisted in the Army of the United States, and who under existing laws have received or are entitled to receive certain bounties. No wonder, therefore, the decision is against them under the present law. But the decision cannot be against them under this bill should it become a law, because this takes them up and provides for them, for the very reason that they are not now entitled to receive any bounty. The gentleman, therefore, is arguing from the present law to this bill, when they are entirely dissimilar, and intended to be so. This bill, if it shall pass, will provide for these very men for whom he makes an appeal. The present law does not provide for them, because they are not entitled to receive additional bounty until by law they are made entitled to receive bounty.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Then what objection can the gentleman have to my amendment?

Mr. SCHENCK. Simply this objection: if I open this bill to his amendment the flood-gates will be opened to all other amendments. I can inform the House that there are fifty members here who are no doubt wiser than the Committee on Military Affairs, at least in their own opinion, each one of whom desires to offer an amendment.

I will now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STOKES,] and I shall insist upon his being strictly confined to that limit.

Mr. STOKES. I shall promise not to exceed the time, and shall probably conclude before the expiration of the five minutes. I desire to say that I shall support this bill reported by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] believing it to be right and just. It is a bill to equalize the bounties payable to the Federal soldiers. It will be remembered that, in the last session of Congress, just at the close of the session, we had a bounty bill, as it was termed, tacked by the Senate as an amendment upon the civil appropriation bill, and connected also with the compensation bill. I voted against that civil appropriation bill with those two amendments. I voted against it because, while it professed to equalize the bounties of soldiers, it did not equalize them and did not give the soldiers equal justice. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK,] that every man who served in the Army ought to be paid at the rate of $8 33 per month, and I am in favor of any measure that will equalize the bounties and will give to each man his equal share of justice. It is for this reason that I voted against the bill of last session, because it did not equalize the bounties; and to-day I shall vote for this bill because it does equalize the bounties.

In the northern States, when regiments were organized, men enlisted for three years and were mustered in the same day. But this was not the case in the State I have the honor in part to represent. In Tennessee men had to wend their way out of the mountains to get inside the Federal lines, and there was no regularity about the mode of enlistment. Some would come in this week, some next week, some the week after, just as they could make their escape. Some were enlisted for three years, and served only twelve months; while others served the entire time.

I desire that the bill of the gentleman from Ohio should pass, because it will equalize bounties and do equal justice to each and every soldier; while as the law now stands gross injustice is done to a large number. As far as regards Tennessee, it does injustice to three fourths, I may say, of the men who enlisted from that State. I opposed the proposition to give fifty dollars to those who served two years and $100 to those who served three years. Under that law there are men who cannot get the $100 bounty, because they lacked one day of serving three years, and the man who lacks one day of serving two years is also deprived of his bounty, although he may have done more service for the Federal Government than another who has received the $100 or the fifty dollars. I shall not detain the House longer. I desired merely to make these remarks in order to have it put on record that I have been guilty of no inconsistency in having voted against the bill of last session, because it did not equalize bounties, while to-day I support the bill of the gentleman from Ohio, because it does equalize bounties.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] that he may explain an amendment which he desires to offer. I do not yield to allow it to be offered.

Mr. ROLLINS. As the gentleman declines to allow my amendment to be offered, I trust that the House will refuse to second the previous question, so that I may have an opportunity to present the amendment, the effect of which I will now state.

I desire to move to strike out so much of the second section as proposes that in estimating the bounty to be paid under this bill, the bounties paid by any "State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization or by any voluntary association," shall be deducted. I am opposed to this deduction. I see no more reason for this deduction than for a deduction of the money we have paid to the families of soldiers absent in the Army. We have spent large amounts in this way in supporting the families of our soldiers. If some States or local organizations have been liberal and patriotic enough to pay additional bounties to their soldiers, why should these bounties be deducted from the amount now to be paid by the United States? I see no reason for it. Why should States like New Hampshire and other eastern States, who have paid their soldiers liberal bounties, be now required to assist in making up deficiencies in this respect on the part of other sections of the country?

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield a few minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WARD,] that he may indicate an amendment he would like to offer.

Mr. WARD, of New York. Mr. Speaker, when I voted for this bill before I did it with much reluctance, because of the section providing that all bounties paid by any county, city, town, municipal organization, or voluntary association shall be deducted from the amount of bounty to be paid. Now, Mr. Speaker, in New York the towns and counties and local associations generally were very liberal to the soldiers. Most of the New York soldiers received, either at the time of their original enlistment or upon reenlistment, contributions from local associations of some kind. Now, if this bill passes its effect will be that soldiers who enlisted from localities where the people were not liberal and gave little or nothing to volunteers in the way of contributions by local associations will receive bounties; while those who enlisted from localities like those in the State of New York and some of the eastern States, and who received liberal contributions from local associations, will obtain nothing. I believe that under this bill not one in twenty of the soldiers from the State of New York will receive a dollar of bounty.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow us to submit to the House, by way of amendment, the question whether or not those local bounties shall be deducted. The amendment which I desire to offer is to strike out all after the word "State," in the sixth line of the second section, down to and including the word "years" in the eleventh line; and again, to strike out all after the word "State," in the sixteenth line, down to and including the word "association" in the seventeenth line. The words which I propose first to strike out are the following:

County, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, so that in no case shall the aggregate amount of bounty allowed and paid from all sources exceed $8 33 for each month of actual faithful service, or at the rate of $100 per year.

The language which the second portion of the amendment proposes to strike out is this:

County, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association.

I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he will allow this amendment to be offered.

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir.

Mr. WARD, of New York. Then I hope the House will vote down the previous question, and allow an opportunity to test the opinion of the House on this question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL,] who wishes to indicate an amendment which I cannot consent that he shall offer.

Mr. O'NEILL. The amendment which I desire an opportunity to offer is to insert after the word "marine," in the fifth line, the words "seaman, coal-passer, and fireman;" so that the bill will include "every soldier, sailor, marine, seaman, coal-passer, and fireman who faithfully served as such in the Army, Navy, or Marine corps of the United States, and who has been, or who may hereafter be, honorably discharged from such service." These men, to whom I propose to extend the benefits of this bill, are men who, though not enlisted, served in the Navy and rendered service as important as that done by the fighting men, for on our naval vessels they helped to keep the steam up.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to permit that amendment to be offered?

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not. I only consented that the gentleman should state it. I will reply to the gentleman that every soldier, sailor, and marine is now provided for by the bill.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for three minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will after I have called the previous question.

The amendments which have been stated are only about one tithe of what have been indicated to me; and they certainly indicate the propriety of testing the question whether the House will take this bill, which they have once passed in its present shape, with the single exception of providing for lost discharges. I am willing to submit that question to the House under the demand for the previous question, and to cut off all possibility of amendment I move that the bill be recommitted.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is pending.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the previous question. But I desire to have a clerical error corrected in line six, page 3, to strike out "nine" and insert "nineteen."

There was no objection, and the correction was made accordingly.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman from Ohio was not able at the last session to tell with any accuracy what amount of money this bill will take out of the Treasury. I wish to know whether he can inform the House with any greater degree of certainty than he was able to at the last session what amount will be required under this bill?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is difficult to say, as the accounting officers differ widely; some say $600,000,000, others $400,000,000, and others $250,000,000. The committee have satisfied themselves the provisions for bounty under this bill, with the restrictions as to those who are the representatives of deceased soldiers, will reduce it to something between seventy-five and one hundred million dollars. That is our opinion, from all the data we have to calculate from. I now yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. MARSTON. I ask the chairman of the committee whether he can state to the House what is the estimate of the War Department if local bounties be stricken out?

Mr. SCHENCK. That is one of the data upon which we calculated. If they are taken out it will run up to $450,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Four hundred and eighty-five million dollars.

Mr. SCHENCK. Under the bill as it now stands we bring it down to from seventy-five to one hundred million. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, I intend to support this bill, although it does not contain all the provisions I desire to have in it.

I call attention to that part of the third section which excepts from the provisions of this bill all persons captured prisoners of war at the time of their enlistment. Suppose a man conscripted in the confederate States was taken a prisoner of war and afterward enlisted in the service of the United States, why should he not receive bounty under the bill?

Mr. SCHENCK. There would be a difference of opinion on that. We enlisted into our service a good many men captured as prisoners from the rebel army who were desirous to get into the service, some from high motives of patriotism, and others to get rid of their imprisonment. It was necessary to put them on the footing; they received as much bounty as they were entitled to in being allowed to renew their allegiance and fight on the right side.

Mr. FINCK. If these men were honorably discharged from our service, ought not they to receive bounty?

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not think that follows; but I have not time to go into an argument on the subject. We thought it not advisable to give bounty to those who came from the rebel side.

I understand I have nine minutes left, and I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BANKS. I listened to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio with pleasure, and had he confined himself to the arguments in favor of the bill I would not have said a word. But he says opposition to this measure is opposition to the soldier. It is not so. The gentleman can propose nothing for the soldier I will not sustain. When they say the amendment we ask gives $450,000,000, I care nothing at all about it. I will vote $450,000,000 or $850,000,000 for the soldier. His claim is the bottom claim; there is none deeper, none stronger, none more just. But the objection to this bill is as against the States and not as against the soldiers. The State I represent has paid these bounties, and now it is called upon to pay the bounties of soldiers of other States. The State of New York has paid its bounty, and now it is called upon to pay one fifth of the bounties that are given to the soldiers of other States. And so has Pennsylvania. The argument of the gentleman, in his effort to press this measure through, would seem to imply that half the States of the Union are against the soldier. Nothing can be more unjust to them than that idea.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me two minutes?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I wish simply to call the attention of the House to the third section and to show the hardship that it works to a very large number of the finest soldiers of the Union Army. It is known to every gentleman from the border States, and especially to those from East Tennessee that thousands of Union men were conscripted into the rebel army, who went to the front, were put into the battle, and gave themselves up as prisoners of war, because they were fighting under duress against their country. They went immediately into the Union Army and there fought until the close of the war. They were compelled to enter the rebel army and escaped rather than have the reproach of fighting against their country. I regard it as an act of the highest merit that they fought through the remainder of the war with the halter, as it were, around their necks, for the flag of their country. Now, they are cut off from the provisions of this bill, though they are as gallant and worthy soldiers as ever lifted an arm in the defense of the Government.

Mr. SCHENCK. I must occupy the little remainder of my time myself, partly to correct misapprehensions. As regards the argument relating to the States, let me say that there is no injustice done to the States by this bill. It does not propose to pay back under any circumstances to any of the soldiers what the States have already given them, so the State is no worse off for taking into account what it has paid. Somebody has paid the money, and it has come out of somebody by taxation or otherwise. It is not proposed to wipe out all that has been done and begin anew to equalize their pay, either up or down, with reference to the States. If this bill passes the State of Massachusetts will stand precisely where she stands now, having done nobly by her soldiers, having done so well by them that they do not need perhaps so much from the General Government. The General Government proposes by a bill of this kind to come in and say to the soldiers, "Some of you have received compensation and gratuities far beyond what you contracted for; some of you have received very little in the shape of bounties, and some of you have received nothing at all. Those of you who have fared badly who have received neither from the Government nor from the States nor counties nor towns nor associations as much as $100 a year, we mean to equalize by bringing your pay up to that standard." This whole thing is a matter of bounty, of generosity; it is a gift made to the soldiers, based upon the ground that we think the soldiers deserve more than has been paid to them under contract. We do not want to hold them to the strict terms of the contract. Whenever, therefore, we find one who has only been paid according to the terms of the contract, who from no source has received anything more, we propose to come forward generously and say to him, "You have been hardly treated, at least not so well treated as many others, and we, being the guardians of the general Treasury, propose to make that pay up to you in a certain degree if we can. Therefore we enact a law of this kind."

Now, I admit that this bill, if it becomes a law, will provide mainly and almost entirely for the soldiers who enlisted in 1861 or 1862, and will not benefit much others who entered the Army when large bounties were being given. Those men of 1861 and 1862 are the very men, sir, that we desire to provide for. They are the men who rushed to the standard of their country at the beginning of the war, because there were patriotic impulses in their bosoms; the men who made haste to enlist in the ranks and who cheerfully hazarded all that they were worth and all that they had in that great trial to which they were called. Now, sir, I demand the previous question.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I desire to ask the Speaker a question. If we vote down the previous question will the bill then be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If we vote down the previous question will it then be in order to make a motion to refer this whole subject to the Committee of Ways and Means to see where we are to get the money?

The SPEAKER. The motion would then be in order.

The question was then taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and there were—ayes 56, noes 60.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. SCHENCK demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCHENCK and Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, were appointed.

The House divided; and tellers reported that there were—ayes 74, noes 72.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question was upon ordering the main question to be now put.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes, 67, noes 65.

Mr. ROLLINS called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 76, nays 85, not voting 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Arnell, Delos B. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Brownell, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Lettwith, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Maynard, McKee, McKuer, Moulton, Niblack, Paine, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Stigroaves, Spaulding, Stillwell, Stokes, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Upson, Welker, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Windom—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Chanler, Darling, Davis, Daves, Dawson, Deftrees, Deming, Dodge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hise, Holmes, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Arman, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton, Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—85.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Brandegee, Conkling, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Hale, Harris, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jones, Koontz, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Ritter, Shanklin, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Wright—29.

So the main question was not ordered.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HAWKINS said: I have been requested to state that Mr. KOONTZ, of Pennsylvania, is absent from his seat on account of indisposition.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ROLLINS. I now move to amend the second section of this bill by striking out after the words "United States" where they first occur the words "or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, so that in no case shall the aggregate amount of bounty allowed and paid from all sources exceed eight and one third dollars for each month of actual faithful service, or at the rate of $100 per year." Also by striking out after the words "United States" where they again occur the words "or by any State, county, city, town, or municipal organization, or by any voluntary association." The section, if amended as I propose, will read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, or his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid, or payable under the existing laws, by the United States. And in the case of any sailor or marine to whom prize money has been paid, or is payable, the amount of such prize money shall also be deducted, and only such amount of bounty paid as shall, together with such prize money and any other bounty paid or payable by the United States, amount in the aggregate to the sum allowed by this act.

And now I call the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. KASSON. Before the previous question is called, I ask the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] to allow me a few moments, as the point involved in his amendment has not yet been debated at all.

Mr. ROLLINS. I must insist upon the call for the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Then I hope the call for the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire a question. Does his amendment include that part of this bill which relates to the present bounty law?

Mr. ROLLINS. It only refers to that portion of the bill relating to the deduction of local bounties.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to offer an amendment striking out that part of this bill repealing the present bounty law.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am willing to allow that amendment to be offered, if I can do so, and retain my right to call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. By general consent the amendment can be offered and considered as pending, to be voted upon after the previous question shall be seconded.

No objection was made.

Mr. STEVENS. I move, therefore, to strike out the eleventh section of this bill.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That sections twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen, of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, approved July 28, 1866, are hereby repealed; but if any money shall have been paid to any person under the provisions of said sections so repealed, the amount thereof shall be deducted in each case by the proper accounting officer from any sum to be allowed under this act. And any application made for allowance of bounty under the said act of July 28, 1866, with all the evidence and papers submitted therewith, shall be taken and considered as filed under the requirements of this act, and shall be used hereunder for the benefit of the applicant as far as the same may be applicable.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ROLLINS. I will do so.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I desire to move an amendment to the bill, and I will explain my purpose in so doing. As the bill now stands, all soldiers who have gone to the expense of making applications for the $100 bounty of last year, and who are about to get their money, will be set back by the provisions of this bill, and be obliged to wait until they make new applications before they can receive their money. I propose to so amend the bill that such amounts as they would be entitled to receive under the provisions of this bill may be paid to them under their pending applications, and not require them to incur the expense and delay of making new applications.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am willing that amendment shall be offered.

The SPEAKER. The amendment can be offered, and considered as pending.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The amendment I desire to offer is to add to section eleven of this bill the following:

And all applications which have been made for bounties under the act of July 28, 1866, by persons who are entitled to bounty under this act shall be acted on and payments made thereon under this act the same as if it had not been passed: Provided, That no person shall be paid a greater amount than he is entitled to under this act.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. ROLLINS. I will hear the suggestion.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I suggest to him to allow to be offered the amendment I indicated some time since.

Mr. ROLLINS. What is that amendment?

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is to amend section one, after the words "or Marine corps of the United States," by inserting:

Including those recognized by Congress in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1862, and including those borne on the rolls as slaves.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] to permit me to move to amend section three of this bill by striking out the words,

"or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment." The object of that amendment will be to bring within the provisions of this bill a large class of soldiers along the border States who are not included within the bill as it now stands.

Mr. ROLLINS. I cannot yield for that amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I now ask the gentleman, as he has not yet yielded to anybody to oppose his amendment; to yield to me five minutes to oppose it.

Mr. ROLLINS. The friends of this measure, as it was reported, have certainly had their full share of time this morning.

Mr. KASSON. Not upon that point.

Mr. SCHENCK. Much more than half of my time was yielded to those who opposed the bill.

Mr. ROLLINS. I must insist upon the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the call for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 53, noes 50.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. KASSON called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ROLLINS and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 77, noes 60.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Messrs. HENDRICKS, HARRIS, and CRESWELL, as conferees on the part of the Senate.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] who reported this bill is now entitled to an hour to close the debate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to meet an objection which one or two gentlemen from the eastern States, and one or two, I believe, from Pennsylvania, have urged against the bill as reported from the Committee on Military Affairs; and also to present a point, which I vainly sought from the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] an opportunity to present, as to the effect of his proposition, which seeks to put in writing the objection urged in argument by other gentlemen.

It is stated that the effect of the bill as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, is to charge this additional bounty, for the benefit of soldiers of other States, as a tax upon the States of the East that have already paid large State, county, and other local bounties. Now, sir, the gentlemen from New Hampshire and Massachusetts have failed entirely to perceive the converse of their proposition. It is admitted that in many of the poorer States of the Union soldiers have enlisted without any State or local bounty, and in some instances without any national bounty. Now, when we are about to take care of these patriotic soldiers who have had nothing or almost nothing in the way of bounty, it is boldly proposed by these same objecting gentlemen to go into the western States and tax them to pay two or three hundred dollars a head to the men in the eastern States who have already received $800, $1,200, or $1,500. These gentlemen from the eastern States, in their efforts to convince the House that the proposition of the Committee on Military Affairs is unjust, turn round and apply the identical rule to which they object; but they propose to make it bear on the poorer States who have not been able to pay these bounties, nor found it necessary to pay them to secure volunteers. And on this proposition the gentleman from New Hampshire undertakes to force the previous question upon the House without allowing a single word of explanation to those who oppose it.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the amendment which the gentleman proposes is utterly destructive of the principle of the bill, and will inevitably defeat it or any similar measure on which it may be ingrafted, and, as is suggested by a gentleman near me, will add hundreds of millions to the expenditure proposed by the law of last session—for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has proposed that we shall not repeal that law. The expenditure now proposed will, therefore, be cumulative upon that authorized by the law of last session. This proposition will utterly defeat every effort to equalize as far as possible the bounties among the soldiers of the United States. If this amendment should prevail the bill cannot under any circumstances be passed in this House; hence I am compelled to believe that the object of some of the gentlemen who support the amendment is not at all to befriend the soldier, but so to alarm the people of this country, so to embarrass the Treasury of the United States, as to prevent one dollar being paid to any soldier of the United States under this bill. I ask gentlemen from these wealthy States who, by the action of their Legislatures and by agents appointed by them, went early in the war to the poorer States and by bounties paid there (until checked by law) deprived us of the more thinly-settled States of fair opportunity to fill up our own quota—I ask them not to tax these same States to pay from one hundred to four hundred dollars to soldiers to whom they have already paid these enormous bounties ranging from five hundred to fifteen hundred dollars.

I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that in this very bill you refuse to pay the substitute anything at all, though he actually served for one or two years. On what principle do you do it? It was because the substitute was paid a bounty by the man whom he represented. Why not extend the principle to the substitute who received this bounty upon the same ground you insist your soldiers who received ten or fifteen hundred dollars shall also receive this bounty? I submit to the House the effect of the amendment is utterly destructive to the bill and will insure its defeat. It simply repeats the process of last session, which was not equalization of bounties at all.

I further submit to the House that you only postpone the day of equalization by every act of this kind. For there is perpetually coming up a cry from the soldiers of the country to equalize these unequal benefits to which they are continually pointing; and this bill attempts to accomplish their wish.

This presents, Mr. Speaker, all that I intended to say to the House. I call attention to the fact that the majority of this House were for the bill as it is in all essential points. If it were not for the Missouri delegation, who wished to incorporate an amendment, the main question would have been put.

I am obliged to the gentleman from Ohio for having yielded to me.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I protest against Illinois being included in the gentleman's list of poor States.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. I ask whether the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire is not to pay to the soldier who has already received $1,200 as much as to the soldier who did not receive one cent?

Mr. KASSON. That is the fact; for it strikes out that clause of the bill which proposes to deduct pro tanto the bounties already paid.

Mr. ROLLINS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask whether this bill will deprive Iowa or any other western State of the privilege of paying to their soldiers the same amount that the eastern soldiers have received? If the western States desire now to deal as liberally with their soldiers as the eastern States have done my amendment will not prevent them. We have paid our soldiers these bounties, and they can do the same thing if they please.

Mr. KASSON. As I feel under great obligations to the gentleman from New Hampshire I gave him the time he asked of me in view of the courtesy he refused to extend to me a while ago. But I will answer him by saying it is not the first time a rich man went to a poor man and said he had no objection to the poor man building a palace. After the wealthy States have paid out their thousands they now come and say to the less wealthy States we do not object to your paying your soldiers as much. That, sir, is no answer. Our soldiers, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, entered the Army through motives of patriotism, and did not wait for any high bounties, and are entitled to the benefits of this bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now wish to say a word or two myself. We have reported a bill to equalize bounties. The gentleman from New Hampshire proposes an amendment which will convert it into a bill making bounties more unequal than they are now. If his amendment prevails, I, for one, shall feel constrained to vote against the bill when molded into that shape. The bill we propose is designed to give to those who have received little or nothing something to bring them up to a certain standard. The bill, as the gentleman from New Hampshire would make it, would give to every man without reference to what he had before. What is the consequence? The man who has had $400 or $1,000 or $1,500 beyond his pay is to get $100 a year more; the man who has received nothing whatever beyond his pay is to get $100. Now, this keeps up the inequality as it exists. Therefore I repeat that if the amendment prevails it will have the effect to make this a bill to prevent bounties from being paid, and not to bring men nearer to each other by taking a common standard.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] wishes a vote also upon a further amendment to strike out the repealing clause, leaving the present law to stand as it is, and then to pass this bill, with not only that amendment but the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire, which he says he approves. What will be the effect of that? You will have one law giving additional bounty to those who have already received bounty, and then another law which, under the false name of equalization, will give additional bounties to everybody, including those who receive it under the existing law. What was therefore unequal before, if the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire and that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania should prevail, would become still more unequal and still more a muddle, a mixture, having no regard to putting men upon the same footing.

I have received since we have been discussing this bill a letter, which I will ask the Clerk to read as a part of my remarks, addressed to me by a soldier, stating how this law will operate upon himself, who has never received any bounty, if we leave it standing as it is now, and resort to no expedient for equalization such as is here proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1867.

GENERAL: I have the honor to state that I have served as an enlisted man in the late war two years, three months, and sixteen days, and have never received any bounty whatever, national or otherwise.

The bounty law of July 28, 1866 makes no provision for me, and this is why I write.

It seems unjust that I should have served over two years and not get one cent of bounty, local or governmental, while others got bounty for a shorter time.

June 30, 1861, I enlisted in the old twenty-fifth Ohio volunteers. With that regiment I served in the field through the first terrible winter of the war, and through the Cheat mountain campaign, and was honorably discharged for disability April 15, 1862. During this period of service I participated in the battles of Greenbrier, Alleghany mountain, Huntersville, and Monterey, West Virginia, &c.

My next term of service was in company D, seventh Veteran Reserve corps, commencing 29th September, 1863, and ending 20th March, 1865, during which time I was one of the defenders of Washington when Early made his attack on this city, July, 1864.

Each time I was honorably discharged for disability contracted in the field and not at the rear.

The statements I make are corroborated in the War Department records.

It was my misfortune and not my fault that I enlisted just at the times when I could get no bounty. That proves that I did not think of my private gain.

Why should I not get the bounty for the two years and more that I served?

If I had enlisted in 1862 and served two years I would have received $200 bounty, and if I had waited till the winter of 1863 I would have received $400 from the Government.

Suppose all soldiers had waited till 1862 or 1863 for these large bounties, the result would have been better to themselves but not so well for the Government.

As the present bounty provisions do not meet my case, nor as I believe many other cases, I respectfully, but urgently, beg you to use your very powerful influence in procuring the enactment of some law apportioning bounty according to the number of months of service.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. ASHFIELD,

Late private company I, twenty-fifth Ohio volunteers.
Gen. R. C. SCHENCK, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not mean to parcel out the time to the opponents of the bill. That letter illustrates the condition of things which, if the bill be amended as now proposed, gentlemen seek to perpetuate, namely, inequality of bounty—nothing to those who have had nothing—and whatever you give, give it to those who have had much.

Now, sir, what is the present condition of this bill? The friends of the bill as it is were, as was very apparent, in a majority. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] desired to change the language of the first section of the bill so as to provide for certain Missouri troops, some of whom were slaves. I replied to that, as I say now, that the language of this bill covers all. It provides for every soldier, sailor, and marine who has ever served for any length of time whatever and was honorably discharged. In their anxiety, however, friends of the bill as they were, to get an amendment of that kind, they voted with those that were for emasculating the bill and making it an unequal one, as is proposed now by the gentleman from New Hampshire, and we are all at sea again.

Now, I trust this matter will be fully understood. There is no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN,] except the single objection that it is wholly unnecessary. It neither adds to nor takes from anything in the bill; it leaves it as it was. Therefore, when it comes to a vote I shall vote for the amendment, if it will gratify the gentleman. But I shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] and the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] If either of those amendments should prevail, the bill will not be worth the paper it is written upon, for it will simply perpetuate the inequalities which we want to get rid of, and to remedy which we have reported this bill.

I will now yield the floor first to an opponent of the bill, the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. PATTERSON,] and then I will yield to one or two others. I now yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire for five minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] complains that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. ROLLINS] is objectionable, in that it would destroy the underlying principle of the bill. Now, I think that is the principal virtue of the proposed amendment of my colleague. What is the principle of the bill? It is one not of equality, but of inequality. If you will refer to the opinion expressed by William Wirt upon the payment of the interest of the war debts of 1812 you will find this sentiment expressed:

"The principle is this: the United States are bound by the relation which subsists between the General and State governments to provide the means of carrying on war; and as a part of the business of war to provide for the defense of the several States. When the United States fail to make such provisions and the States have to defend themselves by means of their own resources, the expenditure thus incurred forms a debt against the United States which they are bound to reimburse. If the expenditures made for such purpose are supplied from the Treasury of the State, the United States reimburses the principal without interest."

Now, look at this point: the eastern States have advanced large bounties to their soldiers. This bill comes forward and asks us to assist the western States, among others the State of Ohio, from which the gentleman [Mr. SCHENCK] comes who is chairman of the committee which reported this bill, to pay bounties to their soldiers. We do not claim that the soldiers should not have their bounties equalized. We merely claim that if Ohio has not heretofore paid a bounty equal to that which New England has paid, she should put her hands into her own pockets and pay it as we have done. If you look to simple justice in this matter, the bill should provide that the General Government should reimburse to the eastern States, which have overpaid the bounty, the surplus of bounty which would be required by this bill.

But the gentleman talks about the rich States of the East. That comes with a very bad grace from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] or from any gentleman from the rich States of the West, whose soil and mountains are teeming with wealth. The people of the New England States, the eastern States, have had to wring from the poverty of our soil by their industry and perseverance the wealth they possess. Now, is there any justice in our being called upon to vote, not only our own bounties, but to come forward and pay a tax to pay bounties to the soldiers of these rich western States?

Mr. SCHENCK. I now yield for five minutes to my colleague on the other side, [Mr. LE BLOND.]

Mr. LE BLOND. In reply to the gentleman who has just taken his seat, [Mr. PATTERSON,] I would say that it comes with an ill-grace from the New England States to claim what that gentleman claims. Why, sir, the very wealth they possess they have wrung from the West by high tariffs. And if by that means they have acquired wealth, they may thank the West for it and not the impoverished soil of which he speaks.

Now, let me say one word more. I understand, from the vote already cast upon this proposition, that it is a contest in this House between the West and the East, between labor and wealth. The vote already taken has indicated that such is the issue; and we shall see when the final vote comes whether the East is to control the West in regard to all legislation.

Now, sir, I am in favor of this bill as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I support it because it equalizes bounties, and not to create inequality, which the gentleman from the East are proposing to bring about. Sir, these gentlemen have no right to complain. The purpose of the bill is simply to bring the soldiers of the West as nearly as possible on an equality with the soldiers of the East. Is there any injustice in this? It is entirely just; it is precisely what ought to be done. The soldiers of the West and the East are alike the soldiers of the Union, and the whole Union, and not of any specific locality or community, and for a local purpose. They were soldiers for the whole Union, and should receive equal pay, unless the soldiers of the East were more patriotic and rendered better service in the field than the western soldiers, and none, I apprehend, will claim it.

But gentlemen say, "We have paid large bounties during the war." I say in reply, suppose you have done so, and I do not dispute it, this bill is not for the purpose of reimbursing individuals, counties, or States; it is for the purpose of bringing about as nearly as possible an equalization of bounties among the soldiers. But, sirs, if you have voluntarily paid money to save yourselves from the draft, you have no right now to say that you will not equalize bounties but that your soldiers have more than the West.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another question arising in this case, and it might as well be met now as at any other time. A large number of the gentlemen who are opposing this bill oppose it, I believe, with a view to break it down. While they set up here the pretext that they are the warm friends of the soldier, the course they are pursuing is one well calculated, and I am led to believe designed, to kill this bill, not to bring about an equalization of bounties; for that is well provided for in the bill as it stands. I want this fact understood; for it has been said here repeatedly that it will take millions upon millions of dollars to carry out this equalization of bounties, and that the Treasury cannot sustain such a draft upon it. When gentlemen, holding this view, oppose a bill equalizing bounties, their object must be to break it down altogether, if not in this House in the Senate. I hope, sir, that the House will act discreetly upon this question, and will pass the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GRINNELL.]

Mr. GRINNELL. Mr. Speaker, there are three positions taken by the gentlemen who support this bill which cannot be gainsaid. The first is that the western States proposed to be benefited by the bill furnished in proportion to their population a larger number of soldiers to put down the rebellion than the other sections of the country. The second position is that we of the West in furnishing soldiers labored under much greater disadvantages than other sections. Our people were engaged chiefly in rural pursuits. They were occupied in the cultivation of new farms and in the development of new industries. They were not wealthy. They were acting under the disadvantages of pioneers, and our counties and our States could not afford to pay volunteers the immense bounties which were paid by the eastern States. The third position is that the eastern States are, considering their population, richer in accumulated capital as three to one than the western States. If the older States with their large means have acted liberally, we commend them for their liberality. They had the capacity to pay largely where we had not.

Now, sir, you will find in regard to volunteers from the West thousands and tens of thousands of cases in which men have served less than three years; but not having served quite the required time, on account of the muster out or sickness, have received no bounty at all. Now, is it magnanimous, is it just to these States to come forward and say that you will impose this immense burden of millions on the less wealthy States, whose soldiers made the greatest sacrifice and the people paid according to ability? Sir, if I felt myself at liberty to make what might be considered an invidious comparison between one section and another, I might do it with great justice in favor of the western States. It is known as a fact few of our soldiers deserted. It will be found by reference to the records that desertions among the troops from the eastern States and middle States were as three to one compared with the desertions from the soldiers raised in our rural communities, which is no reproach to the States, but to those who accepted the bounties and escaped. In this view of the case we have furnished more real soldiers. We furnished those who were truer, those who did the most substantial work in putting down the rebellion.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman allow me to say—

Mr. GRINNELL. I cannot yield to the gentleman unless with the understanding that the interruption shall not come out of my time. But I will say to him that the people of Massachusetts are rich and benevolent, and they should not seek to impose an unjust burden upon the newer and poorer communities of the West. I appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and others from the older States, to recognize the justice of coming forward now and seeing that men who did not serve quite three years, but who acted the part of good soldiers, shall be entitled to bounty. There are many of this class who, because they have not served for the full three years, have received no bounty whatever, while others, serving no more faithfully and doing no more real work in putting down the rebellion, have received bounties of hundreds or a thousand dollars. It is just to those who left their new prairie farms and came back to find the prairie fires had destroyed their buildings and their last rail. Why deprive our poor men of this pittance? It is unworthy of the gentlemen and the powerful States which had a surplus population for the Army. It is unworthy of the country to deprive these men, because their soldiers have received a thousand dollars or more, at once from the abundance of their friends, given, I grant, with a nobler patriotism. Let this bill pass unamended, and it will reach a large class of the noblest soldiers and many who were compelled by disease to leave the service.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have an old bargain to yield to the gentleman from Illinois, but I ask him to be as brief as possible, as I understand we must dispose of this bill before half past four o'clock.

Mr. BROMWELL. The bargain of which the gentleman has spoken is more than a day old, and I regret what I had to say has been forced back until after the previous question has been seconded. Seeing the manner in which the debate has been running and the manifest danger to the bill of delay, I shall at present say nothing on this occasion of what I intended to say. I am thankful to the gentleman from Ohio, however, for having at last allowed me an opportunity to make this explanation. I intend to vote for the bill, and I would not now if I had an opportunity attempt to clog it with amendments to get up an excitement, to do which there seems to be some disposition. I hope, therefore, although this measure does not come up to the desires of all the members, it will be allowed to pass without further question. If there be defects they can be remedied by future legislation.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield the floor and demand the vote.

Mr. BENJAMIN'S amendment was adopted.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. ROLLINS; and being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 75, nays 84, not voting 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Chanler, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Eliot, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Hart, Holmes, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Lynch, Marvin, McCullough, McKuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Starr, Stevens, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, DeForest, Delano, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, Moulton, Niblack, Noel, Orth, Paine, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stillwell, Stokes, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Windom—84.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Bidwell, Brandegee, Conkling, Culver, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Hale, Harris, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jones, Koontz, Marston, Morrill, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Wright—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. STEVENS. The other amendment having failed, I do not ask that mine be adopted.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER'S amendment was adopted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 69, not voting 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, Darling, DeForest, Delano, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Moulton, Niblack, Noel, Orth, Paine, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Scofield, Shanklin, Starr, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Brandegee, Conkling, Culver, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Hale, Harris, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jones, Koontz, Marston, Morrill, Newell, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Wright—29.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURT IN RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly proceeded to business on the Speaker's table, the first business being the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 643, to alter the places of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL CAPITAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 234, to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to refer the amendments to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

PAUL S. FORBES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to joint resolution of the Senate No. 99, for the relief of Paul S. Forbes, under his contract with the Navy Department for building and furnishing the steam sloop-of-war Idaho.

The amendments of the Senate, which were of a verbal character, except the last one providing that the sum paid shall be in full discharge of his contract with the Navy Department, were concurred in.

Mr. PIKE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN J. SOHAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 1053, granting an increased pension to John J. Sohan.

The amendment of the Senate, providing that the pension be paid out of the naval pension fund, was concurred in.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BANKRUPT BILL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 593, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. JENCKES. Most of these amendments are merely formal and verbal. The select committee on the subject of the bankrupt law have had the subject under consideration, and have instructed me to move to concur in all but one.

Mr. BLAINE. We cannot pass that bill now.

Mr. JENCKES. I can explain the amendments in five minutes. I move a concurrence in all except the twenty-sixth; on that I call the previous question. They are in groups.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman resumes his seat and reserves the right to speak after seconding the previous question, a hostile motion to lay on the table might be carried.

Mr. JENCKES. I will waive the call for the previous question, and explain the amendment. The first five of these amendments form one group. The first amendment takes the power of appointment of registers in bankruptcy from the circuit courts and vests it in the district courts of the United States. The other four amendments following are to make the bill symmetrical with that amendment. On the whole this is deemed an improvement. The amendments, numbering from six to eleven, provide for the framing of the rules and code of practice under this bill by the justices of the Supreme Court instead of by the commissioners to be appointed by the Chief Justice, as provided in the bill as it passed the House. The amendments following the sixth and seventh are for the purpose of making the bill symmetrical with the principal amendment. The courts remain in session till June, and can easily perform the duty themselves, so that the rules of practice and the code will be established under the authority of the highest tribunal of the United States, and will be uniform in every district of the United States.

The twelfth amendment provides that every person filing a voluntary petition in bankruptcy shall add to the oath required by the House bill, of the truth of the subject-matter and statements of his petition, a brief oath of allegiance; not a test oath, but simply the common oath of allegiance.

The thirteenth and fourteenth amendments relate to the mode of appointing assignees, and do not vary that feature of the House bill at all. They simply require a majority of the number of creditors as well as of the value of the claims involved.

The fifteenth amendment is in relation to the provision for prosecuting, to remedy upon the bonds of the assignees. The provision is made by the Senate amendment more direct and simple than it is by the House bill. It provides that any aggrieved person may sue upon the bond for his own benefit.

The sixteenth amendment strengthens the exemption clause. The House bill provided that such property in the States as was exempt from levy upon execution should also be exempted from the effect of this act. In some of the States this exemption clause extends to other proceedings than levy upon execution. The words inserted by the Senate are "property exempted on other process or order of any court." It therefore strengthens the provision which the House insisted upon, to exempt the homestead and other property secured in different States.

The seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth amendments of the Senate simply change the phraseology of the House bill relating to the manner in which the wife of the bankrupt may be examined in court. It does not change the meaning of the House bill in the least.

The twentieth and twenty-first amendments of the Senate relate to the discharge of the bankrupt. They strike out the clause "that no discharge shall be granted to the debtor the third time bankrupt."

The twenty-second and twenty-third amendments relate to the mode of the trial of the validity of the bankrupt's discharge after it has been granted. No change is made in the meaning of the bill by these amendments; but simply a briefer phrase is employed, and probably one more clear.

The twenty-fourth and the twenty-fifth amendments of the Senate are merely formal, striking out unnecessary words.

The twenty-sixth amendment is the one upon which I ask for a separate vote.

The twenty-seventh and twenty-eight amendments are purely formal.

The twenty-ninth amendment limits the application of the bill to the business of moneyed or commercial corporations.

All the amendments of the bill, except the twenty-sixth, are unimportant, and merely formal or verbal. I move that all the amendments of the Senate be concurred in except the twenty-sixth, upon which I shall ask a separate vote. And upon that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. I would inquire of the Chair if it will be in order to call for a separate vote upon any amendment after the previous question is seconded?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay the amendments of the Senate upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion, if successful, will carry the bill to the table.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well.

Mr. FINCK. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 65, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnell, Baker, Barker, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Campbell, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Delano, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelso, Kerr, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Price, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, and Stephen E. Wilson—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Boyer, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Farnworth, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Hart, Higby, Hogan, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Laffin, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McKuer, Moorhead, Morris, Newell, Paine, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ross, Scofield, Spaulding, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Dofrees, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Goodyear, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hise, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jones, Koontz, Kuykendall, Marshall, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Stillwell, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—62.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. O'NEILL said: My colleague, Mr. MYERS, left the House within half an hour on account of indisposition.

Mr. HILL said: My colleague, Mr. HENRY D. WASHBURN, is still absent by leave of the House. I presume if he was here he would vote against the proposition to lay on the table.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Before the call of the roll had been concluded, the time fixed by order of the House for taking a recess, half past four o'clock p. m., arrived.

At the conclusion of the call (at fifteen minutes before five o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 146) for the relief of Charles Clark, marshal of the United States for the district of Maine; when the Speaker signed the same.

GOLD AND SILVER MINING STATISTICS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a preliminary report of James W. Taylor, special commissioner for the collection of statistics relative to gold and silver mines and mining east of the Rocky mountains, including the Alleghany gold districts of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LEFTWICH asked and obtained leave to have printed, as part of the debates, remarks on the bill to provide for the government of the insurrectionary States.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

On motion of Mr. LONGYEAR, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 605) entitled "An act to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled 'An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes,'" was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ALEXANDRIA CANAL.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill relating to the Alexandria canal; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to this House a statement of the rules by which the beginning point for the claim of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, for additional bonds from the United States for the construction of said railroad between the eastern base of the Rocky mountains and the western base of the Sierra Nevada mountains, is ascertained and adjusted under the eleventh section of the act approved July 1, 1862, relating to said road.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for executive information, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration on this day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF 1812.

Mr. WHALEY, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, asking the passage of a law granting additional pensions to the surviving soldiers of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WEST VIRGINIA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Mr. WHALEY also, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, asking an additional appropriation of land to aid in establishing an agricultural college; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

ROADS AND BRIDGES IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WHALEY also, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, asking an appropriation by Congress to aid in rebuilding certain roads and bridges destroyed during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WISCONSIN MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. PAINE, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress for the establishment of a mail route therein designated; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE TO SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back House bill No. 1089, to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and the Sandwich Islands, with amendments, and moved that they be printed, and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BANKRUPT BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the amendments of the Senate to the bankrupt bill.

Mr. JENCKES. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think they ought to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. JENCKES. They have been before that committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Few members have had an opportunity to examine these amendments.

Mr. DAVES. I suggest to the gentleman this disposition of his bill; it is evident he cannot command a majority of the House to go for these amendments; it took all the gentleman's skill to command a majority of the House for the bill as it was sent to the Senate; I submit if he expects to carry the bill into law we ought to non-concur without proposing a committee of conference, and let the other branch understand they must adopt the bill as it came from the House. It is as much as the gentleman can ask of the friends who have stood by him to vote for the bill as it went from the House. I make the suggestion to the gentleman as a friend of the bill and one desirous of voting for it if I can.

Mr. JENCKES. Very well; I move to non-concur; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. Is it the intention to have a vote on the amendments to-night?

Mr. JENCKES. Only on the motion to non-concur to send them back to the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the motion to non-concur be voted down, will it not be in order to move to refer them to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER. It will.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 30; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. PRICE and Mr. SPALDING.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 44.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the previous question on ordering the main question to be now put.

Mr. ROLLINS called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers on the question; and appointed Mr. ROLLINS and Mr. RANDALL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 42.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved that the amendments be laid on the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 60, not voting, 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alloy, Arnoll, Baker, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Campbell, Rander W. Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Deftrees, Eggleston, Eldridge, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kerr, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Lonn, Maynard, McKeluz, McKee, Merour, Miller, Myers, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Porham, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Starr, Stokes, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Benman, Buckland, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Daves, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Aaron Harding, Hart, Higby, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Laffin, Longyear, Marvin, McRuér, Moorhead, Morris, Nicholson, Pike, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rousseau, Scofield, Silgroaves, Spalding, Strauss, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Wentworth, Williams, Windom, and Woodbridge—60.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Borgen, Bidwell, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culver, Dawson, Delano, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Grinnell, Griswold, Garfield, Glossbennor, Goodyear, Grinnell, Finck, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hunter, Jones, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Latham, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Phelps, Pomerooy, Radford, Raymond, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sloan, Stevens, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—75.

So the House refused to lay the amendments of the Senate upon the table.

The question recurred on the motion to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and they were non-concurred in.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CODIFYING CUSTOMS LAWS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 251, to extend the time for codifying the laws relative to customs, authorized by the joint resolution approved July 26, 1866.

On motion of Mr. DEMING, the amendment of the Senate, extending the time till the 1st of January, 1868, was concurred in.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHANS' HOME.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 848, to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home," approved July 25, 1866.

On motion of Mr. WELKER, the amendment of the Senate, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute, was concurred in.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The motion was disagreed to.

BAILIFFS AND CRIERS IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 856, fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the following section:

And be it further enacted, That so much of the act of Congress as limits the number of notaries public to thirty-five is hereby repealed; and the supreme court of the District may appoint as many as they deem necessary for the public convenience.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move that the House concur.

Mr. LE BLOND. In what respect does that change the original law?

Mr. INGERSOLL. It allows the appointment of notaries to be made by the supreme court of the District. It changes the original law.

Mr. LE BLOND. Is that the only change?

Mr. INGERSOLL. That is the only change, I believe.

Mr. LE BLOND. Were they not appointed before by some other tribunal—by the President?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I believe they were. It also changes the number as well as the mode of appointment.

The SPEAKER. The Senate has stricken out that provision.

Mr. LE BLOND. That is what I wanted to know. I am informed that the President appoints them.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly the effect of the amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Do I understand that the effect of the amendment of the Senate is to leave the appointment with the President, where it was before? Then I hope the House will not concur. [Laughter.]

The question being put, there were—ayes 32, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. FARNSWORTH and LE BLOND.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 62.

So the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 907, to amend a law of the District of Columbia in relation to judicial proceedings therein.

The amendment of the Senate, which was verbal, was concurred in.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the consideration of amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 571, to regulate proceedings before justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. WELKER. The amendments of the Senate are merely verbal. I hope they will be concurred in by the House.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CRIMES IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 431, providing for the punishment of certain crimes therein named in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the following section:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where attorneys are appointed by the court to defend persons on their trial, the court may order the payment of such fee for such defense as may be deemed reasonable, but in no instance to exceed twenty-five dollars.

Mr. WELKER. I hope that amendment will be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIRECT TAX IN WEST VIRGINIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution of the Senate No. 90, to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia.

The first amendment of the Senate was to strike out all of section one of the House amendment after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That in ascertaining the quota of the State of West Virginia of the direct tax imposed by the act of August 5, 1861, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to charge the said State with such proportion of the said tax apportioned to the State of Virginia as the value of the real estate in the counties now composing the State of West Virginia, including Berkeley and Jefferson, bears to the value of all the real estate of the then State of Virginia, as ascertained by the assessment for State taxation of the real estate of the said State of Virginia in the year 1860, giving credit to the State of West Virginia for such part of its proportion so ascertained as has been already paid.

Mr. ALLISON. I move the House concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Several verbal amendments were also concurred in.

The last amendment was to strike out all of section six, as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That section two of the act entitled "An act further to amend an act entitled 'An act for the collection of direct taxes in the insurrectionary States within the United States and for other purposes,' approved June 7, 1862," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and certificates of sales shall be received in all courts and places as prima facie evidence of the regularity and validity of said sales and of the title of the parties or purchasers under the same as provided in section seven of an act entitled "An act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary States within the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1862.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the House non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] before the question is taken upon this amendment. I desire to inquire of him whether the effect of the section just read, if it is retained in the bill, is not to make valid the several sales made of property for the non-payment of taxes in the insurrectionary States?

Mr. ALLISON. I presume the effect of that section would be to make the certificate of such sale prima facie evidence of title.

Mr. BINGHAM. If that be the case then I hope the section will be retained.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House concur in the amendment of the Senate in striking out the section just read?

The question was taken, and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to reconsider the various votes upon the amendments of the Senate; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that a committee of conference be asked upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MINOR CHILDREN OF SOLOMON LONG.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 1058, for the relief of the minor children of Solomon Long.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension rolls the names of the children under sixteen years of age of Solomon Long, deceased, who was a private in company E, fifth regiment Kentucky cavalry volunteers, under the provisions of existing laws in similar cases, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The question was upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. PERHAM. I move that the amendment of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PERHAM] will withdraw that motion. I can assure him that the amendment of the Senate does not materially change the effect and purpose of the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. PERHAM. Upon that assurance of the gentleman I withdraw my motion to refer.

The amendment of the Senate was then concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate to the title, to make it read "An act for the relief of the children of Solomon Long, under sixteen years of age," was also concurred in.

JOHN GRAY.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the consideration of amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1044, for the relief of John Gray, a revolutionary soldier.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line four strike out the words "Commissioner of Pensions," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. PRICE. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL FREDERICK BAKEMAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of Daniel Frederick Bakeman, a revolutionary soldier.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line one strike out the words "Commissioner of Pensions" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. PRICE. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and to protect national cemeteries.

The amendments were read.

Mr. DEMING. These amendments are merely verbal, and I move that the House concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DEMING moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. PERHAM, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

An act (S. No. 535) for the benefit of Mrs. Jerusha Page;

An act (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Olivia W. Cannon;

A joint resolution (S. No. 171) for the relief of Martha McCook;

An act (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon;

An act (S. No. 558) for the relief of Martha A. Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, widow of Alexander D. Smith, deceased;

An act (S. No. 497) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline M. Gould;

An act (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Slocum;

An act (S. No. 512) for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien;

An act (S. No. 554) granting a pension to John Carter;

An act (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan;

An act (S. No. 580) granting a pension to Charles N. Weiss;

An act (S. No. 515) granting a pension to Mrs. Ernestine Becker;

An act (S. No. 514) for the relief of Charles Appleton;

An act (S. No. 556) for the relief of Caroline McGee, of Greene county, Tennessee, widow of Lemuel McGee, deceased; and

An act (S. No. 538) for the relief of the widow and children of Henry E. Morse.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have leave to report these bills on next Wednesday evening.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. PERHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the committee have leave to report at the same time any other bills which they may be ready to report.

Mr. DAVIS. I object.

ALCOHOL FOR SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, by unanimous consent, joint resolution (S. R. No. 103) to provide, in certain cases, for the removal of alcohol from bonded warehouses free from internal tax, was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The question being on ordering the joint resolution to a third reading, it was read at length.

The joint resolution provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to grant permits to curators of incorporated or chartered scientific institutions to withdraw alcohol in specified quantities from bond without payment of the internal revenue tax on the same, or on the spirits from which the alcohol has been distilled, for the sole and exclusive purpose of preserving specimens of anatomy, physiology, or of natural history belonging to said institutions. The curators, on applying for such permit, are to file a bond for double the amount of the tax on the alcohol to be withdrawn, with two good and sufficient sureties, who shall not be officers of the institution making application; the bond and sureties to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and conditioned that the whole quantity of alcohol so withdrawn from bond shall be used for the purpose above specified and for no other, and that the curators shall comply with such other requirements and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. If any alcohol so obtained shall be used by any curator or other officer of said institution for any purpose other than that above specified, the curators, officers, or sureties are to pay the tax on the whole amount of alcohol withdrawn from bond, together with a like amount as a penalty in addition thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FOUNDRY METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, moved to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 506, to authorize the trustees of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church to sell and convey square No. 235, in the city of Washington.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly taken up, and read a first and second time.

The bill provides that Presley Simpson, James W. Barker, Edward Owen, David A. Gardner, Nathaniel Mullikin, William J. Sibbey, Daniel D. T. Leech, Edward F. Simpson, and Richard T. Morsell, trustees of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and their successors in office, be authorized and empowered to sell and convey a certain square of ground in said city, known and distinguished on the ground plan thereof as square No. 235, now held by said trustees in trust for said church, and lately used, in part, as a burial ground, free and discharged of and from any trust, express or implied, now existing, or which may hereafter, before the execution of a conveyance of said square, exist, in said trustees, or their successors, whether by virtue of the deed originally conveying the same to the trustees of said church, or by virtue of any deed or deeds, certificate or certificates, or any writing or writings whatever, by said trustees or their predecessors, conveying any lot or lots, site or sites, in the part of said square used as a burial ground as aforesaid, and free and discharged of and from any and every right, title, and interest, legal and equitable, now existing in any lot holder in said burial ground, under any contract with said trustees or their predecessors; provided, however, that the said trustees or their successors shall, out of the proceeds of such sale, remove or cause to be removed the dead that are now interred in said ground, and give them decent sepulture in some public cemetery outside the corporate limits of the city of Washington.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOWRELL in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The pending paragraph was read as follows;

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, the market value of which, including the tax, is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when exceeding eight dollars per thousand, in market value, including the tax, a tax of eight dollars per thousand.

The pending amendment, submitted by Mr. MYERS, is as follows:

Strike out in line ninety-three all after the word "therefor" and insert "five dollars per thousand;" so it will read:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, five dollars per thousand.

Mr. PAINE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hardly know whether I am in favor of the amendment or the section as it now stands. I do not understand it, and I wish some member of the committee would explain it.

This section provides the tax shall be two dollars a thousand on all cigars, the value of which including the tax shall be less than eight dollars a thousand; and the tax shall be eight dollars a thousand on all cigars the value of which including the tax shall be eight dollars a thousand. Now, suppose the cigars are worth six dollars exclusive of the tax, I am at a loss to know whether two dollars or eight dollars is to be paid. On cigars worth three dollars a thousand if you add two dollars tax, then including the tax they fall below eight dollars. I want gentlemen to tell me what this means, whether cigars worth less than six dollars without the tax are to be taxed two dollars or eight dollars.

I do not ask what this paragraph means, for it does not mean anything. It is ambiguous. I ask what the gentlemen who drew the bill meant by it? What do they expect of the officers in the execution of the law?

Mr. MYERS. Let the gentleman adopt my amendment and he will avoid all ambiguity.

Mr. PAINE. Perhaps I shall be obliged to do so unless this can be explained. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DARLING. I renew it. I am opposed to the pending amendment. In the first place I wish to strike out the whole of that paragraph and insert in lieu of it a substitute that I have prepared. The select committee that has had charge of the investigation of revenue frauds embraced within the scope of their investigation the manufacture of cigars as well as whisky, and we found very great frauds existing through defects in the present law. We found a defect in the matter of appraisement, the manufacturer being in fact the appraiser of his own cigars.

Now, sir, under the present bill as amended all the cigars made in these large cities, and I do not know but throughout the country, will be sold at eight dollars and no higher. They will be sold through intermediate agents, who by their sales establish the market value, and all the tax you will ever get upon domestic manufactured cigars will be two dollars under this bill. Now, every man knows that for a cigar that pays a tax of less than one cent the consumer has to pay a whole cent. The fraction of a cent which this bill proposes to impose does not inure to the benefit of the Government, but to that of the manufacturer altogether. The consumers are not benefited by that discrimination, because the manufacturer puts upon the price of the cigars not eight tenths or two tenths of a cent, but the whole cent. Why, then, should not the Government collect the whole cent, seeing it does not take out of the pockets of the consumer any more than if a less tax is imposed?

Following out that argument, I contend that the tax should be ten dollars a thousand, because nobody will get cigars any cheaper if you tax them less, and the Government might as well have the benefit of the addition of two dollars a thousand. Tax your home-made cigars, that is cigars made of tobacco raised in Connecticut, Ohio, Pennsylvania, or elsewhere in the United States, and impose a tax on the imported leaf. Abolish your present laws which require the putting on of stamps and the giving of bonds, which are a fruitful source of fraud. Provide internal revenue stamps of suitable denominations to be used by inspectors which shall indicate the quantity of cigars, and let them all be paid for when they are affixed. If this amendment is voted down I shall then submit mine.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I suggest that the gentleman have his amendment read for information.

Mr. DARLING. I will do so. I propose that cigars made of American tobacco be taxed all alike, while in reference to those made of foreign tobacco they will have to pay a tariff duty.

The amendment proposed to be submitted by Mr. DARLING was read as follows:

Strike out the pending paragraph of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The tax upon cigars shall be at the uniform rate of ten dollars per thousand, and shall be collected in the following manner: The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall provide stamps of suitable denominations to be used by inspectors of cigars, which stamps shall be furnished to and sold by collectors of internal revenue; and each and every of said stamps shall indicate the amount paid therefor, which amount shall be deemed and taken as the tax or duty upon the cigars contained in any box or package on which said stamp may be placed. Such stamp shall be canceled by the inspector when he affixes it to the box or package, in the manner now provided by law for canceling cigar stamps: Provided, That no stamp shall be sold to any person not a manufacturer of cigars, and only to such manufacturers as are within the district of the officer selling the stamps. And all cigars offered for sale by manufacturers, not contained in boxes or packages properly stamped as herein directed, shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture. And all proceeds beyond the tax due shall inure to the informer.

Mr. KASSON. This is an old question, I remember, for several years in connection with the laws relating to internal revenue. With a view to something practical upon which there could be harmony of action I had prepared an amendment to the clause now before the House, which rests upon the same principle, and, I believe, seeks to accomplish the same object with this exception. I do not enter at all into the details for the purpose of carrying it into effect, as has been done by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DARLING.] I call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to the amendment which I propose.

As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MYERS,] he proposes to change the tax from an ad valorem to a specific tax of five dollars per thousand. I move to make it ten dollars per thousand. The sense of the Committee of the Whole can be taken upon changing the tax from a valuation to a specific tax. I understand that many members of the House and some of the members of the Committee of Ways and Means have been in favor of this for several years.

The simple fact is that under the valuation system of taxation the dishonest always take precedence and get the advantage of the honest; the honest man bears the burden of the tax, while the dishonest man escapes from it. But by the system I propose you will establish a common level grade of one cent per cigar, which the manufacturer must pay as the internal revenue tax. The difference in the market value of the cigar will then depend entirely upon the quality of the tobacco of which it is made. Now, it is for the interest of the consumer as well as of the manufacturer that this system of taxation should be adopted. On the question of count there is opportunity neither for evasion of conscience nor evasion of fact. It is a simple matter to determine how many cigars there are. But the more grades you establish for valuation the more temptation there is presented for perjury and dishonesty. All revenue bills up to the present time that depend upon valuation have been but a continual series of experiments.

Now, it seems to me that every step which Congress takes should be in the direction of a specific tax, for that will remove temptation, and necessarily avoid the dishonesty that flows from the temptation. When this is done, I apprehend there will be no difficulty in so adjusting the import duties upon tobacco and cigars as to accomplish the purpose of the House. When the tax depends simply upon count, upon the number of the cigars to be taxed, there is almost an impossibility of any fraud upon the revenue.

As the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DARLING] is not immediately before the Committee of the Whole for action, but merely pending until other amendments shall have been disposed of, I suggest that for the purpose of taking the sense of the committee the question be taken upon the question of a specific rather than a valuation tax. And to meet some of the views expressed here, I will move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] by striking out "five dollars" and inserting "ten dollars."

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. KASSON to the amendment of Mr. MYERS.

Mr. DAWES. It is very evident that there is something wrong in the nature of our legislation in reference to this article of cigars, from the fact that every returning session of Congress we find it necessary to change or abandon the plan we adopted at the previous session. Now, I apprehend it is true that no theory of political economy laid down in the books will apply to this article of cigars, for the reason that those who cheat in reference to it do not cheat according to rule, [laughter,] and we must therefore apply our experience to the matter of legislating upon that subject, and be guided by that alone.

Now, it has so resulted that the mode heretofore adopted has proved the ruin of the manufacturers of cigars both in the West and in the East. Although there was apparently a struggle here in the House at the last session between the West and the East, and a sort of compromise was made between them, I think it is the testimony of the West as well as of the East that for some reason or other the legislation then adopted has extinguished almost entirely this particular branch of industry in both sections.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just so far as we resort to the ad valorem principle we invite frauds upon the revenue; and just so far as we adopt the system of specific taxation we check fraud. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entirely specific in its character; and so, it is true, is the amendment to it proposing to raise this tax to ten dollars. But it must be apparent to everybody that a specific tax of ten dollars will ruin this branch of industry in some parts of the country, and will be more than it can stand in those parts of the country where it can best stand it—I mean the localities where the high-priced cigars are manufactured. Now, while we should endeavor to rely, if possible, entirely upon the specific taxation, we must fix it at such a point that this branch of industry can live in the various sections of the country manufacturing cigars of different values. It will not do to put the tax at just as high a figure as can be borne by the highest-priced cigars manufactured, because by this operation you extinguish the whole industry where the cheap cigars are made. On the other hand, it will not do to fix the tax so low as to deprive the Government of revenue merely for the benefit of the manufacturers of cheap cigars. We must find a medium.

My objection to the provision of the bill as it stands is that the system of classified duties is but another mode of ad valorem taxation. Under the provision of the bill I apprehend that all cigars manufactured will be appraised at the lowest rates. The highest rate will be but a shield under which the frauds will be committed. I have not time, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the feasibility of the system of stamps; but I apprehend that it is utterly impracticable. If the boxes are required to be stamped the same boxes will be filled and refilled without restamping; and if we require a stamp to be attached to the cigar the system will be found equally impracticable or inefficient.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to call attention to the fact that the proposition now presented has been tried before. It proposes that we shall go back rather than go forward. I admit that everything we have tried heretofore has proved a failure. We now propose to make only two distinctions. We propose, in the first place, that cigars of the lower quality, made generally of tobacco grown at the West—and any one who knows anything about smoking can readily distinguish these from the better article—we propose that this lower quality, not exceeding in value eight dollars per thousand, including the tax, shall pay a tax of two dollars per thousand.

Mr. KASSON. Are there in point of fact any cigars worth no more than six dollars per thousand?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Oh, yes, large quantities of them are manufactured.

Mr. KASSON. Where are they sold?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. They are sold everywhere. They can be found about this city.

Mr. KASSON. I never found any.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Oh, no; the gentleman never smokes cigars of this quality, but many others do.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Committee of Ways and Means, I move to amend by striking out all after the word "thousand," in line ninety-five, down to and including the word "thousand" in line ninety-seven, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, exceeding eight dollars per thousand in market value, including the tax, a tax of eight dollars per thousand.

I ask that this amendment may be adopted, leaving the section open to such amendments as may afterward be offered.

Mr. SCHENCK. The amendment just offered, as I understand it, simply puts in another shape what is already in the bill. The struggle, I presume, must be between the bill as it now stands or as just proposed to be modified, dividing cigars into two classes, and so far at least adhering to the policy adopted by Congress at the last session; and on the other hand, a return to the dead-level tax.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] has very properly admonished his colleague [Mr. DAWES] that, instead of proceeding to try a new experiment, he is upon the retrograde track, and is going back to what has been experimented upon and which I undertake to say utterly failed. I will in a word give the gentleman my view of the reason why it failed.

Allusion has been made to the difference between the quality of the tobacco raised in the West and Northwest and in Pennsylvania, and the tobacco raised farther East, saying nothing at present of any imported tobacco, the protection against which can only be by a tariff. There is that difference; and as I represent more tobacco than any man on this floor, certainly more than any man in my State, I profess to know something about it.

Now, sir, we tried this dead-level tax, and what was the effect? While we had a discriminating tax, while we had cigars classified, we were making nine million cigars per annum in the county in which I live. Within twelve months after that experiment was tried there was not a cigar made there. Throughout my county, throughout my district, the tobacco interest was perfectly prostrate before that system. That was the reason we came here and demanded a change of system. Yet the gentleman asks us who tried this system to go right back to it. It was because it was a uniform tax. I do not care whether it is five, ten, or fifty dollars, a dead-level tax is what I object to, making a high-price cigar pay as much and no more than a low-price cigar. It is an unjust discrimination against the manufacture of the low-price cigar.

What is a dead-level tax? By it you may prevent frauds. I admit it. As you make the classification you must make the law more stringent. You have more care and trouble in the execution of it. I admit that it is an incident to it. If on the other hand you have a dead-level tax and make no classification, you crush out altogether the manufacture of low-price cigars, and consequently destroy a great industrial interest throughout the whole extent of the country. So gentlemen must understand our opposition is not on the ground that it is five, ten, or fifty dollars, but it is against the policy of the same uniform tax on cigars of all grades.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move as an amendment to the amendment the following, to come in at the close of the amendment:

And the inspectors of cigars are hereby required to brand on the box the taxable value of the cigars.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, if we incorporate a provision of this kind into the law it will protect the public against fraud as well as the internal revenue, that the taxable value of the cigar as estimated, upon which the manufacturer must pay tax, must be branded on the box. If a graduated scale of prices is adopted you obviate the objection of the gentleman from Ohio and all others who are in favor of the graduated scale, and at the same time you protect the interest of the manufacturer of the poorer quality of cigars.

And, sir, you do no injustice to any other manufacturer. Why? You make the manufacturer pay tax in proportion to the value of the article manufactured. If the manufactured article be worth fifty dollars a thousand he pays tax accordingly, but if the manufactured article be worth only five dollars the tax is less in proportion. At the same time, it seems to me, you prevent the fraud that is committed under the present law.

Mr. ALLISON. What will be the effect of branding one box two dollars a thousand and another box eight dollars a thousand, and then putting in the eight-dollar box a cigar worth only two dollars a thousand?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will answer, although I have not given this subject the attention I would if I had time to consider it. A box of cigars when inspected and branded requires a Government stamp, which extends clear around the box. When that box has been opened it ceases to be of value until refilled and rebranded with the date when the brand was made and a new stamp upon it. If he uses the old box to put higher-price cigars in it it will be branded anew with the value of the cigars it then contains.

I presume, however, Mr. Chairman, this section will be reserved for future consideration, not only by the Committee of the Whole, but by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and to again advocate the amendment which I proposed in the first instance. Members of the committee refresh the memory of members of the House that we have had already a specific duty of the kind proposed. So we have; and the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] says that he represents perhaps as many tobacco-manufacturers as any gentleman in this House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I said tobacco-growers.

Mr. MYERS. Very well; tobacco-growers. But there is higher authority yet than his for the system which we ought to adopt. I have before me the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, showing what our experience has been upon this subject, and I will read from it a brief paragraph:

"The tax of ten dollars per thousand on all domestic cigars imposed by the act of March 3, 1855, was more uniformly paid than the tax under any previous law. Fewer cigars escaped taxation, and there was no opportunity for fraud when their full number was returned to the assessor. The different qualities of tobacco and the varying costs of manufacture in different parts of the country induced a change at the last session of Congress in the mode of taxation, with which I believe neither the manufacturers nor the revenue officers are fully satisfied."

What, then, is the difficulty? It is not in the system of specific taxation, because on all hands it is admitted that is the best system. The difficulty is this: that in 1855 we imposed, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has well said, too high a duty. I am opposed to the rate of ten dollars a thousand, because the poorer classes of tobacco and the smaller class of manufacturers would then have to pay too much. But, if we impose five dollars a thousand, which is only half a cent on a cigar, surely that is not too much; and it makes the tax specific, and avoids those avenues to fraud which are opened by the other system. I hope the sense of the House will come to that result.

Mr. HOGAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question? Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOGAN. Is there no difference between a cigar costing fifty dollars a thousand and one made for and used by the masses of the laboring people of this country costing five dollars a thousand?

Mr. MYERS. I represent a district having in it that smaller class of manufacturers who have been referred to. There is a difference; seldom so great except where the foreign leaf is used; but when the difference comes close upon the lower amount named by the committee in this bill, eight dollars—as for example cigars worth twelve dollars a thousand—there is a temptation to the inspector, the assessor, and the manufacturer to put that class of cigar at the lower valuation of eight dollars, which pays a tax of but two dollars under the proposed law.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman in simple arithmetic: what is the percentage of a five-dollar tax upon a fifty-dollar cigar? Is it not ten per cent.?

Mr. MYERS. I believe it is.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, five dollars upon a five-dollar cigar would be one hundred per cent.

Mr. MYERS. That is easy enough to answer. But the fact is, we have derived as much revenue in 1865 from this source as in 1866, and the Commissioner says we ought to return to the specific system. That done, we can collect as much from a lower and less onerous tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for the debate on the pending amendment is now exhausted.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to say a few words while the gentleman are preparing their amendments. I do not profess to know much about the manufacture of cigars—

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is not in order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] moves to amend the proposed amendment as follows, by adding thereto the words:

And that it shall be the duty of all inspectors of cigars at the time of inspection to brand upon each box inspected the tax to be paid thereon.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw the amendment, that it may be renewed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew the amendment. It appears to me there is one point in this discussion which has been overlooked. The cigars that are made of American tobacco are generally not of the first quality. They are not of the kind which command forty, fifty, or sixty dollars a thousand in the market. And, therefore, if we shall protect the manufacturer by a tariff on tobacco, which is imported into this country from abroad, we shall obtain a duty which will enable us to realize from this tax on cigars all we ought without doing injustice to any of those engaged in the manufacture. Now, I believe I understand something about the character of the tobacco which is raised in different parts of the country, for I have been rather an inveterate smoker for some thirty years. I have smoked cigars all over the land, and on the banks of the Ohio I have used cigars made from that kind of tobacco which claims the protection of my friend from the third district of that State, [Mr. SCHENCK;] and I believe that is a kind of tobacco that never will produce a cigar for which a gentleman will desire to pay any very considerable price. But if gentlemen are anxious to smoke cigars of that character they can afford to pay a tax of one cent on a cigar, which will make very little difference to the price. Now, sir, by pursuing the course I have indicated, of taxing the tobacco brought into this country to be manufactured, we can equalize this whole system—we get all the revenue we ought to receive, and nobody who is engaged in the manufacture of tobacco of any quality is injured. I therefore believe, looking to the facility of collecting the tax, that the rate of five dollars a thousand on all classes of cigars will produce more revenue to the Government, along with a tax on foreign importations, and that it will prevent vast frauds on the country, for we know that fraud is incident to any ad valorem system, and especially to that which is proposed to be established by this bill. I think we should adhere to the system of specific duties just as far as we may, and I believe this plan will give us more revenue than any other which can be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. As I said a moment ago, I do not pretend to know anything about the manufacture of cigars of my own personal knowledge. I have, therefore, made careful inquiry of those who do, and the result of that investigation has brought me to this conclusion: that the proposition of the committee is the proper one for the House to adopt. There should be a discrimination, in my judgment, from all I have been able to learn, between high-priced and low-priced cigars. That discrimination being necessary, I think that Congress should not put so enormous a tax as five dollars upon a low-priced cigar, but that, if possible, the bulk of the revenue should be raised from a tax of eight dollars on the highest-priced cigars. I think that if that system is continued, and the committee's course is approved, the revenue derived by the Government from this source will be increased.

Moreover, I would say that you cannot in any way provide entirely against fraud. Rascals will break one law as well as another. And if we are going to discriminate at all, it is much better we should discriminate in favor of poor cigars, because it is the poor who smoke them, and poor manufacturers make their livelihood by them; while, on the other hand, by putting a heavy tax on a poor cigar you inflict a great hardship on the poor manufacturers.

Mr. McRUER. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS. I do.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I renew it. The cigar manufacturers of the city of Cincinnati, every one of them I believe, have petitioned this Congress in favor of a uniform rate of taxation on manufactured cigars; and I beg to say that the argument of my distinguished colleague from the third district [Mr. SCHENCK] does not apply to the manufacturer. I know that the cigar-making interest in the first district of Ohio paid to this Government last year $126,000, being the second district in the United States in point of yielding revenue from that source. They paid that amount for the manufacture of cigars, and they are now in a state of prostration. And the reasons are these: the sharpers in the city of New York have so managed that they cheat the Government by manufacturing cigars without paying any tax.

But I do not care how you arrange the law; I do not care how many guards you place about it, they will thwart your design and bring about such a consternation in New York as will enable them to monopolize the trade, and that will injure the operations of the cigar-makers in the West.

And the only secure means of protection is to give us a uniform rate of taxation upon cigars. If you will put all cigars under a tax of ten dollars per thousand we can all bear it; only let it be uniform. If it is not exactly right we can amend it by and by; but give us a uniform rate now, and to that extent you will be right.

Now, I hope that members will look at this subject as they ought. I have no interest in the matter only to protect the Government and the manufacturer of the cigars. The manufacturer will purchase his tobacco where he can buy the best article and buy it the cheapest. What is the tax of a half cent on a cigar? Gentlemen say such a tax is oppressive to the poor man. Who is it that expects to get a cigar at less than five cents? And will any one object to paying a half cent tax upon a cigar? That is all stuff. Give us a uniform rate, and the poor man and all will be protected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I have but few remarks to make upon this question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] has intimated that he has examined this question thoroughly, and therefore he is one of the few members of the House who feel that they are thoroughly acquainted with it.

Now, one thing is certain: when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] says that we have tried the plan of specific duties and have given it up because it is a failure, members should bear in mind that those who were charged with the execution of the law, and had the collecting of the tax upon cigars, have ever told us that so far as the revenue to the Government was concerned there should be a specific tax if we desire to promote the interest of the Government in that regard, and they have all told us that if we resorted to the ad valorem system of taxation the interest of the Government ever would suffer, as it ever has suffered, under such a system.

Now, I appeal to members upon the Committee of Ways and Means, who say they understand this subject so thoroughly, to look at the statistics given us by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shows that a specific tax is best for the interest of the Government. If the rate proposed is not high enough then put it higher.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] says that in the Connecticut valley tobacco is raised which is worth twice as much as the tobacco which is raised in the West. Admit it; but you cannot make cigars out of the tobacco alone that is raised in the Connecticut valley; that tobacco alone will not make cigars that are worth the selling. But that tobacco is sent to New York; and the constituents of the gentleman from Ohio raise tobacco which is also sent to New York, and the two are used together for the purpose of making cigars. But the Connecticut seed-leaf tobacco alone is not fit for cigars; it is used entirely for the wrappers.

But the gentleman asks, if you have a specific tax, do not the high-priced cigars pay just the same tax that is paid by the low-priced cigars? Not at all, you have a tariff duty of fifty cents per pound upon all tobacco which is imported. Any person who has examined the subject knows that the best cigars cannot be made altogether out of American tobacco. The importer pays a duty of fifty cents per pound upon tobacco; it takes twenty-four pounds of tobacco to make a thousand cigars. He therefore pays into the Treasury twelve dollars per thousand upon his cigars to begin with; and that is paid in gold, which at the present rate is equal to some sixteen dollars in currency. That tobacco is then manufactured into cigars, and an additional and specific duty of five dollars per thousand is paid to the Government. Thus it will be seen that a thousand of the best cigars yield a revenue to the Government of over twenty dollars per thousand. Let your specific tax then be five dollars per thousand, and your cheap cigars, made altogether of American tobacco, will pay a duty of five dollars per thousand, while your best cigars will pay to the Government over twenty dollars per thousand. It is not correct, then, that the manufacturer of the best cigars, under a specific tax, pays the same revenue to the Government that is paid by the manufacturer of the cheaper cigars. The Connecticut seed-leaf tobacco is used only for wrappers; and for the fillings of our best cigars foreign tobacco is imported, upon which is paid a tariff of fifty cents per pound, of which it takes twenty-four pounds to make a thousand cigars.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I move as an amendment to the amendment the following:

Strike out the whole paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, the market value of which, excluding the tax, is not over five dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; and when the value thereof, excluding the tax, shall exceed five dollars per thousand, a tax of five dollars per thousand, and an ad valorem tax of ten per cent. upon the value thereof above five dollars per thousand.

The CHAIRMAN. As this amendment is to strike out the whole paragraph and insert a substitute, it will not be in order till the pending amendments are disposed of.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. Well, for my present purpose, I will, in order to explain my views on this question, move a pro forma amendment to the amendment, to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hold it is not a sound principle to adopt any law which we acknowledge to be bad because it may be difficult to enforce another law which we admit to be better.

In reference to this matter of taxation we ought to assess the tax fairly and justly, and then provide the most efficient means within our power for enforcing the collection of this tax. There is no fairness in imposing a tax of five or ten dollars per thousand on cigars worth only three or four dollars per thousand, and then imposing on the higher-priced cigars, worth thirty, forty, or fifty dollars per thousand, a tax the same as or very little larger than that levied upon the low-priced article. By such a system you throw money into the rich man's hands and take it out of the pockets of the poor. Many families in the country occupy themselves during the winter in the manufacture of cigars from tobacco which they raise themselves; and the cigars which they make are worth perhaps less than five dollars. To require that on these cigars the same tax shall be paid as on city-manufactured cigars worth ten or fifteen cents a piece is outrageous.

The amendment which I propose to offer will make our taxes operate with something like equality. The low-priced cigars will pay a comparatively low tax, while the more costly cigars will pay a higher tax. This is the principle by which our tariffs have always been regulated. The eastern manufacturer is not protected by as high a duty on coarse articles as upon finer fabrics. The tariff is regulated according to the price of the article; and the same principle has been embodied heretofore in our revenue laws.

The mere fact that it is difficult to enforce a particular kind of legislation is a very insufficient argument for rejecting a good law and adopting a bad one. I trust that my amendment, when we shall have an opportunity to vote upon it, will be adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CLARKE;] and I would inquire how we can benefit the manufacturers of the low-priced cigars by adopting a system under which the manufacturers of the high-priced cigars may be able fraudulently to bring their cigars into the market at the lowest tax? All experience has shown that under this ad valorem system the manufacturer of high-priced cigars can cause his cigars to be undervalued so as to get them taxed at the lowest rate. Nothing can be so fatal to the manufacturer of low-priced cigars as such a system. As has been already remarked by other gentlemen, the honest manufacturers of cigars, the men who intend to conform to the law, ask to have a uniform system under which everybody is obliged to pay one tax.

As has been shown by my colleague [Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts,] the high-priced cigars made of foreign tobacco are compelled to pay the tariff duty in addition to the tax; hence there is no soundness in the argument that these cigars will have an advantage under a uniform specific tax. Under such a system the manufacturer of the low-priced cigar or the raiser of tobacco from which such cigars are manufactured will have no reason to complain. Cigars of that quality will find their market among those who desire to use them, and the manufacturers will prosper unless they are crushed by the competition of those who evade the tax. It is strange to me that men here should expect to benefit their constituents by adopting a system which all experience shows is best calculated to serve the purposes of men who seek to evade the law and pay no tax whatever.

Now, it seems to me these men of all others, as the gentleman from the Cincinnati district [Mr. EGLESTON] has well said, should be in favor of the specific uniform tax as the only one that cannot be evaded.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he desires to have a specific tax upon cigars merely for the purpose of a tax for revenue?

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to make the manufacturer of cheap cigars pay more than he ought to, and to let the maker of high-price cigars escape. I want the House to adopt a method that will obtain from every one who makes cigars revenue for the Government.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DAWES having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSING DEBATE.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Pending a motion to go into committee, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph of the tax bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be closed in five minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The CHAIRMAN stated that debate on the pending paragraph, by order of the House, was closed in five minutes.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I yield the five minutes allowed for debate to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I intend to offer the following amendment:

Strike out of the bill from the ninety-second to the ninety-seventh line, inclusive, and insert as follows:

In the third paragraph, relating to cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, insert between the words "twenty per cent. ad valorem on" and the words "the market value thereof" these words, "the excess over twelve dollars of."

The object is to leave the law we passed at the last session just as it is, with the exception of amending it to make it what it was intended to be, that is: the higher rate with the addition of twenty per cent. ad valorem shall not be put on the whole value of the cigar, but only on the excess over twelve dollars. That was what the House passed at the last session, except they made it forty per cent. ad valorem, and the Senate cut it down to twenty per cent. ad valorem on the excess over twelve dollars.

What is the history of this matter? Gentlemen seem not exactly to have remembered it. The original tax upon cigars was by classification, making them into some three or four classes. That was found to result in a great deal of fraud to the revenue. Then they resorted to a dead-level tax of ten dollars. That crushed out the larger proportion of the tobacco interest in the country. Last year we went back to the classification system again, and because people did not enjoy wealth and recover from the injury they had sustained by reason of the previous tax within a month or a few weeks they manifested discontent.

The present law has never yet been fairly tried. What was the difficulty with that classification? Why did it not produce revenue? On certain cigars the manufacturers made a sham sale all over the country. They avowed it. They made a sham sale in this wise: they sold the cigars at prime cost to their journeymen, and then bought them back from the journeymen, and entered that as the market value, and paid tax accordingly. It was done all over the country. It became necessary to stop it; and when we came back to the classification of cigars we introduced certain amendments to prevent those sham transactions from being continued. If you will but persevere in the law as this House passed it, making an ad valorem tax only upon the excess above twelve dollars, you will try the experiment fairly that we sought to try then. I think it will be well to wait a year, or some months at least, and see if it will not work well. We have tried both, and they have failed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending paragraph, and the question will be now taken on the amendment.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw my amendment.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, to strike out the words "when exceeding eight dollars per thousand in market value, including a tax of eight dollars per thousand," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots, of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor exceeding eight dollars per thousand in market value, including the tax, a tax of eight dollars per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next question was on the amendment offered by Mr. MYERS to strike out that part of the paragraph just amended and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On all cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, five dollars per thousand.

On agreeing to the above amendment, there were—ayes 39, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, and MYERS.

The committee divided; and there appeared to be a majority in favor of the amendment; but there was no quorum voting.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest that the vote be taken in the House, as there is evidently not a quorum present, and it seems to be the sense of the House that there should be a uniform tax. I suggest that the Committee of Ways and Means yield and allow the amendment to be adopted without a quorum, and have a vote on it in the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I object, unless it is understood that we can have a vote on other amendments in the same way. I have some amendments.

Mr. THAYER. I object to debate.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JENCKES asked and obtained leave of absence for one week.

And then, on motion of Mr. DEFREES, (at ten o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut: The petition of the Gilbert Manufacturing Company, and others, of Winsted, Connecticut, praying for a removal of the five per cent tax imposed on manufacturers.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Petitions signed by over 100 prominent merchants, underwriters, ship-masters, and pilots of the city of Philadelphia, praying that a permanent light-house may be placed on Cross-ledge shoals, as the light-boat is removed from that place during the winter season, rendering navigation exceedingly hazardous; that the ice harbor at Reedy Island be extended for the accommodation of the larger class of vessels now trading at Philadelphia, and that the piers there be repaired; also, that another harbor for winter protection be made at Liston's Point, in the Delaware bay.

Also, the petition of Dr. George B. Wood and John H. Packard, officers of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, asking that the importation of books, maps, &c., for libraries, colleges, and other literary institutions be continued free of duty.

By Mr. PAINE: The memorial of the Board of Trade of Racine, Wisconsin, in favor of an extension of the piers and the improvement of the harbor at Racine.

Also, the petition of Lieutenant Michael Mangan, company E, sixth Wisconsin infantry, for pay, &c. Also, resolutions of Wool-Growers Association of Wisconsin, in favor of tariff on imported wool.

By Mr. WILSON, of Iowa: The remonstrance of citizens of Keokuk, Iowa, against legislation depreciating or unsettling the established national currency.

By Mr. WARD, of New York: The petition of citizens of Hammondsport, New York, asking for the impeachment of the President.

By Mr. WOODBRIDGE: The petition of paymaster's clerks of United States Army on duty at New York city, for increased compensation.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 16, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday, but before concluding, on motion of Mr. STEVENS, the further reading was dispensed with.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, made the special order for Tuesday next after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of, and ordered to be printed.

INVALID PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS: I beg leave to report back from the Committee of Ways and Means the Senate amendments to House bill No. 903, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1868, with a recommendation that the House concur in the same.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRIS, by unanimous consent, submitted concurrent resolutions of the State of New York, heartily approving the action of Congress in passing the suffrage bill for the District of Columbia over the President's veto; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask consent to make a word of personal explanation.

Mr. DAWSON. I object.

CORRUPT COMBINATIONS OF MEMBERS.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, involving, as I believe, the honor, purity, and independence of this House. Should the Speaker concur with me, that it is a question of privilege which I shall present in the form of a preamble and resolution, at this late hour of the session I will make no remarks, but simply ask the Clerk to read what I have sent to his desk. When he has done so, I shall call the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States has been impeached by a member of this House of high crimes and misdemeanors, and the Committee upon the Judiciary have been instructed to examine into the facts upon which said impeachment was based, with power to send for persons and papers, and report them to this House in order, if thought warrantable, that the President may be arraigned for trial thereon by the Senate; and whereas while the Committee on the Judiciary are examining witnesses with relation to said high crimes and misdemeanors of which the President has been impeached, with a view of making a report to this House for its disinterested action, it has for some time been rumored and has at last been asserted in public newspapers, that certain members of this House who are bound to act impartially upon the report of said committee when presented, are now holding, and have been for some time holding, private meetings with a view to a corrupt bargain, whereby, in violation of their oaths, they have pledged and are pledging themselves in advance to act adversely to said report if unfavorable to the President, and also to act adversely to certain other measures pending before this House to which they have heretofore been favorable, provided the President himself will do certain things to which he has heretofore declared himself hostile, and refrain from doing certain things to which he has heretofore declared himself favorable: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any such meetings have been held for any such corrupt purposes, what members of this House have attended the same, what persons besides members of Congress have attended them, what persons have carried communications from those members to the President, and from the President to them, and what has been the nature of such communications; and also, that said committee report at the earliest practicable day the result of their inquiries, and that they also report such resolutions for the action of the House as they may deem necessary for the preservation of its honor and independence.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would inquire of the Chair how this resolution came before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] presents it as a question of privilege. The Chair will rule upon the question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask the gentleman to allow me to move an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first rule whether this involves a question of privilege.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The Chair will notice that the charge involved is that of "corrupt combinations" on the part of certain members of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first rule upon the question of privilege. The Chair rules that this is unquestionably a question of privilege. The resolution states that it is rumored that certain members of this House have been guilty of corrupt bargaining, acting in violation of their oaths, and that they have changed their views from corrupt motives. Although the resolution states that "it is rumored," still when a member rises in his seat and states that it is so rumored, and introduces a resolution for an inquiry into the facts introduced, he of course makes himself the responsible author of the charge. The Chair, therefore, decides that it is a question of privilege.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I call the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I cannot yield; it is too late in the session for debate.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not desire to debate; I merely want to move an amendment so as to include any members on the other side who may have held meetings and made corrupt bargains for the purpose of bringing about the impeachment of the President. [Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order pending the call for the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WENTWORTH and Mr. ELDRIDGE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes seventy-five, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question was upon ordering the main question to be now put.

Mr. HILL. I move to lay the preamble and resolution on the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] if he repudiates the principle that—

"While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return?"

[Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. For the purpose of saving time, as the motion to lay on the table may not prevail, I will withdraw the motion to lay on the table, and allow the vote to be taken directly on the adoption of the preamble and resolution.

The question recurred, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Mr. ANCONA. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The main question was ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ANCONA. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 40, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Baxter, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Lathin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moulton, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Seefeldt, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Bergen, Bidwell, Boutwell, Campbell, Cooper, Dawson, Defrees, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Henderson, Hill, Hise, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jenckes, Kerr, Maynard, McIndoe, Mo-Ruer, Nickols, Nicholson, Noel, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Sitgroves, Stokes, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Andrew H. Ward, and Winfield—40.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Bingham, Boyer, Brandegee, Brownell, Calkins, Culberson, Culver, Darling, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Hale, Harris, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hubard Hunter, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Ketchum, Koontz, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Lettowich, Loan, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Schenck, Starr, Stillwell, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—70.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LE BLOND, who was not present during the roll-call, stated that had he been present he would have voted in the negative.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I appeal to the gentleman to hear a suggestion before the question is taken on laying on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WENTWORTH. In consequence of the pressure of business—the tariff bill, the internal revenue bill, &c.—I have pledged myself to members around me to consume as little time as possible with this question. There remain only three days of the session this side of the President's veto.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then I will address an inquiry to the Chair. If the motion to reconsider should not be laid on the table, but adopted, will it not be in order to amend the resolution so as to provide for an inquiry by a select committee instead of the Judiciary Committee?

The SPEAKER. That would be in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The Judiciary Committee have charge of this whole subject.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We have no charge of this subject, and it would be impossible for us to attend to it. I hope that the motion to reconsider will not be laid on the table. Let us have a select committee, with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] as chairman.

On the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, there were—ayes 80, noes 50; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. SPALDING, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 71.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "the Committee on the Judiciary" and inserting "a select committee of three."

Mr. HILL and others. Say "one."

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "three" and inserting "one."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I demand the previous question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move that the resolution with the pending amendments be laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. FARQUHAR was not agreed to.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

On agreeing to Mr. McRUER's amendment to the amendment, there were—ayes 78, noes 80.

Mr. COBB. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and yeas were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 69, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Baker, Baldwin, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Blow, Bundy, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Defrees, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Hise, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Ketcham, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, Maynard, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Nicholson, Noell, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sittes, Spaulding, Stilwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Williams, Windom, and Winfield—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromell, Broomall, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Higby, Holmes, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Julian, Kelley, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, Merour, Miller, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Niblack O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Porham, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Ritter, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Stokes, Strouse, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Hamilton Ward, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Campbell, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Delano, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Koontz, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marvin, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Patterson, Phelps, Rogers, Rollins, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Schenck, Starr, Stevens, Taber, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, and Wright—57.

So Mr. McRUER's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

During the vote,

Mr. SCOFIELD stated that his colleague, Mr. KOONTZ, was confined to his room by illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and it was agreed to.

The preamble and resolution as amended were adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to say that in moving the amendment I did not intend to have myself put upon this special committee, but for the purpose of relieving my committee and myself from this additional labor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move that the committee have power to send for persons and papers.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Messrs. WENTWORTH, WARD of New York, and GLOSSBRENNER to constitute the select committee.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of H. C. Dave, relative to prize money for officers and men of the Signal corps on Admiral Farragut's fleet; and also the papers in the case of J. Thomas Turner.

E. BROWN.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, the Committee of Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the papers in the case of E. Brown, and leave was also granted for their withdrawal from the files of the House.

REPORT ON MINING STATISTICS.

Mr. SCOFIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and under the law referred to the joint Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of February 13, 1867, transmitting a report by James W. Taylor, special commissioner for the collection of mining statistics east of the Rocky mountains, be printed for the use of the House.

CHARLES PITCHER.

Mr. COOK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Charles Pitcher; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

SYMPATHY FOR THE GREEKS.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the State of New York, expressive of sympathy for the Greeks, now struggling for freedom; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GRANT OF LANDS FOR CALIFORNIA CANAL.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back House bill No. 906, granting lands to aid in the construction of a canal in the State of California; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to furnish to the publishers of the Globe at each session of Congress a list of the members of the House of Representatives, with their post office address, and the number of the seats occupied by the same.

EVENING SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that there be an evening session this evening for debate only in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as several gentlemen desire to speak who have been crowded out by the pressure of business.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 506) to authorize the trustees of the Foundry (Methodist Episcopal) church to sell and convey square No. 235, in the city of Washington;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 163) to provide in certain cases for the removal of alcohol from bonded warehouses free from internal tax; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) for the relief of Paul S. Forbes, under his contract with the Navy Department for building and furnishing the steam screw sloop-of-war Idaho.

CONTRACTS FOR WAR VESSELS.

The SPEAKER stated the first business in order in the morning hour was the consideration of Senate bill No. 220, for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery, Mr. SLOAN being entitled to the floor.

Mr. DELANO. I ask my colleague on the Committee of Claims to yield to me.

Mr. SLOAN. Certainly.

Mr. DELANO. I ask the Clerk to read a resolution I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels-of-war and steam machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work, and report the same to the Senate at its next session. None but those that have given satisfaction to the Department to be considered.

Mr. DELANO. I want the House to understand that acting under this resolution a committee was appointed in the Senate to investigate these claims, and that that committee reported that the cost of the structures embraced in the resolution over and above the contract price was $2,883,000. The committee went further, and recommended an allowance to the contractors of $2,267,000, a duty not assigned to them by the resolution, as the House will observe by its terms. Acting under the report made by this committee, the Senate passed a resolution giving to these several contractors twelve per cent. on the contract price of their structures; which twelve per cent. amounted in the aggregate to $1,267,000. I want the House to bear in mind that the report of the naval board undertook to give the entire cost of the vessels over and above the contract price, and went upon the basis that whether the contract was a profitable one or not the Government was bound to make it a profitable one, or was bound at least to pay all that it cost the contractors to build, without reference to whether they had acted judiciously or wisely in making the structures.

The Senate did not adopt this report of the naval board but took an arbitrary rate for damages of twelve per cent. on the amount of the contract price. Now, many of these contracts—fifteen of them for wooden double-enders—were let at a uniform price of $75,000 each, and the contractors claimed as damages, some of them $3,000, and some of them $17,000 under the same contract and for the same work. The result was to give a uniform rate of increase to each of these contractors without reference to the actual amount that might be due, without reference to the question whether their losses were the result of fault on the part of the Government or themselves.

Upon this resolution of the Senate the committee have made a report which I desire the House to examine before it acts upon this important subject, embracing as it does a large sum of money. I find this morning on our tables a bill in the interest of the contractors. The proposition made by the committee is not in print, or was not, and has not been laid on our tables, nor has the report made by the committee been laid on our tables; but by private enterprise, which seems to be in advance of the Government, the proposition of the contractors in competition with the report of the committee is before the House.

I do not propose this morning to go into the merits of this case. I suggest to the House that it should be possessed of the views of the committee and of the proposition that the committee have submitted to the House before it undertakes to act upon this case. I do not know by whose enterprise or by what authority this bill has been laid on the tables of members, which does not come from the committee. There is not before the House any proposition to take the place of the proposition of the committee. Certain amendments are read for information and ordered to be printed, but none have been offered to the House. I therefore move, if it is in accordance with the views of my colleague on the committee [Mr. SLOAN] who has this bill in charge, that it be deferred until next Friday. Then I understand it will be in order and will stand where it does now, and during the intermediate time the facts of the case as presented by the committee can be examined by members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if this bill is postponed until Friday next at the commencement of the morning hour, it will come up at that time unless there should be some business unfinished at the expiration of the morning hour, which will precede it, or unless it is interrupted by some privileged question.

Mr. DELANO. It will be in order, I understand, on Friday or Saturday either?

The SPEAKER. Unless it is interrupted by privileged motions.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. DELANO. I cannot, as I am holding the floor only by the indulgence of my colleague on the committee.

Mr. McKEE. I intended to make a report from the minority of the committee yesterday, but was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour. I ask my colleague on the committee to yield to me for that purpose now.

Mr. SLOAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKEE. I proposed an amendment yesterday, and I only wish to say, just at this point, that so far as the report of the Committee of Claims in regard to this case is concerned I fully concur in it. But I offered a substitute for the bill agreed upon by the majority of the committee, following out, as I think, the spirit of the report itself.

One word in regard to the motion proposed to be made by the chairman of the committee to postpone the consideration of this case. The case has been before the Committee of Claims since about the last of May, 1866, and if it is postponed now it will be readily seen that it will go over till the next Congress. Those men who are here as claimants before the Government, demanding what they consider to be their just rights, have been before the nation and before Congress now for three long years. If there is anything just in their claim it is time it was disposed of; if not, then let the House say so, and let them go home and attend to their other business.

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to say—

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to a question of order. I wish to make the inquiry of the Chair, as to the probability, in his opinion, of the House ever having it in its power to act upon this bill if it is postponed to-day?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of order. But the Chair, in accordance with his uniform practice of stating to the House the effect of any given motion upon the public business, will state that if this bill is postponed until Friday next it will be reached at the commencement of the morning hour, unless the morning hour of to-day shall expire with some business pending unfinished. But it will be subject to interruptions by reports of committees of conference or motions to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering appropriation bills and other privileged motions, which are very numerous near the close of the session.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Then postponing this bill means its death.

Mr. SPALDING. It ought to be its death.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I want the House to understand the effect of the motion.

Mr. SPALDING. The bill is one of no merit.

Mr. SLOAN. I concur in the proposition which has been made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.] to postpone the further consideration of this subject until next Friday; for the reason that the report of the committee, and the resolution which it reported as a substitute for the Senate bill, have but just been printed and laid upon our desks. There are very few if any of the members of this House who have seen either the report or the resolution reported as a substitute.

But we find that a bill printed by some one has been laid upon the desks of all the members of this House; we found it upon our desks when we came in this morning, and I find that the opinion prevails quite extensively around me that this printed bill which members find upon their desks is the bill reported by the committee. Now, I desire to say that that bill is not the one reported by the committee; its printing, so far as I know, was not ordered by the House. But it is a bill printed by some party outside of the House and laid upon the desks of members.

Hence it is proper that the members of this House should have an opportunity of reading the report of the committee and ascertaining the provisions of the substitute reported by the committee before they take action upon the subject. The only objection which can be made to that course, in order that this matter should be acted upon understandingly by the House, is made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE,] to wit: that the delay may jeopardize the hearing of the matter at this session. But after the explanations which the Speaker has made, that if this subject is postponed until next Friday it will come up in regular order immediately after the reading of the Journal or at the commencement of the morning hour, it can then be considered, and there will be ample time to dispose of it on Friday and Saturday.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SLOAN. For a moment; yes, sir.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I sincerely hope the motion of my friend from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] will not prevail. I think if the members of the House understood the effect of that motion they would not vote for it. Here are certain gentlemen preferring a claim against the Government for vessels which in the early part of the war they furnished for the Navy of the United States.

Mr. SLOAN. I cannot yield for a discussion of the merits of this motion.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield to me a few moments by and by?

Mr. SLOAN. I will, if the motion to postpone shall not prevail. I desire to say that I am informed I was mistaken in saying that the substitute reported by the committee has been printed. I am told that it is not yet printed, or at all events it has not yet been distributed to members.

As this is an important subject, it seems to me that it is eminently proper that it should be postponed until next week, when we can consider it understandingly and dispose of it. I trust that motion will prevail. I call the previous question on the motion to postpone.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. UPSON. I must decline to yield to have this matter discussed at this time.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Then I hope the call for the previous question and the motion to postpone will be voted down.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope not.

On seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 46, noes 38; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. WOODBRIDGE and DELANO.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 50.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered, which was on the motion of Mr. DELANO, to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Friday next at the commencement of the morning hour.

On the question there were—ayes 65, noes 50.

Mr. INGERSOLL called for the yeas and nays; and also called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL and SPALDING were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-nine, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 77, nays 67, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Arnell, Baker, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Brantledge, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Daves, Dawson, Delano, Donnelly, Eliot, Farquhar, Finch, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulbard, Humphrey, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Korr, Ketcham, Latham, William Lawrence, Leftwich, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, Mercer, Miller, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Sheilabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Stokes, Thayer, Thornton, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, and Windom—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Bundy, Campbell, Chanler, Cook, Cooper, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Deming, Dodge, Dumont, Eggleston, Ferry, Goodyear, Griswold, Abner G. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, INGERSOLL, Kasson, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McKee, McRuer, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Noell, Perham, Pike, William H. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Stillwell, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—67.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Boyer, Brownell, Conkling, Culver, Deftrees, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Garfield, Hale, Harris, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hunter, Jones, Koontz, Lafin, McCullough, Moorhead, Morrill, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Ross, Starr, Stevens, Francis Thomas, Trimble, Trowbridge, Elisha B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, and James F. Wilson—46.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

During the roll call,

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, said: I desire to announce that on this question I have paired with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.] If present, he would vote against this claim, while I would vote for it.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WARD, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER announced as the next business in order during the morning hour reports of a private nature from committees, beginning with the Committee on Commerce.

ASYLUM FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

Mr. JULIAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 941) granting land to the Kansas Asylum for the Education of Deaf and Dumb Persons; and moved that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES M. ENGLISH.

Mr. JULIAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely upon the petition of James M. English, of English Center, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to grant him a warrant for a tract of land eighteen miles square in some of the valleys of the Rocky mountains, to be selected by him; and the petition was laid on the table.

SWAMP LANDS IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. JULIAN also, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely upon the petition of the board of supervisors of La Salle county, Illinois, praying for an amendment to the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits;" and the petition was laid on the table.

HOMESTEADS.

Mr. JULIAN also, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely upon the petition of Simeon Jones and others, late officers of the United States Army and Navy, praying for an amendment of the act of June 21, 1866, concerning homesteads; and the petition was laid on the table.

FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. HOLMES. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back House joint resolution No. 219, extending the time for the completion of the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin river with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. THAYER. I make the point of order that this is not a private matter.

Mr. SLOAN. I ask the gentleman to hear me a moment.

Mr. THAYER. I must decline to withdraw my objection. My committee has not had an opportunity to be called for many weeks.

Mr. SLOAN. We only desire action by our Legislature, and this resolution is for that purpose.

Mr. THAYER. I must decline to withdraw my objection. It is the only way, probably, in which I can reach my committee.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution is not of a private nature and cannot be reported on this day.

LAND TITLE IN SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. McRUER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 878) to quiet title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, with a recommendation that it be passed.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time, it was reported at length.

The bill provides that all the right and title of the United States to the land situated within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, as defined in the act of the Legislature of that State incorporating said town, be relinquished and granted to the corporate authorities of said town and their successors, in trust, for and with authority to convey so much of said land as is in the bona fide occupancy of parties upon the passage of this act, by themselves or tenants, to such parties. This grant is not to extend to any reservation of the United States, nor prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to the land or any part thereof, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof.

Mr. McRUER. This is a bill of the same nature as a bill which passed at the last session in relation to Benicia and Santa Cruz. The report states briefly all the circumstances, and I hope it will be passed. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILO D. CODDING.

Mr. TABER, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of Milo D. Coddington; and the same was laid on the table.

CARRYING THE MAILS.

Mr. McRUER. I am directed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report back House bill No. 620, to repeal the fourth section of an act approved March 25, 1864, and an act approved January 20, 1865, to provide for carrying the mails.

Mr. THAYER. I make the point this is a public bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a public bill, and cannot be reported on this day.

NEWSBOYS' HOME.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back House bill No. 1142, to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate a 'Newsboys' Home,'" and also for the relief of abandoned children in the District of Columbia, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The first section of the bill provides that the name of the Newsboys' Home be changed to that of the "Newsboys' Home and Children's Aid Society" of the District of Columbia, and that the powers and duties of the president and board of managers be enlarged, so that they may receive such vagrant, indigent or abandoned minor children as may be committed to their custody as hereinafter provided for; also, at their discretion, they may receive from parents or others charged with the maintenance of minor children, whom said parents and other persons have not the means of maintaining, the children of such parents and children under the care of such other person as is hereinafter provided.

The second section provides that said association be fully empowered to provide and care for all such minor children in such manner as they may deem proper, so as best to secure their welfare, food, clothing, mental and moral training; and for this purpose they may provide homes in the families of competent persons anywhere within the United States, and convey such minor children to said homes, and execute, under the seal of said corporation, proper writings, securing to the heads of families or others so selected the control and management of said children for the period therein set forth, and which shall also secure to said children proper maintenance, care, and education. And said writings, so executed, shall secure to such persons the exclusive custody and care of such children, for the period named, against the claim and interference of all persons whomsoever.

The third section provides that upon complaint in writing, on oath, of any reliable person, all courts and magistrates of said District, authorized by law to issue process, are empowered to cause to be brought before them all destitute or abandoned minor children and the minor children of beggars or vagrants, and of all others who have not the means or who refuse to support and maintain such minor children, or abuse them, so that they can be shown to be destitute or abandoned, vagrant, or abused, to be dealt with as provided for in this act, for which purpose they may subpoena witnesses and hear the allegations of the parties in interest, and in proper cases made by the proof to commit such children to the custody and care of the Newsboys' Home and Children's Aid Society; and said commitment shall vest the exclusive control of such children in said association for the full period therein named, to the exclusion of all other persons whomsoever; and said courts and magistrates shall keep a proper record of all such cases, when for any causes the persons before them are committed to the Newsboys' Home and Children's Aid Society, showing the name, age, sex, and length of time of such commitment. And it is made the further duty of said courts and magistrates to report each year to the supreme court of the District of Columbia all such cases. It is also made the duty of the marshal, his deputies, and all police officers, constables, and bailiffs of the District of Columbia to execute all processes authorized by this act which shall come to them severally. The supreme court of said District shall also prescribe the proper forms to be used by the courts, magistrates, and other officers of the District, to carry this act into execution and fix the time when the annual report shall be made, hereinafter provided for, and shall also establish a table of fees for the services required to be performed, which shall be paid as other costs in like cases in the District are now paid.

The fourth section provides that all persons in the District of Columbia, the parents of minor children, or charged with the maintenance of minor children, whom they are, for want of means, unable to maintain, may, upon making that to appear to the satisfaction of the president and board of managers of the Newsboys' Home and Children's Aid Society, by writing properly executed to said president and board, transfer to them the care and custody of such minor children for the full period of time for which persons stand charged with the maintenance of such minor children, and such written transfer shall vest the custody of such minor children in said Newsboys' Home and Children's Aid Society against all persons whomsoever; further, when so committed such parents or guardians shall have no power to interfere with such children, or disturb said society, or any person to whom said society may bind or otherwise dispose of said children, either in this District or elsewhere, and any interference with said children or other children committed to said society may be punished by the criminal court or justices of the peace in the United States by a fine not to exceed twenty dollars or imprisonment not to exceed thirty days; but any parent or guardian may apply to said criminal court or said justices of the peace in any complaint they may desire to make as to said society dealing with said children.

The fifth section provides that it shall be the duty of the president and board of managers of said association to keep a full and complete record of its doings and proceedings under this act, which shall at all proper times be accessible to all persons for information. They shall also, annually, report to the supreme court of said District the number of children received, indicating whether by regular commitment or voluntary transfer, with the name, age, sex, and disposition of the same, with a summary of the success and prosperity of said association. They shall also have power to establish proper and necessary by-laws for the transaction of business and the regulation of the affairs of the association, and to do all the necessary acts and things to accomplish the full objects of this aid.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NICHOLSON PAVEMENT.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the same committee, reported a bill to authorize the paving of a portion of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street west, with the "Nicholson pavement;" which was read a first and second time.

Objection being made that the bill made an appropriation, the bill was, under the rule, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and made the special order for Wednesday next after the morning hour.

ALEXANDRIA CANAL, ETC.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill relating to the Alexandria canal, and also a bill establishing a hospital in the District of Columbia for sick and disabled colored people and others; which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM B. TODD.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back House bill No. 1001, for the relief of William B. Todd, with an amendment striking out provision for the payment of interest.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GREAT FALLS ICE COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back Senate bill No. 64, to incorporate the Great Falls Ice Company of Washington, District of Columbia, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill; but before concluding the morning hour expired, and the bill went over till Friday next.

Mr. DELANO. Some gentlemen here are very anxious to have up a bill that was placed on the Private Calendar. I therefore move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the consideration of the same, and that it be acted upon now.

The SPEAKER. To-day after the morning hour was assigned for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Commerce. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ELIOT. I must insist on the regular order.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported adversely on House bill No. 430, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of certain vessels; and the same was laid on the table.

Also, on the petition of William Slamm, to change the name of the steamer Circassia to Abraham Lincoln; which was laid on the table.

Also, on the petition of the Cincinnati and Memphis Steam Packet Company; which was laid on the table.

Also, on the petition of Harvey T. Litchfield, for the change of the name of the steamer Emeline; which was laid on the table.

JAMES G. SMITH.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported the following joint resolution; which was read a first and second time:

*Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be procured and presented to Captain James G. Smith, master of the brig Victoria, of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, a gold chronometer, in token of appreciation by the Government of the United States of his humane and successful efforts in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and passengers on board the brig E. H. Feder, of Philadelphia, wrecked at sea on the morning of January 22, 1867.*

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 899, in relation to the revenue-cutter service, with amendments.

The bill appropriates as follows:

For the expenses of the revenue-cutter service during the last half of the current fiscal year, from and after the 31st day of December, 1866, $630,000.
For the expenses of the said service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $1,360,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, for the said revenue-cutter service, the steam-tug D. A. Mills and the steam-tug Mosswood, $28,000.
For the construction and equipment of eight schooners for the said service, designed to take the place of the steam cutters heretofore authorized to be sold under the act approved April 20, 1866, $211,000; and so much of the said act of April 20, 1866, as authorized the proceeds of the sales of the said steam cutters to be expended in the purchase or construction of other vessels, is hereby repealed.

Mr. LE BLOND. I believe that is an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. LE BLOND. Should it not go to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. According to the usage of the House, when a day is assigned to a committee for reports, if there are any bills reported containing appropriations they may be considered in Committee of the Whole on the same day. If the gentleman prefers it the bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ELIOT. Let it be considered as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

No objection being made, it was so considered.

Mr. ELIOT. I have no desire to say anything on this bill, unless some gentleman proposes to make an inquiry, except this: that it does not call for the expenditure of one dollar that would not be expended if this bill should not be passed. The object of the bill is rather to transfer to a different and distinct account the whole of the expenses of the revenue-cutter service, to take them from the present account, which is mixed up with all the other revenue customs. As the law now stands there is annually appropriated a large amount of money for the general collection of the revenue customs, and in that amount all the expenses of the revenue-cutter service are included.

This does not call for any additional appropriation or any additional expense. It simply provides a way by which the Secretary of the Treasury may keep the accounts of the revenue-cutter service distinct from the accounts concerning customs generally. With the exception of the two items in the bill for the payment of two steam tugs which the Secretary of the Treasury has authority to purchase, and which, in fact, he has purchased, but for which no appropriation has been made, and for one other purpose, there is no money called for by this bill that would not be wanted in the regular appropriation bill.

As the law now stands the Secretary of the Treasury has authority to sell certain steam vessels which have been built and used in the revenue service; but he states that he cannot sell those vessels until some arrangement is made for the procurement of sailing vessels to take their place. The law now requires that all moneys derived from the sale of these steam vessels shall be applied to the purchase of sailing vessels. This bill repeals that part of the old law, and simply provides a mode of payment for the sailing vessels which the Secretary is called upon to purchase.

Mr. PIKE. Let the Clerk read the two items to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase for the said revenue-cutter service the steam-tug D. A. Mills, and the steam-tug Mosswood, $28,000.

For the construction and equipment of eight schooners for the said service, designed to take the place of the steam cutters heretofore authorized to be sold, by the act of April 20, 1866, $211,000; and so much of the said act of April 20, 1866, as authorizes the proceeds of the sale of the said steam cutters to be expended in the purchase or construction of other vessels is hereby repealed.

Mr. PIKE. If I understand it there is an appropriation of $211,000 to build eight schooners.

Mr. ELIOT. That is so.

Mr. PIKE. Can the gentleman state what is to be the character of these schooners?

Mr. ELIOT. A law has already been passed authorizing the sale of these steam vessels, the money to be derived from the sale to be applied to the procurement of sailing vessels. That is the law now.

Mr. PIKE. It is only within three or four years that some six large steam cutters have been built at a very great expense; I do not know how much. But they are vessels of some three or four hundred tons each, and involving a very large expense. The machinery of those vessels has been altered and arranged, and they are now in capital working condition.

Now, here is a proposition to dispose of the whole of them, and replace them with sailing vessels; so that we are to go back to the system of sailing vessels which we had prior to the introductory of their steam vessels. It seems to me that the revenue-cutter service should be performed by steam vessels. A large portion of that service consists of rescuing vessels that are in stress of weather on our coasts; that is shipwrecked vessels. For that purpose steam vessels only are useful. And for the detective service steam vessels are certainly much better than ordinary vessels. Now, I would inquire of the gentleman who has charge of this bill, why it is that it is now proposed to go back again to sailing vessels?

Mr. ELIOT. In reply to the inquiry of my friend from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] I would say to him that that has already been done; Congress has already required by law the sale of these steam vessels. But the Secretary says that he finds it would not subserve the interests of the service to sell those vessels until arrangements are made to supply their places. And it has been found by the experience of the Department that these expensive steam vessels are not calculated for the work required of them; they draw too much water, and cannot enter the shallow waters where smugglers go. And because of that it was determined some time ago to sell those vessels, and the Secretary was authorized to do so. This bill merely authorizes the Secretary to procure sailing vessels before these steam vessels are sold. And then it is provided that the money to be derived from the sale of the steam vessels, instead of being applied as the law now directs, to the purchase of sailing vessels, shall go into the Treasury.

Mr. PIKE. I desire to say that I am informed by one of the most intelligent men in the revenue service that these steam vessels, which at any rate are as good as new, are well fitted to be changed into sailing vessels. If the gentleman from Massachusetts knew who was my informant he would not raise this objection. I suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts is familiar with the construction of the Mahoning, the Ashuelot, and other vessels of that class. Now, this gentleman tells me that it is very easy indeed, without one dollar's expense to the Treasury, to convert these into sailing vessels by taking out the machinery, which can be disposed of for a larger sum than is requisite to make the change.

I will state further that this whole matter illustrates to my mind the necessity of an entire change in the management of this service. This whole revenue-cutter service should, in my view, be taken from its present position, where it is under the control of some clerk in the Treasury Department, who determines matters of this sort according to his own whims, and apparently changes this service from steam to sailing vessels and from sailing to steam vessels according to his own caprice. This service should be under the control of a board of naval officers, or at any rate some experienced officers of the Light-House Board, so that we might have some responsibility and some uniformity in relation to the management of this service.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] does not present any reason why this bill should not be passed. The objection which he makes ought to have been made before we ordered those vessels to be sold. The gentleman states that these immense steam vessels can be converted into sailing vessels suitable for this service. Now, I know something about this matter, and I take it upon myself to say that the gentleman's informant is mistaken when he undertakes to state that these large steamers, which were made for a certain purpose, for which they were regarded as valuable during the war, can be converted at no expense into sailing vessels. The cheapest way to do this work is to follow in the exact line marked out in this bill. If there has been any wrong, the wrong was in the beginning, and is not to be corrected by the criticisms which my friend from Maine makes now.

Mr. PIKE. The building of these vessels was a very good job, and I have no doubt that the selling of them will also be a very good job.

Mr. ELIOT. Well, that is very easy to say.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill entitled an act (S. No. 85) for the relief of Alexander F. Pratt; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1053) granting an increased pension to John J. Sohan;

An act (H. R. No. 643) to alter the places of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district;

An act (H. R. No. 481) providing for the punishment of certain crimes therein named in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 571) to regulate proceedings before justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 788) to establish and to protect national cemeteries;

An act (H. R. No. 848) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home," approved July 25, 1866;

An act (H. R. No. 903) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1868;

An act (H. R. No. 907) to amend the law of the District of Columbia in relation to judicial proceedings therein;

An act (H. R. No. 1044) for the relief of John Gray, a revolutionary soldier;

An act (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of Daniel Frederick Bakeman, a revolutionary soldier;

An act (H. R. No. 1058) for the relief of the children of Solomon Long under sixteen years of age;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 251) to extend the time for codifying the laws relating to customs, authorized by the joint resolution approved July 26, 1866.

SEAMEN ON UNITED STATES VESSELS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back adversely a bill (S. No. 419) entitled "An act repealing an act entitled 'An act repealing certain provisions of law concerning seamen on board public and private vessels of the United States,' approved June 23, 1864," and moved that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SOUTHERN LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. DODGE, from the same committee, reported a bill to authorize changes in the location of lights and other aids to navigation on the southern coasts of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that in the reestablishment of lights and other aids to navigation which have been injured or destroyed on the southern coasts of the United States, pursuant to an act approved July 2, 1864, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes, the Light-House Board shall have power; with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make such changes in the location of said lights or other aids to navigation as may be made necessary by alteration of channels or obstructions.

It further provides this shall not be considered as authorizing any expenditure of the public money beyond what has been appropriated for that purpose.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARYLAND COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 847, to change certain collection districts in Maryland and Virginia, with amendments.

The bill provides in the first section that the districts of Oxford and Vienna in the State of Maryland be, and the same are hereby abolished, and the office of collector of both said districts is hereby discontinued.

The second section provides, that the district of Oxford, in said State, shall be annexed to the district of Baltimore, and all that part of the district of Vienna in said State bordering on the sea-coast, and all the waters which flow into the sea, or bays on the east side of said district of Vienna be, and the same are hereby, annexed to the district of Cherry Stone, in the State of Virginia; and that all the residue of said district of Vienna be, and the same is hereby, made a new district, to be called the eastern district; and that the collector of said eastern district shall receive an annual salary of $1,200, and shall reside at Crisfield, which shall be the port of entry for said new district.

The third section provides that the offices of surveyor at Snow Hill and of deputy collector at Annamasset be, and the same are hereby, discontinued, and that the collector of the district of Cherry Stone shall hereafter reside at Accomac Court-House, which shall be the port of entry for the district.

The fourth section provides that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In section three, line nine, after the word "Annamasset" insert the following: "and Deal's Island." Strike out of section three the following words: And that the collector of the district of Cherry Stone shall hereafter reside at Accomac Court-House, which shall be the port of entry for the district.

Mr. PHELPS. Upon what report is the bill founded?

Mr. ELIOT. This bill was passed upon by the Senate, and after its passage the Committee on Commerce in the House had an interview with the Senator who was instrumental in its passage in the Senate, and upon his statements and also from information gathered at the Treasury Department they were satisfied it ought to pass with the amendments proposed.

I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland, a member of the committee, who is more intimate with the locality than I am.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I will state for the information of my colleague that the only alteration this bill makes is in consolidating some of the smaller ports on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. It establishes a port of entry at a place to which a new railroad has been constructed through Delaware and Maryland, as well as abolishing the smaller ports referred to. Mr. Sargent, the Comptroller of the Customs, has written a letter recommending that the change should be made as beneficial to the Treasury Department.

Mr. PHELPS. I wish to inquire further whether there are any statistics going to show that the entries at the ports which are proposed to be abolished have been at all diminished since they were originally established?

Mr. ELIOT. I have no statistics which I can furnish for the information of the gentleman, but this question has received sufficient examination on the part of the committee to satisfy them that the condition of business there does not require the keeping up of these ports, and they have therefore recommended that they be discontinued, thus saving this expense to the Government.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENTS IN VESSELS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution authorizing examinations of improvements in vessels, and for other purposes, in aid of navigation and for protection of life and property at sea; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to cause examinations to be made of inventions and improvements in the construction of boilers of vessels, machinery, and other apparatus designed for the use on board merchant vessels and intended to secure greater security of life and property at sea. It also appropriates $10,000 for the purpose stated, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to submit a report to Congress making recommendations of appropriate legislation necessary.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORT OF CAMDEN, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back House bill No. 1062, relative to the port of Camden, New Jersey, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill annexes the port of Camden to the collection district of Philadelphia; provides for the appointment of an assistant collector, who shall reside at Camden, but shall act in conformity to such instructions and regulations as he shall from time to time receive from the collector at Philadelphia, and fixes his compensation at $1,500 per annum in lieu of all commissions and fees.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIRECT IMPORTATIONS.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the same committee, submitted an adverse report on the bill to encourage commerce and internal trade by facilitating direct importations; and the same was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill "to encourage commerce and internal trade by facilitating direct importations, reports that in its opinion there should be no action upon the important purposes sought to be accomplished by its provisions this session, and asks that it be discharged from its further consideration.

The bill, with a petition from the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, was introduced upon leave of the House by Hon. LEONARD MYERS, of Pennsylvania, and subsequently a memorial from the Board of Trade of Boston, urging the passage of the bill, was presented by Hon. A. H. RICE, of Massachusetts.

The committee fully realizes the great convenience and facility that would be afforded to merchants and business men in places distant from the ports of entry to which their importations would come should this legislation be granted, and only now is not ready to act on account of the want of time to properly examine it, and to consult with great care and deliberation with the Treasury Department. The change desired by the memorialists is radical, and the bill proposes to make material modifications in the customs regulations of the country. Always desiring to accommodate trade to the greatest degree, and at the same time to guard the proper collection of duties for the benefit of the revenue, this report is made, not in any way with a view of retarding the passage of the bill even temporarily. Many of the members of the committee look with great favor upon its provisions, but think that in a matter of such great magnitude, the business men of the country and the Department under whose supervision this subject comes should have ample opportunity to investigate it, so that the experience of those to whom it designs to give facilities in their importations and the Government officials may bring their experience and judgment to bear upon the principles involved, and thus aid the committee at no far distant day in suggesting to the House a well-matured bill.

CHARLES O'NEILL,

Sub-Committee of the Committee on Commerce.

NAVAL COAL DEPOT.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the same committee, reported adversely on House bill No. 1100, to facilitate the establishment of a naval and marine coal depot on the eastern shore of New Jersey, and for other purposes; which was laid on the table.

USURY LAWS.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the same committee, offered the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the law:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for the abolition of legal restrictions upon the commerce in money, with the report of a special committee of their executive council upon the usury laws, May 21, 1866, and the testimony submitted in said report, be printed for the use of the House.

CHANGE OF NAMES OF VESSELS.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, Senate joint resolution No. 159, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owners of the yacht Mayflower to change the name of the same to Sylva.

The amendment, which was to authorize a register to be issued to the steam yacht Glance, was agreed to. The title was also amended to correspond.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and the title amended; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. LONGYEAR, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back House bill No. 1166, to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The substitute provides for the building by contract of light-houses at the following points: Trowbridge Point, Thunder Bay, Michigan; Mendota, on Lake Superior, Michigan; Santa Cruz, California; Braddock's Point, Georgia; Cambahee bank, Georgia; Tybee Island Knoll, Georgia; and Morris Island, South Carolina. Also for rebuilding the light-house at Deep-water shoals, in James river, Virginia; for rebuilding light-house tower and keeper's dwelling at Saint Simons, Georgia; for rebuilding Wolf Island beacon-lights and buildings connected therewith, in the State of Georgia; for rebuilding Sapelo Island light-house and beacons, in the State of Georgia; and for building three light-house and buoy steam-tenders.

It further provides that the light-house board proceed to make a survey, or if a survey has been made at Crossledge shoal, or at some other point in the Delaware bay in the neighborhood of said shoal, to report on said survey to be made, or which has already been made, to the next Congress, upon the feasibility of erecting thereon a permanent light-house, and an estimate of the amount necessary to be appropriated therefor.

It further provides that no contract shall be made except after public advertisement for proposals in such form and manner as to secure general notice thereof; and the same shall only be made with the lowest responsible bidder therefor, upon security deemed sufficient in the judgment of the Secretary.

It further provides that from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and empowered to regulate and fix the salaries of the respective keepers of light-houses in such manner as he shall deem just and proper; provided that the whole sum shall not exceed an average of $600 to each keeper.

The substitute was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONGYEAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. LONGYEAR, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 605, to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866, with an amendment.

The amendment of the committee was to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this section shall not apply, or be held to apply, to anyone where the said towing, in whole or in part, is within or upon foreign waters: And provided further, That any foreign railroad company or corporation, whose road enters the United States by means of a ferry or tug-boat, may own such boat, and it shall be subject to no other or different restrictions or regulations in such employment than if owned by citizens of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONGYEAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOOTH BAY AND ST. GEORGE, MAINE.

Mr. LONGYEAR, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 1167, to authorize entry and clearance of vessels at the ports of Booth bay and St. George, Maine, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONGYEAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT GRATIOT RESERVE, MICHIGAN.

Mr. LONGYEAR, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 607, to amend an act granting the right of way over the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, Michigan, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill provides for amending the original act by inserting in the proviso after the word "wood" the words "or fire-proof;" so that it shall read:

That all buildings to be erected upon said reservation shall be of wood or fire-proof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONGYEAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF INSURANCE.

On motion of Mr. LONGYEAR, the Committee on Commerce were discharged from the further consideration of sundry petitions for the establishment of a national bureau of insurance; and the same were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WINONA AND ST. PETER'S RAILROAD.

Mr. DODGE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Senate bill No. 494, for the relief of the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was read. It provides for refunding to the company the sum of $3,424 28 in gold, being the amount of additional duties paid by it on railroad iron under the joint resolution approved April 29, 1864, increasing temporarily duties on imports.

Mr. ROSS. I would like to hear some reason for passing this bill.

Mr. DODGE. This bill has been carefully examined by the Committee on Commerce. The facts in the case are these: this company purchased and shipped from New York five hundred tons of railroad iron, expecting that it would reach Milwaukee in time to be entered at the rate of $22 50 per ton. During its transit Congress passed a law for a temporary increase of the duties at the rate of fifty cents per hundred pounds. This iron was caught in the ice, and did not arrive at Milwaukee until after the new law went into force. After a careful examination of the case the committee have thought it proper that the company should be allowed to enter that iron at the rate of duty in force at the time it was shipped from New York.

Mr. LE BLOND. This seems to be a proposition to make Congress an insurance company against accidents.

Mr. DODGE. Not at all.

Mr. LE BLOND. That is a risk which the company took, and which all shippers take; and I see no reason for an exception being made in this case.

Mr. DODGE. This iron was imported under the old rate of duty, and while in transit it was overtaken by this act of Congress temporarily increasing the duties.

Mr. DONNELLY. I understand that this iron was imported into the country under the old law. The increase of duty accrued upon it simply by what may be called the act of God—the detention of the iron on its way to Milwaukee in consequence of the lake freezing. The iron was actually in the country while the old law was still in operation, and I think it but an act of justice that this money should be returned to the company.

Mr. ROSS. What the gentleman has stated only shows that the Almighty is on the side of the Government instead of on the side of the railroad companies, and I think we ought to take advantage of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DODGE. I call the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. Will the gentleman yield to me to make a motion to refer this bill to the Committee of Claims?

Mr. DODGE. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. BAKER. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dodge] will not yield for that purpose, then I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion would not now be in order, because the gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor. As soon as he yields the floor that motion will be in order.

Mr. PIKE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. DODGE. For what purpose?

Mr. PIKE. I desire to offer an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to afford relief in other cases of a similar character. I know of one instance where a vessel was obliged to put back under stress of weather and had to repair, in consequence of which it did not arrive in this country until a short time after the new law went into operation. Now, it appears to me that it would be but right to allow the Secretary to do justice in such cases.

Mr. DODGE. I think that this is a very peculiar case and a very meritorious one, and I therefore must insist upon my call for the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. With the consent of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Dodge,] I desire to say a word on this subject. Several years ago, when I was on the Committee of Ways and Means, a question of this kind came before us. We found that there were very numerous cases of this kind, in which shipments had been made under the old law; but by reason of stress of weather or some other circumstances had been prevented from getting into port before the new law went into operation. We then decided that the parties in these cases had taken their chances and must bear the consequences. It was found that if we allowed all such claims the amount drawn from the Treasury would be enormous; and we did not see why any single claim should be paid unless all were paid. I think this question should not now be opened. The passage of this bill would contravene a rule which, as I understand, this House has already adopted and practiced.

Mr. DODGE. As I understand the facts of this case, this iron came into the port of New York under the old duty, and was allowed to be shipped from there in bond, with the privilege of paying the duty when it arrived at its destination. While in transit the iron was delayed by the freezing of the lake. Meanwhile the new duty went into operation and was imposed on this iron. This bill is to refund the additional duty thus paid.

Mr. BROMWELL. I desire to inquire whether these parties would not have received all the benefits of the risk if they had been successful in getting the iron to its destination in time?

Mr. EGGLESTON. The difficulty was that they allowed the lake to freeze up. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONNELLY. As there seems to be no written report on this case from the committee of this House, I call for the reading of the report made by the Senate committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of the Winona and Saint Peter's Railroad Company, an incorporation of the State of Minnesota, have had the same under consideration, and find that this company imported in the fall of 1863 five hundred tons of railroad iron, which was landed in New York and shipped for Milwaukee, under bond to pay the duty then imposed by law within sixty days, the time allowed for its transit. By the usual course of navigation it should have arrived at Milwaukee that fall; but, by the early closing of navigation, it was detained at Oswego. It seems, from the papers on file, that the company made various efforts to pay the duty, both at Milwaukee and New York; but the collector at each port refused to receive the duties while the iron was in transitu. The duty was then $13 50 per ton. Subsequently, by the joint resolution of April 29, 1864, duties on imported goods were increased fifty per cent. for sixty days, thus imposing a duty on this iron of $21 25 per ton, while by the general tariff act, which took effect July 1, 1864, the duty on railroad iron was sixty cents per hundred pounds, or $13 44 per ton. The iron arrived at Milwaukee on the 21st of June, 1864, and, in addition to the duty imposed by law when the iron arrived in New York, there was imposed an additional duty under the joint resolution of the sum of $3,424 20, which sum was paid by the petitioners under protest.

Your committee are of opinion that the additional duty provided for by the joint resolution of April 29, 1864, was not applicable to goods actually in transitu within the United States and under bonds providing for the payment of the specific rate of duty then imposed by law. At all events, your committee think it inequitable upon the facts stated to exact the increased duty when the importation was complete before the passage of the joint resolution, and when parties interested had tendered the duties imposed by law and were guilty of no laches.

Your committee, therefore, recommend the passage of the following bill.

Mr. DODGE. The House will have observed from the reading of the report that this case is not at all analogous to the cases referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] This iron actually arrived at the port of New York when the duty was $13 50 per ton. During its transit to Milwaukee the duty was increased to $21 25 per ton; and consequently when it arrived at its destination it was obliged to pay the increased duty. Hence this proposition for relief. I insist on the previous question.

On seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 52, noes 29; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. Dodge and Ross.

Mr. DODGE. I will not press this bill to a final vote now, but, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Ross] desires to move the reference of the bill to the Committee of Claims, I will permit him to make that motion.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. DODGE, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 399, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read in extenso.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DODGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PETER CLARK AND GEORGE MACKAY.

Mr. DODGE, from the same committee, reported back the petition of Peter Clark and George Mackay, to transfer to them on suitable terms Governor's Island, in the harbor of New York; and the same was laid upon the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. EGGLESTON reported back House bill No. 1154, making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes, with a substitute.

The substitute was read in extenso.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I will state for the information of the House that the substitute is the same as the original bill, with the exception of improvements estimated for and recommended by the proper Department.

I move to amend the bill on page 6, after line one hundred and eighteen, by inserting the following:

For completing the improvement of the navigation of Kennebec river, Maine, between Shepherd's Point and Augusta, $30,000.

This comes under the same category as the other improvements included in the substitute. Estimates have been made for this work, and it has been recommended by the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EGGLESTON. Several gentlemen ask me to yield to them to offer amendments, but I am afraid if we commence amending the bill now we will have no bill at all which we can get through the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether or not under the provisions of this bill the Secretary of War will have authority to continue the surveys of the Illinois river?

Mr. EGGLESTON. All the authority given last year to survey the Illinois river is continued in this bill, but no authority is given to the engineer department or to the Secretary of War to survey the route of a canal from the headwaters of the Illinois river. There is, however, as I have already stated, provision made for the survey of the Illinois river.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for the purpose of offering the following amendment:

Provided, That the Secretary of War shall, before expending the appropriations made for the improvements of navigation at the rapids of Mississippi at Rock Island and the Des Moines rapids, carefully review the surveys and plans reported, and cause the works to be done at the place and in the manner demanded in his discretion by the public interests.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I would not like to yield for the purpose of having any of these amendments offered, as I think they are all dangerous to the passage of the bill. I will say, however, in regard to this amendment, that what the gentleman wants is now substantially in the bill. It does not provide that the Secretary of War shall have it made on the Iowa side of the river. It appropriates for the improvement of the Des Moines rapids. If you can satisfy the Secretary of War that the other side of the river is best, he has power to so make the canal. I decline to let the amendment be offered.

Mr. ROSS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow me to move an appropriation of $100,000 for the improvement of the Illinois river.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I cannot do it. I will only say that one third of the entire appropriations in this bill are for the improvement of the waters of the State of Illinois. The committee have carefully investigated this matter, and I think it best to take the bill as it came from the committee.

Mr. STEVENS. How much is contained in the bill?

Mr. EGGLESTON. About four million eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. EGGLESTON. I will hear it read.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to move to insert the following as an additional section, and I will only say that it passed the House of Representatives in July, 1866:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and required to cause a survey to be made, by competent engineers, of the Susquehanna river from the Chesapeake bay to the southern line of the State of New York, and also a survey from the said line to Lake Ontario, with a view to ascertain the practicability of a communication by steamboats from the Chesapeake bay to said lake, and to report accordingly; and also, if any part of said route is deemed practicable, then to cause to be made an estimate of the probable costs of the work and report the same. And also examine and report whether the west branch of the Susquehanna river, or any part of it, can be made practicable for steamboat navigation.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I cannot yield for that to come in. It contemplates a ship-canal from the Susquehanna river to Lake Ontario, which will run through one of the spurs of the Alleghany mountains.

Now, I want to make one statement for the benefit of those who think this appropriation is very large, and that is that every dollar which is asked for is recommended by the War Department, and the engineer has been very careful and minute in his estimates. There is nothing in it made up by members of Congress or any committee or company, but it is all upon the authority of the Secretary of War and the engineers of the War Department. I believe it is better for us to take the bill as it now is, and I will therefore call the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to ask if the bill makes any change in the appropriation for the harbors on Lake Erie?

Mr. EGGLESTON. There is no change. Ohio is all right, and so are all the other States. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask if the committee have taken into consideration a bill which I introduced for the improvement of the navigation of the Connecticut river? If not, I would esteem it a great favor if I can be permitted to introduce it as an amendment.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I certainly have never seen it; I do not think it has been before the committee. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ROSS. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes twelve.

Mr. ROSS. Tellers on the yeas and nays. Tellers were refused—ayes thirteen.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill, as amended, was then passed.

Mr. EGGLESTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL VACANCY.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote of the House by which House bill No. 2, to amend the act declaring the officer who shall act as President of the United States in case of vacancies in the office both of President and Vice President, approved March 1, 1792, with the amendments, was recommended to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was read. It provides that in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice President of the United States, the President of the Senate pro tempore, and in case there shall be no President of the Senate, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being, and in case there shall be no Speaker of the House of Representatives, then the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in case there shall be no Chief Justice, then the justice of the Supreme Court of the United States who shall have been the longest commissioned, shall act as President of the United States until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

The question was upon the motion to reconsider; and being taken, it was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion to recommit the bill and pending amendment to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I withdraw the motion to recommit. And before the amendment of the committee is read I ask leave to make some verbal alterations in it.

No objection was made, and the amendment was modified accordingly.

The question was upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee as modified by Mr. BOUTWELL.

The amendment, as modified, was to add to the bill the following:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever the offices of President and Vice President shall both become vacant, the Secretary of State shall, if the Senate and House of Representatives, by concurrent resolution, so request and direct, forthwith cause a notification thereof to be made to the Executive of each State, and shall also cause the same to be published in at least one of the newspapers printed in each State, specifying that electors of President and Vice President of the United States shall be appointed in the several States, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November then next ensuing: Provided, There shall be the space of sixty days between the date of such notification and the said Tuesday. But if there shall not be the space of sixty days between the date of such notification and the said Tuesday, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected shall not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, then the Secretary of State shall specify in the notification that the electors shall be appointed on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, in the year next ensuing, at which time the electors shall accordingly be appointed; and the electors shall meet and give their votes on the first Wednesday in December next ensuing after the appointment of electors as aforesaid, and the proceedings and duties of the said electors and others shall be pursuant to the directions prescribed by law.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever the office of President and Vice President shall both become vacant when Congress is not in session, it shall be the duty of the officer discharging the duties and powers of the office of President forthwith to issue a proclamation convening both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ROSS. Will the gentleman yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will hear it.

Mr. ROSS. I desire to amend the section in relation to the succession to the office of President by providing that in case of vacancy

General Grant shall appoint some military officer not below the rank of brigadier general. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot yield for that amendment.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will.

Mr. THAYER. I introduced the original bill to which the amendment of the committee is offered. I have not examined carefully the two sections proposed to be added by the committee; but in reference to the proposed third section, I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] that some time should be fixed within which Congress shall be convened in the contingency which is there contemplated. Otherwise, under that section, the person performing the duties of President, although required to issue his proclamation forthwith, may make the convening of Congress as remote as he pleases. I suggest that in that particular it would perhaps be well to amend the section so as to require the acting President to convene Congress without unnecessary delay, or to limit the time within which it must be convened.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It does not occur to me that such an amendment will be necessary.

Mr. THAYER. I do not think in a matter of such magnitude much should be left to the discretion of an officer placed in such a situation. I think the provisions of the act should compel him to convene Congress with as little delay as possible.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not think it is necessary; but I am willing the gentleman should offer his amendment.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend the amendment by adding after the words "convening both Houses of the Congress of the United States" the words "within sixty days after assuming the duties of President of the United States;" and upon that I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] if the President to be elected under this law will hold this office for four years, or for the unexpired term?

Mr. BOUTWELL. This bill does not provide for an election of President except where Congress shall order it. If Congress does not order an election, then the person succeeding to the office will continue during the remainder of the term.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I would suggest to my colleague upon the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. BOUTWELL] a further amendment. This bill provides for the succession to the office of President in case of vacancy, and it provides that the person so succeeding shall continue in office until a President shall be elected. Now, I suggest that the words "and qualified" should be added to the first section. A President might be elected and never present himself to be qualified; yet this bill determines the tenure of office upon the election.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the first section by adding the words "and qualified."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I call the previous question upon the bill and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being on the amendment, as amended, it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. McRUER. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC COAST RAILROAD COMPANY.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 183) entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the waters of the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay, in the State of California."

The pending question was upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to inquire whether this bill has been reported from or examined by any committee of this House?

Mr. McRUER. It has been examined by the Committee on Public Lands, and in behalf of that committee I am about to offer an amendment in the form of a substitute.

Mr. SPALDING. Has the bill been before the Committee on the Pacific Railroad?

Mr. McRUER. It has not been.

Mr. CHANLER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from California [Mr. McRUER] whether this grant is likely to include any of the quicksilver or copper mines in California?

Mr. McRUER. No mineral lands are granted by the bill.

Mr. CHANLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the bill contains a special provision excluding from the grant any quicksilver or copper mines.

Mr. McRUER. In the substitute which I am about to propose we have inserted the provision usually inserted in all these bills granting lands for railroads: a provision excepting from the grant all mineral lands except coal and iron lands.

Mr. SPALDING. How much land will this grant take?

Mr. McRUER. If all this land should be unoccupied by homesteads or by preemption, I think it would take about two million acres.

Mr. SPALDING. I suppose there is enough land there to foot the bill?

Mr. McRUER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to offer the following amendment, on which I call the previous question.

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That S. G. Whipple, George Noble, James W. Henderson, Charles Minturn, Daniel Lobdel, George Yost, T. W. Miller, Benjamin Schenk, Joseph Woods, E. L. Gould, Samuel F. Butterworth, L. L. Robinson, J. F. Robinson, George A. Youle, John M. Carter, George Field, C. N. Kenny, Frederick Graffie, Lewis Cooper, Robert Drantz, J. B. Watson, and all such persons who shall or may be associated with them, and their successors or assigns, are hereby created and appointed a board of commissioners for the purposes and objects in this bill set forth. Within six months after the passage of this act they shall form a corporation, under the laws of the State of California authorizing the formation of corporations for the purpose of constructing and maintaining railroads in said State; said corporation to be called the Pacific Coast Railroad Company. That said Pacific Coast Railroad Company, when duly formed under the laws of California, shall become the owners of all the rights, properties, and privileges conferred by this act, and the office of said board of commissioners shall thereupon cease and determine: Provided, That the Legislature of the State of California shall first designate and approve of said company, so formed, as the proper company to receive the grant herein made for the purpose of aiding the construction of said road. The said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to lay out, locate and construct, furnish, equip, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line, with the appurtenances, from a point in Sonoma or Marin counties on the waters of the bay of San Francisco, by the most feasible route, to be selected by the said corporation, to Humboldt bay, in the State of California, and maintain a ferry from the point of termination to the city of San Francisco, and is hereby vested with all the powers and privileges and immunities necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said Pacific Coast Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad and telegraph line as proposed; and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also, all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turntables, and water-stations.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, granted to the Pacific Coast Railroad Company, subject to the conditions heretofore recited, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of ten alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad line, whenever on the line thereof the United States have a full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from preemption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed and a plot thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, or covered by private land grants, or occupied by homestead settlers, or preempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, on the line of said road within thirty miles of the same, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers: Provided, That the word mineral, when it occurs in this act, shall not be held to include iron or coal.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever said Pacific Coast Railroad Company shall have ten consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners, whose compensation shall be paid by said company, to examine the same, and if it shall appear that ten miles of said road and telegraph line have been completed in a good and substantial manner, and in all respects as required by this act, the commissioners shall so report to the Secretary of the Interior, and patents of lands, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to and continuous with said completed section of said road, unless said lands are covered by the exceptions and reservations of this act, upon the final completion of said road and telegraph. And from time to time, whenever ten additional miles shall have been constructed, completed, and in readiness as aforesaid, and verified by the commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company, conveying the additional sections of land as aforesaid; and so on as fast as every ten miles of said road is completed as aforesaid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That said Pacific Coast railroad shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all the necessary draws, culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, turnouts, stations, and watering-places, and all other appurtenances, including furniture and rolling stock, equal in all respects to railroads of the first class, when prepared for business, with rails of the best quality, manufactured from American iron. And a uniform gauge shall be established the entire length of the road; and there shall be constructed a telegraph line, of the most substantial and approved description, to be operated on the entire route: Provided, That said company shall not charge higher rates to the Government of the United States or their authorized officers or agents than they do individuals for like telegraphic service. And the said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free of all toll or other charges upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States, and the same shall be transported over said road at the cost charge and expense of the corporation or company owning or operating the same when so required by the Government of the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall cause the lands to be surveyed for twenty miles in width on both sides of the entire line of said road, after the general route shall be fixed, and as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad; and the odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale or entry or preemption after said line is located, except by said company, as provided in this act; and the reserved alternate sections shall not be sold by the Government at a price less than $2 50 per acre when offered for sale.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Pacific Coast Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: that the said company shall, within two years from the approval of this act, survey said route and file with the Secretary of the Interior a plot showing the location of the road from the waters of the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay; and that the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall, within three years, complete not less than ten miles and not less than ten miles each succeeding year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876: Provided, That the construction of any thirty miles within three years shall be construed to conform to the above condition.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and that the said Pacific Coast Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions thereof, and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case the grant hereby made and all rights and franchises created by this act shall vest in the State of California and be disposed of by the Legislature of the said State to such company or association as it may designate, and upon such terms and conditions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as may, in the judgment of the said Legislature, insure the speedy construction of said road.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That all the people of the United States shall have the right to subscribe to the stock of the Pacific Coast Railroad Company until the whole capital is taken up, by complying with the terms of subscription.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act by the said Pacific Coast Railroad Company shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of the said company, duly executed pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within one year after the passage of this act and not afterward, and shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the said company is authorized to accept to its own use any grant, donation or loan, power, franchise, aid or assistance which may be granted to or conferred upon said company by the Congress of the United States, by the Legislature of any State, county, or municipal corporation, or by any corporation, person, or persons, and said corporation is authorized to hold and enjoy any such grant, donation, loan or power, franchise, aid or assistance to its own use for the purpose aforesaid.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That unless the Pacific Coast Railroad Company shall obtain bona fide subscriptions to the stock of said company to the amount of $400,000, with ten per cent. paid within two years after the passage and approval of this act, it shall be null and void.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Pacific Coast Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That lots in villages, towns, and cities shall not be subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. McRUER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in regard to this bill that it came from the Senate to this House March 1, 1866, and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. That committee at the last session of Congress had it under consideration for several months. The bill has been amended in many particulars but the amendments are all of a restrictive character. This road is about two hundred and forty miles in length, extending from the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay, along the coast line of California. Along that whole distance, except within a few miles, there is not a navigable river or any means of transporting anything which this land is capable of producing to any market. This road for about sixty or seventy miles goes through a rich and fertile valley in which there is not within the limitation of this grant one single acre of public land. The company are compelled to construct this—

Mr. WARD, of New York. I ask the gentleman from California whether the first section of this bill does not give the commissioners named the power of creating corporations in California? If that be so, I would like the gentleman to tell me what authority this Congress has to confer any such power?

Mr. McRUER. This bill makes a grant of land to a corporation created under the general corporation law of the State of California, and I will tell the gentleman that this is no new thing.

This road, Mr. Speaker, for about one hundred and seventy-five miles, runs through an unsettled country, and it is unsettled because the people up to this time have been without facilities for the purpose of carrying anything to market. The land has not been worth anything, and although in some parts there is a rich growth of timber, it never will be worth settlement until there are some artificial means of communication with the markets.

If there has been any propriety in granting lands to aid in the construction of railroads anywhere, if there has been any propriety in making these grants to Illinois, to Iowa, to Missouri, or Kansas—

The SPEAKER. The hour of half past four having arrived the House by order takes a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening, and this bill goes over till Monday next, after the morning hour.

EVENING SESSION.

The House at half past seven o'clock p. m. resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate of the United States, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body insisted upon its amendment to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate joint resolution No. 90, to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia, striking out the sixth section of the amendment of the House, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. VAN WINKLE, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. DAVIS conferees on its part.

It further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendment to House bill No. 356, fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and clerks of the courts of the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. CONNESS, and Mr. PATTERSON conferees on its part.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Under the order of the House made this morning the House, as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BENJAMIN in the chair,) proceeded to the consideration of the President's annual message, Mr. MERCUR being entitled to the floor.

Mr. MERCUR. Mr. Chairman, motion is said to be a natural condition of all matter. Progress appears to be a law of the world's nature. Much of its past civil progress has been through bloody revolutions. It seems to require a violent upheaving of society to enable it to break loose from the errors or oppressions which encircle it. Our generation and our own people have lately given a striking illustration. During the four years of bloody struggle through which we have just passed more was done toward securing the true principles of democracy than had been done in the half century which preceded it. A revolution of sentiment ends not with the laying down of hostile arms. It was a preëxisting sentiment, hostile to our Government and its institutions, which put arms into the rebels' hands. That evoked a counter opposition. The loyal masses were not content to oppose an equal force only, so that each belligerent should occupy his former ground at the end of the war; each sought to advance. The mighty strength of true democracy has been stirred to its very foundation. We are passing through a great revolution; we have not yet reached the end. True, the millions of Union soldiers are no longer in arms, but have returned to their peaceful avocations; yet still the conflict goes on. The antagonism of minds believing in different forms of government still exists. The old leaven which caused the masses of the South to rise up in rebellion has not been eradicated. Each day's journal gives evidence of outrages as barbarous as those which preceded the open conflict in arms. As war against our institutions existed before the firing upon Fort Sumter, so it has existed since the surrender of the rebel armies.

Nor is it confined within the limits of that portion of our country which was in open rebellion. The men of the North who sympathized and fraternized with the rebels while they were in arms now seek to excuse them and embrace them as brothers guilty of no crime. These men during the war saw nothing on the part of our Government but "executive usurpations" and "constitutional violations." They wanted the war so conducted on our part as not to destroy the rebel armies nor wound their fine sensibilities. In truth, they did so far influence the action of our Government that the war for some year and a half was so conducted as to do the rebels the least possible injury. This was manifested, in part, by a refusal to use the brawny arm of the colored man, and by the sedulous care with which the property of the rebel citizen was protected. As during the conflict of arms every effective effort toward putting down the rebellion was denounced as a violation of the Constitution, so now every effort toward securing the just fruits of our victories is in like manner denounced by the same class of men. With them the Constitution is to be most liberally construed when invoked to screen rebels; but when loyalty and liberty seek protection then it is to receive a strict construction. They would have the rebels restored to all their former relations under the Constitution as if they had been guilty of no crime nor forfeited any rights.

On the contrary, I hold that they have been guilty of the highest crimes and forfeited many of their rights under the Constitution; not only their rights as individuals, but their rights as organized communities. In the incipient stages of the rebellion as well as during its bloody progress they did not act as individuals only, but as States. In fact, they called into exercise and used all the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of their several States. Acting as States they, so far as they could, withdrew from the Union; as States they changed their laws and constitutions; as States they confederated together and formed a new constitution, a new national union; as States they elected members of Congress and Senators to that new confederate government; acting through that government thus formed they levied taxes, made loans, conscripted men, raised large armies, and for four years waged a bloody war against the Constitution and Government of the United States.

But, say their hair-splitting apologists, they did all this contrary to law; our Constitution and laws forbade it. Their acts had no binding force, hence we must treat all those acts and deeds as if they had never been committed.

Grant that they were all contrary to law; grant that our Constitution and laws expressly forbade them, and that they were of no binding force as against us; yet it by no means follows that we must treat the wrong-doers as if they had committed no crimes. A man has no right to steal your horse; the laws forbid it; yet, in fact, notwithstanding his absence of right, the prohibition of law and the penalties provided against it, he may steal it. By so doing he acquires no legal right to the horse. You may reclaim it wherever found and again reduce it to your possession. But that does not wipe out the thief's offense. He still remains amenable to the law, liable to all its penalties; none the less a felon. As a thief is subject to the punishment inflicted upon those guilty of larceny, so is the rebel who levied war against our Government subject to the punishment inflicted for treason.

No one, however, now proposes to inflict upon the masses of those who are guilty of treason the high punishment prescribed by law. It is one thing to inflict positive punishment upon a rebel; it is quite another thing not to give him a representation in Congress which he voluntarily relinquished and spurned. The one calls into exercise the active vindication of law, the other merely withholds that which he has abandoned and taken an oath not to enjoy under our Government. I desire, however, to have it distinctly understood that I am opposed to a universal amnesty. In my judgment some few at least of the prime movers and controlling spirits of the rebellion ought to be tried for their treason, ought to be convicted, and ought to be punished. Thus treason should be made odious. A loyal national sentiment pleads for it; the best interests of humanity require it; justice demands it.

This, however, lies with the executive and judicial branches of the Government to enforce. The laws heretofore enacted by Congress have fully provided a way for the trial and punishment of all such offenders. There the duties of Congress cease. Where they cease the duties and powers of the Executive begin. The President, says the Constitution, "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." Upon him, then, acting through his executive officers, is imposed the obligation of bringing offenders to trial and enforcing the sentences of the courts against them.

We, however, now have another duty to perform. It is to provide the manner in which the people residing in those portions of the country lately in rebellion shall have a restored representation in Congress. Those formerly in authority there voluntarily relinquished that representation. For several years they persisted in depriving themselves of it. They formed new political relations wholly inconsistent with its exercise; they enacted new governments in direct hostility to ours; they wholly repudiated and set at defiance our Constitution and the laws passed in pursuance thereof. It is with that whole people we now have to deal; not so much with the territory which they occupy, as with the inhabitants who dwell thereupon.

Our brave soldiers and seamen did their duty in the bloody conflicts of battle; we must now do ours. The military power of the Government subdued the rebels in arms; Congress must now provide for their restoration to a new-born civil life; not in any vindictive spirit, but "with charity toward all, and with malice toward none," ought we to provide for a restoration. We must not, however, so far extend our charity to those who sought to destroy our Government and dismember the fair proportions of our country as to forget the wants or overlook the rights of loyal men. Nor must we forget those living principles of man's equality which underlie this Government, and which have been reaffirmed in the crucible through which we have just passed.

Article four, section four, of the Constitution declares—

"The United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government."

This clause of the Constitution has received judicial construction showing that the power therein given is lodged in Congress.

The difficulties in regard to the "Dorr government" in Rhode Island in 1841 and 1842 gave rise to the case of Luther vs. Borden, which was argued in the Supreme Court of the United States, and is reported in 7 Howard's United States Reports, page 1. The section which I have just cited came under consideration. In the opinion of the court, delivered by Chief Justice Taney, he says:

"Under this article of the Constitution it rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a State. For, as the United States guaranty to every State a republican form of government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in a State before it can determine whether it is republican or not. And when the Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union, the authority of the government under which they are appointed, as well as its republican character, is recognized by the proper constitutional authority, and its decision is binding upon every other department of the Government."

Then, if Congress is to decide "what government is established in a State," and if Congress is to secure "to every State a republican form of government;" if Congress, by the admission of Senators and Representatives, recognizes the "character" of a State; and if the "decision" of Congress in all these respects "is binding upon every other department of the Government," it necessarily follows that all power given to the Government is vested in Congress.

The constitutional powers of Congress over those districts lately in rebellion have been so fully and ably argued by others upon this floor that I shall not weary you, nor surfeit the country, with any extended argument upon that point. I shall consider the power of Congress to impose terms upon those people who sought to destroy our Government as established—established not only to the satisfaction of a large majority of the members of this body, but also to the satisfaction of the people whom they represent.

The Opposition party is persistent in asserting that during, or in consequence of, the rebellion the people of the South lost none of their constitutional rights, and that by the cessation of arms they were immediately restored to all those rights which they had prior to the war. Its members in this House and elsewhere appear to have forgotten that new principles were evolved during the war, that some of them culminated in the enunciation and adoption of those constitutional amendments which abolished slavery. In all their labored arguments they ignore that radical change in the nation's fundamental law. Industrious in their labors of exhuming the resolutions of 1798, and adroit in reciting the doctrines of Calhoun based upon them, they seem oblivious to the amended charter of freedom and the rights flowing therefrom:

"ART. 13. SEC. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

"SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

There stands that bright token of liberty, the glory of this generation, and the pride of the Republican party who made it a part of the organic law. As time shall roll into the distant ages of the future, an American citizen will point to it with the same pride that an Englishman now does to the Great Charter which the barons wrung from King John at Runnymede.

By its adoption slavery was legally as fully wiped out, eradicated, and destroyed as if it had never existed as a blight upon our institutions. I have said such was its legal effect, but the framers of this constitutional amendment well knew that slavery was so interwoven with the laws and customs of the States in which it had existed that the mere declaration that it should no longer exist, although a constitutional declaration, would not of itself give to those heretofore enslaved the just and fair protection which its letter and spirit affirmed. They knew that the several States, in which it had existed, could not be relied upon to secure the reasonable and just incidents of freedom. Hence the second section gave "Congress the power to enforce this" amendment, according to its true intent and spirit, "by appropriate legislation."

Here, then, is a new constitutional power which Congress has acquired since the rebellion, and which we are now called upon to exercise.

I submit now, that what might be adjudged a republican form of government under one constitution, might under another be far from it. In other words, in construing our Constitution, regard must be had to the character and spirit of the whole instrument. Nor should the expositor be confined to an examination of the instrument itself alone, but he must look beyond it. He must consider the genius, ruling ideas, progress, and existing sentiments of the great masses of the people governed by it. The Constitution is not to receive that technical construction or interpretation which a learned lawyer gives to a statute or to a common law instrument; but it is to receive such a fair, just, and natural interpretation as will carry out the great principles of the Government, and secure and protect the rights of the masses for whose benefit it was made.

The Constitution of the United States is the people's fundamental law. In the suppression of the rebellion; in the abolition of slavery; and in the recent elections, they have given it form and construction, which not only legislators, but Presidents and judges will do well to notice and to heed.

As long as our national Constitution recognized slavery, Congress could with no justice or sound logic affirm that any State government was not "republican in form" because it denied a large class, which it held in bondage, political rights. Now the case stands upon a different foundation. By the Constitution all men are made free. By the provisions of the civil rights bill all persons born within the jurisdiction of the United States, or duly naturalized, are made citizens. Hence the form of any State government must now be viewed, and must now be tested, by the whole of our national Constitution and the recognized rights under it. So viewed, and so tested, no State government can, in my judgment, be truly recognized as republican in form, which permanently disfranchises, by reason of race or color, either a majority or a large proportion of its adult male citizens who have been guilty of no crime. Conceding that the right of suffrage is neither a natural nor civil right, yet it is so necessary to protect and secure a citizen in the enjoyment of his civil rights, that in a Government like ours, based upon the will of the people, it is difficult to separate it from civil rights.

The constitutional amendments passed by Congress at its last session are so just in their requirements, so mild in their provisions, that no person ought to object to their adoption by reason of their imposing too severe terms upon those lately in rebellion. With some reason loyal men may complain, that they do not go far enough, that they do not adequately punish rebels, nor sufficiently protect the rights of all loyal men of the South; yet mild and just as they are, their provisions and requirements are spurned by those people lately in rebellion. The masses of the loyal North last autumn declared, that nothing short of the recognition of the principles therein contained would bring peace and security to the nation. We must not disregard that great popular verdict rendered by the people. There must be no yielding up any of their securities, no abandonment of any of their essential requirements. The affirmation of citizenship and of equality of civil rights; the withholding from States a representation based upon loyal men who, as a class, are disfranchised; the temporary exclusion from office of leading perjured rebels; the repudiation of the rebel debt, and a pledge for the payment of the loyal debt, incurred in putting down the rebellion, must not be waived nor rendered uncertain. They are essentially necessary to protect the liberties of our people and to make their rights secure.

I understand civil liberty, under our form of government, to be something more than what Coleridge defined painting to be: "Painting," said he, "is a something between a thought and a thing." Our civil liberty is not thus circumscribed. It is both a thought and a thing. It rests, not in the mind alone, but reaches out its numerous tendrils and clasps as with hooks of steel, the substantial realities of man's existence. As mind and matter are united in man, so are thought and thing in civil liberty. Liberty is insecure, it is of no value, until it becomes a right; not merely asserted as an abstract right, but affirmed as a positive, practical, and living right. It must be incorporated into law which will protect and enforce it.

I am free to confess, that the constitutional amendments now pending before the States do not give all the protection and security which I think due to the loyal people of both the North and the South. Unable last session to get all the securities I desired, I accepted and voted for them. In my judgment the general sentiment of the North during the recent elections was, that if the rebel States would adopt these amendments in good faith, and send loyal men, they ought to have a restored representation in Congress. So believing, and desiring to assist in carrying out the people's will, I have stood ready to thus vote. Instead, however, of adopting them; instead of giving their assent to the correctness of the principles therein enunciated, they have rejected them with scorn. If now, with all their anxiety to have a representation upon the floors of Congress, they will not subscribe to those principles for the purpose of gaining admission, is any man so insane as to believe they would adopt them after they were admitted? Certainly not.

If a majority of the representative men of the South, who enjoy the elective franchise, are determined to continue to stand in opposition to our Government; if they continue to manifest no sympathy with the genius of our institutions; if they can so control and direct the majorities of those to whom they give the right of suffrage as to exclude from official position all loyal men of the South, then indeed they are still in rebellion. They have changed their weapons, but their object is the same. That object, that purpose is to undermine the very foundation upon which this Government rests. They not only ignore the doctrine that our Government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed—not of the few only, but of the many—but they seek to pervert its powers and make it an engine of wrong and of oppression. The numerous murders of colored men, the frequent assassinations of loyal white men, attest the bitter and disloyal sentiment which still rankles in the heart of the unreconstructed rebels. Kindness and executive pardons have failed to subdue their hostile sentiments. Loyal white men are driven from their homes by social and political ostracism, as well as through fear of injury to their persons and their property.

Every loyal citizen is entitled to protection by his Government. We cannot afford to deny it to ours. The golden opportunity is now presented of bringing back our Government to those grand truths proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence; not holding them as "glittering generalities," but as principles imbedded in the hearts of our people; so that we may have in fact, what we have heretofore had in name, a free Government. If we now suffer this occasion to pass unimproved, a century may roll around before so favorable a one is again presented.

We are told, however, by gentlemen in the Opposition, that there is no constitutional power to deny to any rebel State a representation in Congress. It recalls to my mind the declaration so often made at the inception of the rebellion; a declaration made not only by the head of the Democratic party, but running down through all grades to its most ignorant member. It was, "There is no power in the Government to coerce a State."

The loyal, Union-loving people of the nation answered that assertion. They said we will coerce all persons who are in rebellion in any State, even if they include its entire population. That word was made good. So now the loyal people have said, we can and will deny to rebel States a representation in Congress until they come with constitutions and laws in harmony with our amended Constitution. Unless Congress is recreant to its trust that word will also be made good.

As the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath, so civil government was created for the benefit of mankind, and not mankind for the benefit of government. Constitutions and laws are but the instruments which the people have formed, to be used in securing their rights and in protecting them in the enjoyment thereof. As the habits and necessities of a people change, so should their legislation and organic laws change. To deny this, is to check all progress in civil government. In the earlier periods of the world's history, those organic changes were made through the bloody throes of revolution. In framing the Constitution of the United States our forefathers sought to avoid all necessity for those convulsions which deluge a country in blood. Hence they incorporated in the instrument itself, a peaceful method by which it could be changed. They arrogated to themselves no perfection of human wisdom through which they sought to bind future generations. They framed it to suit their then existing wants and necessities, but reserved the right, and pointed out the manner, in which they and their posterity might change it. Thus it is allotted to each generation to make such changes as the advancing civilization of the world requires.

The disdain, with which the governing classes of the South have rejected the mild requirements of the pending constitutional amendments, proves them unfit and unsafe to shape the legislation of this country.

In my judgment the time for other and additional action has now arrived. We must look beyond those classes. The disloyal should no longer be permitted to act the part of the dog in the manger. Now, they neither enjoy the full benefits of our representative Government, nor permit loyal people in their midst to enjoy them. They seem to have forgotten that their every system of slavery has been weighed in the balance by the great popular heart of the nation and has been found wanting; that time nor eternity will not restore it. It has been cast into that vortex where—

"Though the mills of God grind slowly
Yet they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience He stands waiting
With exactness grinds He all."

It is criminal in us if we suffer loyal citizens of the South to be much longer thus deprived of their full rights. They have a right to demand speedy action. While we talk and procrastinate, they suffer. The disloyal, basking in the sunshine of executive sympathy and executive favor, have again raised their heads, and are now consolidating their power. I see no other course left but to give enfranchisement and power to the loyal masses of their citizens. Let the test be loyalty, not race nor color. It is the lowly, the humble, the down-trodden, who most need the protecting arm of the Government. Wealth and high order of intelligence usually secure protection to their possessors; the poor and the ignorant require the aid of the ballot for their protection.

The rights of labor and muscle must not be overlooked nor disregarded. They lie at the very foundation of our national prosperity and our continued existence as one nation. When the unity of our nation was assailed by the recent rebellion; when the peril was so great that every loyal family was compelled to give up some of its loved ones to fill the depleted ranks of our armies; when the conscript submitted himself to the military authorities for examination, no such interrogatory was put to him as "Can you read and write?" nor that other interrogatory, "Does any colored blood flow in your veins?" Neither ignorance of letters; nor race nor color afforded any ground for exemption; vigorous manhood fixed his liability.

Whoever was required to risk his life in the defense of our Government, whoever was required to raise his stalwart arms to oppose that mighty rebellion, has, in my judgment, a sufficient educational qualification to enable him to take a part in shaping the future of that nation whose unity his valor helped to preserve.

I trust, therefore, that the bill this House has lately passed, providing for a restoration of civil government in Louisiana, may become a law; and if found to work well, that its substantial provisions may be extended to all the disorganized communities of the South. Those civil governments, which the President has assumed to establish, are of no binding force. Let the citizens, who are now without any adequate protection, be temporarily protected by our military power. That power should be carefully yet firmly exercised. Rebels must not arrogantly dictate what a loyal people must do; they must be taught that every person who is protected by the ample folds of our flag must love its stars or fear its stripes.

It is my earnest desire that the time may soon come when there shall be such a state of facts existing in all the States lately in rebellion as will admit of their representation being restored; but I do not want to see their Representatives come back here exhibiting that sense of arrogant superiority which was formerly manifested on this floor. When they take their seats let it be with no assumption of superiority, no admission of inferiority; let it be with sentiments of political equality and of national unity.

By one general test and rule we should fix and determine under what requirements a restoration shall be had. Let us scrape away all the unsound accumulations begotten by slavery till we come to the solid rock, and build anew; then permanency will be given to the structure in which harmony and justice shall commingle. Do not let us subject the people of this nation to a multiplicity of brilliant operations like that which characterized the experiments of a French surgeon. It is related of the late Sir Astley Cooper that on visiting Paris he was asked by the surgeon en chef of the empire how many times he had performed a certain wonderful surgical operation. Sir Astley replied that he had performed the operation thirteen times. "Ah," said the Frenchman, "but, Monsieur, I have done him one hundred and sixty times." After looking into the amazed expression of Sir Astley's face he added: "How many times did you save his life?" "I," said the Englishman, "saved eleven out of thirteen. How many did you save out of one hundred and sixty?" "Ah, Monsieur, I lose dem all, but de operation was very brillante!"

So every attempt made to reconstruct without recognizing man's equality may be brilliant to the eyes of those who govern, but fatal to the rights of the people. Any compromise which ignores the rights of a loyal citizen is unworthy of the civilization of the age. There should be no compromise of any of the essential rights of citizenship. Several compromises have been made with slavery in our past history, but perfidy has marked their paths. We must not forget that the destiny of this nation is now to be shaped. Principles are now to be settled which will leave their impress upon countless ages of the future. No veneering spread over great national wrongs, no ignoring the fundamental rights of all our citizens, can faithfully represent the deeply-seated convictions of the American people. The conflict of arms through which the nation has passed, the treasures expended, and blood shed by the people in defense of their cherished rights and institutions, must not have been in vain. The civil arm of this Government must give logical effect to the sturdy blows struck by our brave soldiers in their many bloody conflicts. If it fails to protect the fair and natural fruits of the victory won by the sword it will be false to the great principles of liberty and justly merit the condemnation of the civilized world. I, however, have an abiding faith that the people, who could preserve their institutions against the criminal weakness of a Buchanan and the machinations of a Johnson, will transmit them unimpaired to posterity.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DARLING.]

Mr. DARLING. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania has only ten minutes left. As that is not sufficient for my purpose I decline to go on this evening; and with his permission I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DUMONT, and Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, addressed the House. [Their remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

At the conclusion of Mr. TAYLOR's remarks, Mr. KERR obtained the floor, and moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at ten o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BUNDY: The petition of Colonel J. H. M. Montgomery, for one year's additional pension, which is recommended by Joseph Hunt, Alexander Logan, Caleb W. Cherington, John C. Vauden, S. A. Nash, and William Waddle, the county officers of Gallia county, Ohio.

By Mr. CULLOM: A petition, signed by numerous citizens of Sangamon county, Illinois, calling upon Congress to prevent by necessary legislation the further withdrawal of the national legal tenders; also, to refrain from passing a law requiring the national banks to redeem in the city of New York.

By Mr. DODGE: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in regard to the land sold by the city to the Government for building suitable accommodations of the revenue service at the Battery, and asking Congress to make the proper appropriations to carry out the object.

By Mr. FAIRSWORTH: The petition of citizens of Rockford, Illinois, against the curtailment of the currency.

Also, the remonstrance of citizens of Rockford, Illinois, against any law depreciating or unsettling the national currency.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of 122 citizens of Youngstown, Ohio, asking for the repeal of the five per cent. tax on manufactures.

By Mr. GOODYEAR: The petition of Effie J. Harvey, praying for a pension on account of her late husband, Clinton D. Harvey, who died from disease contracted in the naval service of the United States.

By Mr. HUBBELL: The petition of John McElroy, and 108 others, citizens of Delaware, Ohio, praying that the five per cent. tax imposed upon manufactures be removed.

By Mr. INGERSOLL: The remonstrance of F. Fuller, Charles E. Grant, L. E. Conger, E. L. Chapman and 67 others, business men of Galesburg, Illinois, protesting against any legislation depreciating or unsettling the established national currency.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of the officers of the Athenaeum, of Philadelphia, asking that all books, maps, &c., intended for libraries, colleges, and other public institutions be continued on the free list, as a tariff upon them would be attended with disastrous results in the diffusion of useful knowledge.

By Mr. PAINÉ: Remonstrance of F. T. Smith and others, citizens of Fox Lake, Wisconsin, against legislation depreciating or unsettling the established national currency.

Also, the petition of citizens of Kalamazoo county, Michigan, for the establishment of a certain mail route.

Also, the petition of Lydia L. Perham, for pension. Also, the petition of certain citizens of Michigan, for the establishment of a new mail route.

By Mr. PERHAM: The memorial of M. Wescott, for pension to the minor child of Enosh B. Whittemore.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The petition of manufacturers of Hamilton, Ohio, praying for the removal of the five per cent. tax on manufactures.

Also, the petition of citizens of Dayton, Ohio, remonstrating against any legislation depreciating or unsettling the established national currency.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 14, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate postpone all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the regular order of business will be pursued—the presentation of memorials, reports, &c.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to present the credentials of my colleague and have him sworn in this morning.

Mr. GRIMES. That can be done after this motion is put.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope before the motion is put that we shall be allowed to present memorials and bills.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senate will agree to take the bill up I shall then be perfectly willing that it be informally laid aside until all the morning business is disposed of.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to its being taken up if we can then proceed with the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The question being put; there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Creswell, Fessenden, Fowler, Freloughusen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Saulsbury, Stewart, Williams, and Yates—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Dixon, Foster, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Guthrie, Harris, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Van Winkle, and Wiley—16.

So the motion was agreed to.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. POMEROY presented the credentials of Hon. Edmund G. Ross, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Kansas to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. James H. Lane. The credentials were read, and the oaths prescribed by law were administered to Mr. Ross, and he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. ROSS presented the credentials of Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, elected a Senator by the Legislature of Kansas for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Joseph Segar, praying for compensation for property taken for the use of the Government by order of Major General Butler, in May, 1861, at Roseland, near Old Point Comfort, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Isabella M. Boyle, praying that a pension may be granted to her husband, James Boyle, formerly a private in company H, seventeenth regiment Massachusetts volunteers, who became disabled in the service and is now insane; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 974) to indemnify Abial Morrison for property destroyed by hostile Indians in Washington Territory, in the years 1855 and 1856, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 404) to regulate the selection of grand and petit jurors in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 501) amendatory of an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana, approved May 26, 1864, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 158) for the relief of Daniel Ellis, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Ezra B. Gordon, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. No. 165) to refer the claims of the trustees of A. G. Sloo to the Court of Claims, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 965) declaring Clinton bridge, across the Mississippi river, at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 604) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under authority of law, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1866; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the memorial of A. W. Walker, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

On motion by Mr. CRESWELL, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 157) to protect children of African descent from being enslaved, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, be printed for the use of the Senate.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 603) to authorize the establishment of ocean mailsteamship service between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate the report of General Newton, of the United States Engineers, in relation to the encroachments on the harbor of New York.

LEAGUE ISLAND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 432) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia, the pending question being upon the following amendment, proposed by Mr. SUMNER, as a substitute for the bill:

That Admiral David G. Farragut, Lieutenant General W. T. Sherman, and Mr. J. E. Hilgard be, and they are hereby, appointed and constituted a commission to select a suitable site on or adjacent to the Atlantic coast for a naval station for the storage, repair, and building of iron vessels and iron-clad vessels of the Navy, and for other naval purposes. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and empowered to accept such selected site on behalf of the United States: Provided, The same shall be conveyed to the United States as a free gift, for their exclusive use and benefit, by a valid and indefeasible title. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized to take possession of and occupy such site for the purposes herein indicated; and in preparation thereof to use such amount of money as may be necessary out of any unexpended appropriations for the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this question the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DIXON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GRIMES. With the permission of the Senator from Connecticut, I desire to say—

Mr. DIXON. Does the Senator wish to make a speech? If not, I would rather go on.

Mr. GRIMES. I was going to give the Senator the benefit of a letter that was alluded to in the letter of Commodore Turner, of the existence of which I was not conscious until yesterday.

Mr. DIXON. I am willing that the Senator shall go on if he wishes to do so.

Mr. GRIMES. No; I do not care about it.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, as I listened yesterday to the imploring and almost pathetic tones in which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CATTELL] urged upon the Senate the acceptance of this "munificent gift" on the part of the city of Philadelphia, I was struck with the deep anxiety which is manifested by the representatives of that city on the floor of the Senate that the gift should not be declined. The ordinary rules that govern human nature seem to be reversed in this instance. We have had heretofore importunate petitioners. The importunity now seems to be on the part of the giver, who trembles with anxiety lest the gift should not be received. We have a short method sometimes with beggars who are importunate and who will not take a denial; but what shall we do when the benefactor will not take "no" for an answer? Sir, there was once a wise old man, who lived long before League Island had been deposited by the ooze of the Delaware and the Schuylkill at the confluence of the two rivers, who gave us a word of caution as to the propriety of our keeping aloof from those who press upon us gifts, especially when the gift is a thing which the receiver does not want and the donor is very anxious to get rid of.

Now, sir, League Island is only two miles from the city of Philadelphia, and there seems to be a very great anxiety on the part of Philadelphia, and a natural anxiety I should consider it, that the gift of that island should be received. What is the character of the gift? If it were a very desirable point with reference to the situation of Philadelphia at present, should we find that, sitting as she does between the Schuylkill and the Delaware, she had grown in all directions, north and west, until she has become the second city in the Union, but had never grown in that direction, why is it that that portion of the suburbs of Philadelphia is not inhabited except that it is not habitable? You will find similar low lands surrounding the city of New York and other cities. Some cities are compelled to use similar lands on account of their peculiar location; but as a general thing you find that when not habitable they are not inhabited. Even the suburbs of the city of New York on the opposite side of the river are in that condition. In the city of Boston, on account of its peculiar position, they have been obliged to reclaim and make land for the growth of the city. We find, however, that the city of Philadelphia has extended in all other directions, but shrinks from this unhealthy region, as a tree puts forth its spreading branches in all directions toward the light, but shrinks from a noxious shade.

The Senator from New Jersey told us yesterday that it was a custom sometimes on the part of the citizens of Philadelphia to resort to this island of a summer afternoon in order to enjoy the healthful breezes that fan that charming spot. That is a picture which I think never existed except in his own imagination. It may possibly be that there are some shades there, but I do not think the heated citizens of Philadelphia of a summer day flock there in vast numbers. They do not recline with Titrus under the beeches of League Island. The Senator himself very properly selects the city of Philadelphia for the place of his business. He is wise in so doing. He in that way gives an advantage both to himself and to the city. But does he seek his suburban residence on League Island, where he says the healthful breezes are so balmy and inviting of a summer afternoon? No, sir; he vastly prefers the somewhat arid and sandy plains of Camden.

The city of Philadelphia is peculiarly fortunate in the advocacy which this League Island scheme receives. She has virtually three, and I do not know but I might say four, representatives here. In addition to the two able Senators from Pennsylvania, there is the Senator from New Jersey, who resides one half the time in Philadelphia during business hours, and during his hours of leisure in New Jersey, who is here as the advocate, almost the representative, and in fact takes upon himself the character of a witness for the interests of Philadelphia; so that we may say she is thrice happy, terque beatus, and I do not know but I may say quaterque when we add the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES,] who also seems to take so deep an interest for Philadelphia.

I do not complain of this in the slightest degree. It is not unnatural that the city of Philadelphia should desire that League Island should be taken by the Government, accepted as a "munificent gift," that great expense should be laid out upon it, and that at some future and proper time she may ask the General Government to give her, in return for the six hundred acres of League Island, the small modicum of land which is now used as a navy-yard in the city of Philadelphia. Why, sir, it would be ungracious if the General Government would not do it. If Uncle Sam should receive this "munificent gift," and he should be requested by and by to give up to the city of Philadelphia the land now occupied by the navy-yard, it would be almost ungracious and unkind should he refuse to do so; and I do not know that it would be unreasonable if such a request should be made. How can we refuse so slight a return for a gift so munificent?

But, sir, I find, in examining this subject, some things which strike me as peculiar. In the first place, I will say that the proposition is very skillfully presented to the Senate—I will not say artfully, but skillfully presented. We are told that there is no intention of establishing an additional navy-yard; that it is only desired that the present location of the Philadelphia navy-yard shall be changed to another. This disguise, it seems to me, cannot conceal the real intention. Every Senator knows that the real question here presented is whether the great iron navy-yard of the United States, rendered necessary by the use of iron-clad vessels, and which it is supposed must at some time be established, shall be located at League Island or not; whether, in preference to all other locations in the country, that shall now be definitely chosen. That is the real question before the Senate. It is useless, therefore, to say that Congress is only requested to decide that the navy-yard in Philadelphia shall be removed and enlarged. We cannot avoid the real issue. We may as well look at it as it is. The question is whether we are prepared to say that of all the places on the whole coast of the Atlantic, from Maine to Florida, League Island is the place for the navy-yard which is to be built for iron-clad vessels.

Now, sir, how happens it that this question is here at all? It is a little surprising that this question is before the Senate on this occasion. Senators who have occupied their seats for four years will remember that we have already had a discussion on this subject and a virtual decision. The question was once before presented to the Senate, and the Senate decided that a commission should be appointed, and that that commission should examine League Island, New London, and other sites that might be presented, and report to the Navy Department. How was that commission appointed? It was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy. He certainly is not an enemy of this project, and it could not be supposed that he had appointed men who were adverse to his views. I do not suppose for a single instant that any improper motive governed the appointment of that commission; but this I may properly say, that if there was any leaning on the part of the commission, it was not against League Island and in favor of any other site. It was appointed by the Navy Department, the strongest friend of this proposition. What were the commission to do? They were to examine the sites presented and to report. They have examined and reported. What was that report, and what has been the effect of it? What attention has been paid to it? Has the Navy Department paid the slightest attention to that report? I think if the report had been the reverse of what it was the honorable Secretary of the Navy would have paid some regard to it. It seems to me that the Senate of the United States, having concurred with the House of Representatives in requiring the appointment of a commission to examine and report whether League Island was the proper place for this navy-yard, are called upon to pay some respect to the report itself, at least to consider what it was.

But here we are presented with a proposition for another commission, and to report upon what? To examine the whole coast as before? To let us know what is the best position? No, sir; to examine one, and only one; and I think I may safely say, without any disrespect to the Secretary of the Navy, whom I believe to be a very correct and honorable man, especially in his political views, that a sure thing will be made of it this time; I may say that with safety, because the bill itself requires him to confine his examination, if any examination is to be made, to one point. Why is that, sir? Why not allow what the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to be done? The Senator from Iowa says it would be a roving commission. Well, sir, I should suppose that roving was the very mode by which a commission could ascertain what was the best site; but the commission, under this bill, are not to rove abroad; they are to confine themselves to this one position, League Island, and if they are of opinion that that should be selected, then the question is closed.

I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Navy will appoint this commission with reference only to their qualifications to decide the question; but if he should be so unfortunate as to find that the commission are adverse to his views and opposed to League Island, what then? That will be the second commission that have reported, and then I suppose the whole subject will be dropped, and Congress will be called upon again to appoint another commission, and so on until a commission is found that shall decide in favor of League Island; for I will say that the persistency, I might say the obstinacy, with which certain men connected with the Government seem bent upon selecting this position of League Island in preference to any other is really somewhat surprising, quite as much so as some of the other points to which the Senator from New Jersey alluded, and to which I shall call the attention of the Senate in a moment.

The Secretary of the Navy overlooks entirely the report of his commission. He appointed suitable officers of the Navy and they submitted to him their report. In his very next report submitted to Congress the Secretary utterly ignored that. He went on as if no report had been made. He insisted upon his former views; and the subject now comes before Congress, and Congress is urged and implored to accept this "munificent gift" against the opinion of the commission appointed in accordance with the vote of both Houses of Congress.

Now, sir, what was that report? Attention has already been called to it, and it is unnecessary for me to dwell upon it at any very great length at this time. Who were these gentlemen who were appointed by a solemn vote of both Houses of Congress to examine, first, League Island, then New London, and then any other point which might be presented as a suitable location? Commodore Stringham, Commodore Gardner, Commodore Van Brunt, Engineer Sanger, Captain Marston, and Professor Baché. It so happens—of course it was entirely accidental, but it so happened—that three of the commission either were residents of, or natives of, Pennsylvania, and not a single man had any connection, by residence, or birth, or relationship, or consanguinity, or in any other way whatever, with New England. Their feelings and prejudices, if they had any—I know they had none; but if they had any—were in favor of Philadelphia as the location to be chosen. They made a report of very great ability. They exhausted the whole subject. They divided their inquiries into fifteen different heads. What was the final result to which they came? What was the opinion which they gave Congress on the subject? The Senator from New Jersey says "it was not unanimous, but the vote of the commission stood four to two." The Senator says the minority had the advantage of the argument.

Well, sir, it is very possible that you might appoint a committee consisting of six men, five of whom should be very capable men of judging, practical men, and yet not so keen in argument as the sixth, and if his argument is supposed to be a little abler than the others, then, according to the Senator, you must not regard the weight of character nor of opinion, but must look at the theoretical reasoning and skill in argument entirely. But I think that the Senator is entirely mistaken in regard to the argument. If I am any judge, these gentlemen not only outnumbered the minority of the board, but they outweighed them in argument. The result to which they came was this:

"Resolved, That, in the opinion of the board, the public interests will not be promoted by acquiring the title to League Island for naval purposes."

That is definite, distinct, decided, and without qualification. That was the opinion of these four naval officers against the other two on that board, the only board ever appointed by act of Congress to make a decision on this subject. They went on further and added:

"Resolved, That the harbor of New London possesses greater advantages for a navy-yard and naval depot than any other location examined by this board."

I do not propose to dwell at any very great length upon that, for I am not here to-day as the peculiar advocate of New London. I do not wish nor expect the Senate to decide at this time upon the merits of that place. That is not the question before the Senate. The Senate may think that League Island does not combine all the advantages which are required, and which may be found somewhere on our three thousand miles of coast, for a navy-yard, without coming to the conclusion that New London does combine all those advantages. Possibly some other place may be found. I agree entirely with my colleague in his remarks yesterday, that Washington city itself is a far better place for this navy-yard than League Island. That is my opinion. I have no doubt that other places may be found, I think they are numerous, if the investigation could be extended. Certainly there is no very great pressure for time on this subject, for the Secretary of the Navy has seized time by the forelock and has placed our iron-clad ships at League Island. There they are safe and sound, imbedded in ice, locked up, secure from attack and useless for defense, and have been for six weeks past at League Island utterly helpless and utterly useless. If that catastrophe to which you, sir, alluded yesterday had taken place within the last six weeks our iron-clads would have been unable to move for any purpose from League Island. There is, therefore, no very great pressure as to time. League Island has fast in her icy chains the iron-clads already, and they will remain there at least until the Delaware river shall thaw and liberate them from their icy bondage. I observed that the Philadelphia papers a few days ago expressed great hope that eighty vessels that were ice-locked at Newcastle would soon be able to reach Philadelphia, but the wind happened to change to the northwest, the ice remained in the Delaware, and there they are yet.

It would be trespassing upon the patience of the Senate if I were now, after the exhaustive speech on this question which my colleague has made, to dwell upon the details of the report of the commission appointed to investigate this subject. All that can be said has already been said upon it. Senators will find if they will glance at that report that all the questions were carefully considered and minutely inquired into and examined: first, as to the adequate depth of water at or near the site; second, facility of ingress and egress; third, security from attack by an enemy and facility and economy of defenses; fourth, security from violent winds at sea, and from ice whether fast or moving; fifth, ample accommodations for safe anchorage; sixth, abundant space for the erection of all buildings, docks, and basins that may be required for a first-class establishment; seventh, adaptation of the site to the construction of permanent stone dry-docks, &c.; eighth, topography of the site; ninth, mean range of the tides and exposure of the site to freshets and overflows; tenth, set of currents about the site, and their effects; eleventh, facilities for procuring most rapidly supplies and stores of all kinds; twelfth, abundant supply of good fresh water; thirteenth, facilities for procuring workmen of all classes; fourteenth, quality of the water near the site, whether fresh or salt; fifteenth, health of the vicinity. Every single point which can arise was carefully examined by that impartial board, leaning, if at all, in favor of Philadelphia, and as the result of their investigations they reported to the Secretary of the Navy that in their opinion the public interests would not be promoted by acquiring the title to League Island for naval purposes.

Now, sir, it would seem that that decision should have some weight. It would seem that there should be an end of this matter; at least it would seem that there should be another inquiry. It would seem that if that decision was to be entirely ignored and set at naught, it should not be done without going at least through the form of inquiring still further; but that is not proposed. As I have said, the bill before us requires that no examination shall be made whatever except of League Island. The Senator from Massachusetts has offered an amendment to it. The Senator from Iowa has taken occasion to find fault with the statesmanship of the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Massachusetts can defend that proposition for himself. The Senator from Iowa says it includes nothing; it does not require any proper examination. Why, sir, as you yourself said yesterday, it includes all that the bill itself includes, and a little more. It goes as far as the bill does; it requires everything that the bill requires; and I think it goes a step further.

If the Senate should entertain some doubts on this question, and should come to the conclusion that it was best to ascertain whether some objections made against League Island were proper to be considered, I can conceive of no mode by which that examination can be better made than by this proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts. Who are the commission proposed in it to inquire into the subject? The Senator from Iowa says they are not naval men. Sir, it does not require naval men to consider this question. It requires men of good sense; it requires men who can decide whether a particular place is a proper and safe point for a navy. A man does not need to understand navigation for that. If he is a practical business man, and has eyes in his head, and can see whether land is land and water is water, he is competent to decide that question. We propose, therefore, that the distinguished men named in the amendment shall be appointed to examine the whole country, to visit the whole coast if necessary, to visit the different points proposed, and to give us their opinion. It has already been shown that there is ample time for this examination.

Now, sir, when they do that what will they find? It is true there has been something said of the propriety of selecting New London as one of the proposed sites. It strikes me that the true manner of considering this question is not with regard to local interests in any manner whatever. I would if I could have this question considered in the light of the unity of the whole country, as if there were no such thing as State lines. I am not very much of a centralist, but upon this question I am willing to ignore all State lines and State divisions. What is the best location for an iron-clad navy-yard in the United States without reference to that parallelogram on the map which is called Pennsylvania, and without reference to that still smaller space on the map which is called Connecticut? Leave them out of the question. I regret that all the Representatives of the State of Pennsylvania in a body voted in the House of Representatives for this measure. I should prefer that they could view it and that we could view it in Connecticut as a national question, but still I do not complain of them; I do not blame them. I know what human nature is. I know that the people of Pennsylvania, and particularly in the neighborhood of Philadelphia, are anxious to have this great navy-yard there; and it is not surprising that the people of Philadelphia should share this anxiety; but that ought not to have the slightest influence upon the mind of any Senator, and it cannot have. What if New London does desire this navy-yard? What if Philadelphia also desires it? Of course they desire it. They would be somewhat different from human beings elsewhere if they did not; but that cannot have any weight upon our minds.

True it is that New London is proposed. Nature has been peculiarly kind to that locality. In a great many respects it is in point of fact—and I may say it without a boastful spirit with regard to my own State—the very best harbor on the face of the globe. That is the truth. Nature has given to the State of Connecticut at New London a stream which penetrates the main land in such a manner as to make the best harbor in the world, not equaled by the bay of Naples, not equaled by the harbor of New York, not equaled by any harbor so far as I know anywhere on the globe. Why, sir, if that harbor had been in France or in England, with an estuary penetrating ten miles into the main land with a depth of forty feet of water to its perpendicular bank, and with feasible ground sloping down to it in every direction, with a natural foundation for every kind of heavy buildings, do you suppose that Napoleon or the British admiralty board would have neglected it? Do you suppose that Napoleon would have laid out millions of money to make artificial harbors as he has done in France? Do you suppose the English Government would have neglected it? No, sir; it would have been seized upon hundreds of years ago and devoted to the purpose of a great national naval station, a use for which nature seems evidently to have designed it.

The Senator from New Jersey says, by way of complaint as I understand him, that Connecticut urged this place sixty years ago as a site for a naval station and naval depot. It is very true that the people of Connecticut at an early day saw its advantages; and, but for the fact that Connecticut is a small State, with very little political influence, it would have been selected as a naval station long ago. If we had acted on this subject with a spirit of national unity and not with reference to State divisions New London would have been selected first of all. No man can visit that place and see those capacious waters and that peculiarly adapted ground to this purpose without saying at once it is the spot of all others for a naval depot. I had the honor of accompanying the commission when they visited New London. I sailed up the river with them. I had seen it often before, but my attention was never so particularly called to its advantages for this purpose as on that occasion; and I perceived at once the effect upon their minds of ocular demonstration. I say to you, Senators, you cannot go there without being convinced. Go there this moment in imagination, and what do you see? Do you see an ice-bound river as you see at Philadelphia, although in a northern clime? No, sir. New London is a northern city, not with southern principles, but with a southern climate. The Gulf stream deflects somewhat toward the coast, and the breezes from the Gulf stream come around Montauk Point and up by Fisher's Island; and standing there you may feel its influence on a winter day, keeping the water in a state of liquefaction when rivers far south as the Potomac are crossed by heavy teams, and when Boston and New York harbors are closed with ice. That is a natural blessing for which Connecticut ought not to be condemned. She has not many such blessings, I agree. Nature has not been kind to her in all respects; but she has been extremely kind to her in the gift of this harbor unequalled on the continent.

The Senator from New Jersey says nothing stands in the way of this little job of taking League Island for this navy-yard, as desired by Philadelphia, but Connecticut. She is reproached. She stands in the way. "What business has she there at such a time?" Why, sir, Connecticut asks nothing. You yourself, sir, showed yesterday that the strongest and most convincing argument which has been made on this subject was made by a Senator from New Jersey, who not long since occupied one of these seats, and who was by all of us highly respected, who lives within seventeen miles of League Island, but not near enough to transact business in Philadelphia and represent the city of Philadelphia as well as the State of New Jersey. I do not mean by this in the slightest degree to reproach the Senator from New Jersey. What he is doing he is doing conscientiously; but I think, after the interest he has manifested, it was a little unkind of him to reproach Connecticut. When he was employing his earnest zeal for the interests of those whom he in part represents on the Camden side of the river, he certainly ought to have had the charity to suppose that the Senators from Connecticut were actuated by as pure motives as himself.

Now, sir, this is not an overwrought description of the natural advantages of New London. In truth, it is impossible to draw a picture of the peculiar advantages of that position which shall come anywhere near their true merits. I wish the Senators who desire to act on this question, with a view to the good of the whole country and for all future time, could visit the spot. I wish they could go there as that commission went. I care not what were their prejudices, they would be convinced. Let them sail up the Delaware river; let them come to an island in the Delaware two miles from Philadelphia, uninhabited and uninhabitable. The Senator from New Jersey says there are seven houses there, and some of them have cellars; and he alleges that diluvial region has some ten trees on its whole extent of six hundred acres. I never doubted that League Island was sufficiently fertile. That was not the objection. We never claimed that it was "a barren waste, wherein no salutary plant takes root, no verdure quickens." That is not the objection to it. It is quite too fertile; the noxious vegetation there is perhaps too luxuriant for the health of its few inhabitants. That rather is the difficulty. I have never doubted that if a tree took root there it would expand in the course of years; and no doubt that island has been there for even a longer time than the Senator stated. We never denied that there were some portions of solid matter there. The Senator mistakes what those of us who believe League Island to be an unfit place think with regard to it. I have no doubt that that island has been there probably ever since the period of the flood. The deposit of the ooze at the junction of those two rivers would not make an island of six hundred acres in any short period of time. It is true, as the Senator has said—that is, I take it for granted it is true, because he says so—that a portion of that island has been washed down to Cape May since the recollection of man.

He tells us that the back entrance or the back channel has been cut through within, I think, a period of a hundred years; so that some portion of it has departed, and undoubtedly the formation of the land is such that it is liable at any day to be washed away by the currents as that portion was. Now, sir, when you arrive there what do you find? You need a firm foundation. What do the commission say? They say that League Island is a reclaimed marsh. They say that it is now saved from submersion by the Delaware river by a dyke or wall, and that at high tide a very large portion of it is two, three, or four feet below the water. That may not be true of the whole island. There may be a small portion of it never covered by water. They say that an immense expense must be laid out to make it a proper position for a navy-yard; and I may as well at this time say a word on the subject of that expense.

I have here a pamphlet written by a friend of this proposition, and to show that he is an honest man he states that he is a native of New England, proof presumptive, I agree, that he is so. He gives us his opinions with regard to it, and answers, as he thinks, the objections. I will not refer to what the commission say, but I will take the statement of this friend of the proposition. He says:

"To raise the island three feet above high-water mark would require about three million six hundred thousand yards of earth."

He is wrong upon his own statement, for I have taken the trouble to go through the arithmetical calculation myself, and I find it will take five million two hundred and twenty-seven thousand cubic yards. He then says that this may be done at twenty-five cents per cubic yard. There is not a Senator who has not had experience enough on his own property to know that it is utterly impossible to carry and deposit a cubic yard of earth for twenty-five cents. It cannot be done. I think it would cost four times what he has stated. In my opinion, to lay the quantity of earth he states upon the island and to distribute it as must be done would cost at least a dollar a cubic yard. If it cost that, then it would cost to make this gift acceptable $3,600,000, according to his estimate, but according to my estimate it would be $5,227,000. But suppose we divide it; suppose it can be done for one half the amount I have stated—and no man would contract for it at that price if he had the soil close at hand, and if it could be given to him—it would cost $2,600,000 to make this gift capable of being used. That does away with all the advantages of this position on account of its vicinity to coal and iron, for the interest of this money would more than transport throughout all time all the coal and iron that the Government would require for this navy-yard.

There is no escape from this. It is useless for the Senator from New Jersey to talk about League Island being of the same geological formation as the main land there. Why, sir, we know without inquiry—every man who has ever seen alluvial soil at the confluence of two rivers where the land and the water mingle and form an ooze, knows that it must be a place, as the former Senator from New Jersey stated in his remarks, where if a man puts his foot in it is difficult to get it out. That will be the case with us. If our Government should get its foot into that position, in my judgment he will never be able to extricate it. The United States may receive this gift; they may pour out treasure there; there will be no end to the enormous expense which will be entailed; and, after all, the position will be utterly unfitted for a navy-yard. This is not an assertion; this is an opinion not founded upon the report of the commission, but upon the statements of the friends of the measure.

Mr. President, it would seem that there ought to be some very strong reasons presented to induce the Senate at this stage of the session, in hot haste, to decide to tie their hands for all time on this question; for I say here, without fear of contradiction, that the passage of this bill at this time is tying the hands of the Government for all time to come. Upon what will you decide afterward? You accept the gift of this island. What is the understanding? That it is accepted for naval purposes. If the honorable Senator from Iowa has some doubt whether it will be wise to go on with work on the island, it is far better to settle that doubt now. Let us settle it before we decide to take the property, not accept the title before we make up our minds that it is an acceptable piece of property.

But, sir, when you have accepted it; when you have lavished upon it untold sums of money; when you have decided that the iron-clad navy-yard shall never be on the Potomac river, nor at New London, nor on the Hudson, nor at Perth Amboy, but at League Island; when you have laid out three, four, or five millions upon it, what have you? I wish the Senate, before they take definite action on this question, to consider for a moment what you have when you have got it. I say to the Senate it is utterly worthless for the purpose intended when received, and when it has been prepared for its purposes by the expenditure of millions. When you have done all, you have got a place which is utterly worthless for your purposes, and why?

In the first place, it is a position which is liable, some say once in forty years, some once in ten years, but in my belief at least once in six years—it has happened twice within the last six years—to be entirely closed by ice for a period of at least four weeks. Is this a trifling consideration? Why, sir, I need not dwell upon it to the Senate. A navy-yard which you cannot approach by water and which you cannot leave by water for one tenth of the entire year is utterly worthless for the purposes of a navy-yard. That I think is a position which cannot be denied. Will the Senator from New Jersey deny the fact? Will he say that the present is an extraordinary winter? Well, sir, the winter when this bill was discussed before was an extraordinary winter, and the very same fact occurred. I stated then, and without denial by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] at that time, that the Delaware river was frozen up, and people were crossing on the ice with heavy teams at this very point where you propose to have a navy-yard, where your vessels shall be always on the alert and ready at the least threatening of war, in at least two weeks at the longest time, to be able to defend New York; for it only takes the British or French Government two weeks to send vessels to New York. Is it an unsupposable case that in case of war our iron-clads might be locked up for six weeks at League Island, while France and England concentrate their whole naval force upon New York? Will anybody say that is impossible? It could have been done this very winter, or else the Philadelphia papers are edited by men who are utterly untruthful with regard to the state of the river. They say so themselves.

It seems to me that when I state these facts to the Senate, it ought not to be replied to me that the facts are worthless and should have no weight because I happen to live in Connecticut and New London wants a navy-yard. Admit it; suppose it were so; does that alter the character of the fact that the Delaware river for six weeks during the last winter has been entirely inaccessible at League Island for any species of craft that needs water to carry it? There might be possibly an invention of an ice-boat that I see has been used in western waters that might reach it, but there is no other mode except by land.

That, then, is the character of this location with regard to ice and accessibility by water in the winter season. If you say that this will only happen once in ten years or once in forty years we all know how uncertain are such averages. You may form a general average which will answer for a series of centuries, and say that such a thing happens only once in ten years; but the ten years may be consecutive. A thing may happen for ten consecutive years and not again happen for a century; though I do not believe there has been a decade in this century—there has certainly not been since my recollection, for I have had some occasion to know the fact myself—that Philadelphia has not been ice-locked in this manner.

But then, when the river is open and you have water, you need a certain amount of water. You must have depth. Now, I state to the Senate and to the country that the depth of water in the Delaware river, although not quite as insufficient as it would be in the Connecticut river, is utterly insufficient; there is not water enough. This "munificent gift" which the Senator insists on our accepting will be utterly valueless after we have expended all our money upon it for the purpose of a navy-yard for want of water, the very first essential. Let us see what the depth of water is. Mr. Fox—I beg pardon; I do not know whether Mr. Fox is the writer or not—but the writer of this pamphlet says:

"We are invited to go to New London and build up a straight open harbor with deep water."

He makes depth of water an objection. I think he must have seen no objection of that kind to be raised to League Island, as it is to New London. True enough it is; and if that is an objection we admit it; we have deep water. The harbor of New London has an average depth of forty feet of water. Why does Mr. Fox make this objection? Simply because New London has it and League Island has it not. Let me read to the Senate what the naval commission, speaking on this subject of deep water, and also the depth of water required by armor-clad ships, not only the English and French, but our own, say, and see whether when we have accepted this "munificent gift," and laid out three millions of money upon it at the least calculation, we have got anything of any kind of value. I call the attention of the Senate to this point. The Naval Committee of the House of Representatives say:

"Depth of Water.—Of a similar nature to the foregoing is the objection on account of the inadequate depth of water. This is very obvious upon a careful examination of the soundings, as indicated by the charts prepared by the Coast Survey. Opposite Hog Island, and just below League Island, the channel is very narrow, and shoals to a depth of but eighteen feet at its deepest point at mean low tide. No vessel drawing more than eighteen feet can pass this point without waiting for a rise of tide. Near Cherry flats, and opposite Wilmington, the channel draws but nineteen and a half feet. Below Newcastle, and in the neighborhood of the Pea Patch Islands, the channel has shifted from the east to the west side of the island, and in as many as three places shoals to nineteen and a half feet. Twenty-five to thirty miles below Newcastle it again shoals to twenty-one feet. The committee regard this as an almost insuperable objection to the Delaware for a great naval station.

"We are upon the threshold of a new era in naval architecture. No one can tell what the exigencies of the coming years may call for in the size and draught of our naval vessels. The boasted iron-clads of England, the Minotaur, the Agincourt, the Northumberland, and Black Warrior, draw twenty-five feet six inches. The French La Gloire, Normandy, and others nearly twenty-six feet. And these Powers are now deepening their docks and constructing new ones for the purpose of receiving vessels drawing twenty-six feet of water.

"In this connection, the statement of one of the first naval constructors of the Government, Mr. Delano, of the Brooklyn yard, was laid before us: 'That it was indispensable, to make any naval station first-class, to have a depth of at least twenty-five feet of water at low tide.'

"Your committee cannot believe it consistent with a prudent regard to the future efficiency of the Navy to establish for all time the great naval yard and depot of the country at a point to which vessels of a greater draught than eighteen feet cannot get, and from which they could not get to sea except in certain stages of the tide. And the nation might find reason to regret the acceptance of the 'munificent gift' in case a fleet chased by a superior force of the enemy should be unable to reach its rendezvous in the Delaware, or to put to sea from thence at short notice, when its presence might be necessary at any point threatened."

Donald McKay, the eminent ship-builder of Boston, says on this subject of deep water:

"If we are going to compete with France and England for a sea-going iron-cased fleet, we must have vessels to draw from twenty-four to twenty-six feet of water at least. The naval ports of France and England are not limited in draft of water, and their docks are now being altered and new ones constructed to receive these iron-cased vessels, which draw twenty-five to twenty-seven feet."

You see it stated, therefore, by this commission that an objection exists to League Island, as I have already intimated, on account of the inadequate depth of the water. They stated that there is but eighteen feet of water at the deepest point just below League Island at mean low tide; that opposite Wilmington the channel has but nineteen and a half feet; that below Newcastle the channel has shifted from the east to the west side of the island, and in as many as three places shoals to nineteen and a half feet. I call the attention of the Senate particularly to the statement of Mr. Delano, one of the constructors at the Brooklyn navy-yard, that "it was indispensable to make any naval station first class to have a depth of at least twenty-five feet of water at low tide." What, Senators, are you doing? For what are you acting? For to-day, for last year, for the last century, or for the future? A new era has opened in naval architecture and in naval defense, and we are acting for all time. What is the French Government doing? What is the draught of water of the English armor-plated ships? Here is a list of some of those vessels:

I admit that our iron-clads will be perfectly defensible from attack if you desire to place them where the English and French iron-clads cannot reach them. You have that place of perfect security at League Island. Place them there and no ships which draw over eighteen feet of water can ever approach them. If the security of the vessels themselves is desired by the Senate, then I agree that League Island is a well-chosen place. League Island will be perfectly secure from attack on all sides except by land. No ships can ever reach our iron-clads there. The La Gloire, the Royal Oak, the Minotaur, the Agincourt, and the Northumberland may cross the ocean in vain; we have no fears; we have our iron-clad vessels safe from all their attacks. That will be assured.

Now, one word as to the defensibility of the point where they are located. It is said that we cannot defend them at New London. I had supposed that they were to defend themselves, and not only themselves, but the whole country; but it seems that they must be in a defensible position. Why, sir, what are they for, what are we laying out this vast expense for iron-clads for, if they need to be defended? If that is the case we had better surcease from building them altogether. I take it, "the blood of Douglass can defend itself;" the iron-clads can at least defend themselves. If they cannot, New York and Philadelphia are liable at any day to be laid waste. Suppose you have a fleet of iron-clads at New London, and a fleet of iron-clads approaches them from England, and the cry is raised throughout the country that they are not defensible, they must have forts, they must have fortifications to defend them against the British attack, are they to lie there helpless? I think they are not to lie there to be bombarded by the British iron-clads, but they are to sally out and commence the attack themselves, to traverse our whole coast. That is their duty, not to lie there to be defended. I look to them as our defense, not as the object of defense. So much on that point.

Sir, it is almost incredible—if I had not seen I could not believe it—that Senators should stand here and urge us to accept as a naval station for iron-clads a place which all the testimony goes to show, and nobody contradicts it, has at low water at certain times but eighteen feet of water, and at the most nineteen feet, when your iron vessels draw from twenty-five to thirty feet. I have no doubt that great improvements will be made in iron-clads hereafter, that they will be made much larger and require much more water, enough, I have no doubt, to test the whole depth of water at New London. I think the time will come when you will need forty feet, perhaps fifty feet. I do not know how high the draught may go. The Senator from New Jersey smiles. He may think me extravagant in stating the draught of water by large vessels. They will require at least twenty-six feet, and that is enough for my purpose to-day to show that this place that is now proposed to be taken is unapproachable and inaccessible by iron-clads of the largest size now known.

I am compelled to be very desultory in my remarks. I find on looking over these pamphlets some other testimony on subjects to which I have alluded, and to which I will return with the permission of the Senate; and first, with regard to this question of the ice in the Delaware river: I wish the Senate to be kind enough to listen to a letter from Mr. Kneass, a civil engineer of Philadelphia, and also a letter from Admiral Gregory, from which some information can be obtained on this subject.

"In addition to the objections already considered is the damage and obstruction to navigation occasioned by ice, fast and floating, in the winter season, which, according to statements submitted to the committee, is a very formidable if not insuperable objection to the Delaware."

"And while the committee were investigating this subject the United States gunboat Galena, ordered to join Admiral Farragut's fleet, in getting to sea from Philadelphia, was so badly injured by the ice that she was towed to Baltimore, where she was detained a month for repairs, which cost the Government several thousand dollars, and her voyage broken up at a time when her services were greatly needed by the country. It was also shown that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company had caused a survey to be made of League Island, with a view to adopting it as their depot for coal, and that it was finally abandoned after a report of their engineer, an extract from which the committee herewith submit of very high authority:

"I trust that it may not be considered as overstepping the limits of the question intrusted to me if a few remarks bearing upon the navigation of the river during the winter season be presented as a point of great moment in comparing the sites at League Island with the Point House, and those immediately above it.

"You will perceive that the face of League Island is subjected to the full force of the flood-tide from the long reach in the river, extending southwardly, the effect of which has been, as represented by the statements of those most familiar with our river, and its winds, currents, and bars, to pile up the drifting ice upon the entire shore-line; and, indeed, I have before me evidence to the effect that in all times of obstruction by ice vessels can be brought with much less difficulty through the Horse Shoe channel than to League Island. It may be stated that an ice-guard could be constructed that would relieve the front from the drifting ice of the flood-tide, but the effect of such breakwater would be to cause deposits within the surface affected, thus subjecting you to a continued and heavy expenditure for dredging."

"STRICKLAND KNEASS, Civil Engineer."

Here is the letter of Admiral Gregory on the same subject:

NEW YORK, January 31, 1863.

SIR: In answer to your inquiries respecting the preference of New London for a naval depot to other positions contemplated, I have to say that having seen the report of the board of officers who recently investigated the subject, I fully agree in the conclusion they arrived at, and from an experience of fifty-four years in the service, during which time I have had many opportunities of gaining a knowledge of such matters, I am of the opinion that New London is a proper and eligible position for the purpose. In 1843, fitting out the frigate Raritan, at Philadelphia, I was obliged to leave there on the 1st of December, and bring the ship to New York on account of ice, at great hazard, which nearly occasioned the loss of the ship.

I am, with respect, your obedient servant,
F. H. GREGORY.
JOHN R. BOLLES, Esq., Washington.

That is testimony of the very highest importance with regard to the danger of vessels from ice. I have a vast amount of other testimony on the subject. I have contemporaneous testimony. I have the statements from the Philadelphia papers, and I can show conclusively that for a large portion of every severe winter that position is inaccessible on account of ice, and not only inaccessible, but the vessels themselves are exposed to very great danger from the breaking up of the ice.

Now, sir, if it has been conclusively shown that a very large sum of money must be expended upon this place to make it of such a character that it will sustain large and heavy structures and be fit for a navy-yard; and if it has also been shown that after this money has been expended the place itself is unfit on account of the danger to which vessels would be exposed there from ice, and their disability either to reach or leave the place on account of the ice; and, in addition to that, that at the very best of times, when the channel is entirely unobstructed by ice, there is not a sufficient amount of water for the purposes required, it might seem that the case was closed, and that it would be utterly useless to ask a body like this, the Senate of the United States, legislating for the whole country, to locate an iron-clad navy at that position for the purpose of doing some favor or advantage to the people living in the neighborhood. I do not understand that Philadelphia sets up any very great claim on account of loyalty or anything else in regard to character; but if she does, it would be far better for this country if Philadelphia would send in her bill on that subject, and that it should be paid, even if it should amount to five or ten millions dollars. Philadelphia asks nothing of that sort. I do not believe that the high-minded people of Philadelphia wish this spot to be selected, unless it is the best spot for the purpose in the United States. No doubt they would be gratified if the Senate of the United States should come to the conclusion that it is the best spot. I do not charge that anybody is here asking favors of the Government. They implore us to accept a gift; but I think we had better decline such a gift, and not accept it.

But, sir, the point, and the only point for the Senate seriously to consider is, whether this should be the chosen spot. To decide upon that question requires careful examination, requires time, requires that all the surrounding circumstances should be considered; that we should know whether the spot when we get it is desirable; whether it is a fit place for human residence. The Senator from Iowa told us in the debate some years ago that he inquired of some of the residents there and they told him it was healthy.

Mr. GRIMES. Oh, no; I did not say so.

Mr. DIXON. I well remember that the Senator told us some four years ago that when he was upon this spot he inquired of some of the residents, and they said it was a healthy place. Sir, did you ever know a spot on the face of the globe, however pestilential or malignant, the malaria might be, the inhabitants of which did not claim that it was the best on the face of the earth in regard to health.

Mr. GRIMES. I never said that.

Mr. DIXON. Perhaps it was the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COWAN,] but I think the Senator from Iowa is mistaken in his recollection. I think the Globe will show that the Senator has forgotten his remarks. It is of no importance whether it is so or not; but my recollection is that he told us that when he was on the ground he inquired of the people there, and they told him it was healthy.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator is mistaken. I did not say that I made any such inquiry, although I believe the fact to be so, that it is healthy.

Mr. DIXON. Some Senator, and I think it was the Senator from Iowa, said that when he visited this place and saw the inhabitants who live in the seven houses that are erected on that island, within two miles of Philadelphia, with cellars, surrounded by eight or ten trees, they told him that it was a healthy location. I remember that at the time I was struck with the remark, and thought it not strange that the people should say so. In the first place, they knew that the illustrious individual that was addressing them was a Senator of the United States; that he was there on that mission of mercy to them, to locate, if possible, an iron-clad navy in that neighborhood. Is it to be supposed that they would tell him that it was unfit for human beings to live in, and that they lived there because dire necessity compelled them to do so? No, sir; they said it was a healthy spot, just as the people of all countries, however pestilential, however sickly, consider themselves the favored people of Heaven in regard to location. It is one of the evidences of the kindness of Divine Providence that every man is pretty well suited to the place where he is. But, sir, the fact is shown that it cannot be a healthy location, whatever may be the testimony of the inhabitants, from its formation, from its character, and it is shown by the fact that it is shunned, as I have already said, by the people of Philadelphia.

They do not live there. It cannot be healthy for any but amphibious animals. For them undoubtedly it is, but for human beings who need a dry, upland soil, and are not so constituted as to grow healthy upon miasma, it cannot be a desirable place.

But, sir, I do not consider that by any means the greatest objection to it. That might in a certain degree be obviated. The objections are of a higher character. They are objections which cannot be obviated. I do not say that the United States, by the expenditure of millions of dollars, could not elevate that soil so that it might become comparatively healthy. I think very doubtful whether, after a great expense had been laid out in piling, the soil might not prove to be of such a character as to furnish a very imperfect foundation after all. But suppose it could be; the difficulties in the way of your acceptance of this island for the purpose intended are of a character which cannot be obviated by any expense or degree of labor. You cannot dredge out the channel of that river and make it sufficient in depth. Nature forbids it. You cannot obviate the difficulty of ice in the winter. That is an impossibility. Nature forbids that. There are those two defects which utterly forbid, as it seems to me, the decision of the Senate at this time of binding force upon the acceptance of this position.

Now, then, what is proposed? I do not ask the Senate at this moment even to consider the question whether New London shall be accepted. I might do so. I might, I think, make out so strong a case for New London that if the Senate were really to apply their minds to that question and decide it they would decide in its favor. But I prefer to defer that to some future period when it may be necessary for us to decide it. I can then show you—I have the means of showing you here—that there is no obstacle in the way of the selection of New London on account of fresh water or on account of salt water which cannot be obviated at very trifling expense. An abundance of fresh water can be procured.

With regard to the water in which the vessels shall lie, I have this to say: I do not think that water of any description is very useful to the iron with which a vessel is clad, whether it be fresh or salt. Some effect is produced undoubtedly upon iron by fresh water or by salt water. It would be better, in my judgment, and that is the opinion of experts, if the vessels could be out of the water entirely, if they could be raised in dry-docks, and not exposed to the oxidation occasioned by the action of the water; much less damage would be occasioned than by the action of the water.

Every possible means that can be desired of raising vessels out of the water and placing them in a position where they would not be subject to the action of the water on the iron at all can be furnished at New London, as the charts I have here show, and as the papers before the Senate show. I have not the time nor the strength to go into that question, nor do I think it necessary, because, as I said, that is not the question before the Senate. It is not for the Senate to say to-day that New London shall be the place, or even may possibly be the place. It is for the Senate to say, if they say what I think they ought to say, that every point supposed to be favorable and desirable shall be examined; that men capable of reporting upon it shall give their opinion of the question to the Senate, although we might ask that that should not be repeated, for it has already been done. One commission have decided against League Island. The Department insist upon taking that place without reference to that report, and utterly disregardful of it. We say now, before the action of the Department is made decisive and conclusive on that subject, give time for another examination. I do not see how in acting on this question as judges this body can come to any other conclusion. It is utterly useless to talk about the interest Connecticut may have in the question or the interest of New Jersey or the interest of Pennsylvania. I trust I have divested my mind entirely of any influence of that character. To be sure I confess I should be gratified if it should turn out that the Senate on examination should be of opinion that New London is the proper place; but I hope I never would vote for it unless I believed it was so.

Why should not this inquiry be made? Why not investigate the subject? Why urge on this purpose? Where is the immediate haste? I confess I do not see it. Suppose six months should elapse. We do not propose to go into the expense of building iron-clads at present. Why, then, come to an immediate decision which shall bind the Government? Sir, I think the public interest would be far better subserved by an examination and inquiry like that proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts; and I shall therefore vote for his amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. President, I know I ought not to occupy any of the time of the Senate on this bill.—There are other bills that I think of more pressing importance which are awaiting our consideration. If the bill which came from the House of Representatives yesterday could be considered, I would not occupy a moment upon this bill. I do not know that it is possible to consider that measure until this is disposed of, although I would much prefer to enter upon the consideration of that bill at once.

I desire, however, before this vote is taken, to have it distinctly understood that this is no question confined to Connecticut. From the discussion we had yesterday the Senate might conclude that this was a mere contest between Connecticut and some other State or some other locality. I have no particular interest in it, nor have the people of my State. The people of Iowa and of the western States have no particular interest in it as States, but they are a part of the United States, and we are Senators of the United States as well as of our States, and questions of this character affect us all. I suppose that we in proportion to the weight we have in the country have an equal interest.

I have been surprised that this question was supposed to have any distinctive influence and bearing upon New London or Connecticut. I looked the bill through, and I could not find an allusion to Connecticut or New London. I have some objections to this bill, and my opposition to it would be just as strong if Connecticut or New London had never been spoken of. The question here is whether we shall accept League Island, and in my judgment that involves the other question, of making it the great naval station and depot of this country. If it does not mean that, then I have no objection to taking it. If I thought the bill was as harmless as has been intimated, that the only question was what the Senator from New Jersey yesterday said, whether we would take a magnificent donation like the gift of six hundred acres of League Island, and there was nothing to follow it, I would say yes, take it of course; take everything they want to give us. If that is all there is in it, why occupy any time upon it? Why is there any objection to taking it?

But every Senator, I apprehend, believes that behind this there are to be appropriations sufficient to make it a great naval station, a place to build as well as to keep vessels. If it was only designed to store the iron-clads we have got now, any place in fresh water, I suppose, would answer that purpose. Senators tell us that League Island is a very good place for that; but I am certain that what is intended by this measure, and what the country means, is to find some place to build ships as well as to keep them. The time has come when we are to be and make ourselves a naval Power among the nations of the world, and to do this we must build ships, not only equal, but superior, if possible, to those of the other naval Powers of the globe. In accepting a place for such a location as that, the question with us is whether it is a suitable place for us to build a great naval station and to construct vessels that will contend with any in the world.

Although we do not know absolutely what is before us in the future, yet the shades of the future are sufficiently developed to make us believe that hereafter the accomplishments in naval science will far eclipse and be greatly in advance of anything we have had in the past. We can all remember when if a vessel was built of sufficient magnitude and capacity to draw fifteen or twenty feet of water it was called an immense structure. But now a vessel drawing no more water than that would not be considered worth bringing into a contest if there was to be a naval fight. It is only a few years ago since we contemplated the question of applying steam to our war vessels, and especially of making iron-clad vessels, and since that system has been discussed the country has adopted it. The magnitude of these vessels cannot be contemplated. To be sure, this year they will build them drawing twenty-two, twenty-five, or twenty-six feet of water. Ten years from now unquestionably they will build them drawing thirty or forty feet. If we are to pursue the line on which we have commenced, and I know of no reason why it should not be pursued, the question will yet be, what nation can present the largest iron-clad vessels with the heaviest armament.

If we are going to establish a naval station with any such ideas calculating to meet the wants of the country and the world, it is of the first and greatest importance to us to see that we have it located where we can accomplish this object. I have no prejudices against League Island. My argument would apply just as well against any station on a river that is not navigable for this class of vessels. I would not have it up the Hudson, nor up the Potomac, nor up the Delaware, unless it was accessible to the class of vessels that we propose to build.

And here I ought also to remark that in building vessels the most experienced builders never build them until the timber composing the hull has been seasoned in salt water. I see from the report that in the French navy-yards the timber composing the hulls of their vessels is seasoned in salt water from two to five years before they build. If that is valuable, and I suppose it is, or it would not be used, it is preposterous in us to think of constructing a navy-yard where there is no salt water and where this kind of seasoning cannot be had.

Then there is another fact that ought not to be lost sight of: the rivers of this country are diminishing year by year. I went to the library to get a work on this subject that has been lately published; but I was not able to get it. The title of the work is "Man and Nature," showing that the rivers of the world are diminishing year after year and from generation to generation. The fact is accounted for in this way: as you cut off the forests of the country, and as you subject the land to agriculture, the evaporation is either greater or the soil absorbs more of the rain. At any rate, the fact exists, demonstrated clearly by French and English experience, that the rivers of the world are diminishing. It is said upon very good authority that eighty years ago the Delaware itself was large enough to take the Great Eastern up to Philadelphia. It could not take the Great Eastern up there now. The Hudson river, at any rate, is diminishing year by year. The Potomac is not as good for navigation now as it was when Washington was laid out. Everybody knows that. The banks of the river fall in; the river flows wider and not as deep; the channel is filling up. Let this process continue for fifty years or one hundred years more, as it undoubtedly will, and nothing that you could call a vessel of war could get up to League Island.

I will not speak of such obstacles as the ice, &c. I do not know whether those obstacles really exist or not. It is sufficient for me to state that the nature of the river is such that you cannot get a vessel there of the magnitude we propose to build; and if establishing a navy-yard there is not in order to build as well as to store iron-clads, I do not know what the bill is for. If the bill simply means that we are to accept League Island and not make a naval station of it, then there is no use of this contest; but I take it for granted that every Senator and the country understands that in accepting League Island, we accept it for the purpose that the country anticipates, and that has been under discussion here for three or four years, and that is to have one great naval station where we can store and build our Navy, not only to make it equal to any in the world, but to make it superior, so that we can contend for all future time with any nation that may choose to contend with us. The war demonstrated that our most successful armament was in those iron-clads and monitors that were almost wholly submerged. It is no object to build a steamer in the air. We must build it so that it will go in and under, if need be, the water, at least go deep into the water. You cannot plate one with the thickness that is now required unless it does draw an amount of water that was not contemplated by us when we first commenced building.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inform the Senator that none of them draws seventeen feet of water.

Mr. POMEROY. I am not talking about vessels built on the spur of the moment during the war. I am talking about vessels that have got to be built to make the Navy of the United States equal to the navies of the world.

Mr. GRIMES. Does the Senator know what the vessel said to be the strongest vessel and the heaviest armored vessel in the world, the Dunderberg, draws?

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know; I am not informed. I know from the reports made to us what the vessels built in France and in England draw. There has been an account read this morning from the desk showing that they are building vessels drawing from twenty-five to twenty-six feet.

Mr. GRIMES. Not one of which has ever been able to get as far as Lisbon; and not one of which can go to sea to-day. The Dunderberg, built by Mr. Webb, and claimed to be the strongest and most substantial and powerful ship in the world, only draws twenty feet.

Mr. POMEROY. I am not talking about any particular vessel. For the purposes of my argument I do not talk about any vessels built in the world to-day. I am only showing that we are in the course of improvement.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose the Senator is alluding to that ship described by Washington Irving as coming into the harbor of New York, which was fifty feet long, fifty feet broad, and fifty feet deep. [Laughter.]

Mr. POMEROY. I am only contending that if we continue to progress in the science of naval architecture as we have done for the last fifty years, no one can tell what we may be required to build in the course of the next fifty years; and I say it is preposterous, I may almost say ridiculous, to fasten upon this country a naval station that will not answer the purpose of building such a class of steamers when we are required to build them. There has been nothing that I can remember on this subject but an advance and increase. We have increased the speed, increased the size, and increased the draught. Suppose you fasten us to a naval station where you have got only from eighteen to twenty-two feet of water. Your Navy would be safe up there, but the question is whether the country would be safe; whether it would answer the purpose for which we built a Navy; whether our cities could be protected; whether our country could be safe with its vessels stored eighty miles up a river. Of course foreign vessels could not reach them; neither could we reach them.

My point is that we ought to build a station of this character where it is accessible to any mammoth ship that we may choose to build in the future, or that any nation of the world may build. That is a conclusive argument with me on this question against accepting League Island for this purpose. If the Senator from Iowa and the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Secretary of the Navy wish us to accept League Island for other purposes, let us accept it; I have no objection to that. But if the bill means that it is to be followed up by appropriations of $2,000,000 and then of $5,000,000 and then of $8,000,000 and finally of $20,000,000, until we have drained the Treasury of this country as low as we dare to do, to build more ships and to give strength to the naval power on this continent, then I say I protest, and the people of every State in this country have a right to protest, against putting this proposed naval station where it will be inaccessible and impossible to get to and from it with such a class of ships as we must build. There are already afloat in the world iron-clad vessels that draw more than thirty feet of water. Whether they are the strongest or not of course must be determined by use hereafter. I protest against the acceptance of League Island for a naval station of the character of which I am speaking, because it will be impossible to use it for that purpose; and therefore to accept it and make appropriations for it is wrong in itself as well as not useful for the country.

I desire also to add that in the future, as in the past, I suppose we must make the armaments of our vessels equal to the emergencies that may arise. We found at the beginning of this rebellion that we had not anything that would answer the emergency, and we went to work and made it, not as good, not as efficient, not as powerful as we would have done if we had had the leisure and time and means to anticipate what we had to make and to do it earlier. We are now enjoying a repose, and it is a time that the nation intends to devote to preparing for the future, and to that end it is contemplated to build an iron-clad navy that will cope with any Power in the world.

I repeat it is a conclusive argument against League Island to say that it is impossible to construct and get away from there vessels of this character. I will not go into the argument to show that they may be constructed cheaper elsewhere. I presume there are places where they can be constructed cheaper; at any rate there are places where they can be constructed and removed after construction. If vessels of the character of which I speak were constructed at League Island they could not be removed to the ocean. But as I see that the Senator from Ohio intends to call up another measure in which I feel a deeper interest than in almost any other, I shall not pursue this argument, presuming that this bill is to be laid aside, and that we are to proceed to the consideration of a bill that ought not and cannot be delayed. If the Senator from Ohio purposes to bring up that measure, I will desist from any further remarks.

Mr. WADE. I move to postpone this bill and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1162.

Mr. GRIMES. I am exceedingly sorry to be placed in the position that I shall be, of voting against the motion of the Senator from Ohio if he presses it to a vote. I am anxious to get this question off our hands. It has been in my keeping, or in the keeping of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for four years. It was under consideration at the last session, and has now been brought nearly to a vote. The public interests, in my conviction, demand that something shall be done; and I cannot consent, anxious as I am that the Senator's bill shall come up, to lose an opportunity to get a vote upon this. I understand there is nothing to be said by anybody in favor of the proposition now under consideration. If those who are opposed to it choose to take up time in speaking in opposition to it, I am not responsible for that, nor is the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WADE. I was exceedingly loath to interfere with this bill which has been so long on the tapis. I was in hopes that we should have come to a vote on it and decided it before; and we were told this morning that about half an hour would be all the time that would be necessary to conclude it. But we know how these things progress in this body. This bill seems to be afloat now as a debatable matter before the Senate, and I do not see any reason to suppose it will not take four or five days before we can come to a vote upon it; and there are other measures of such pressing importance that it will not do for us to trifle away our time upon anything else. I know that the country will hold us justly responsible for our conduct, if we omit these weightier matters and fritter away our time on measures that can be got along with at some other time. I feel under the necessity, as I have assumed the charge of the Louisiana bill, to see that it suffers no delay at my hands. I shall insist on the motion, unless I can be assured that a vote will be immediately taken on this bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say that I have trifled away with none of the time of the Senate, nor have those who are in favor of this proposition. It has been in our keeping, as I said before, a long time, and at the instance of those who are opposed to it it has been postponed from day to day with their approbation, and frequently upon their suggestion. It is true that I supposed we would dispose of this question within an hour when it was taken up this morning. The Senator from Connecticut informed us yesterday that he would not speak more than twenty minutes. If gentlemen propose to go on and repeat the arguments that have been listened to by the Senate all through the last four years on this subject I cannot be responsible for it; I cannot check it, I cannot stop it.

Mr. RIDDLE. I desire to say to the Senator from Iowa that I wish to be heard on this subject. I shall not detain the Senate more than twenty minutes.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope there will be no understanding, and there cannot be, that this question must be taken now, because none of us have got half through yet. I hope the motion of the Senator from Ohio will prevail, and that we shall proceed to consider that measure that cannot be dispensed with.

Mr. CONNESS. It is hardly concealable that this is an attempt to destroy this bill by simply consuming time. I think the Committee on Naval Affairs of this body is entitled to a vote on this bill. I think it has been under consideration for a longer period and has consumed somewhat more of the time of the Senate than it should have done. The bill to which the honorable Senator from Ohio refers is of the first importance; I feel as deep an interest in it as he can, but I hope we shall come to a vote upon this bill. If the honorable Senator from Kansas has anything further to say—though I rather think he has exhausted the subject—I am willing to hear him to the end; but let us get to a vote.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It is not very often that we are occupied in the questions that are local to my State; it is very rare indeed. This bill is of local interest to all our people and to all the members in both Houses who represent them. In order, however, to save valuable time, both the members from Pennsylvania in this body are willing in this debate to waive the ordinary privilege, the privilege which under other circumstances they would exercise to discuss this measure and to reply to those arguments which have been submitted against it. For my own part I have never intended to say anything more since the subject was taken up for the last time than to submit a few observations, not occupying five minutes, of an explanatory character, to explain to my people at home the reasons why my colleague and myself have not entered more largely into this debate. The circumstances are peculiar, and in order to facilitate the business of the Senate and that this measure shall not be an obstruction to other measures of legislation or a cause of offense to any gentlemen who desire other measures to be taken up, we have adopted the course which I have mentioned. I think, however, it would be a very unreasonable thing if the Senate should refuse now, when the debate must be pretty well spent, when it cannot be possible that a very considerable period of time will be occupied in further discussion, to put this measure to a vote after listening to whatever of debate is yet to take place upon it. It cannot be protracted; and then, when we have heard it, let us decide the question and decide it finally.

Mr. WADE. I am very loath to interpose anything against the action of the Senate upon this subject; but it has been discussed here for three or four years constantly, and pamphlet after pamphlet has been issued, commission after commission has reported, and all the light that will ever be emitted on this subject is in possession of the Senate now, and has been for a long time. We have heard the able champions of both sides of this controversy now for three or four years, saying I presume all that can be said on either side. Now, if I could have any assurance in the Senate that in three quarters of an hour, say by three o'clock, the vote should be taken, I would withdraw my motion and permit it to be taken. But if the discussion is to continue in the unfathomable sea of debate on which we have embarked, if we are to float on the ocean of debate that is usual here on all such questions, it is perfectly obvious that we shall not come to a vote probably in three or four days, and then where would our great measures of legislation be? They would stand defeated, and we should be responsible for their defeat. I cannot place myself in that position, and I will not.

Mr. COWAN. Let us have five minutes.

Mr. WADE. I will give you more than five minutes; but I want some assurance.

Mr. COWAN. I trust we can come to a vote immediately. I think nobody desires now to discuss it. The argument must be exhausted.

Mr. WADE. If I can get an intimation from the Senate that they will give us a vote by three o'clock, I will withdraw my motion; but if there is no indication of that, and gentlemen all around say that they are going into debate, I feel constrained to stand by my motion, and I hope the Senate will stand by my motion, and take up the bill I have indicated.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not disposed to sit silently under the imputation that those who are opposing this bill have taken up all the time, and that they are planning some scheme to defeat action upon it, and that the friends of the bill are very magnanimously refraining from debate so as not to waste the time of the Senate upon this bill. I repeat now what I said yesterday, that taking the time of the Senate that has been occupied on this bill from the beginning, more time has been taken by the friends of the bill than by its opponents; and when the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, indeed both the honorable Senators, but especially the one on my left, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] speaks of the friends of the bill having refrained from debate, and that the Senators from Pennsylvania are now refraining from debate, I do not quite understand it. Are not other gentlemen refraining from debate just as much? Does not the honorable Senator from Kansas intimate that he is desirous of taking up time on this subject particularly, but deeming other subjects more important he refrains? Does not the honorable Senator from Delaware intimate a disposition to speak on this bill, limited, it is true, to a short period of time? I do not quite understand why it should be thrown out here that those who oppose this bill are taking any course that is not quite in accordance with parliamentary practice and senatorial dignity and propriety. I see no cause for it. I certainly will not undertake to vindicate the honorable Senator from Ohio from being a party to any design to postpone action on this bill. He of course will take care of himself on that and on all other subjects. I can only say that so far as I am aware of any opposition to this bill, it is none other than that which is legitimate, fair, honest, patriotic, having a due regard to the wants of the country and the necessities of the Treasury.

Mr. RIDDLE. Mr. President, what is the exact question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Ohio, to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President—

Mr. GRIMES and others. Let us vote.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not choose to let the vote be taken until I make a remark. I do not think the Senator from Ohio has charged any negligence in trying to bring this bill before the Senate to a vote. I should think it rather unreasonable to require us to go into the consideration of the bill which the Senator from Ohio proposes to call up at this time. That bill came to the Senate yesterday, and has not been printed in the Senate. It was printed during its progress in the House of Representatives, but whether printed as it passed I am not prepared to say. I believe not. I am informed that the amendments made to the original bill in the House have never been printed. I am told that the bill that was laid on our tables yesterday is not the bill as passed. I have not had an opportunity of looking into it, and I think the proposition would be a very unreasonable one to take it up now anyhow, independently of the position of the League Island bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only object that could be accomplished by taking up now the bill referred to by my colleague would be to have the second reading of the bill. I think that ought to be granted, and then it could go over. The Senator from Indiana or some Senator on this side of the House gave notice that he intended to resist its different stages, and I think as the first and second readings of the bill are usually matter of form, and it has had its first reading, its second reading can be had and then any objection will throw it over. I am disposed to vote for this motion to give my colleague an opportunity of having the second reading of the bill, and then he can make a motion to refer or to pass the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I objected yesterday to the passage of the bill in less than fifteen minutes after it came from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.]

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Cragin, Dixon, Foster, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalow, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Van Winkle—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Edmunds, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Lane, Nye, Sprague, and Wiley—10.

Mr. SPRAGUE, when his name was called, stated that he had paired with Mr. WILEY.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE. I believe the amendment now pending is the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLE. I ask that it may be read. My health not being very good I have not been in the Senate for the last two days and have not heard it.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. SUMNER.

Mr. RIDDLE. Mr. President, I shall vote for that amendment; and at the same time that I shall vote for it I am frank to say that it is with a view of defeating the bill. I may in the course of the few remarks I shall make repeat something that has been said, and not be able to answer things that have been said on the other side, because, as I stated before, I have not been able to attend the sittings of the Senate for the last two or three days.

Sir, there is nothing more apparent to my mind than that we need no new naval depot now. It may appear strange to Senators and doubtless will that I, living within fifteen miles on an air-line of League Island, and having some of my property in the vicinity, should oppose League Island as a naval depot; but I tell Senators that, while it would benefit some constituents of mine, it would be money sunk in the mud, which would never be available. I speak of what I do know. I have seen League Island fifty times to the once that any Senator on this floor has seen it. If there is to be a naval depot upon the Delaware, put it down where you can have deep water and the protection of Fort Delaware; put it at Newcastle, where your vessels can ride in twenty-five feet of water and fresh water at that.

I dislike to oppose League Island, but why do I oppose it? League Island is three or four miles below Philadelphia. I am talking practically, and I am talking as a man who has had some experience in the construction of works of this kind, and I say to the Senate to-day that if League Island should be taken as a naval station the money expended on it will not be less than $50,000,000, and all you spend will be wasted. Why? Let us know the reason why. League Island, as was remarked by one of the Senators to-day, would at high tide, but for the protection of the embankment, be four feet under water. The Senator from Iowa remarked that he had seen large trees growing there: so have I seen large trees growing in sand banks and in swamps. I will tell him what I know of League Island, that when it is not frozen up you can take your hand and push a fence-rail down without any trouble and not reach the bottom. I speak of what I do know. When you get down a few feet further you strike gravel. What are piles worth if you strike gravel? If you could get forty-five feet of log the piles would hold, as they do at the Gunpowder and Bush river bridges; but the experience at League Island will be that which occurred at the Susquehanna when they attempted first to build a bridge at Havre de Grace. When they attempted to pile for the piers there they struck gravel, and the first freshest that came washed the piers away, and finally they had to coffer-dam.

Go for fast land, as you term near League Island, and where do you find it except at Red Bank, in the State of New Jersey? Go anywhere along there on the Pennsylvania shore and it will cost $10,000 an acre to put that land above high water; and where are you to get places for the buildings to be erected for your artisans and for your machinists? Why did the Pennsylvania Central, the Philadelphia and Erie, and the Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore railroad companies build a dock at New Castle to which to transport their iron and coal, and not stop at League Island, and thus save twenty miles of line? The reason is, Senators—I am sorry that I have to say it, but I feel it to be my duty to do so, although it may oppose the interest of some of my people—League Island is liable to be ice-bound. This year it has been for two months literally ice-bound. While the monitors were anchored there, four-horse wagons loaded with wood were crossing the Delaware river five miles below League Island; and one of the most prominent papers in the city of Philadelphia, which came to me a few days ago, stated that eighty vessels which had been detained at New Castle were only then able to start for Philadelphia. If you are going to have an ice-bound navy-yard, as the Senator from Connecticut says, League Island will be an admirable place for it.

As to piling a place like League Island it is an absurdity, as men who have had any experience know. Let me give you an instance: Fort Delaware was constructed by one of the most scientific engineers in the United States, the present General Delafield, when he was in the prime of life. He piled it as well as he could, but when it was constructed it settled until the lower casemates were down to the water-line, and were of course useless. You cannot pile an island made up of such deposits as this so as to make it sustain a heavy structure. It is a matter of impossibility; and it is, as I have said, utterly impossible in a winter like this to reach League Island during the severe months.

Now, sir, we have enough navy-yards in this country for present purposes at which we can deposit these monitors. They have proved to be a failure except for defense; they are certainly not fit for offensive purposes. Why not distribute them among the different navy-yards and around the different cities where defense is needed and wait for the time, when the necessity for it arises, to indicate a proper point for your great naval depot? Where can a better site for such purposes be found than here at the Washington navy-yard? You can deposit at that yard now half of your iron-clads and have them protected.

Under these circumstances why saddle this country, which is now groaning under the burden of debt, with an additional indebtedness of $50,000,000, not demanded by the exigencies of the times, not required by public policy, and absolutely condemned by every principle of political economy? If Senators can give me a reason why this vast expenditure of money should be laid out on this island, when there is not a sufficient depth of water to transport to it our large vessels, I should be glad to hear it. I certainly cannot see any.

I thought, Mr. President, that I should be able to address the Senate more fully on this subject, but I find that in the condition of my health I am unable to speak longer. I have already stated my main objections to League Island in brief. I am unable to continue.

Mr. GRIMES. I hoped that I should not be called upon to say a single word further, and I would not rise now if the Senator from Delaware had not made a statement which seems to involve a question of veracity between himself and myself.

Mr. RIDDLE. Not at all.

Mr. GRIMES. I state upon my reputation as a man and as a Senator that I have been three times upon League Island, and I went there and examined it before I reported in favor of it or before I committed myself in any way in favor of it. While I say that there may be portions of the island back near the rear channel where there is a boggy piece of ground, yet I assert that there are three or four hundred acres of that land which is just as firm land as the land in the neighborhood of the Smithsonian Institute in this city; that crops are growing upon it; that houses are built upon it. I was told the cellars were dry. If the Senator makes the statement that a fence rail can be driven down upon any portion of that land it is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. RIDDLE. I did not mean to raise a question of veracity with the distinguished Senator from Iowa; but I should like to state one fact to him. The western channel at League Island will not float a sloop at low water, a sloop drawing four feet of water. When the Ironsides, the noblest vessel of our Navy, was anchored or hitched to the wharf at League Island and took fire, two tugs came to her relief, and they found her aground, and she could not be drawn off.

Mr. GRIMES. Nineteen or twenty of the iron-clads are now in that very channel of which the Senator speaks, and I have a communication written this morning by Admiral Davis, who is well known, I take it, to all members of this body, and favorably known wherever his name is heard, in which he says:

"I was on a board (chairman) for laying up the iron-clads after the war, and I then reported to the Department that the first commission which made the majority and minority report, and differed in so many other things, agreed unanimously in this one, that League Island was the proper place for laying up the iron-clads."

So much for that.

Mr. RIDDLE. I have perfect confidence in Admiral Davis; but I think the statement is incorrect. If you will take the Coast Survey map you will find that there are only four feet of water in the western channel at low tide. I had the map here, but it seems to have been lost or mislaid.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to state that I have paired off with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to state that I have agreed to pair off with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. WILLEY.] If I were at liberty to do so I should vote for the amendment.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I will state in this connection that my colleague is necessarily absent from the city.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Williams—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, and Wilson—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Edmunds, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Norton, Nye, Poland, Saulsbury, Sprague, Willey, and Yates—12.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend the bill on the second page, twentieth line, by inserting after the word "thereof" the words "after a thorough examination made by them," and by inserting after the word "officers," in the twentieth line, the words, "not less than five." It now reads, "nor unless the acceptance thereof shall be recommended by a board of officers to be appointed by the President." If amended as I propose, it will read, "nor unless the acceptance thereof, after a thorough examination made by them, shall be recommended by a board of officers, not less than five, to be appointed by the President."

Mr. GRIMES. I have not the slightest objection to that proposition, and I should not make any opposition to it but for the fact that the result of adopting the amendment will be to cause the bill to go back to the other House, where it will be very doubtful whether it can be reached. I do not want the President or the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board unless it shall be composed of eminent persons, and I think at least five men ought to be selected as commissioners to decide the question. So far as I may have influence with them I should advise the adoption of that course. But the only effect of the amendment now will be to send the bill back to the House and render it doubtful whether it can be reached there.

Mr. FOSTER. That objection of the honorable Senator will apply to every bill that is before us. We cannot amend any bill, then, at this stage of the session, because if we do so it will necessitate the sending of the bill back to the House and the bill may not be acted upon there. Are we to adopt that as a principle of legislation during the residue of the session? If so, I of course have nothing to say; but if we are not, I object to applying it to this bill, and see no reason why it should be applied to this bill rather than to all other bills.

The honorable Senator says there is no objection in principle to the amendment, and the only objection is because it will make it necessary to send the bill back. I submit that on a matter of so much importance as this, where there is so much difference in the statements of men who are conversant with this locality, so that the honorable Senator from Iowa seemed to think there was an issue of veracity made up between him and another honorable Senator—where on the one side it is asserted by honorable Senators that this locality has not been interrupted by ice during the whole winter, and where on the other side it is asserted that it has been obstructed by ice for two months—where I say there are statements so utterly contradictory as these are, we ought to have this island accepted, if it be accepted, not by the recommendation of a board of officers that may be selected by a party who has already prejudged the case, but a board of officers who by the bill shall be required to make a thorough examination of the ground. I think honorable Senators have discovered one officer of the Navy who has been there who is in favor of League Island; there may be another and another; and if such men are selected by the President or the appointing power, no doubt this island will be accepted; this "munificent gift" will be received. I know the honorable Senator from Iowa does not wish anything of this kind to be done. I am sure the Senate do not wish it to be done. Why leave it, then, as a matter of accident whether it shall be done or not? Why not put it in the bill and make it certain? It is admitted that five is not an improper number. The bill as it stands merely says that there shall be a board, but that expression is indefinite. Two may make a board. Surely there can be no reasonable objection to this amendment, except that it will cause the bill to go back to the House, and that is fatal to every amendment that may be proposed to every House bill now.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. POMEROY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Lane, Nesmith, Patterson, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Williams—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Yates—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Edmunds, Fogg, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Norton, Nye, Poland, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Willey—12.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I am myself a good deal suspicious of this bill. I do not know when the City of Brotherly Love ever offered such a munificent gift to the Government before. I believe that that people are about as careful of their interests as any other people in the country, and it seems to me that they could have no purpose in making such a munificent gift to the Government unless they expected some return or some equivalent in some way. I should like to know what is the quid pro quo that is expected. Can the Senator from Indiana who has charge of the bill tell me?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose I might say that the city of Philadelphia would be glad to have the site of the present navy-yard for the commercial purposes of the city. I understand that the city would be glad to have that yard removed to this island. I am not aware of any other interest the city has in the subject.

Mr. DAVIS. I see at once the solidity of the advantage which the City of Brotherly Love expects from the transfer of the navy-yard to this League Island; but from what has been said, both officially and in debate here, I am rather inclined to think that it would be better for the Government to make a gift of the property upon which the present navy-yard is located to the city gratuitously, and to have the naval depot established at a proper position.

I have no prepossessions one way or the other in regard to the proper site for the establishment of this naval depot. I am inclined, though, from everything that has been said in this debate, to believe that we have a better site for such a depot in this city than anywhere else, certainly greatly preferable to the site of League Island. I do not believe that an intelligent man of business, if he had occasion to make some such establishment as this a great depot, a great emporium, would ever think of selecting League Island as a proper position for an improvement of that kind. I believe myself that the Washington city navy-yard is peculiarly adapted and a most proper place for this depot. I recollect that some twenty-six or twenty-seven years ago I saw the Mississippi and the Missouri floated to the navy-yard at Washington city, and both of those ships were then drawing twenty-two feet of water, as I was informed. I believe, from everything that has been said, there is not a sufficient depth of water at League Island for a depot for iron-clads. I think there is an ample depth of water at the navy-yard in this city. This city is the metropolis of the nation. The Government ought to endeavor to build it up; they ought to endeavor to build it up by constructing here all the improvements that the public service requires, and for which the position furnishes facilities.

I am induced to come to the conclusion that League Island is a most unfit position for the establishment of such a depot, and I will vote against any measure that has a tendency to locate it there.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Delaware has made a statement in regard to the blocking of the river below League Island by ice. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what information he has on that subject: whether it is a usual thing that the river is blocked below League Island. That fact was stated by the Senator from Delaware, which I was not aware of before. He tells us that for near two months this winter the Delaware river has been blocked up and teams have been crossing it on the ice. It is certainly a very remarkable place to build a navy-yard at, if that statement be true.

Mr. DIXON. I happen to have in my hand the Chronicle of the 11th of February, 1867, in which I find this dispatch:

PHILADELPHIA, February 10.

After the heavy rain last night the weather suddenly became cold, the mercury falling twenty-four degrees. To-day is clear with strong northwest wind. The ice in the Delaware has broken up and is blown on to the Jersey shore. Eighty vessels, anchored at Newcastle, Delaware, will be here to-morrow.

Those vessels had been waiting for the ice to break up, and they had accumulated to the number of eighty. This is a statement of a fact in a paper which I happen to find.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Missouri has put to me a question which I can perhaps best answer by reading to him from the statement made by Professor Baché and Commodore Marston, who were members of the first commission, and who took pains to examine the whole matter thoroughly. I presume the Senator knows the character of Professor Baché.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well.

Mr. GRIMES. He investigated the subject thoroughly, and in the minority report he and Commodore Marston say:

"League Island has the advantage of Winthrop's Point in less exposure to violent winds and sea, and Winthrop's Point has the advantage in less exposure to ice, though the first advantage is one of constant action, and the other one which takes effect once in forty years. The less width of the Thames at Winthrop's Point (only one thousand and sixty yards, or two tenths of a mile) is probably more than balanced by the water being salt."

That is the reason it does not freeze there, "the water being salt."

"By the meteorological registers kept at Philadelphia it appears that a sufficiently cold winter to close the Delaware occurs but once in ten years, and that the river is closed but once in forty years."

"When ice makes in the Delaware in extremely cold winters, it is deposited on the Horse Shoe shoal."

The Horse Shoe shoal is above League Island and below Philadelphia—

"and, breaking up, passes in the direction of the currents to the New Jersey shore, and thence, in a gentle, undulating curve, to the lower end of League Island. The testimony of pilots shows that the breaking up of ice is never a serious matter on the shores of League Island. It is usually honey-combed and rotten before moving. The ice-boat is, with rare exceptions of extremely cold winters, say once in forty years, able to keep the Delaware open; in ordinary winters its use is not required; and in the coldest on record in eighteen years it was able to make way through the ice on any day of the season, one of these years including the severest winter on record."

I understand the fact to be that this has been an extraordinarily cold year. Not only has the Delaware river been frozen, but so has New York harbor; and persons have crossed between Brooklyn and New York on the ice. Boston harbor has been closed where we have another navy-yard, and that is frequently closed. It is only a few years ago that they had to cut a channel there to let one of the Cunard steamers from East Boston down into the bay. This has been an extremely cold winter. The vessels alluded to in the Chronicle, an extract from which has been read, meeting obstructions up at the Horse Shoe shoal fell back to a point below. The best authority I can give I suppose is this report of Professor Baché and Commodore Marston.

Mr. HENDERSON. The statement was that it was frozen below.

Mr. RIDDLE. I think I can answer the Senator from Missouri. I was not aware until the Senator from Iowa made his remarks that I was so old.

Mr. GRIMES. Allow me a word more. I desire to state further that the Senator from New Jersey read letters yesterday showing that oyster boats had been depositing their cargoes on League Island during the whole winter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was aware that such statements had been made, and hence it seemed to me a most remarkable statement that wagons had been crossing on the ice for a month at a time below League Island.

Mr. GRIMES. Very remarkable indeed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to hear from the Senator from Delaware what information he has on the subject.

Mr. RIDDLE. I give practical information. I tell you what I know. I have seen in my short life time wagons passing over the Delaware just above Chester, which is fifteen miles below League Island. The Horse Shoe bend, to which the Senator from Iowa alluded, is not above League Island. It is just at the north of League Island, branching out from the northern portion of League Island and stretching over to the New Jersey shore.

Mr. CATTELL. I speak within bounds when I say that I have been up and down the river hundreds of times, and I distinctly state here that League Island, as will be seen by reference to every chart of the river that was ever drawn, is entirely below the Horse Shoe bends where the difficulty occurs with the ice, and that during this winter vessels have been able to go up as far as League Island, though not up perhaps to the Horse Shoe bend, and then they have usually returned either to Marcus Hook or to Newcastle, because there are Government piers erected there for the protection of them against floating ice. They drop down that bar; and that is the explanation of the statement which has been read.

Mr. JOHNSON. How far below League Island?

Mr. CATTELL. Marcus Hook is about eight or nine miles below League Island. League Island is entirely below the Horse Shoe, where the great difficulty and obstruction in the Delaware river is. This I state on my own veracity and reputation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to offer an amendment, and I shall not detain the Senate by making any remarks upon it. It is the same amendment which was offered in committee and lost by a very small vote. It is to insert after the words "board of officers," in line twenty-one, the words "of not less than five," and to insert in line twenty, after the word "recommend," the words "after a thorough examination made by them." I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Lane, Nesmith, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Williams—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Ramsey, Ross, Saulsbury, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Yates—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Edmunds, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Howe, Nye, Sprague, and Willey—8.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Fogg, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Patterson, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Yates—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Nesmith, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Williams—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Howe, Nye, Sprague, and Willey—8.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the joint resolution (S. No. 157) in relation to the ocean mail service between San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in Oregon; and also that it had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of the mother of Charles O. Rowohl, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 918) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

A joint resolution (S. No. 157) in relation to ocean mail service between San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in Oregon;

A bill (S. No. 491) amendatory of the several acts respecting copyrights;

A bill (H. R. No. 918) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1128) to authorize the payment of prize money to certain officers and enlisted men of the Signal corps of the Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 1141) to authorize the purchase of certain lots of ground adjoining the Alleghany arsenal, at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) for the purchase of David's Island, New York harbor.

TENURE OF OFFICE.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 453) regulating the tenure of certain civil offices, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. R. C. SCHENCK, of Ohio, Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. J. F. WILSON, of Iowa, managers of the same on its part.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, the Senate insisted on its disagreement to the House amendments, and agreed to the conference asked by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. WILLIAMS, SHERMAN, and BUCKALEW were appointed.

RECONSTRUCTION OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. WADE. I now move to take up House bill No. 1162.

Mr. SUMNER. What is the title of that bill?

Mr. WADE. The title is "A bill for the reestablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana."

Mr. SUMNER. That is an excellent bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1148.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Ohio has priority.

Mr. WADE. I am anxious to have both of these bills passed, and I have but very little choice as to which shall be taken up first. I have studied them both, and I think they are both most excellent bills. I am not going to antagonize one with the other; and if the Senator from Oregon will press his against all opposition, so as to put it through as soon as may be, I shall not care if his goes first.

Mr. TRUMBULL, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. SUMNER. Louisiana first.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it is worth while to have a discussion as to which bill it is best to take up first; but if gentlemen want it we can have it. I am decidedly of the opinion that the better bill to take up first is the bill reported from the Reconstruction Committee originally, and which has passed the House and which has been called up by my friend from Oregon. The other bill got precedence of it in the House by accident. I think that with an amendment to that bill it is about as perfect a remedy as anything that can be produced at the present time, and, in my judgment, we had better proceed with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to take up the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will now have its second reading.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. No. 1162) for the reestablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. SHERMAN. Since the bill has now had its second reading and a single objection will carry it over, I propose that we take up the bill to provide for the payment of the compound-interest notes.

Mr. WADE. I think my colleague is entirely wrong in supposing that a single objection carries the bill over.

Mr. SHERMAN. It cannot be passed to-day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But it can be considered to-day.

Mr. SUMNER. It can be discussed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but we cannot make any progress probably in the discussion to-day. We have gone probably as far with this bill as we can go to-day; and now I should like to have the bill to which I have referred taken up and disposed of.

Mr. WADE. Has the Louisiana bill been read a second time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS.) It has had its second reading, and may now be acted on as in Committee of the Whole; but it cannot be read the third time to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I have the floor, I move now to take up Senate bill No. 594.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that will not be done. Let us dispose of this.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withdraw his motion for a moment, so that the bill called up by his colleague may be ordered to be printed.

Several SENATORS. It has been printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand not. I understand that the printed copy which is on our tables is not the bill as it passed the House, and I am told it has not been printed by the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I am informed by the Clerk that it has been printed.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the Louisiana bill passes from before the Senate I wish to submit an amendment to it consisting of three sections that I desire to have printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received informally.

Mr. SUMNER. I send it to the Chair, stating that at the proper time I will offer it, and in the mean time I ask to have it printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print will be entered, no objection being made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to take up House bill No. 1143, to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, so that it may have its second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has already made a motion to take up another bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw that motion for the present, to allow the Senator from Oregon to have the formal second reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has it been read at all?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; it was read yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on postponing the further consideration of House bill No. 1162, which is now before the Senate, for the purpose of taking up the bill mentioned by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that will not be done at this moment. While we have up the bill with regard to Louisiana, let us progress with it as far as we can. The Senator from Massachusetts has already suggested an amendment which has not been read, and I do not know what it is. It may cover the same ground which I think ought to be covered by an amendment. I am very much in favor of the general principles of the bill in reference to Louisiana, and am also in favor of the other bill that has been reported by the joint Committee on Reconstruction, though I desire to see both bills amended in some respects. I think the Louisiana bill should be amended so as to extend somewhat the right of suffrage. As I understand that bill, it excludes from voting all persons who have taken part in the rebellion, but provides that private soldiers who were engaged in the rebellion may, on going before the United States court and making it appear to the court that they acted as private soldiers, and did nothing inconsistent with ordinary warfare, receive a certificate which will entitle them to vote. Now, every Senator who reflects for a moment will remember that the United States court meets in but one place in Louisiana, the city of New Orleans, and has, I think, but two terms a year. It would be manifestly very inconvenient and improper to require citizens all over the State of Louisiana, who would be entitled to vote and take part in the reorganization of the State, to go to New Orleans for the purpose of obtaining a certificate. If I understand the bill rightly, they would have to do so in order to qualify themselves to vote. I think in that respect the bill ought to be amended.

My object in saying this now is to call the attention of the Senate to this point. It is desirable to pass the bill, and whatever amendments are to be presented may as well be proposed to-day and be ordered to be printed, and then we shall have them all before us to-morrow, if it goes over till to-morrow, and we can read the other bill also to-day. My only object is to hasten action on the subject. I presume there are other amendments which will be suggested besides those named by the senator from Massachusetts. I do not know how much ground his amendment covers; but it seems to me it is desirable to get whatever amendments are intended to be proposed to both bills before the Senate as soon as possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Oregon simply desired to call up the bill and have a formal reading of it. It is not open to amendment until after a second reading.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is open to amendment now.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill of the Senator from Oregon is not open to amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The other one is, the one before us.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall have the formal reading of both these bills to-day and then let them go over until to-morrow, when they will be open for amendment and debate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then you lose a day.

Mr. SHERMAN. No. No progress can be made to-day with either bill, because no action can be had. I desire to pass another bill to which I think there will be no objection, or which at least will not excite much discussion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We could act on this amendment to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I do not want to act upon any of these amendments without having them printed, so that we may be able to see them and understand them.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If they are going to be printed they may as well be proposed to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let any Senator who desires to present an amendment submit it to-day and have an order made for printing it.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I see around me intimations that lead me to fear the defeat of both these bills. I perceive that many members have criticised them far enough to have prepared a great many amendments. Now, sir, there is nothing more evident than that if gentlemen indulge their own preferences in every respect, and criticise these bills as carefully as they would do in the early part of the session, we may just as well abandon them at once. I tell you it is impossible for us to pass these bills if we follow the ordinary course of business here. Unless Senators consent to defer somewhat to the circumstance, it is impossible to get through with these bills. According to the ordinary way of doing business each of them would take three weeks. The perfect storm of amendments that seems to be threatened all around indicates that there is really no expectation of passing them, for certainly no man acquainted with the way we do business expects that we can get through with them if we offer amendments and debate them as we do in ordinary cases.

Now, sir, I wish to say again that I do not propose to antagonize one of these bills with the other. I am in favor of them both. If I am to express my choice, I must say that I like the Louisiana bill rather the best; but then I am for both and they must both pass, and I hope in order to secure that result we shall all restrain our fancies a little in the matter of amendments. I might see things that if I were to draw a new bill I would alter, perhaps, for the better, though probably I should not make very great headway at it at last.

The bill which the Senator from Oregon desires to take up meets my approbation very well. I do not think it is complete, but I like the bill and it must pass also, I hope. I do not want to take time by antagonizing the one with the other. Some of our friends are very anxious to take up one first and then the other. To me that is a matter of total indifference provided I am satisfied that whoever begins this fight will persevere in it, as I intend to do myself when I take charge of a bill, for as soon as we fairly begin the battle I shall not give the Senate much peace until it is ended. I think that is the intention of the Senator from Oregon in regard to his bill, and with that understanding I am perfectly willing, if I can do so with the consent of the Senate, to waive the Louisiana bill, and let his bill be taken up and read and considered first for aught I care. I want them both to pass.

Mr. SUMNER. I am in favor of each of these bills. Each is excellent. One is the beginning of a true reconstruction; the other is the beginning of a true protection. Now, in these rebellious States there must be reconstruction and there must be protection. Both must be had, and neither must be antagonized with the other. The two should go on side by side the guardian angels of this Republic. Never was Congress called to consider measures of more vital importance. I am unwilling to discriminate between the two. I accept them both with all my heart, and am here now to sustain them by my constant presence and vote.

But, sir, what we know as the Louisiana bill came into this Chamber first; it was first made familiar to us; it has precedence. On that account it seems to me it ought to come up first; it ought to lead the way. I am not going now to say that it is better than the other, or that the other is better than the Louisiana bill. Each is good; each is almost as good as we could have it; and yet, I doubt not, each is susceptible of amendment. The Senator from Maine has already foreshadowed an important amendment on the bill reported by the committee of which he is chairman; I have already sent to the Chair an amendment, which at the proper time I may venture to move on the other bill; but I desire to make one remark with regard to amendments. I am so much in earnest for the passage of these bills that I shall cheerfully forgo any amendment of my own if I shall find that it is the general sentiment of those who are truly in earnest for the bills that we ought not to attempt amendments. If, however, amendments seem to be preferable, then I shall propose those which I have sent to the Chair.

One of my amendments—indeed there are three sections in the proposition I have submitted—contemplates the abrogation of all the rebel legislation, beginning with the ordinance of secession and including all the legislation of the rebel Legislatures, empowering, however, the Governor and provisional council to keep alive certain acts which the necessities of the case shall seem to require, if there be any such. Another section annuls all intermediate decrees of courts, giving, however, certain powers in that matter. And still a third section which I propose requires another oath to support a republican form of government, and in the terms of that oath I have undertaken to set forth what at this moment we should require of all persons in the rebel States as articles of faith before they can be admitted to the privileges of citizenship.

These are the amendments which I have sent to the Chair; but I have said that I regarded the passage of both of these measures as of paramount importance and not to be endangered by any amendments at this late stage of the session. If, therefore, amendments shall not seem to be preferable, I shall postpone such as I have to some other occasion, hoping that I may ingraft them on some other measure.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The bill which the honorable Senator from Oregon has in charge is a bill that originated with him. He proposed it to the Senate, and by the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Reconstruction. It is a bill predicated on the principle of giving military government to the States which formed the late confederate States, an idea which I have always supposed to be the correct idea as applicable to those States until they become in a better condition. That bill was found in the Committee on Reconstruction at the time the bill which was under debate so long in the other House suggested by Mr. STEVENS, was referred to that committee. The Committee on Reconstruction took the military government bill of the Senator from Oregon and substituted it for the other bill; and I believe those members of the committee who were present—some were not present—were unanimous in recommending the measure. It was prepared with very great care; it was submitted to a sub-committee and by that sub-committee carefully worded. It was satisfactory to the House with the exception of a single phrase, and with the exception of that phrase, after some debate it was passed, and passed with great unanimity.

In the meantime, while that bill was under discussion, a bill was reported from the select Committee on the New Orleans Riot, proposing a measure applicable only to the State of Louisiana, and in the shape in which that bill was passed by the House it applies only to the State of Louisiana. I agree with the Senator from Illinois that that bill is defective in one or two particulars, but I will not discuss that question. At any rate it is narrow in its application, and it is a matter of serious doubt whether if passed it should go beyond the State of Louisiana. It was not so intended when it was proposed; it was not so decided by the House, but was rather regarded as in the nature of an experiment than otherwise. If we adopt it in that shape, it is but a local measure, having a comparatively narrow application. On the contrary, this bill proposed by the Committee on Reconstruction applies to all the States which were in rebellion, and I believe it is as reasonable and perfect as any bill of the kind can be made. I think, however, that the amendment proposed by one of my colleagues in the House, and which was voted for by a majority of our friends there, when it comes to be read and considered by Senators will commend itself to their minds. I think that is as complete and makes as complete a system, when taken in connection with the bill, as could possibly be offered now.

At this late period of the session the question arises which of these bills is it best to take up first? It makes no difference which was first presented here. The question is, which is it advisable for us to consider first, the one which has the general application to all these States or the one that has merely a local application. I have no doubt upon that subject, and therefore I suggested to my friend from Ohio, and he seems in what he has stated to have come to the same conclusion, that the serious important question was to pass one, and he has intimated that he would not antagonize the Louisiana bill with the bill reported from the Committee on Reconstruction. I am in favor of both bills, but I should be very glad to see an amendment made to each. I have no doubt but that if we amend either of the bills, when it goes back to the House it can be passed there instantly, because the majority in that body have the power, if they choose to exercise it, to pass a bill of this description at once, and I have no doubt it can be passed. At any rate what opposition will be made to the one would be made to the other. It is important that the bill of the honorable Senator from Oregon should have its second reading to-day, in order to save one day of time at least, and I hope it will be taken up for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not anticipate any objection to the second reading of this bill; and if there be any question of precedence between the two bills, it appears to me that, according to all usage, the bill to which I have called attention should be first considered.

Mr. WADE. Will the Senator give way to me for a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. WADE. I find there is doubt in the minds of our friends about the priority of these bills. I have no anxiety on that point. My only desire is to have one of them considered and proceeded with. To accommodate all I will move now that the bill which was taken up on my motion be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be postponed until to-morrow by the other motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw that motion to enable the Senator from Oregon to get a formal second reading of his bill. I suppose it will be done without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1143.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States was read the second time by its title.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now move to offer an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill, which I ask to have printed, that it may be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, the order to print will be entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 594.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that motion will not prevail. I have been trying for several weeks to get up House bill No. 344, to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company. I gave notice that I should antagonize it against any bills except appropriation bills, and I wish to have it taken up now.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is from the Committee on Finance, and ought to be acted on promptly. I do not think it will excite discussion; but if it does it ought to be passed at any rate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall ask for a vote on taking up House bill No. 344. I therefore move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Ohio, for the purpose of taking up that bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in order to lay my motion on the table; it must be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to postpone the bill now before the Senate and take up the bill mentioned by him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will not do it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before we act upon that motion I should like to understand whether the two bills which have had their second reading have been printed as they passed the House. I should like to know, because I perceive that some gentlemen have raised that objection. If they are not, they ought to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that both bills have been printed since they came to the Senate as passed by the House. The question is now on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 594) to provide for the payment of compound-interest notes was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of redeeming and retiring any compound-interest notes outstanding, to issue temporary loan certificates in the manner prescribed by section four of the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved February 25, 1862, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding three per cent. per annum, principal and interest payable in lawful money on demand. These certificates of temporary loan may constitute and be held by any national bank holding or owning them, as a part of the reserve provided for in sections thirty-one and thirty-two of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864; but not less than two fifths of the entire reserve of such bank shall consist of lawful money of the United States, and the amount of such temporary certificates at any time outstanding is not to exceed $80,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to move to amend the bill in line twenty-four by striking out "eighty" and inserting "one hundred," so as to make it read, "that the amount of such temporary certificates at any time outstanding shall not exceed $100,000,000."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did not know that this bill was to come up to-day, and did not anticipate its being called up at this hour. I wanted to propose an amendment, which I have not now prepared, that instead of issuing other indebtedness for these compound-interest notes as they fall due, provision should be made to take them up by paying for them out of the Treasury of the United States. I do not believe we should continue to keep in the Treasury one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty million dollars, and that is what we have been doing. We had that question up the other day, and now here is a bill continuing that state of things. When the question was under consideration some days ago we were told by Senators of the Finance Committee that there was no way of relieving the Treasury of this large amount of money which had been kept in its vaults because our indebtedness was not due. Now, some indebtedness is about to fall due, and provision is being made by the bill to issue other indebtedness in place of it, instead of paying it off as it becomes due. I did hope the Finance Committee would have devised some way by which the amount in the Treasury should be reduced; but it seems they are not disposed to do so, but introduce a bill to issue $80,000,000 of indebtedness in lieu of that which is to come in; and now they propose in the Senate to increase it to $100,000,000. I am not prepared at this time to propose an amendment. I was not aware that this subject would come up to-day. I hope the bill may go over and not be acted upon at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. The purpose of this bill is to provide in part for the payment of the compound-interest notes. I have an official statement of them, from which it appears that the total amount of principal is $143,064,640, and of the interest on maturity is $27,701,921—in all $170,826,561. The statement is as follows:

Statement of estimated outstanding compound-interest notes and interest due thereon to date of maturity.

It thus appears that prior to January next provision must be made for $119,000,000 for these notes. Several modes have been suggested: first, by the application of the gold and currency on hand; second, by accruing receipts from the revenue; third, by the sale of bonds; fourth, by issuing more legal tenders or stopping the payment of the $4,000,000 a month of legal tenders now authorized by law; or fifth, by a temporary arrangement with the national banks, such as is proposed by this bill. A few remarks on each of these will explain the action of the Committee on Finance.

I have before me an official statement of the currency and gold on hand on the 8th of February. It as follows:

I certify this statement to be correct:

F. E. SPINNER, Treasurer of the United States.

TREASURER'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, February 12, 1867.

From this it appears that the currency nominally on hand is $46,807,882 15. But from this balance there should be deducted the debt now actually due and which may be called for at any moment, amounting to $15,717,293 47. It consists of the following items:

Texas indemnity bonds.....	$371,000 00
Seven-thirty Treasury notes, act July 17, 1861.....	32,300 00
Loan of April 15, 1842.....	61,768 68

Treasury notes, March 2, 1861.....	3,600 00
Temporary loan, coin.....	1,200 00
Five-twenty two-year Treasury notes.....	1,610,570 00
Temporary loan.....	13,526,143 75
	$15,717,293 47

This leaves about thirty millions on hand available for current payments. The Senator from Illinois complains that this balance is too large, but when it is remembered that this amount is about the receipts of one month from internal revenue, that it is deposited by the collectors with designated depositories from Maine to California, and can only be drawn against as official notice of the deposit comes to the Treasurer through the offices of internal revenue, it is obvious that a large balance must exist. What this balance ought to be must be left to the Treasurer. No one can be more exact and careful than General Spinner, and no one has more of the confidence of the country. These balances are drawn against by him as closely as possible. They must vary in amount as the current revenue falls short of or exceeds the current expenditure. Experience has shown that from twenty to thirty millions is absolutely necessary as a sinking balance while the revenue is collected from a country so large as ours. It is manifest that this balance cannot be largely diminished while the fluctuations of both revenue and expenditure may, within a month, exhaust all that is subject to draft.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio how much of this money is in the hands of the national banks on which they are speculating?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can tell the Senator how much is in the hands of the national banks. I cannot answer the last part of the question as to what they are speculating on.

Mr. TRUMBULL. How much have they a right to use?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not one dollar of the public funds. The money is ordinarily drawn as soon as it is reported in the ordinary course. The amount scattered in the various depositories is $26,000,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is that in the banks?

Mr. SHERMAN. In the banks scattered all over the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is what I wanted to know: is there $26,000,000 of Government money in the national banks?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the amount. I will send the statement to the Senator and he can see for himself.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Did I understand the Senator to say that the national banks made no use of this money?

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course this money goes into their ordinary deposit accounts, but it is drawn as rapidly as the deposit of it is brought to the attention of the Treasury Department here.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand the Senator from Ohio on that point; but I understand him also to be in favor of keeping up that amount all the time; never getting below $26,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I understood him to say it was necessary to keep at least one month's revenue on hand which he estimated at about twenty-nine or thirty millions; and this is deposited all the time in these banks.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator must be aware that a collector of internal revenue deposits money in a national bank, at Chicago for example; he notifies his chief of the deposit and the amount of the deposit; in the ordinary course it comes finally to General Spinner, the Treasurer of the United States, and is drawn upon; that draft goes back; and in the course of this operation considerable time is consumed; the money mean time is with the public depository; and the Treasurer of the United States holds nearly twice the amount of bonds in his hands to secure these deposits that the aggregate deposits amount to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are not those bonds to cover the currency?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, to cover these identical deposits.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I dislike to interrupt the Senator from Ohio; but do I understand him to say that there is on deposit in the national Treasury an amount equal to that which is held by the national banks?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; more bonds than the banks have Government deposits.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I happen to know, unless the thing has been changed lately, of a bank which had more than five times as much Government money in its vaults as it had given security to the United States for.

Mr. SHERMAN. That may be so with individual banks.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That was the point of my question. I wished to know whether the Senator meant to say that there was deposited by each national bank in the Treasury security equal to the amount of money belonging to the Government which it had on deposit. Unless there has been a change very recently, that is not the case with some banks to my knowledge.

Mr. JOHNSON. In this city they have had from five to seven millions of Government money.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And what was the security that they gave?

Mr. JOHNSON. Nothing like that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. So I have understood.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt that in some of the national banks deposits have been made larger than the amount of security, but the whole amount of Government deposits in the national banks is much less than the amount of bonds deposited as security. I have a statement before me showing that the national banks now have in the hands of the Treasurer to secure these deposits United States bonds to the amount of $86,015,950. The amount of deposits in the national banks, including unpaid drafts, that is drafts on their way, is $26,845,060, so that the amount of security is about ten millions more than the amount of deposits.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the aggregate; but that does not show that there is not in some banks a great deal more than the securities they have given.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly not; and both of the Senators I suppose will see that that is a matter which cannot always be regulated, because the collector at Chicago, for example, may deposit $1,000,000 on a particular day; he is bound to deposit as he receives. He may receive large amounts and consequently deposit more than that particular bank has security for. That is unavoidable from the nature of the transaction.

As for the coin on hand, its amount is governed by other causes. It is received mainly in New York from duties on imported goods. The amount on hand is $97,386,508, of which $19,992,980 belongs to individuals, and may properly be excluded from our consideration, leaving about seventy-seven millions available for the public service. Ought this to be applied to the payment of current debts? The Secretary is authorized to sell it, and has done so to a limited extent, but is not required to do so. If the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] is right, Congress ought by law to direct its sale on application. In that way interest might be saved; but there are weighty reasons why this accumulation of coin ought to be retained. About ninety millions of coin will be required prior to the 1st of January next to meet the interest of the debt and maturing gold bonds. If this amount is received from duties the present large balance can be maintained; but, for reasons I stated on a previous occasion, we cannot expect our large revenue from customs to continue.

We ought not to run any risk of a deficient supply of gold to meet the public engagements. But even if we are mistaken in the falling off in the revenue, the large amount of gold on hand acts as a balance-wheel to maintain the public credit and to prepare for specie payments. If it was sold it might depreciate for a time the market value of gold, but an advance would then be inevitable, and its price and that of all other commodities would be subject to speculative fluctuations and combinations. This view is taken by the best financial authorities in the country and is evidently the opinion of the House of Representatives, which refused to direct the sale of this gold. My own conviction is, that this gold should be retained until the public debt is funded, and should then be applied so as to give additional value to our paper money, and as soon as possible to form a solid basis for the resumption of specie payments.

If I am correct in this view we cannot rely upon more than $20,000,000 of the money on hand to meet the compound-interest notes. Can they be paid out of the accruing revenue? The extraordinary amounts required for the payment of printing and claims growing out of the war, the ordinary expenditures and the limited diminution of the legal tenders authorized by law will exhaust all our revenue. Whatever balance our present revenue laws produce caught at once to be remitted by repealing oppressive internal taxes. Nothing can be clearer than the folly of attempting to now reduce largely the public debt. And it is equally clear that we should not contemplate an increase of the funded debt. When the holders of the seven-thirty notes avail themselves of their privilege to fund their debt into gold bonds, the funded debt of the United States will be $2,084,000,000. It must be a very grave necessity that would induce me to authorize its increase, and for one I intend never to lose sight of the necessity of reducing the rate of interest on this debt to a rate similar to that paid by other great commercial nations. Fortunately the public debt will be in such form, maturing in short periods, that we may avail ourselves of the privilege of paying it off by the sale of bonds at a lower rate of interest. Until then we ought not to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to sell gold bonds to meet the compound-interest notes. He has power to do it under the law, and must and will do it if he has no other revenue, and it is to avoid this very necessity that the bill under consideration becomes necessary and expedient.

I said it has been proposed to meet the compound-interest notes by the issue of new legal tenders or by stopping the reduction of those now outstanding. This would be to pay a debt drawing interest by the arbitrary substitution of one that does not pay interest. We must never lose sight of the fact that a legal-tender note is only a forced loan without interest, and to the extent that it is worth less than a gold dollar it is a falsehood on its face. Governments are compelled to resort to such measures when their existence is threatened. We rightfully and properly resorted to legal tenders during the war and our people gladly accepted our promises, but only upon the principle that as soon as the national danger was over that we would make our promise good by paying a real dollar for our promised dollar. We can with as much propriety establish legal tenders for our whole national debt as we can for our compound-interest notes. The maximum of legal tenders has been reached and passed. The reduction of the present volume of legal tenders is another matter. Contracts have been made upon the amount of legal tenders now fixed by law.

The reissue of the present notes is simply a delay of their payment. This was contemplated by all who receive them. The Government may properly determine the time when it will finally pay off and cancel this form of its indebtedness, but it certainly is bound to give to these notes all the value possible. They are only valuable for circulation as money passing from hand to hand. Their value is diminished by the vast amount in circulation. As the amount is reduced they will approach the standard of gold. When they reach that standard, and are readily convertible into gold they are the most convenient form of money that can be desired. Surely the Government ought to reduce the volume of this currency slowly but firmly until that standard is reached. For this reason the Committee on Finance are of opinion that the discretionary power conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury to reduce this currency at the rate of $4,000,000 a month ought not to be taken from him. It is not mandatory but discretionary. As one member of that committee I would far prefer to take from him the power to issue gold bonds except in the process of funding the seven-thirties. This is a power far more likely to be abused.

It now only remains for me to state why this bill furnishes the most feasible mode of retaining a portion of the compound-interest notes. It will be perceived that we only provide for $100,000,000, leaving the balance to be paid from cash on hand and current receipts. The reason is that three per cent. loan certificates would only be held by national banks—the low rate of interest precluding their use by other bankers. By the national bank act all national banks are required to keep on hand from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. in "lawful money," a portion of this reserve may be kept in deposit banks in cities and in clearing-house certificates. The compound-interest notes are "lawful money" for the principal of them, and though they cannot be counted as a part of the reserve to redeem their notes they may be for their deposits. The result is that $82,000,000 of them are held by national banks—upon their payment the banks would have to hold in their stead an equal amount of "lawful money" in greenbacks—thus making a sharp contraction that would seriously embarrass the business community; or the country banks could transfer the sums now held in compound-interest notes to the deposit banks in New York and receive interest on them. These deposits would be loaned to bankers and brokers and furnish fresh facilities for speculative operations.

Under these circumstances the banks are willing to take a Government security payable on demand at a low rate of interest, provided that this deposit may be counted as a part of their reserve precisely to the same extent that a similar deposit with a city bank would be. The effect of this arrangement is to reduce the interest on the compound-interest notes from six per cent. to three, and to transfer a portion of the bank reserves to the Treasury of the United States. The Committee on Finance became satisfied after a full examination of the matter that the arrangement is a favorable one for the Government and a reassuring and steady one to the business community. And this is the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who writes as follows:

"This proposition meets with my entire approbation. It will relieve me from all anxiety on account of the compound-interest notes, and will provide for them in such a way as not to derange the business and finances of the country."

"I commend it to the consideration of the Finance Committee, and hope they will report favorably upon it without delay."

"Very respectfully,
H. McCULLOCH, Secretary."

I therefore trust the Senate will pass it without further delay. We have heard all that can be said about it, and it should be acted upon before we become involved in the discussion of the reconstruction bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that it is of any use to make opposition to this bill reported from the Finance Committee. I am not prepared at this hour with the amendment which I would like to move, which would be to pay off these compound-interest notes with the money that is in the Treasury, or at least a portion of them, instead of exchanging one species of indebtedness for another. If the Senate think proper to pass the bill without affording me an opportunity to move an amendment, it is for them to say so. I shall not take up any time.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 344, to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANE. If it is in order, I desire now to submit a motion that the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock, this evening having been set apart by a previous resolution for the consideration of pension bills. If this bill is taken up now it may lead to a protracted debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will take up this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Fogg, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Morrill, Patterson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Davis, Fessenden, Harris, Henderson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Sanbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Williams, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fowler, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Willey, and Yates—18.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Niagara Ship-Canal Company is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to allow a vote to be taken on the bill without debate. It is a bill that has been very thoroughly debated, and I presume every member of this body has made up his mind as to how he will vote upon it. It is a bill of great importance, not only to the Northwest, but to New England and to every portion of the country. If the Senate will take a vote, I will not make any remarks about it.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock, for the purpose of disposing at that time of pension bills.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the Senator that he modify his motion, so as to provide that at half past four o'clock we take a recess. It is only a quarter past four now.

Mr. LANE. Very well. I will modify my motion in that way. I move that at half past four o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for the reading of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce at the close of the bill with regard to the section requiring the assent of the State of New York before the bill shall go into effect.

Mr. FESSENDEN and others called for the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

Mr. HOWE. I do not think the Senator from Michigan wishes to hear the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asked to have the bill read.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not want to act on a long bill like this without knowing what it is.

Mr. HOWE. Before the bill is read I wish to inquire whether the amendment in the twenty-eighth section was adopted at the last session. I am told the amendments were all acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HOWARD. I think there is no necessity for reading the bill. It has been once read, and we understand it very well.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to ask whether the bill is about to be read as it has been amended, or as it was originally reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read as it stands amended.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand that it has not been printed in the amended form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has not been printed as amended. The bill has been acted upon by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and several amendments have been offered and discussed, and several have been adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. When was that done? The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the last session of Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The bill with the amendments ought to be printed, so that we may see what they are.

Mr. HOWARD. I am quite sure the bill has been printed as reported by the Committee on Commerce at the last session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that after the bill was reported amendments were made to it, and those amendments have not been printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the bill be laid upon the table and printed with the amendments, so that we can see what it is. I cannot vote upon a bill of that sort without knowing something about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendments are printed.

Mr. HOWARD. I hold in my hand the bill on which the Senate acted at the last session, with the amendments printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In what stage is the bill now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In Committee of the Whole. The Chair is informed that amendments have been made since the bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce, which have not been printed.

Mr. HOWARD. Those amendments, if my memory is not very much at fault, were few, and can be very easily indicated, and their effect upon the bill very readily understood, and I do not think it will be necessary to reprint the bill for that purpose. The principal amendments agreed to by the Senate, as reported by the Committee on Commerce, are printed in this copy which I hold in my hand. A few modifications were made and some additional amendments agreed to in the Senate, but I think they were very few.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no recollection of it at the present time. I attended somewhat to this bill when it went along at the last session, but I do not know how it stands now. I should like to see the bill with the amendments that have been made, or at any rate to have time to look at and consider them in manuscript, if the Senate is unwilling to have them printed, so that I may know how the bill stands. It is impossible for the members to remember exactly how the bill stands. I have forgotten entirely what its provisions are. I believe it appropriates some millions of dollars, but it has been so long since the bill has been before us that I have forgotten its details. I think it would be only just and wise to let the bill lie long enough to give us an opportunity to understand how it stands.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has lain here for two years.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But it has not been taken up at this session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senate will bear me witness that I have been, in season and out of season, trying to get it up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will bear witness to that, but it has not been taken up hitherto at this session; and therefore Senators are not exactly fresh in their recollections of it. I am not, and I wish to understand it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator can in five minutes, ay, in one minute, go to the desk and read every amendment that has been made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It would hardly be practicable for every Senator to go to the desk and take time in that way. I think we ought to have an opportunity to understand what the bill is.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unless we can get action on this bill now, we shall lose it for this session. If we allow this chance to go by, I fear it may be the end of the bill. I hope that the Senate will act upon it now. The amendments made by the Senate can be read in two minutes, and I ask that they be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill itself was called for by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will withdraw that call. The bill has been read at length before.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot do that, for I have no idea of voting on a bill until I know what it is.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce that we have agreed to take a recess at half past four o'clock; it is now within five minutes of that time, and it is impossible to make any progress with the bill in that time.

Mr. CHANDLER. But the amendments can be read between now and half past four o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. As there is a desire to have the bill printed, I suggest whether it will not be a matter of economy to allow the bill to lie on the table and be printed? Certainly we can make no progress in it now, when we have agreed to a recess at half past four o'clock, and we are within four minutes of the time.

Mr. HOWARD. This bill was passed by the House of Representatives on the 1st of May, 1866; it came into the Senate on the 2d of May, and was referred to the Committee on Commerce in this body. On the 12th of June that committee reported it back with amendments. During last session the bill was taken up in the Senate, read through, and considered, and the Senate concurred in almost all the amendments of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER. In all.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, in every one of these amendments except the last one, which was to strike out this section:

That this act shall not take effect unless the Legislature of the State of New York shall within one year from the date hereof give its assent thereto.

Upon that amendment I believe the Senate did not act, but the consideration of it was dropped for the time being; and it is now before us in precisely the same condition that it was at that time. It has been fully read from beginning to end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the last amendment was agreed to by the Senate. Is the reading of the bill insisted upon?

Mr. FESSENDEN and others. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suggest that it is within two minutes of the time when we are to take a recess, and the bill cannot be read through in those two minutes. I move, therefore, that the bill as amended be printed, so that we shall have it by to-morrow.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the better way.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that motion will not be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I believe it can be printed by to-morrow.

Mr. HOWARD. It has been printed with the amendments, and is now here; and the Senate has made no new amendment to this bill, but has concurred in the amendments recommended by the Committee on Commerce, with the exception of the last amendment which I have read. There is no necessity for reprinting this bill at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does not my friend see that it cannot possibly be touched to-night, and to-morrow he may be troubled with the same motion to print unless he agrees to it now? If he agrees to it now we shall have the bill printed and on our tables to-morrow.

Mr. HOWARD. Will my friend from Maine tell me what necessity there is or can be for reprinting this bill?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Allow me to answer the question of the Senator from Michigan. I have just looked at the bill at the desk, and I find that there are manuscript amendments to it. And some of the text of the bill as printed has been stricken out.

Mr. HOWARD. The amendments are immaterial.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They may be immaterial, but Senators insist on seeing them. We shall lose nothing by printing them. Why not consent to have the bill printed with the amendments, so that we may have it here in the morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to print.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that this motion—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of half-past four o'clock having arrived, the Senate will now take a recess until seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in obedience to law, a report of the superintendent of the Coast Survey, showing the progress of that work during the year ending November 1, 1866, accompanied by a manuscript map of the progress brought up to date; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 14th instant, information in relation to the Sand Creek massacre, in November, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, accompanied by reports to the Indian Bureau, giving information in relation to the temper, conduct, and purposes of the Indian tribes on the southern frontier, and recommending an appropriation for the Indians west of the Mississippi river; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of an appropriation for the erection of a penitentiary in that Territory, and praying that authority may be given to the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the stone in the present unfinished penitentiary to be used in finishing the capitol building, and that the site of the present penitentiary may be sold and a new site selected where there is a sufficient supply of water; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of an appropriation for the completion of the capitol building in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of an appropriation for the completion of the capitol and penitentiary buildings in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Messrs. WILLIAM LAWRENCE of Ohio, Mr. F. E. WOODBRIDGE of Vermont, and Mr. A. J. ROGERS of New Jersey, managers at the conference on its part.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of the mother of Charles O. Rowohl was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me a few minutes I should like to have taken up and put on its passage the bill to establish and protect national cemeteries.

Mr. LANE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON. Then I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and to protect national cemeteries.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. The bill was some days ago read at length and was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, and they have reported it with various amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported to the bill by the committee will be read in their order.

The first amendment of the committee was in section one, line three, after the word "cemeteries," to strike out the words "in the States lately in rebellion and in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line seven, after the word "fences," to strike out the rest of the section down to and including the word "that" in the second section, in the following words:

And hereafter such cemeteries shall be laid out in sections, to contain not less than two hundred nor more than three hundred graves, and to each section there shall be erected a marble or granite monument on which shall be inscribed the name of each soldier buried in such section, with his rank, number of his regiment, his company, and State.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That,

And to insert the words "and to cause."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two, line two, to strike out the word "shall" and to insert the word "to," and in the same line, after the word "small," to strike out the words "marble or cast iron;" and in line three, after the word "headstone," to insert "or block," and after the word "grave," to insert "inscribed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two, line five, after the word "party," to strike out the words "inscribed on the monument. And national cemeteries already established shall be made to conform, as far as practicable, to the foregoing plan," and to insert in lieu thereof:

In a register of burials to be kept at each cemetery and at the office of the quartermaster general, which shall set forth the name, rank, company, regiment, and date of death of the officer or soldier; or, if unknown, it shall be so recorded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The first section of the bill, as thus amended, the second section being consolidated with it, reads as follows:

That in the arrangement of the national cemeteries established for the burial of deceased soldiers and sailors, the Secretary of War is hereby directed to have the same inclosed with a good and substantial stone or iron fence; and to cause each grave to be marked with a small headstone, or block, with the number of the grave inscribed thereon, corresponding with the number opposite to the name of the party in a register of burials to be kept at each cemetery and at the office of the quartermaster general, which shall set forth the name, rank, company, regiment, and date of death of the officer or soldier; or, if unknown, it shall be so recorded.

The next amendment was in section [three] two, line one, to strike out the word "said;" in line two to strike out the word "erect" and insert "cause to be erected;" in line five to strike out the word "detail" and insert "appoint;" in line six to strike out the word "sergeant" and insert "superintendent who shall be selected from enlisted men of the Army, disabled in service, and who shall have the pay and allowances of an ordnance sergeant;" in line eleven to strike out the word "and" and also the word "said" before the word "Secretary," and after the word "Secretary" to insert "of War;" in line thirteen to strike out the word "colonel" and insert "major;" and in line seventeen to strike out the words "sections and," and also the words "full and;" so that the section will read:

SEC. [3] 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be erected at the principal entrance of each of the national cemeteries aforesaid a suitable building to be occupied as a porter's lodge; and it shall be his duty to appoint a meritorious and trustworthy superintendent who shall be selected from enlisted men of the Army, disabled in service, and who shall have the pay and allowances of an ordnance sergeant, to reside therein, for the purpose of guarding and protecting the cemetery and giving information to parties visiting the same. The Secretary of War shall detail some officer of the Army, not under the rank of major, to visit annually all of said cemeteries, and to inspect and report to him the condition of the same, and the amount of money necessary to protect them, to sod the graves, gravel, and grade the walks and avenues, and to keep the grounds in complete order; and the said Secretary shall transmit the said report to Congress at the commencement of each session, together with an estimate of the appropriation necessary for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [four] three, line three, to strike out the word "tomb," and after the word "structure" to strike out "in any of said national cemeteries;" in line thirteen to strike out the words "sergeant or other officer on guard" and to insert "superintendent;" and in line fifteen to strike out the word "aforesaid;" so that the section will read:

SEC. [4] 3. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall willfully destroy, mutilate, deface, injure, or remove any monument, gravestone, or other structure, or shall willfully destroy, cut, break, injure, or remove any tree, shrub, or plant within the limits of any of said national cemeteries shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before any district or circuit court of the United States within any State or district where any of said national cemeteries are situated, shall be liable to a fine of not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, or to imprisonment of not less than fifteen nor more than sixty days, according to the nature and aggravation of the offense. And the superintendent in charge of any national cemetery is hereby authorized to arrest forthwith any person engaged in committing any misdemeanor herein prohibited, and to bring such person before any United States commissioner or judge of any district or circuit court of the United States within any State or district where any of said cemeteries are situated, for the purpose of holding said person to answer for said misdemeanor, and then and there shall make complaint in due form.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [five] four, line eight, to strike out the word "said" before "Secretary;" in line nine to strike out the word "of" and insert "upon the price to be paid for;" and in line eleven to strike out the words "upon the price to be paid therefor;" so that the section will read:

SEC. [5] 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to purchase from the owner or owners thereof, at such price as may be mutually agreed upon between the Secretary and such owner or owners, such real estate as in his judgment is suitable and necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and to obtain from said owner or owners title in fee-simple for the same. And in case the Secretary of War shall not be able to agree with said owner or owners upon the price to be paid for any real estate needed for the purpose of this act, or to obtain from said owner or owners title in fee-simple for the same, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter upon and appropriate any real estate which, in his judgment, is suitable and necessary for the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [six] five, to strike out the word "said" and insert "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [eight] seven, line two, to insert the words "seven hundred and" before the word "fifty;" so that the section will read:

SEC. [8] 7. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $750,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the purposes of this act out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 900) to fix the compensation of the officers of the revenue-cutter service, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 275) to extend the time for the use of certain vessels for quarantine purposes at the port of New York, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of W. Marsh, consul of the United States at the Port of Altona, in the Duchy of Holstein, Germany, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. The same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of vessel-owners upon the lakes, have directed me to report a bill, and as it is not more than four lines in length, and will not occupy a minute, I should like to have it considered now.

Mr. LANE. I cannot consent to the taking up of any bill now but pension bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will not make the report now, but will do so in the morning. It is important to have action upon it as soon as possible.

WIDOWS OF REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 206.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 206) in relation to the pensions of widows of revolutionary soldiers. It proposes to increase the pensions of widows of revolutionary soldiers whose names are now upon the pension-rolls, and who were married to revolutionary soldiers prior to January 1, 1800, to the same rate as the deceased soldiers would be entitled under existing laws if now living; such increase and payment to be made from the 30th day of September, 1865.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY STANLEY.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 465) for the relief of Mary Stanley.

Mr. LANE. There is an adverse report in this case, and I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ADELINE M. GOULD.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 497) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline M. Gould, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Adeline M. Gould, mother of Eugene E. Gould, late a private in company F, third regiment Rhode Island cavalry volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 22d of December, 1864, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JOSEPHINE SLOCUM.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 488) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Slocum was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by this bill to place the name of Mrs. Josephine Slocum, widow of Martin N. Slocum, late a second lieutenant in the sixty-fifth regiment United States colored infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from the 30th of May, 1875, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KENNEDY O'BRIEN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 512) for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to increase the pension of Kennedy O'Brien, late a private in company K, fifth regiment Indiana volunteers, from eight dollars per month to twenty-five dollars per month.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know why that increase is proposed to be made. This is getting rather common here to increase pensions from eight to twenty-five dollars a month. It is a large increase.

Mr. LANE. The report accompanying the bill shows the facts in this case. This man was placed on the pension-roll at eight dollars a month. He was totally blind in both eyes. If he had been placed on the pension-roll under the general law he would have been entitled to twenty-five dollars. When he came before the committee we were perfectly satisfied about the case. He was led in by a one-legged soldier, and was totally blind. Having been placed on the pension-list by a special law he cannot obtain this increase except by another special law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Are all those who are blind entitled to receive twenty-five dollars?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir; all those who are blind in both eyes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; I do not object.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK MEEHAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Patrick Meehan, late a corporal in company I, eighty-ninth regiment Indiana volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from the 6th of June, 1866.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the honorable Senator explain these various rates. I do not understand why one is placed at twenty-five dollars, another at fifteen dollars, another at eight dollars, &c. We ought to have some rules in reference to all these things, and not leave them as a mere matter of discretion.

Mr. LANE. There is no discretion left to anybody. There is a general law placing these pensions at different rates. A man who has lost one leg or one arm, or both legs or both arms, or one eye or both eyes, has a different pension and a higher one than a man who is simply disabled and only gets eight dollars a month.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the reason, if this man comes under the general law, that he does not get his pension at the pension office?

Mr. LANE. The reason is this: the Commissioner of Pensions has decided that where a man is placed on the pension-roll by a special law, he cannot increase his pension under our general law unless we pass an act of Congress saying that it shall be done. These rates have been provided for by general law. This man would have been placed at this rate by the general law; but this is a special law which is necessary to meet his case under the decision of the Commissioner. The report will show the facts. I ask the Secretary to read the report, which will show just how it stands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand it. I only wished an explanation of the principle.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES APPLETON.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 514) for the relief of Charles Appleton was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to increase the pension of Charles Appleton, late a soldier in the United States Army, from eight dollars per month to fifteen dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ERNESTINE BECKER.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 515) granting a pension to Mrs. Ernestine Becker was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Ernestine Becker, widow of Leopold Becker, late captain of company D, twenty-fourth regiment Illinois infantry volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence from the 5th of May, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEMUEL WORSTER.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1056) for the relief of Lemuel Worster, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Lemuel Worster, of Lebanon, York county, Maine, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, and pay to him the sum of eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN MOREAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1055) for the relief of John Morean, of Machias, New York. The bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to place the name of John Morean, of Machias, New York, a soldier of the war of 1812, upon the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month, and to continue during his natural life.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, in line three to strike out the word "Treasury" and to insert the word "Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend the bill by making the name "Morean" instead of "Moreau," as I understand that is the proper name.

The amendment was agreed to.

HIRAM HEDRICK.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of Hiram Hedrick. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Hiram Hedrick, of Peoria, Illinois, late a private in company D, eleventh regiment Illinois cavalry, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, and to pay him at this rate in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JANE CLEMENTS.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1052) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Clements. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Mrs. Jane Clements, of the District of Columbia, widow of Ignatius Clements, deceased, on the pension-roll, and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, during her widowhood, commencing on the 1st of August, 1864, the date of her husband's death. This bill is to entitle her to the benefit of the second section of the act approved July 25, 1866, in regard to minor children of deceased soldiers, if it shall be established to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions that she has such minor child or children as would entitle her to the benefit of that section.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHILDREN OF SOLOMON LONG.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1058) for the relief of the minor children of Solomon Long.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause in the following words:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to place on the pension-rolls the minor children of said Solomon Long, with the same benefits, and subject to the same restrictions, as other minor orphan children of deceased soldiers, to take effect June 16, 1865.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the names of the minor children of Solomon Long, deceased, who was a private in company E, fifth regiment Kentucky cavalry volunteers, under the provisions of the existing laws in similar cases, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out the word "minor" in the fifth line, and insert after "children" the words "under sixteen years of age;" so that it will read: "the names of the children, under sixteen years of age, of Solomon Long."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification of the amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the title of the bill by striking out the word "minor;" so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the children, under sixteen years of age, of Solomon Long."

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN GRAY.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1044) for the relief of John Gray, a revolutionary soldier. The bill directs the Commissioner of Pensions to place the name of John Gray, of Noble county, Ohio, upon the pension-roll, and that there be paid to him the sum of $500 per annum during his natural life, payable semi-annually, commencing on the 1st of July, 1866.

Mr. LANE. That bill as it passed the House was wrongfully drawn. I move to amend it by striking out the words "Commissioner of Pensions," and inserting "Secretary of the Interior," so as to make it conform to our legislation.

The amendment was agreed to.

DANIEL FREDERICK BAKEMAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider bill (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of Daniel Frederick Bakeman, a revolutionary soldier.

The Commissioner of Pensions is directed by the bill to place the name of Daniel Frederick Bakeman, of Sandusky, New York, upon the pension-roll, and there is to be paid to him the sum of $500 per annum during his natural life, payable semi-annually; commencing on the 1st of July, 1866.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The same amendment should be in this bill as in the last, by striking out the words "Commissioner of Pensions," and inserting "Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

JOHN CARTER.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 554) granting a pension to John Carter was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Carter, late a private in company H, fifth regiment United States infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES N. WEISS.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 580) granting a pension to Charles N. Weiss, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Charles N. Weiss, of the District of Columbia, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to continue during his natural life.

Mr. LANE. That presents rather a peculiar case, highly creditable to this young man; and as the report is very short I will ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, on the 9th instant:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Charles N. Weiss, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

At the commencement of the late rebellion the petitioner, earnestly desiring to aid the Government in preserving its existence and sustaining its authority, was debarred by law from enlisting as a soldier because of his extreme youth, he being then in the fourteenth year of his age. In pursuance of his purpose to identify himself with the cause of the country he attached himself as an acting orderly to Colonel Blair, commanding the twenty-first regiment Pennsylvania volunteers. At the expiration of their term of service he acted in the same capacity for Colonel Miller, of the eighty-first Pennsylvania volunteers, who fell at the battle of First Bull Run. He afterward attached himself to Colonel Sewall, of the staff of Major General O. O. Howard, with whom he remained until June, 1862, when he became the acting orderly of Colonel Balloch, also of General Howard's staff, in which capacity he served at the battle of Gettysburg, where he lost his left arm by a shell from the enemy while nobly doing his duty during that terrible battle; that after the lapse of four months he again entered the field with Colonel Balloch, and was present with him at the battles of Chattanooga and Lookout mountain, and accompanied General Sherman in his "march to the sea."

All of the foregoing facts are fully substantiated by the statements of Major General O. O. Howard, Brevet Brigadier General Balloch, Brigadier General C. H. Howard, Colonel Miles, United States Army, and others.

Your committee are of the opinion that no case more meritorious has ever come before them, and they report the accompanying bill for his relief, and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVIA W. CANNON.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Olivia W. Cannon, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Olivia W. Cannon, widow of Joseph S. Cannon, late a midshipman in the United States Navy, upon the pension-roll, at the rate of ten dollars per month, to commence upon the presentation of satisfactory proof of identity and widowhood, and to continue during her widowhood; and to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear the report read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, on the 9th instant:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Olivia W. Cannon, having had the same under consideration, report:

The petitioner claims to be the widow of the late Joseph S. Cannon, of the United States Navy, who was pensioned by a special act of Congress, and upon his death it was continued to her for five years more; but the five years having elapsed she now prays for the special action of Congress in her behalf. The committee have no facts in the case except what are contained in the petition. They therefore report a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to place her name again upon the pension-roll, to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Are you satisfied that the facts contained in the petition are true?

Mr. LANE. In this case the facts are stated in the petition and are verified by an act of Congress passed some forty years ago, granting a pension to this Lieutenant Cannon and voting him a sword and the thanks of Congress and of the nation for his gallant conduct. At his death his pension was given to his widow for five years. The five years had expired, and this bill simply gives it to her during her natural life or widowhood.

Mr. GRIMES. When was the last act on the subject passed?

Mr. LANE. The pension act I think, granting her an extension of five years was in 1857. This is a very meritorious case. We went back and looked into the laws and found an act placing her on the pension-roll, and an act passed giving him a sword and a vote of thanks of Congress for his gallant conduct. There is no doubt of the identity at all. Both the Senators from Delaware pledge themselves from personal knowledge of the identity of this lady. She is very old now, and we think it a proper case to continue the pension. If she had been placed on the pension-roll under the general law it would have been continued to her; but she was placed on the pension-roll under a special law giving her a pension for five years, and of course it expired.

Mr. JOHNSON. In what battle was he engaged?

Mr. LANE. On Lake Champlain.

Mr. GRIMES. I remember this case having been before the Committee on Pensions when I was a member of it, and it was not favorably considered at that time. I do not remember the particulars of the case. I suggest to the Senator to let it pass over.

Mr. LANE. If I thought we could get it up again I should be perfectly willing to pass it over, but I doubt very much whether it can be passed this session if it is not passed to-night.

When I leave here, in a few days more, I doubt whether anybody else will be as liberal to pensioners as I am.

Mr. JOHNSON. She is very old, is she not?

Mr. LANE. She is a very old lady, over seventy years of age. I will state to the Senator from Iowa and the Senate that this pension is to be paid out of the naval pension fund, which is a large fund, some eight or nine millions. When the case was first presented to the committee we did not act upon it until we went back and found a vote of thanks of Congress and a sword given to Mr. Cannon, and a special act placing this lady on the pension-roll, and we had no doubt she ought to have a pension. I hope the Senate will consent to let the bill pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE M'GEE.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 556) for the relief of Caroline McGee, of Greene county, Tennessee, widow of Lemuel McGee, deceased. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Caroline McGee, of the county of Greene, Tennessee, on the pension-roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 27th of November, 1864, and to continue during her widowhood, upon satisfactory proof that she was and is the widow of Lemuel McGee, late of Tennessee, who died while imprisoned at Belle Island or Richmond, Virginia, during the late rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JERUSHA PAGE.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 535) for the benefit of Mrs. Jerusha Page. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Jerusha Page, of the State of Missouri, widow of the late Thomas C. Page, deceased, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is that for?

Mr. LANE. There is a report accompanying the bill, which can be read if anybody has any doubt about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will take your statement. What is it?

Mr. LANE. This Mr. Page was called a captain. That was a neighborhood title. He never was a captain; but was a private soldier, and was employed as a spy in Missouri, and was killed, and his widow claims a pension on the ground of the death of her husband. She claimed a pension of twenty dollars a month, the pension of a captain; but we could not find any proof that he had ever been a captain, but plenty of proof that he was a private soldier, and we have reported a bill giving her eight dollars instead of twenty dollars a month. He was employed out there by Colonel Caldwell, of Iowa, who swears to his services.

Mr. JOHNSON. During the late war?

Mr. LANE. Yes; during the rebellion. Colonel Caldwell swears that he employed him, and that he did effective service, and was killed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am satisfied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. SMITH.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 558) for the relief of Mary A. Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, widow of Alexander D. Smith, deceased. The bill, as originally introduced by Mr. PATTERSON, proposed to instruct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary A. Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, on the pension-rolls, to commence on the 5th of November, 1863, at the rate of — dollars per month, and to continue during her widowhood.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the word "rolls," in the fifth line, in the following words:

To commence on the 5th day of November, 1863, at the rate of — dollars per month, and to continue during her widowhood.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

At the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence from the 5th day of November, 1863, and to continue during her widowhood, upon satisfactory proof that she was and is the widow of Alexander D. Smith, late a lieutenant colonel of the thirteenth regiment Tennessee cavalry volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ELIZABETH FLETCHER.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1146) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Fletcher. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Elizabeth Fletcher, widow of Captain L. W. Fletcher, late of company A, thirteenth regiment Tennessee cavalry, on the list of invalid pensioners, and pay to her during widowhood the sum of twenty dollars per month, from the date of the death of her late husband; and in the event of the death or remarriage of Elizabeth Fletcher the Secretary of the Interior is directed to pay to the legally appointed guardian of the orphan children of Captain L. W. Fletcher the pension awarded to Elizabeth Fletcher, until they shall respectively attain the age of sixteen years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL DOWNING.

Mr. LANE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1125, granting an additional pension to Samuel Downing, one of the three last surviving soldiers of the revolutionary war, who is one hundred and five years old.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1125) granting an additional pension to Samuel Downing, one of the last surviving soldiers of the revolutionary war. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Samuel Downing, one of the last surviving soldiers of the revolutionary war, for an additional pension, at the rate of $500 per annum, from the 3d day of September, 1866, and to continue during the remainder of his life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EZRA B. GORDON.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the bill (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon, was read the second time and considered as in the Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ezra B. Gordon, late a private of company F, fourth regiment New Hampshire volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of fifteen dollars a month, to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA MCCOOK.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 171) for the relief of Martha McCook. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay or cause to be paid to Mrs. Martha McCook, widow of the late Major McCook, of Jefferson, county, Ohio, in consideration of the services of her husband and eight sons to the country in the late war for the Union, four of whom perished of wounds received in battle when in the line of their duty, an annuity during her natural life of $250 per annum, to be paid semi-annually.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Did we not have that before us at the last session?

Mr. LANE. A similar bill passed the House at the last session, but failed to pass the Senate. The circumstances are very peculiar. This old lady had eight sons in the service. One of them died in the Navy, and four were killed in the Army. Her husband was, I believe, a paymaster; at all events, he was on the staff, and was not compelled to enter the service; but he went into the service and lost his life. We thought, under the circumstances, this additional compensation would not be too much. Her husband was killed in the Morgan raid. He volunteered to defend his neighbors in Ohio. His family were exceedingly gallant and brave and distinguished. The history of the country for the last five years is a sufficient report upon this case and testifies to the gallantry of the McCook family. It is an exceptional case and establishes no new rule; but I hope whenever such a case shall arise hereafter, characterized by the same features, that the Congress of the United States will grant the additional compensation in all such cases.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is not the family in good circumstances?

Mr. LANE. The family is poor, and this widowed mother is now supporting the widow and orphan children of one of the sons who was assassinated in Alabama, General A. D. McCook, who was murdered by guerrillas. They are poor and need this compensation. We thought, under the circumstances, that this resolution ought to be passed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WEST VIRGINIA VOLUNTEERS.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 167) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the seventh regiment West Virginia volunteers, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be paid to William T. Connell, John Keplinger, and Isaac Conrad, full pay and allowances as private soldiers from August 17, 1861, to January 9, 1863, on presentation of satisfactory proof that they were duly enlisted in the seventh regiment West Virginia volunteers as such, and that their muster into service was prevented by their capture and detention as prisoners of war, from September 7, 1861, to the date embraced by this resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN ELIAS BEALE.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 584, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 584) for the relief of Captain Elias Beale, late captain company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry. It directs the Paymaster General of the United States Army to settle and pay the account of Elias Beale, late a captain of company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry, for his services and all allowances as captain in that regiment from the 25th of July, 1863, to the 30th of June, 1865, being to the time he was mustered out of the service, deducting all moneys that have been paid to him as a private in the service during that time.

Mr. BROWN. This is a bill that was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. They examined the case thoroughly, and they were satisfied that he was entitled to this money. He was a captain, but was taken prisoner before he was mustered in. It is to give him the additional allowance to which he would be entitled at that rank. He was paid as a private.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TUBULAR BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. BROWN. There is one other little bill that I should like to have acted upon this evening. It is a bill reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for the construction of a tubular bridge under the Mississippi river. I believe there is no objection to it in any quarter, and it will only take the time required in reading the title. It is Senate bill No. 421.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 421) to authorize the construction of a submerged tubular bridge across the Mississippi river, at the city of St. Louis.

The "Mississippi Submerged Tubular Bridge Company," a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, will be empowered by the bill to construct, maintain, and operate a submerged iron tubular bridge across the Mississippi river, between the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and the city of East St. Louis, in the State of Illinois, subject to all the conditions contained in its act of incorporation and not inconsistent with the provisions of the act. In case of any litigation arising from any obstruction, or alleged obstruction, to the free navigation of the waters, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States of any State in which any portion of the said obstruction or bridge touches.

Any bridge built under the provisions of the act is to be tubular in construction, and sunk below the bed of the river so that the top of the structure shall be below the lowest water line of the Mississippi river, and so that it shall in no wise interfere with or obstruct navigation when completed, or prevent a safe and expeditious transit for all classes of vessels upon the river during construction. Any bridge so erected is to be a lawful structure, and is to be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge is to be made for the transmission of the mails, troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile which the railroad companies terminating at either end receive for such services. No exclusive right or privilege is ever to be granted to any of the steam railroads now concentrating at St. Louis or East St. Louis by the bridge company to use the bridge, but it is to be equally open to all, under such regulations and at such charges as may be fixed, not to exceed those now charged by the Wiggings Ferry Company.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to inquire of the committee who reported that bill whether the company authorized to construct the bridge have ever done anything in that direction; whether any money has been invested in the project; whether there has been any earnest, serious attempt made?

Mr. BROWN. All I can say is that the company is organized and is indorsed by some of the first engineers of the country as approving of the plan, and that they are contracting at the present time for one or two of a similar kind. There is nothing, I think, that can be objected to in the bill itself.

Mr. HOWARD. It is a novelty in the history of bridges.

Mr. BROWN. It is a novelty.

Mr. HOWARD. The proposition is to make a bridge under the river, is it not?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. Entirely beneath the water.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to understand what is meant by the language of the second section:

That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be tubular in construction, and sunk below the bed of said river so that the top of said structure shall be below the lowest water-line of the Mississippi river.

What does the Senator from Missouri understand to be the lowest low water-line of the Mississippi?

Mr. BROWN. Not "lowest low water-line," but "lowest water-line"—the lowest point at which the water channels through the river; the lowest point of the bottom.

Mr. GRIMES. "The lowest water-line."

Mr. BROWN. That is, the lowest point at which the water is in the bottom of the river. That is the lowest water-line."

Mr. GRIMES. I should like you to certify to that.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know from what committee this bill came—the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. BROWN. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] reported the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. It may be right, perhaps, in the particular instance, but legislation of this sort has generally come from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BROWN. On the contrary, I think all the bridge bills passed here for the last two years have been referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not my recollection.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir; every one of them has come from that committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about further to say that the bill provides that the structure, when completed, shall be a mail route. That legalizes it whether it interferes with the navigation or not. In the case of the Wheeling bridge the Supreme Court decided that the bridge which had been erected was to come down because it interfered with commerce; but afterward when Congress passed an act making the bridge a post route and a legal structure, the court held that it was competent for Congress, if it thought proper, to impede in any way that it thought advisable the navigation of the river; that whether it was or was not an obstruction to the navigation of the river the bridge should stand. I am a little apprehensive that if it turns out that this bridge shall be in fact a very serious obstruction to the free navigation, it would still stand under the provision which says it is to be a mail route. The bridge, as I understand, is not to be under the bed of the river.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, entirely under ground.

Mr. BROWN. Altogether.

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill says "the water-line."

Mr. BROWN. Below the water-line, below the bed of the river.

Mr. GRIMES. Why not say that expressly?

Mr. BROWN. If there is any doubt about the meaning of the language as to what "the lowest water-line" is, it is very easy to make the thing definite by saying "the bed of the river."

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that would do better.

Mr. BROWN. I did not draw the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the honorable member will move that amendment, it will free the bill from a difficulty which I think would otherwise exist.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to an amendment of that sort.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out in the fourth line of the second section, the words "lowest water-line" and inserting "bed of the channel."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire, as this is the chartering of another bridge company, whether the bridge that was authorized at the last session of Congress to be built so high that the tops of the chimneys of the largest steamers could not touch it, and with a span of five hundred feet in the clear, has been constructed or is in the process of construction.

Mr. HENDERSON. Four hundred feet span.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I thought five hundred feet was the span of the bridge the Senator's colleague was providing for at the last session. But now there seems to be a proposition for another bridge to go as deep under the earth as the one last year was to go above. If that high bridge is a success, if it has been constructed, there may be, perhaps, no necessity for this.

Mr. BROWN. In reply to the Senator, I can only say that, so far as I am advised, measures have already been taken to organize under the authority that was granted at the last session of Congress. Whether the bridge will be too high for the Senator to cross when it gets done, or not, I cannot say; nor as to the dimensions, whether they will be found unnecessarily large. My own opinion still is that it would have been better if the laws providing for the various bridges across the river had required them to be longer in their spans and higher in their elevation.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to inquire of the honorable Senator from Missouri whether this experimental bridge has been tried anywhere else; whether we have any structure of this description now in use in the United States? It seems to me this bill contemplates rather a curious operation. The company who have it in charge will be compelled to excavate the earth under the Mississippi river, and of course the excavation will be very long, not less probably than a mile or a mile and a half, and perhaps even two miles.

Mr. BROWN. How long is the tunnel under the lake at Chicago?

Mr. HOWARD. It will, of course, require the expenditure of a vast amount of money. For my part I do not understand what the United States have to do with a question of this kind. If the company can acquire the right of soil or the right to use the soil on each side of the river from private proprietors, as I suppose they may, what is the objection to their digging this tunnel directly under the river without the permission of the United States so long as they do not obstruct the navigation? They are still upon the land of private proprietors when they are under the bottom of the river, because the riparian proprietors own to the center of the stream and own of course all the land under the stream. The United States have only an interest in the water itself for the purposes of navigation as a highway. I do not see the necessity of passing this bill at all. Beside, I am not willing to launch upon this kind of experiment. I should be glad to wait and see whether it is likely to operate favorably elsewhere.

Mr. HENDERSON. At the last session of Congress there were some seven or eight or nine bridges authorized across the Mississippi river, to be built only eight feet above the water. I suggested as an amendment at the time to those bills the present proposition, a proposition that cannot, under any circumstances, if carried out, interfere with the navigation of the stream. This proposition was presented by me and indorsed by six or seven of the most eminent engineers in this country, among them Mr. Latrobe, who said that the scheme was perfectly practicable. At this session of Congress we have succeeded in getting a favorable report from the proper committee. It is perfectly clear that a tubular bridge will not interfere with the navigation of the river nor interfere with anybody's interests. All we desire to do is to give the privilege to a company in the city of St. Louis, if they can do so, to build a bridge of this character. The Senator from Michigan says that this is an untried experiment, and asks my colleague to know whether this thing has ever been tried in any part of the world.

Mr. HOWARD. No; not any part of the world, but in this country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose that rivers are rivers whether they be in the West or in the East. I suppose that the river Thames is very much in some respects like the Mississippi river; that is, at the bottom there is land, and there is water running upon the land. The Thames, I believe, is a much wider stream at the city of London than the Mississippi is at the city of St. Louis. Instead of being two miles wide, the Mississippi river at St. Louis is scarcely half a mile in width. The Thames, I understand, is from a mile and a half to three miles. The tunnel is of greater length than three miles, as I am informed.

If this structure should prove to be any obstruction to navigation, there is a provision in the bill by which it may be abated as a nuisance; but I do not believe that it will obstruct navigation. I think this privilege ought to be granted, and I am very much astonished that there should be any opposition manifested on the part of any gentleman to a proposition of this sort. If there should be any obstruction, it may be prevented at any time, at the inception of the bridge building or after it has progressed. The proposition is to dig a tunnel and to put a tubular iron frame or boxes and a railroad track in the bottom. The tops of these submerged iron cylinders are to be entirely beneath the water in the river; they are to be below the bed of the channel, adopting the language of the Senator from Iowa. Therefore it cannot interfere with anybody. If we can build such a bridge at St. Louis it will not only be beneficial at that point, but the same kind of bridge may be adopted at every other point on the Mississippi, and it seems to me that that ought to be done. The bill, therefore, can do no harm, and it may do much good.

The Senator from Illinois, who fought his nine bridge bills through at the last session, asks my colleague what has become of the high bridge at St. Louis. Suppose the high bridge has not been commenced, is there any harm in building a low bridge? The Senator was very anxious last year to build a low bridge at Quincy.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They have begun that.

Mr. HENDERSON. You have not got it built.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They are at work on it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, let us go to work on this low bridge, entirely beneath the water, in the Mississippi river. Steamers can go up and down the river and not know that a train of cars is passing below. The captain and pilot and engineer will be ignorant of the fact that a locomotive is passing beneath the bed of the river. Why not let us do it?

Mr. President, a Senator suggested to me a while ago, and I think it is true, that however high or however low we build a bridge at St. Louis it will hardly suit the Senator from Illinois. I do not know what exact height my colleague must adopt in order to suit the Senator from Illinois. It would be difficult for me to know and difficult for my colleague. Now, let us have this bridge, if a company organized under the laws of the State of Missouri will go to work and construct it without a dollar of expense to the Government. They do not ask for any money. They are willing to bear the burden. Why not do so, and let it be a post route when they have made it?

Mr. HOWARD. Why can they not build it without a charter?

Mr. HENDERSON. Then all the other companies might have built bridges without charters. Why have a charter for a bridge at Winona? The point is that we desire to have it made a post route, and it ought to be made so just as much as any other construction of the sort.

Mr. HOWE. Let us vote and we will pass your bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I were perfectly satisfied the Senate would pass the bill I would cease speaking, but without a promise on the part of Senators that they will pass the bill I am disposed to continue my remarks.

Mr. HOWE and others. Let us try.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well, I will stop.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was not aware, before I heard the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, that the Thames was so large a stream. I went into the tunnel there some years ago and I did not suppose it was of any practical use. A man who goes to London goes to the tunnel and pays a British shilling to look at the curiosities there. That is all the use that was made of it when I was there. No passengers or freight go through. You might as well attempt to run a train of cars down a precipice as through a tunnel of that kind. You have to go down, I think, about eight feet before you get to the tunnel. The Thames is a brook as compared with the Mississippi river; a very small brook. I cannot state the exact length of the tunnel; but I passed through it once or twice, and paid a shilling to look at it. It is a total failure for practical use. If the people of St. Louis desire to dig a thing of that kind to exhibit as a great curiosity, let them do it; but the tunnel at London has never been of any practical use to that city, and never will be.

Mr. HENDERSON. With the permission of the Senator I should like to ask him if it is true that the Thames has been tunneled at London?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly. I have been in the tunnel; I went there from curiosity.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was never there, and I am not aware that I ever shall be there; but I desire some time or other during my life to be in a tunnel beneath some large stream; and if one is built at the city of St. Louis I shall have the privilege of going in it. [Laughter.] I doubt whether I shall ever be able to see the tunnel at London, for I do not know that I shall ever be able to cross the ocean; but, as the Senator has been there, and can give assurance that the Thames has been tunneled, I have no doubt that the Mississippi can be likewise tunneled. I should like to ask the Senator how long that tunnel is, whether it is a mile, or half a mile, or how long?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not a mile, and it is not half a mile.

Mr. HENDERSON. Did the Senator pass through it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I passed to the end of it, from one end to the other.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to have the Senator's estimate of the distance.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should think about eighty or one hundred rods, but I am not certain.

Mr. HENDERSON. I really thought from what I had read, that the Thames was a very wide stream at London.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a little brook; it is broader there than at some other places.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought very heavy shipping passed up to London on the Thames.

Mr. CHANDLER. They do bring large ships up to a certain point.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, Mr. President, I am satisfied if there is a tunnel there at all. Now I want the Mississippi tunneled.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Thames is a very small brook compared with the Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON. The tunnel is about three eighths of a mile, I think, at London. I passed through it from one end to the other without the slightest difficulty.

Mr. HENDERSON. I only wanted to know that there was such a thing as a tunnel there.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I want to tell my good friend from Missouri that I have no sort of objection to his tunnel under the Mississippi river; but I am afraid he never will have a chance to go into a tunnel there; that is all the difficulty about it. It certainly will not interfere with navigation if it is below the bottom of the river, and I do not suppose anybody in the world will object to that. The only fear I have is that he will not get his tunnel constructed so that he or I can go through. I should like to see a law passed providing for a bridge that can be built, that is practicable. That is the kind of bridge I was for last year. I should like to see such a bridge at St. Louis; but so long as we go on to provide for bridges that are to be away up in the heavens or away down at the bottom of the earth, I am afraid we shall get nothing. I have no sort of objection to them, however, if the Senator's constituents will build them, and it is very little trouble to pass the bill. I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. GRIMES. As the Senator from Missouri is very anxious to see a tunnel and to know all about it, and as the Senator from Illinois is satisfied that there never will be a tunnel built across the Mississippi river, perhaps it would be well for the Senator from Michigan to enter into a more minute description than he has already given us of the tunnel at London. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Maryland can enlighten the Senator from Iowa on that subject. He has been there since I was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

FRANK PUGSLEY.

Mr. HOWE. I move that Senate bill No. 499 be taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 499) for the relief of Frank Pugsley, late a private soldier in company I, of the third regiment of New Hampshire volunteers, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the accounting officers of the Treasury, in the final settlement of the accounts of Frank Pugsley, as a private soldier in company I, of the third regiment of New Hampshire volunteers, to regard the date of his discharge from the service of the United States as of the 24th day of October, 1862, and to compute his pay and allowances as such soldier to that time.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. HARMAN.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (S. No. 598) for the relief of William H. Harman, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to remit and release to William H. Harman the internal revenue tax assessed on five hundred and six gallons of whisky of his manufacture, the same having been destroyed by fire before removal from the distillery and before sale.

Mr. JOHNSON. How did the fire originate? Through his own carelessness?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Committee on Finance were unanimous in reporting the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OBER, NANSON AND COMPANY.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 173.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that Ober, Nanson & Co., of the city of New York, did, on October 18, 1865, deposit in the post office of the city of New York, a sealed package, containing twelve hundred compound-interest notes of the United States, each of the denomination of fifty dollars, dated September 1, 1865, and falling due September 1, 1868, amounting to $60,000, which notes are specifically described by their letters and numbers, the package being directed to Ober, Atwater & Co., New Orleans, and registered, and a receipt given by the postmaster at New York, dated October 18, 1865, and was dispatched through the United States mail, on the steamship Republic, to its place of destination, as certified by the postmaster of New York; and that the steamship Republic, with the United States mail thereon, containing the sealed package, was sunk and lost in the sea on the 25th day of October, 1865, at a point about one hundred and forty miles east of Savannah, Georgia, and no part of the mail on board was saved or recovered. It is therefore proposed to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Ober, Nanson & Co., or their assigns or legal representatives, the amount of the notes supposed to be lost, with the interest thereon to the time of their maturity, at any time within six months after the maturity thereof, if there shall not appear, before such payment, evidence satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury that the said notes have not been lost and destroyed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is to require of them, their assigns or legal representatives, to execute and deliver such bond of indemnity, with adequate sureties, as he may deem necessary, before such payment is made.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at nine o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 18, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 1143) entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States" with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order during the morning hour is the call of States and Territories for bills for reference to appropriate committees, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

TARIFF ON RAILROAD IRON

Mr. MILLER introduced a joint resolution in regard to the tariff on railroad iron; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That it is incompatible with the policy of the protective system of the United States and detrimental to the industrial industry of the country to admit, under any pretext whatever, free of duty, foreign iron, whether manufactured for railroad purposes or otherwise.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. WILLIAMS introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. DELANO introduced a bill entitled "An act to give construction to the act of June 20, 1864, increasing the pay of soldiers of the Army, and to the act of March 3, 1865, amending the several acts calling out the national forces, and to limit the pay to officers' servants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON COFFEE, SUGAR, ETC.

Mr. HISE introduced the following concurrent resolutions in favor of the abolition of the tax on coffee, sugar, molasses, raw cotton, &c.:

In order to relieve the people of the United States in part of the burden of taxation now bearing so heavily upon them—

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) 1. That the tax imposed by existing laws upon coffee, sugar, molasses, salt, and raw cot- ton, whether direct or indirect, and whether those commodities be imported from other countries or produced in the United States, should be totally abolished.

Resolved, 2. That the diminution that may thus be produced in the revenue receipts of the Government should be made up and supplied, if necessary, by a tax of twenty per cent. per annum upon all incomes over $10,000, from whatever source derived, and especially including incomes derived from interest payable upon bonds and other Government securities of the United States, and if this should not be sufficient to supply such deficiency, the residue, if required, should be realized by such an increase of duties upon commodities which are not grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States, such as spices, gums, tropical fruits, &c., as may be necessary for that purpose.

Resolved, 3. That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and are hereby, instructed to prepare and report a bill so modifying or repealing existing laws and containing such enactments as will effect the objects indicated in the foregoing resolutions.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

GEORGE W. KEITH.

Mr. MAYNARD introduced a joint resolution for the relief of Lieutenant George W. Keith; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DES MOINES RAPIDS.

Mr. BROMWELL introduced a joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to survey both sides of the Mississippi river at Des Moines Rapids; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HARBOR AT NEW BUFFALO, MICHIGAN.

Mr. UPSON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress for an appropriation of money to aid in the construction of a harbor at New Buffalo, Berrien county, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PORTAGE LAKE AND RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Mr. FERRY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress for an appropriation of money to improve Portage Lake and harbor in Houghton county, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MINERAL RANGE RAILROAD.

Mr. FERRY also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Mineral Range railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NEW MEXICO.

Mr. CHAVES presented a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, asking an increase of the per diem of members of the Legislative Assembly and an increase of pay of the territorial officers; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHAVES also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, asking that an appropriation of money for school purposes be made instead of the grant of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHAVES also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of New Mexico, asking that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to appoint a board of three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to investigate the losses sustained by the citizens of the Territory during the revolution of 1847 and by Indian depredations from the arrival and formal taking possession of the Territory by General Stephen W. Kearney, and that the commissioners be authorized to report to the Secretary of the Interior the losses thus sustained, in order that those justly entitled may receive their dues; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. HOOPER, of Utah, presented a memorial of the Utah Legislative Assembly, praying for the repeal of an act to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, introduced a bill providing for the improvement of the Mississippi river; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPUBLICAN STATE GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. JULIAN introduced a joint resolution on the subject of republican governments for the States in the Union; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RIDGWAY'S BATTERY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, introduced a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for the trial of Ridgway's battery; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RELIEF OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. PAINE introduced a joint resolution explanatory of a joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army, approved July 26, 1866; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COIN CLAIMED BY VIRGINIA BANKS.

Mr. COOK introduced a joint resolution in relation to coin in the Treasury claimed by certain banks in Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MOUND CITY NAVY-YARD.

Mr. BAKER presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, relating to a navy-yard at Mound City; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGERSOLL presented a like resolution; which was similarly referred.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be to resume the consideration of the following resolutions, on which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NOELL] was entitled to thirty-three minutes:

Resolved, That Governments were made for the people, and not the people for the Government; that every adult citizen of sound mind in any State or Territory has the right to a voice in the formation of the constitution of said State, and in the representation and laws of said State, and that any State which disfranchises any class of its citizens on account of sex is not republican in form, and should be overturned by Congress.

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia is hereby instructed to report to this House, without delay, a bill so amending an act entitled "An act to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia," which passed Congress January 3, 1867, as to abolish the disfranchisement of persons from voting on account of sex.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary are instructed to report a bill calling a convention and authorizing every adult citizen of sound mind in the State of Massachusetts to vote for delegates to said convention for the purpose of making a constitution for said State republican in form.

Mr. NOELL resumed, and concluded his argument begun on last Monday. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BIDWELL. I do not think we ought to waste the few remaining days of the session, and I move that the resolutions be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALL FOR RESOLUTIONS.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be the call of the States and Territories for resolutions in the inverted order, commencing with Montana.

EMPLOYÉS AT GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. WHALEY submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means take into consideration the propriety of including the employés of the Government Printing Office under the joint resolution giving additional compensation to certain employés in the civil Government at Washington.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. LATHAM submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered this House will take a recess from half past four p. m. to half past seven p. m. daily, except Saturdays.

Mr. LATHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PARDONING POWER.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, As the sense of this House, that the Constitution of the United States authorizes the Chief Executive to extend the pardoning power to the case of persons who have been tried by appropriate tribunals and convicted of crime and to none others; consequently all pardons granted to such as have neither been convicted nor tried are without foundation in law, and therefore null and void.

CAPTURE OF JEFF. DAVIS.

Mr. PAINE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the ordinary number of copies of the evidence presented to the Committee of Claims by the claimants for the reward for the capture of Jefferson Davis be printed.

NATIONAL BANK CURRENCY.

Mr. ELDRIDGE offered the following resolution, and demanded the previous question thereon:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be directed to inquire into the expediency of the withdrawal of the national bank currency as rapidly as it can be done without injustice to the national banks, and supplying the place of such currency with United States Treasury notes, and to report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes nineteen.

Mr. ANCONA. Tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. ELDRIDGE and BROOMALL.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Would a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency be in order?

The SPEAKER. The language of the resolution itself so refers it.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to make a separate motion to refer it to that committee.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be done unless the previous question is withdrawn.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-one.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 55, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Branderage, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader, W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eliot, Goodyear, Grinnell, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koonz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Marston, Miller, McCullough, McKee, McLeur, Mercour, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stilwell, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Baker, Baxter, Bergen, Bromwell, Campbell, Chanler, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Henderson, Hiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, Maynard, McIndoe, Moorhead, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Orth, Paine, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Schenck, Shanklin, Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, and Andrew H. Ward—55.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Blow, Boyer, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Ferry, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Higby, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hunter, Jenckes, Jones, Lynch, McClurg, Morrill, Pike, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rousseau, Sloan, Starr, Strouse, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Wright—41.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

CONGRESSIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas a society has been formed by the members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress called the Congressional Temperance Society; and whereas it is contemplated by said society to hold a public meeting on Sunday, the 24th instant, at seven and a half o'clock p. m.: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Hall of the House of Representatives be granted for that purpose to enable members of the House to take part in the ceremonies of that occasion.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. No. 899) relative to collection districts in North Carolina; when the Speaker signed the same.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, from the Committee on the Territories, by unanimous consent, reported a bill to establish a territorial government for the Indian Territory; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

On motion of Mr. KASSON, the substitute which the sub-committee on appropriations were ready to report for the bill referred to them in relation to the organization of the Departments was ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to ask the consent of the House to have the Committee for the District of Columbia discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 234, to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, which, when taken from the Speaker's table, was referred by mistake to that committee. The Senate added some amendments to the bill, and I desire the non-concurrence of the House in those amendments, and to ask for a committee of conference.

No objection was made; and the Committee for the District of Columbia was accordingly discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in, and a committee of conference was asked upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. POMEROY submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That four thousand additional copies of the report on the commercial relations of the United States with foreign nations for 1866 be printed for the use of the House, and one thousand additional copies for the use of the State Department.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted by unanimous consent to Mr. PHELPS for one day.

SALE OF LIQUORS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. ROSS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, instructed to report to this House at an early day a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in the District.

Mr. ROSS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I ask consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be directed to inquire into the expediency of requiring the banking associations organized under the national currency act to retain as a part of their redemption reserve a certain per cent. of the gold interest paid them by the Government on the bonds deposited as security for their circulation, the same to be retained as a basis for the resumption of specie payments; and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I object.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. STEVENS. I move now to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order bill of the House No. 1143, to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. When we adjourned on Saturday there were some twenty bills on the Speaker's table. I ask by what rule this bill has preference over others?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the House proceeds to the business on the Speaker's table the order is exhausted with the day. The gentleman is certainly familiar with the rule when the Chair reminds him of it.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I am familiar with the rule; but I do not exactly see how this bill comes to have preference over others.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule on the subject, from page 34 of Barclay's Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The motion to go to business on the Speaker's table being decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall dispose of it in the following order:

"1. Messages and other executive communications.

"2. Messages from the Senate, and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House.

"3. Bills and resolutions from the Senate on their first and second reading, that they be referred to committees and put under way; but if, on being read a second time, no motion being made to commit, they are to be ordered to their third reading, unless objection be made; in which case, if not otherwise ordered by a majority of the House, they are to be laid on the table in the general file of bills on the Speaker's table to be taken up in their turn.

"4. Engrossed bills and bills from the Senate on their third reading.

"5. Bills of the House and from the Senate on the Speaker's table, on their engrossment, or on being ordered to a third reading, to be taken up and considered in the order of time in which they passed to a second reading."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will see that House bills with Senate amendments have priority.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments to the bill, as follows:

Amend the preamble by striking out all after the word "whereas," in the first line thereof, and insert:

No legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exists in the rebel States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas; and whereas it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established: Therefore,

Amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Be it enacted, &c. That said rebel States shall be divided into military districts, and made subject to the military authority of the United States, as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district, North Carolina and South Carolina the second district, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida the third district, Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district, and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the President to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the Army not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose; and all interference under color of State authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted; and no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district; and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions: Provided, That no sentence of death under the provisions of this act shall be carried into effect without the approval of the President.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That when the people of any one of said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition, who have been resident in said State for one year previous to the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law; and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for electors of delegates; and when such constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the persons voting on the question of ratification who are qualified as electors for delegates, and when such constitution shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same; and when said State, by a vote of its Legislature, elected under said constitution, shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oaths prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this act shall be inoperative in said State.

Amend the title of the bill by striking out the word "insurrectionary" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "rebel."

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in; and that the House ask a committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to lay the bill and amendments upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order while the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is upon the floor, to which he is entitled for one hour.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to a question of order. The other side have more than their fair proportion of lobby members and shoddy contractors upon the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] means by that remark that he desires the Speaker to see that the rules are enforced, the Chair will direct the Doorkeeper to admit none but persons entitled to come on the floor of the House.

Mr. ROSS. I merely ask for a more fair distribution.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will enforce the rules.

The pending question was upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall not find it necessary to occupy so many as fifteen minutes. I am aware that the provisions of this bill have already been discussed very thoroughly by this House, and I have had my full share of the opportunity for discussion. If I did not believe that this bill, in the form in which it now comes to us from the Senate, was fraught with great and permanent danger to the country I would not attempt to resist further its passage.

But I ask the House to consider the position in which we are placed at the present time. I make a remark which seems to be necessary, but not for any party purpose. Yet I cannot reach the object I have in view without stating a fact of a party nature. That fact is that the majority here, representing the majority of the loyal people of this country, has the control of this Government for a period of two years or more. We have every reason to believe that loyal ascendancy in this country will be continued.

In any event, in those two years we ought to be able, and I am sure we shall be able, to reconstruct this Government upon a loyal basis. But in any event, nothing worse can happen to us, and nothing worse can happen to the country, than the reconstruction of the Government on a disloyal basis. If it is to be reconstructed upon a disloyal basis, there are two things which I seek: first, that we who believe ourselves to be loyal to the Government and to the country shall not in any degree be responsible for the reconstruction of this Government in the hands of disloyal men; and secondly, that if it is to be the fortune of this country that it shall be reconstructed upon a disloyal basis and by the agency and under the control of disloyal men, then I desire to postpone that calamity to the latest day possible.

I say, then, that if during this session, or during the existence of the Fortieth Congress, the majority act according to its means and its opportunities, it cannot fail to secure the reconstruction of these ten States and their restoration to the Union through the agency of loyal men and by loyal means.

My objection to the proposed substitute of the Senate is fundamental, it is conclusive. It provides, if not in terms, at least in fact, by the measures which it proposes to reconstruct those State governments at once through the agency of disloyal men. And I say that great fact, which if this substitute shall be concurred in will be near to us, ought to restrain us from any action in favor of this measure, though we be compelled on the 4th of March next to part without having done anything whatever for the restoration of those States.

I do not believe that the people of this country are prepared to accept any measure of restoration which looks to the reintroduction of disloyal men, first, into the governments of the ten States, and then into the Government of this country. If that be their feeling, I say it is our duty, standing here with power in our hands to-day, to resist the reconstruction of these ten States through any such agency or with any such certain result near at hand.

I pass over the provisions in the second section of this substitute, by which all power is put into the hands of the President of the United States, with the remark that the House bill gave authority to the General of the Army, of which by the amendment he is deprived. The civil rights bill, if it be enforced by the President according to its terms and its intention, he being the Commander in-Chief of the Army, is sufficient for the protection of liberty, of persons, of rights, and of life throughout these ten States. And if that be so, the necessity for the passage of a military bill, with power in the hands of the General of the Army, for the government of the southern States arises from the fact that the President thus far has failed to exercise the power conferred on him by the civil rights bill. By that remark I do not say whether he is guilty or not of any neglect of duty. But he has not used the power which the laws of the country have placed in his hands for the protection of the loyal people of the ten States recently in rebellion. Until you have some assurance that the vast powers which he already possesses are to be exercised in behalf of loyalty and justice and life, will you clothe him anew, will you give him additional power, will you give to him entire and unrestricted control of the Army, when he now has power enough to do that which we desire to have done, if he did not for some purpose, or under some influence, neglect to exercise the authority which he already possesses?

I come now to that provision of the proposed substitute which is even of graver import—I refer to the provision found in the fourth section, wherein we give up to the present leaders of the South the business of reorganizing State governments. Under the substitute no one man, from Jefferson Davis, if he be released from Fortress Monroe, down to the humblest soldier that trained in the armies of the rebellion, or practiced the nefarious business of a guerrilla, is deprived of the right of suffrage.

The fifth section of this bill proposes, in effect, if not in terms, universal amnesty and the restoration to political power, as far as the franchise is concerned, of every man in these ten States. The pending constitutional amendment deprives certain persons of the right to hold office; but the power of this Government and the power of the States is not in the right of individuals to hold office, but it is in the immensely superior power of the people to elect to office, and in the assurance that the men elected to office will represent the men by whom they are elected. By the bill as now amended you transfer the reorganization of these ten States to the rebels; you give to rebels the chief places in the work of reconstruction, possessing, as they do for the time being, the means of influence, of trust; and submitting all authority to them, you expect them to reconstruct loyal State governments.

Now is the time when we ought to cherish and nourish the loyal sentiment of the people. We ought to see to it that the men under whose guidance these States are to be reconstructed shall be loyal men. We ought to exclude from the business of reconstructing South Carolina, for example, the Orrs, the Pickens, the Magraths, and all those who participated in the rebellion, and seek out the loyal men. Let them be the standard-bearers of the Republic; let them rally the loyal people, black and white, to the standard of the Union. But on the other hand, this bill leaves the whole matter of reconstruction open to anybody and everybody in the southern country who may choose to engage in the work. The result will be that in these several States the ancient rebel party will resist reconstruction for a time; but when they see that it is inevitable in a particular State they will take the business into their own hands, and they will reconstruct governments according to their own ideas, with their own men in places of power and trust. They will then come here with every condition precedent fully satisfied. Every black man will be secured in the right to vote. When we have passed this bill the controlling rebel party will organize the States soon or late in their own interest. They will have the control of the militia; they will have the control of the polls; and do you expect that the negroes, unaccustomed to political struggles, timid, careworn, broken down in spirit to some degree by the institution of slavery, can in five or ten years overthrow these rebels and deprive them of the places of power which they possess, even though the negroes and the loyal whites should be a majority in those States?

Hence, Mr. Speaker, by this bill in its present form we shall exchange power to reconstruct these governments in the interest of loyalty and accept in its place mere paper; we exchange authority for promises; we neglect to do our own duty in the work of reconstruction in the vain hope that men who have been rebels will do in the interest of loyalty and the Government that which we ourselves, intrusted with vast powers for the public good, are either afraid to do or incapable of doing.

These, in brief, are my objections to the passage of this bill. So great, so enormous do the objections appear that by no process of reasoning can I overcome them. I see the three million newly-emancipated slaves of the South surrendered over again to the control of their former masters, when we have the power, by following in some form of language the bill which we passed here with reference to Louisiana the other day, to reconstruct these governments through the agency of loyal men, in the interest of loyalty, and thus to make this Government compact and firm as one great republican State with many members, in which everywhere loyalty shall be triumphant and treason shall be made odious.

Mr. STEVENS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I am much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding the floor to me. I regard this, sir, as one of the most important measures that has ever been submitted to the House of Representatives. I have been looking on here now for nearly two years, watching and listening to the discussions and action upon the various propositions submitted for the reconstruction of the rebel State governments. It has, I thought, been understood all the time that when these States were reconstructed it should be done upon a loyal basis; that the loyal people of these States should rule and control the State governments. I have expected and believed this Congress, this radical Congress as it is called, would never reconstruct these State governments until it was done upon the true loyal basis. But what do I find? I find in this bill which has come from the Senate universal amnesty and universal suffrage.

Sir, is this to be the basis of reconstruction? Some gentlemen say to me this bill does not enfranchise the rebels. I can neither read nor understand the English language if it does not enfranchise every rebel in the southern States, and for one I will never cast my vote to place the government of these States in the hands of rebels so that they may exercise power over true loyal men. Pass this bill and where are your loyal men? White and black, they go under. Yes, sir, I repeat they go under.

Non-concur in the amendment of the Senate! Some gentlemen say it will endanger the bill and we will get nothing. I would rather have nothing if these governments are reconstructed in a way that will place the rebels over Union men. I prefer the defeat of the bill rather than to have it pass in this shape. Pass the military bill as I voted for it the other day, and as it was submitted by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] That is the first thing to be done in the way of reconstruction. It is to place those States under the iron rule of the military. Send officers and men there who will do justice and protect the loyal men, white and black. When that's done the Louisiana bill or something like that can be brought forward, and then reconstruction will take place upon a solid loyal foundation. Then, I say, place these governments under military rule. Protect the loyal men until they can organize a government of undoubted loyalty.

Where do you find the word "loyal" in this amendment as it comes from the Senate? It admits rebels to the ballot. Do that, and where is the Union element in the South? Where are they in my State? We have disfranchised the rebels there, and now this enfranchises them. Pass this bill as it came from the Senate and you bring down ruin and destruction upon loyal Tennessee. After we have disfranchised rebels in Tennessee you come in now and enfranchise the rebels in ten unreconstructed States. You inflict a lasting injury upon us. This Congress told us to enfranchise none but loyal men. That was what this Congress told us last summer. They said, "We cannot recognize your State governments without that is done, for otherwise we have no guarantee the governments will be kept in the hands of loyal men." Now, the proposition is brought forward to put these governments in the hands of disloyal men. Let me say rather than pass this bill, recognize, in the name of God, their present State governments, as this would not be more than mere paper, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has said. It is an act of despotism upon the Union men.

Do not, I implore you, legislate in that way. I appeal to gentlemen of this Congress. Are you determined that loyal men shall control these States, or are you in favor of giving the power into the hands of disloyal men? If you are in favor of loyal men, then I ask you to legislate like men, and not to pass a law in ambiguous words and phrases that no one can understand.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to deprive my own race of voting, but I do propose to vest the organization of the government in the hands of true loyal men, though, as the late lamented President Lincoln said, there be only five thousand in the State. I propose that they shall control the State governments whether they be white or black. Place the government in the hands of loyal men alone, let them organize it, and when they have done so if they choose to admit the other class to vote it is then their privilege to enfranchise them, and we are not responsible.

Mr. Speaker, pass this bill and it is the final stroke, the death-blow to the Union men and the men of color in the South. They will have no protection, their rights will not be recognized. I hope the Union party of this House will not inflict this punishment upon their friends in the South. Give them a chance to protect themselves, and leave it to them to say when the disloyal people shall be allowed to participate in their State governments.

The amendment of the Senate will read very well if you strike out the word "people" and insert "loyal men," having it read "that all shall be entitled to vote except those who were engaged in the rebellion." I entreat gentlemen to make the language plain; to say what they mean by loyalty, and what constitutes disloyalty. Make it plain and use no ambiguous words.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I will occupy but a short time. This House a few days ago sent to the Senate a bill to protect loyal men in the southern States. That bill proposed but a single object, the protection of the loyal men of the South from the anarchy and oppression that exist and the murders which are every day perpetrated upon loyal men, without distinction of color. It did not attempt the difficult question of reconstructing these States by establishing civil governments over them. The House thought it wise to leave that question until a Congress which is to come in could have a long time to consider the whole question. The bill which we passed had not in it one single phrase or word which looked to anything but a police regulation for the benefit of these States.

Now, what has the Senate done? It has sent back to us an amendment which contains everything else but protection. It has sent us back a bill which raises the whole question in dispute as to the best mode of reconstructing these States, by distant and future pledges which this Congress has no authority to make and no power to execute. What power has this Congress to say to a future Congress, when the southern States have done certain things, you shall admit them and receive their members into this House?

Sir, it is idle to suppose that we are not assuming what is impudent in us, and what must be fruitless. What are we attempting to do? The first grand amendment that strikes the eye in this bill is that we take the management of these States from the General of the Army and put it into the hands of the President of the United States. No man doubts the constitutional authority of Congress to detail for particular service, or to authorize others to detail for particular service particular officers of the Army. But our friends who love this bill love it now because the President is to execute it, as he has executed every law for the last two years, by the murder of Union men, and by despising Congress and flinging into our teeth all that we seek to have done. That seems to be the sweetening ingredient in this bill for many of our friends around us. I do not of course believe anything about these nightly meetings. I think the report on that subject is all fabrication. But, sir, if there were such things, this substitute that has come from the Senate would be the natural offspring of such an incubation.

What is the fifth section of this substitute? Why is it incorporated here? It is that we may pledge this Government in future to all the traitors in rebellion, so that hereafter there shall be no escape from it, whatever may happen. While they are not before us, while this Congress has nothing to do with them, we are promising them, we are holding out to them a pledge that if they will do certain things therein mentioned they shall come into this House and act with us as loyal men. I know there is an impatience to bring in these chivalric gentlemen lest they should not be here in time to vote for the next President of the United States, and therefore gentlemen postpone the regular mode of bringing up that question, and put it upon a police bill in order that it may be carried through so as to give them an opportunity to be here at the time they desire. Sir, while I am in favor of allowing them to come in as soon as they are fairly entitled, I do not profess to be very impatient to embrace them. I am not very anxious to see their votes cast along with others to control the next election of President and Vice President; therefore it is that my impatience is not so great as that of others.

Mr. Speaker, there was a time when some people, and among them that good man who is now no more, carried, as I thought, the idea of reconstruction by loyal men rather to the extreme. The doctrine was once held that in these outlawed communities of robbers, traitors, and murderers, so far as the real State was concerned, it consisted of the loyal men of the community and that the others counted for nothing. I do not say that I hold this doctrine, not being myself an extreme man, [laughter:] but it was held by gentlemen all around me, and it was held by the late President of the United States. But now the doctrine seems to be that the State is composed of disloyal men and traitors. We ignore wholly the loyal element in all the States, and we are hurrying to introduce these disloyal men among us.

Mr. Speaker, why is it that we are so anxious to proclaim universal amnesty? Is there danger that somebody will be punished? Is there any fear that this nation will wake from its lethargy and insist upon punishing by fine, by imprisonment, by confiscation, and possibly by personal punishment, some of those who have murdered our brothers, our fathers, and our children? Is there any danger that such a spirit will be raised in this nation, a spirit which sleeps only here, and which no other nation ever before allowed to slumber? If there is such danger, if some punishment is dreaded by these men, does not this proposition protect them? The President has already, as far as he is able, pardoned these rebels, and restored to them their property which we confiscated by the act of 1862, and he has done it in defiance of law.

Last Saturday a gentleman came to me from Alexandria with one of the judges there, and told me that a gentleman had obtained some $17,000 worth of property under a sale by the United States of rebel property, but the rebel owner had come with the pardon of the President and the order for the restoration of the property in his hand; an ejectment suit had been brought and beyond all question a recovery would be had. Sir, as far as I can ascertain more than $2,000,000,000 of property belonging to the United States, confiscated not as rebel but as enemy's property, has been given back to enrich traitors. Our friends whose houses have been laid in ashes, whose farms have been robbed, whose cattle have been taken from them, are to suffer poverty and persecution, while Wade Hampton and his black horse cavalry are to revel in their wealth, and traitors along the Mississippi valley are to enjoy their manors. Sir, God helping me and I live, there shall be a question propounded to this House and to this nation whether a portion of the debt shall not be paid by the confiscated property of the rebels. But, sir, this prevents it all. This is helping the President to take from the people that which belongs to them and giving it to confederate traitors.

Now, sir, I have only a word or two more to say. If there is an order of a committee of conference, in two hours a bill can be framed and reported to this House free from all these difficulties, free from all this extraneous matter, which shall protect every loyal man in the southern States and do no injustice to those who are disloyal. But, sir, pass this bill and you open the flood-gates of misery; you disgrace in my judgment the Congress of the United States. I do hope some effort will be made to protect without endangering them.

I will only add that I will not call the previous question now. I think it proper that the subject should be discussed, but at four o'clock I shall call the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire the Chair to limit me to ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to an hour.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand that I am entitled to an hour, but I propose to yield the floor to other gentlemen at the end of ten minutes. And in these ten minutes I shall direct myself to calling the attention of the House to the precise purport, object, and scope of the fifth section of the proposed substitute of the Senate, and to ascertain whether it is open to the objection which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWWELL] have alleged against it.

In the first place it demands of the people of the rebel States that they shall form a constitution of State government conforming in all respects to the Constitution of the United States. Next, that after that constitution is formed it shall be submitted for ratification to all the male citizens of the State, without any regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude; no one is to be excluded from voting unless the convention which frames the constitution shall do as Tennessee did, disfranchise some of the citizens for treason and rebellion. Just the same authority, and just the same mode of exercising that authority, is conferred upon these ten States that Tennessee possessed and exercised. And I reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STOKES] by saying that Congress no more guaranties under this bill the right of any rebel in any State to vote than did Congress guaranty to the rebel in Tennessee the right to vote.

Then after the State constitution shall have been framed by the convention, submitted to the people, and adopted by votes of all the male citizens, except such as may be disfranchised by reason of participation in rebellion, it must be submitted to Congress for examination and approval. And being brought here for examination and approval, I submit that what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] have said is mere bugaboo and scarecrow, because the inquest is left in our hands, plenary and absolute. And that inquest goes to every fact and every circumstance connected with the formation of the new constitution. If in the judgment of Congress any State constitution presented to it for examination and approval shall enfranchise rebels and endanger the stability of the State government by permitting it to fall in the hands of rebels, Congress I assume with all confidence will not approve it. But that question is one for the Fortieth Congress or some other to determine; and, as a member of the Fortieth Congress, speaking for myself alone, I am not afraid to trust the subject to their decision.

After the constitution shall have been approved by Congress, what then? I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the constitutions of these States are to be examined separately, and not altogether. And if the new constitution of the State of Arkansas, for instance, shall be approved by Congress, then her people are to elect a Legislature under that constitution, and then it is required that that Legislature shall adopt the amendment to the Constitution proposed by Congress at its last session and give its assent to it in a valid and legal and binding form.

And what is next to be done? Thereupon Arkansas is to elect Senators and Representatives. And whom may they elect? Can they send rebels here? Not so; they must send those here who can take the oaths prescribed by law; to take "the iron-clad oath," as it is called.

Therefore I submit, in all candor, that by passing this bill Congress will not take one step toward placing the government of these ten States in the hands of the rebels. Congress is still to hold the entire subject in its control for subsequent inquest, examination, and approval. And for Congress to be afraid to do this much is not to distrust the rebels but to distrust itself, and the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Massachusetts is nothing but a distrust of Congress itself, and when the gentleman from Pennsylvania talks about Congress disgracing itself by passing this bill I would call his attention to the fact that the action of the Senate does not justify his assertion. If it is proper to refer to the action of the Senate upon this subject, I would say that there was not one Senator there in any way connected with the Radical or Republican party who voted against it. It at all events met the approval of every member of our party in that body who voted. If there were any who entertained similar views to those of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, they did not stand up and express them, or record their votes against this amendment.

And I say here that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for a conference in which this whole matter may be fixed up in two hours, is a delusion. It is very easy for gentlemen to talk about fixing up in two hours that toward which they have not been able to do anything in two months. A proposition now to send this subject to a conference committee is simply a proposition to do nothing, nothing whatever at this session of Congress. And I beg gentlemen on this side of the House and on all sides, who look to any measure that shall guaranty a republican form of government in the rebel States with universal suffrage for loyal men, to vote for this bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House does not embrace all upon the subject of reconstruction that I should be glad to have embraced in it. But, sir, it seems to me that this is the last opportunity we shall have during the present session of Congress to enact anything upon this subject; and I feel the importance of some affirmative action upon the part of Congress with which to antagonize the policy established by the President of the United States. Therefore, notwithstanding this bill falls short of what I desire, I shall vote to concur in the amendment of the Senate; and, sir, before I am called upon to cast my vote, I purpose to state some reasons upon which I will base it.

The Committee on Reconstruction reported to this House a bill, which was passed and sent to the Senate for the purpose, as they told us, of affording protection to the loyal people of the rebel States. We are now told that the bill thus reported by that committee and passed by this House will not afford that protection. Why, then, did that committee report it to this House, why did they ask us to pass it, if it was not sufficient in its provisions to afford the protection the committee told us it would? We took the committee at its word, and passed the bill for the purpose of protecting the loyal people of the southern States, as the committee assured us it would protect them. And now, after that action, after we have followed the lead of the committee, we are told this morning by the chairman of the committee on the part of the House, [Mr. STEVENS,] and another member of the committee, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] that the measure will afford no such protection, and that it is a mere piece of legislative mischief. I cannot understand this singular conduct of the members of the committee. I cannot see how these two positions are to be made to harmonize. I leave that task to those who occupy them. I believe to-day, as I believed when I voted for the bill on its passage, that its provisions will afford the protection designed by those who support it. Therefore I shall vote for it again to-day.

Now, sir, I wish to call the attention of the House, and especially the members of the Committee on Reconstruction who are opposing this bill, to one feature of the case as it is presented to us; and I also call the attention of the eloquent gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STOKES] to the same point. The third section of the bill as it passed the House, and as it remains in the bill as returned from the Senate, reads as follows:

That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, anything in the constitution and laws of the so-called States to the contrary notwithstanding; and all legislative or judicial proceedings, or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of said military tribunals, and all interference by said pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be void and of no effect.

Now, sir, one of the rights in the enjoyment of which the people of the southern States are to be protected is the "right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." This is one of the rights which the military forces of the United States are to protect or enforce in the insurgent districts. Now, sir, let the loyal people of Virginia, white and black, assemble in convention in such manner as they may elect, frame a constitution of government republican in form and fact, disfranchise such portion of the rebel population as they may see proper; secure by their constitution the right of suffrage to white men and black men loyal to the Government of the United States, and present their constitution to the Congress of the United States for acceptance, and they will find friends enough here to receive their petition, consider their constitution, affirm their action, and guaranty to the State of Virginia the republican government thus formed by the true loyalists of the State. This bill presents a liberal plan to the loyal people of that State upon which they may act under the protection of the military arm of this Republic in the formation of a State government of just such character as may to them seem best.

But it may be said, as was remarked by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] that the loyal people will not be left thus to act of their own will, because the local authority is left in the hands of the rebels, who now possess the local governments organized under the direction of the President of the United States. This is a mistake. One of the leading features of the bill—I refer not merely to the preamble but to the body of the bill—is to declare that in all the rebel States there now exists no legal governments. If no legal government exists there, I want to know by what authority any person administers or can administer the powers of a local civil government there to the oppression of the loyal people? The governments there are declared to be set aside by the very terms of the bill; and, sir, it is the first proposition ever presented to Congress in which this body and the Senate have declared the illegality of governments established by the President of the United States in these States. This alone is sufficient to commend this bill to every one who refuses to acknowledge the usurpations of the President in the establishment of the governments whose existence is destroyed by this bill. It is made the duty of the military force there to protect the people in the enjoyment of their rights. The door is open wide enough to admit the loyalty of the rebel States to complete and permanent control of their several States. The setting aside of the presidential organizations which pretend to govern, while they really oppress, the loyal citizens of those States, is a great point gained. We should not throw this opportunity away because it does not bring to us all that we desire. We may now gain very much, and all in the right direction. We may now relieve the loyal of the oppression of the disloyal, overturn the pretended governments of the rebel States, place the ballot in the hands of all of our friends, and teach those who have been basking in presidential sunshine that Congress is yet a power which can and will control the work of reconstruction.

Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why we should adopt this amendment of the Senate. If gentlemen will carefully read the case of Luther vs. Borden, 7 Howard's Reports, page 43, they will find there is to-day lodged in the hands of the persons occupying the position of Governors in the rebel States power to present to the President a case in which the Supreme Court of the United States could declare the recognition by the President of existing governments there binding upon all departments of the General Government.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.

There was no objection.

• Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let me read from the decision of the Supreme Court in the case to which I have referred:

"It rested with Congress, too, to determine upon the means proper to be adopted to fulfill this guarantee. They might, if they had deemed it most advisable to do so, have placed it in the power of a court to decide when the contingency had happened which required the Federal Government to interfere. But Congress thought otherwise, and no doubt wisely; and by the act of February 28, 1795, provided, that 'in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the Legislature of such State or of the Executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States, as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection.'

"By this act the power of deciding whether the exigency had arisen upon which the Government of the United States is bound to interfere is given to the President. He is to act upon the application of the Legislature or of the Executive, and consequently he must determine what body of men constitute the Legislature, and who is the Governor, before he can act. The fact that both parties claim the right to the government cannot alter the case, for both cannot be entitled to it. If there is an armed conflict, like the one of which we are speaking, it is a case of domestic violence, and one of the parties must be in insurrection against the lawful government. And the President must, of necessity, decide which is the government, and which party is unlawfully arrayed against it, before he can perform the duty imposed upon him by the act of Congress."

Suppose these governments in the so-called rebel States should so oppress the loyal people as to compel them to resort to arms against the power which oppresses them, and the Legislature of the State, or in its absence the Governor, should call upon the President for assistance, and he, acting under the authority of the act of 1795, should send troops there to aid in suppressing the alleged insurrection and maintain order, I ask you whether in so doing he might shield himself behind the act of 1795, and the interpretation given to it by the Supreme Court, and place it beyond our power to question successfully the regularity of his proceedings. The act of 1795 is the law of the land to-day. Congress has not as yet revoked the power conferred on the President by its terms. A case may at any time arise in one of the rebel States which would afford the President an opportunity to carry the question of his power under the act cited to the Supreme Court, and secure a decision in support of his position. The passage of this bill will close this door against the President, and yet gentlemen hesitate to pass it because it does not contain everything which they may deem desirable. This is not wisdom.

I repeat, in conclusion, that although this bill does not attain all I desire to accomplish, it does embrace much upon which I have insisted, and seems to be all we can get at this session. It reaches far beyond anything which the most sanguine of us hoped for a year ago. It secures equal suffrage to all loyal men; it sets aside the pretended governments which now abuse power in the rebel States; it insists on the ratification of the constitutional amendment, under the operation of which all the rebels who now occupy official position in the States affected by this bill will be rendered ineligible to office, State or national; it presents an affirmative policy on the part of Congress hostile to that of the President; it demonstrates the ability of Congress to agree upon a given line of future action; and finally it reserves to Congress jurisdiction over the whole case when the people of any southern disorganized State may present a constitution and ask for admission to this body as a part of the governing power of the nation. There is too much of good in this to be rejected. I will vote to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote very cheerfully for the bill as it comes from the Senate; and I shall neither ask pardon of nor offer apology to any man in this House or out of it for the vote that I shall record. My object in rising now is not so much to vindicate the bill as it comes to us from the Senate as it is to expose the animus with which gentlemen assail the bill here, coming as they do from the Reconstruction Committee.

There is not one word in this bill that has not at one time or another received the sanction of that committee, save the provision for general and equal suffrage; and yet gentlemen stand here now and undertake to eat up their own words and ask the House to eat up theirs. What is there in the bill except general suffrage that has not received the sanction of that committee? I ask the gentlemen to answer that question to their constituents.

In the first place, all that precedes the fifth section of the bill has been reported by the Reconstruction Committee to the House and voted for by the members of that committee and by an overwhelming majority of this House. As to the fifth section, every word of it, in substance and in fact, except the provision for general and equal suffrage, as I said the other day when I was addressing the House, was voted for in that committee by as unanimous a vote as ever a measure received in it; it was reported, with the exception named, by the committee to this House at its last session; it went to the country, and gentlemen here, many of them, are indebted to it for their seats in this Hall as Representatives-elect to the Fortieth Congress. That bill only differs from this in this respect, that this prescribes the mode and manner in which persons shall vote, and gives the privilege of the elective franchise to the whole body of the people. In so far, there is not a republican member of that committee who dare say, in view of the record made up in the committee, that the amendment did not meet his approval, not one. What was the bill as it came to the House last session? Why, sir, it was this—and let the press publish it to the people when they undertake to make up this issue between us—that whenever the constitutional amendment, recited in the fifth section of this bill as it comes to us from the Senate, should have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and any State lately in insurrection should have ratified the same and should have conformed its constitution and laws thereunto, such State should be entitled to Senators and Representatives in Congress when duly elected and qualified upon taking the oaths required by existing law. Those are the very words of the bill which was reported to the House by that committee, and they are incorporated in the bill as it comes to us to-day from the Senate.

In addition thereto the Senate has added another provision, that the people of such rebel States, by their constitutional government, shall secure equal and impartial suffrage, without regard to race or color, among all the male citizens of said States respectively, excepting such as may be disfranchised on account of their participation in the rebellion or on account of felony at common law. Beyond that there is no difference in the fifth section and the bill reported by the Committee on Reconstruction. Are gentlemen to stand here and say that because the Senate has thus far improved, in the direction of exact justice, on the bill of the Reconstruction Committee, the Senate amendment is now to be rejected, and that they must go to the country saying that they cannot trust themselves, crying out in the agony of their souls to the listening heavens the words of St. Augustine, "Save us from ourselves?"

Save us from ourselves! What is incorporated in this bill? That no one of those States shall attain political power save and except upon the solemn approval by the Congress of the United States of what they may do. Cannot gentlemen trust the Congress to decide whether a State has complied with the requirements of the bill in such form as will secure the protection of each by the combined power of all?

One word more. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] says that this bill proclaims a general amnesty. I mean no disrespect to the venerable gentleman, but I challenge the contradiction of enlightened and impartial men when I say that this bill confers neither general amnesty nor special amnesty on any man whatsoever.

But, say these gentlemen, "We wish to protect the freedmen." I can only say that you have a most extraordinary method of giving them protection. If they are to be protected by the national arms, they can only be protected under the authority of the national law; and here is a bill to secure their protection under the law.

Look at the provisions of the bill as it went to the Senate and as it has returned from the Senate. It provides that until those States shall be reorganized so as to receive the approval of the Congress of the United States the protection of the whole people shall be exclusively under the care of the national Government through the national Army. Gentlemen want to protect the freedmen; and yet they are not willing to intrust the protection of the persons and property of the freedmen to the gallant commanders of our armies who followed our flag through the storms of battle for the four years past.

But, say gentlemen, it confers this power upon the President. That was a singular remark for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] to make. Why, sir, it clothes the President with the same power with which he was invested when the gentleman voted for the first four sections of this bill in substance and in fact as it stands to-day. To be sure, the other bill provided that the General in command of the Army should detail Army officers; but all officers of the Army are under the command of the Commander-in-Chief as constituted, not by an act of Congress, but by the supreme law of the land. You cannot repeal that provision of the Constitution. The President is constitutionally Commander-in-Chief of our armies, and as such under our law he will be the controlling power in directing the execution of this law according to his own good judgment. There is a discretion lodged in the President in that behalf under the Constitution which Congress can no more interfere with than can the Executive interfere with Congress in the exercise of the discretion lodged in it as to what measures it shall pass or what measures it shall not pass.

Now, if these gentlemen propose by any kind of misrepresentation or abuse, and by the aid of a hireling press either at the North or at the South, to drag me into any recognition of their new-fangled notions, that the executive power of this country is lodged or is to be lodged anywhere else than where the Constitution has lodged it, I give them notice now that I am not to be so dragged. The Constitution of the country says, "The executive power shall be vested in the President of the United States of America." Where, then, did you vest the executive power when you passed this bill the other day? You did the very thing that we propose to do by repassing it to-day. The provision is that the President of the United States, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, shall see to it, in the mode and manner directed by this bill, that all persons in those lately insurgent States shall have the protection of the law.

But what more? We further say by this bill to the people of those States, "If you wish to exercise the right of local self-government, do equal and exact justice, remodel your constitutions, adopt that constitutional amendment which to-day has the sanction of twenty-five million freemen in this land, and you will be restored to your equal place and to all your political powers in the Union as States. Until you do this, you shall be subject to such form of government as will best secure all men, without respect to race, color, or previous condition, in their persons and property."

For myself I had rather that my right hand should forget its cunning and that my tongue should cleave to the roof of my mouth than to find myself here so false to my own convictions, and so false to the high trust committed to me by that people who sent me here; as to vote against this bill. Not that I think this the most perfect form of legislation, but I know that the defeat of this bill to-day is really a refusal to enact any law whatever for the protection of any man in that vast portion of our country which was so recently swept over by our armies from the Potomac to the Rio Grande.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I shall support the bill as it came from the Senate; and in the five minutes allotted to me I desire to state very briefly my reasons. It is quite evident that we must pass this bill or else pass no bill of this character during the present session of Congress; and, in my opinion, if this Congress fail to pass a bill which shall protect the loyal people of those rebellious States, it will justly be reprobated by the whole country.

I find in the bill as it comes from the Senate substantially the same provisions as were contained in the bill as reported by the Reconstruction Committee. The change from the General of the Army to the President of the United States in the provisions in regard to detailing officers I do not regard as a substantial change; for, as was remarked by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM,] we all know that whatever details the General of the Army might make must be made in conformity and in subordination to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army. The whole difference in that respect is this: that in the one case it would require the positive order of the President nullifying the order of General Grant making a detail, while in this case it will only require the negative action of the President to array himself against a law of Congress. But in either case he would array himself against the act of Congress and be equally culpable and equally guilty.

Then there is no danger in that respect under the bill as it comes from the Senate and as it passed the House. The loyal people of these southern States, white and black, are appealing to us day by day for protection. The cries of the slaughtered victims of rebel barbarity are resounding in our ears day after day. The military commanders in those States tell us that there is no protection there for life or property except we clothe the military with power to protect. Now, shall we let this Congress pass away without giving our friends and the friends of the Government the protection they need?

Now, in reference to the provisions of the bill as it comes to us from the Senate in regard to the formation of State constitutions, I can find no just fault with it, because it leaves to Congress, whether the Fortieth or the one succeeding, to which the constitutions are presented for approval, the power to review every vote and every act connected with the convention that framed the constitution, the constitution itself, the adoption of it, and the Senators and Representatives elected under it. We cannot bind that Congress by any act of ours; this bill does not seek to bind Congress. It expressly declares that the constitutions of the States shall first be reviewed and indorsed by Congress before they shall go into operation.

This bill provides a platform ten steps in advance of the platform upon which we went to the people last fall. We then only expected the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution proposed by Congress at its last session and the formation of constitutions republican in form, which should give the people there the right to send loyal men here as Senators and Representatives? But by this bill we extend impartial suffrage to the black man, universal suffrage; we provide that the black man shall take part in the formation of the constitution. Now, what more can we require? What difference does it make whether A, B, or C participate in the making of the constitution provided the right kind of constitution is made, one which secures equality and justice to all?

Mr. BLAINE. I now yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I shall vote to concur with the Senate in its amendment to the bill of the House. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] that the bill, as amended by the Senate, does not contain all I would have embraced in such a bill. It is not the bill for reconstruction which I would myself have approved if I could, uncontrolled by other and conflicting opinions, have had the framing of a bill for the purpose. But it is a bill upon which we can agree, if we can agree upon any bill whatever upon this subject during the remainder of the present Congress. It is the only bill which there is the slightest possibility of our passing.

Believing, therefore, that every motion to commit this bill, to amend it, to ask for a committee of conference upon it, together with all other dilatory motions whatever, will have no effect except to defeat this bill, whether so intended or not, I shall oppose every such motion and aid those who would have the House come at once to a direct vote upon the substitute proposed by the Senate.

We are told that in a very short time—I think the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] indicated two hours as the necessary limit of time for the purpose—we could have a bill framed which would reconcile all conflicting opinions. That is a most extraordinary intimation to come from that quarter. Do gentlemen remember, and does the country recollect, the history of reconstruction in the present session of Congress? On the 4th day of December, the very day on which we reassembled here, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who during the last session of Congress was the chairman of the Committee on Reconstruction on the part of this House, arose in his place and offered a concurrent resolution continuing that committee with the powers conferred upon it under the resolution of last session. That looked like business. But what was done? That gentleman permitted the committee, as we are well informed, to remain without being called together at all. Instead of calling it together, on the 13th of December the gentleman on his own motion introduced a measure, not from the committee, known as the North Carolina bill, looking to enabling these rebel States to organize governments and come back into the Union.

That bill, however, was not taken up for action until near the middle of January, and then after a debate which, continued at intervals, lasted until the 28th of that month, it was referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, which had never yet had a meeting nor been called together by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. What are we to infer from this? Why, that there were in this House those who were determined that the Reconstruction Committee never should meet, who were determined that whatever might be done should be done under other lead and outside of that committee. But the House took a different view of the subject, and having raised, upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself, a committee, of which he was the honored head, resolved that this question and all other questions of this kind should go to that committee. It was thus committed, not sent back, as the gentleman said the other day, to that committee, for the bill had never been before the committee; it was not the bill of the committee. How soon the committee was called together I am unable to say, but I suppose very shortly afterward; for we find that the committee made a report on the 6th of February, this very month, of what has been called the "military bill," which, with modifications, is the bill now before us.

Thus, then, the Committee on Reconstruction, raised and empowered to act on this subject specifically upon the first day of the session, the 4th day of December, was never found presenting anything to the House for its action until fully two months or more afterward, the 6th of the present month, when there remained only some twenty-one working days of the session for all action upon this subject. And now, having consumed nearly the whole available portion of those twenty-one days, acting as we are under the apprehension of a presidential veto, we are at a stage in the proceeding when whatever we do must, in order to be effective, be done to-day or to-morrow.

Now, sir, I am one of those who believe we ought to do something. I believe we ought to declare to these rebel States, as we do by this bill, that they shall be put under martial law and held by the strong hand to keep the peace until they have complied with whatever conditions are imposed upon them. But while we do this, I think it equally important to announce to them, to announce to the country, to announce to our constituents as the completion of the whole platform upon which we go before the nation, the terms which we require of them. Those terms have been sufficiently explained and are well understood. I should be glad to dwell upon them, but it is unnecessary to do so.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] says, however, that after all the imposition of these terms rests only on the authority of an act of Congress, and cannot be binding upon any future Congress. Does the gentleman remember that at the last session he himself reported from the Reconstruction Committee a bill reciting the terms upon which, on the adoption by these States of the constitutional amendment, they would be permitted to come in? Was that binding on future Congresses? No more than this. Here we go further. We say that we will offer them no such terms now. We have offered them those terms and they have been rejected. Now, we say that they shall adopt the constitutional amendment; it shall become a part of the Constitution; it shall be approved by their people; their constitution shall be submitted to Congress; they shall allow universal suffrage; and after complying with these and all the other conditions imposed by this bill they are not yet to be admitted until Congress, looking over the whole ground, shall be satisfied that, in spirit as well as in letter, they have done everything that properly entitles them to be restored to their representation in Congress.

Yet we are told that this is a plan devised by the Johnson men. This bill as now amended by the Senate has been spoken of as a measure the passage of which would be disgraceful to Congress. According to this view, the Senate, I presume, is already disgraced by having yielded to the President. But, sir, I want gentlemen to understand that those who support this bill as it comes from the Senate are not to be terrified by any such denunciations from acting according to their sense of duty. Such denunciations and flings are unworthy to be thrown out by any man standing on this floor as a Republican against other Republicans.

Mr. GARFIELD: Mr. Speaker, this bill starts out by laying its hands on the rebel governments and taking the very breath of life out of them. In the next place it puts the bayonet at the breast of every rebel in the South. In the next place, it leaves in the hands of Congress, utterly and absolutely, the work of reconstruction. Gentlemen here, when they have the power of a thunderbolt in their hands, are afraid of themselves and propose to stagger like idiots under the weight of a power they know not how to use. If I were afraid of this Congress, afraid of my shadow, afraid of myself, I would declaim against this bill, and I would do it just as distinguished gentlemen around me have done and do declaim against it. They have spoken vehemently, they have spoken sepulchral against it, but they have not done us the favor to quote a line or the proof of a single word from the bill itself that it does any one of the horrible things they tell us of. They tell us it is universal amnesty, and there is not a line in the bill that will maintain the charge. They have told us it puts the government into the hands of rebels. I deny it, unless you are a rebel and I am a rebel. If we are rebels, then it does put it into the hands of rebels, but not otherwise.

Oh! but they tell us it surrenders to the President because it tells him to detail officers and men. Gentlemen, I want this Congress to give its command to the President of the United States, and then perhaps some impeachment hunters will have a chance to impeach him. They will if he does not obey. They may anyhow, but at least they will have a chance then to find new, plain, and definite acts of impeachment, and we can go forward with the work.

Mr. Speaker, there are some men who are too far above me for my poor comprehension. There are some gentlemen who live among the eagles on the high mountain peaks, beyond the limit of perpetual frost, and they see the lineaments in the face of freedom so much clearer than I do whenever any measure comes here that seems almost to grasp our purpose they rise and tell us it is all poor and mean and a surrender of liberty. I remember this was done to us at the last session when everybody knew that if the Republican party lived any longer it must live by the strength of the constitutional amendment, and when we agreed to pass it the previous question was waived to let gentlemen tell us it was too low, too mean, too unworthy, too unstatesmanlike. I will remind the House we did vote for it, and by the help and fatuity of Andrew Johnson and his party we carried the country upon it. And now when we have that and more, gentlemen are here to tell us it is all low and poor and mean.

The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] said one thing which I wish to call attention to. He complained the Senate have forced upon us a question of reconstruction we did not want to touch. I fear the gentleman does not want to touch the question of reconstruction. I do, and I believe the American people want to touch reconstruction.

Mr. BAKER here addressed the House. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BLAINE. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] four minutes.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot, of course, in four minutes undertake to discuss a question of this magnitude. The time, however, is long enough to enable me to indicate the grounds upon which I shall vote for the Senate amendment.

Sir, I see in this proposition what I believe the deliberate judgment of the American people will regard as ample guarantees for the future loyalty and obedience of the South. The people of the loyal States, in a voice distinct and clear as a clarion, uttered through the ballot-box at the autumnal elections of last year, declared that they were willing that restoration should proceed upon the basis of the adoption of the constitutional amendment. That amendment having been refused by the South, Congress now proposes to enforce that demand of the people and to add to the conditions then proposed fresh terms as additional guarantees for security, justice, and equality.

What are the proposed conditions? They are: first, that the southern States shall adopt a constitution in conformity with the Constitution of the United States; second, that that constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the people of the State, without distinction of race, color, or condition; third, that such constitution shall guaranty universal and impartial suffrage; fourth, that such constitutions shall be approved by Congress; fifth, that the State shall adopt the constitutional amendment; sixth, that the constitutional amendment shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States. All this is required to be done before representation is accorded to the States lately in rebellion, and then no representative presenting himself for admission can be received unless he can take the test oath.

These terms embrace, in my judgment, every guarantee, every safeguard, and every check which it is proper for us to demand or apply. Upon these foundations we can safely build, for by them we retain the final control of the question in our own hands. What more is necessary? I know not unless it be indeed necessary, as seems to be insisted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOWWELL,] that in order to restore loyalty and obedience in the southern States we must reduce the masses of the white people in those States to a condition of slavery. Sir, I opposed that doctrine by my vote on the bill for the reorganization of the government of Louisiana, and, God helping me, I will continue to oppose it to the end. I fearlessly submit my action upon that point to the review of my constituents and to the calm and just judgment of the people of the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. One minute.

Mr. BLAINE. I will now call the previous question.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The gentleman has only one minute; will he give it to me?

Mr. BLAINE. Go on.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I shall vote against seconding the previous question.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not yield any of my time for that.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The gentleman has yielded.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not yield.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I appeal to every member if he did not yield. [Laughter.] Well, I shall vote against him. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to lay the bill on the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] will not call the previous question until we have a chance to say a word on this side. Every word that has been said so far has been on the other side of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. After seconding the previous question the gentleman can have a chance.

[Cries of "Order."]

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on laying the substitute on the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 119, not voting 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Latham, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trowbridge, Andrew H. Ward, Winfield, and Wright—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Branderage, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Kelso, Ketcham, Kootz, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Kootz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, Maynard, McIndoe, McKee, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert C. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—119.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Conkling, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Hale, Asahel W. Hubbard, Denas Hubbard, Hunter, Jencks, Jones, Kerr, Kuykendall, Lynch, McClurg, Morrill, Myers, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Sloan, Starr, Stillwell, Strouse, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Wentworth—31.

So the substitute was not laid on the table.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question; and being put, there were—ayes 77, noes 51.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. BLAINE and ELDRIDGE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 64.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. LE BLOND. On ordering the main question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 103, nays 60, not voting 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Kelso, Ketcham, Kootz, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stillwell, Stokes, Thayer, Francis

Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—103.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Banks, Baxter, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Branderage, Bromwell, Campbell, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Donnelly, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Paine, Phelps, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trowbridge, Andrew H. Ward, Wentworth, Williams, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—60.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Bidwell, Blow, Conkling, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hunter, Jencks, Jones, Lynch, McClurg, Morrill, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Starr, Strouse, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, and Henry D. Washburn—27.

So the main question was ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 912) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868," with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 576) entitled "An act relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court," in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866;

An act (S. No. 347) to change certain collection districts in Maryland and Virginia; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 159) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owner of the yacht Mayflower to change the name of the same to that of Silvie, and to issue an American register to the steam yacht Glance.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House to bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (S. No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866;

An act (S. No. 347) to change certain collection districts in Maryland and Virginia; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 159) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owners of the yacht Mayflower to change the name of the same to that of Silvie.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1099) entitled "An act providing for the election of a Congressional Printer," with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settling of accounts of disbursing officers, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The SPEAKER. The main question having been ordered, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who reported the original bill, is entitled to the floor to close debate.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to make a suggestion. It is now ten minutes after four, and in twenty minutes the recess will take place. There are gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to speak, and they would like as a matter of course to have a few moments for the purpose of arranging matters, &c.—

Mr. STEVENS. I will say that I do not expect we shall take a vote before the recess, and in the mean time the gentlemen on the other side can arrange as they please, as I shall give a portion of the time to that side of the House.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wished to suggest that we take the recess now.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; go on now.

Mr. STEVENS. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to vote upon this measure without stating my reasons, so that my constituents may understand why I vote against so many true and faithful men in this House. I am the more particular in casting my vote now for the reason that I shall not be in the next Congress to vindicate what I do at this time. This bill, as has been stated, is a very important one, and its importance is made an argument to justify precipitate action upon it without examining its details or determining what the effect of it is going to be upon the communities that are to be affected by it.

This bill, in the first place, repudiates all semblance of civil government in these rebel communities. It substitutes for them military rule. So far it is all right. It then empowers the people in those rebel communities to establish civil governments, but it neglects entirely to provide any machinery by which these governments are to be established. No military law or military rule exists governing elections for delegates to form conventions and frame constitutions; and if any did exist it should be at once abrogated. This country cannot have civil governments established under military rule.

Now, in order to have peaceable elections held in these rebel States you must have some law to govern those elections. If you allow this bill to go into operation as it now stands, without making any amendment of its provisions, and permit these elections to be held, as they must necessarily be held under this bill, under the authority, control, and regulation of the rebel governments in those States, there will be no security whatever; and you will have the elections in New Orleans held under the control of Mayor Monroe and the mob which he used to such fell purpose last summer. That is the entertainment to which this bill invites us.

Now, I admit that in civilized communities it might not be necessary to take so many precautions. Go into the new Territories of the West, where order has been already established by the pioneer settlers; where the school-master, the missionary, and the preacher are to be found; where the habits, manners, and customs of the eastern States have already become established, and the people, without any enabling act, can meet together, hold elections, frame and adopt constitutions, and present them to Congress for approval, and they will be such constitutions as we can agree to approve. But that cannot be done in these rebel communities; and I should think we had had enough of their attempts to do it. We all know there is no order, no justice, no liberty, no security prevailing there now.

And what provision is made for it in this proposed substitute of the Senate? Sir, it is simply an act to legalize the reconstruction policy of President Johnson. And we are told that we must adopt it, for it is the very last opportunity we will have to legalize that policy. Now, what is the use of us going through this farce? Nearly two years ago the President himself went through precisely the same operation. He ordered elections to be held in these rebel States. He did better than it is proposed we shall do, for he prescribed who should open the polls, who should make the returns, what classes of men should vote and what classes should not. What better is this bill, then, than the work of President Johnson? Sir, it is far worse; it substitutes anarchy for the bogus governments which the President has established there.

If any gentleman will point out to me wherein I am in error in this respect I will yield to him for that purpose. What authority is there conferred by this bill to determine who is to preside at the polls or to say to Mayor Monroe when he shall come up to vote, Sir, you are disfranchised for participation in the rebellion, and therefore you cannot vote? Who is to give protection to the black man when he comes up to vote? If in New Orleans, Mayor Monroe and his July mob. It is well understood that although in many of these communities four fifths of the people are peaceable and well disposed, yet the other fifth are outlaws and guerrillas and robbers and cut-throats, and they control affairs in those communities. We say to the black man, Go and vote. But it is a mere mockery to say so to him, for he cannot get within half a mile of the polls.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would suggest to the gentleman that if affairs are so bad in Tennessee, he better take steps to have her again turned out of the Union.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I will say what my action will be upon the question of reconstruction when it comes up here. Whenever the government of any one of these States is already in loyal hands I will vote for her restoration. What I mean by loyal men is that they shall be our friends. Mark the expression, "our friends;" Republicans, the men who saved this country, the men who voted uniformly and consistently for men and money to put down this rebellion and save our Government. They are the men who must have the power in these States before I will vote power into their hands. It is not enough for me that they shall adopt the constitutional amendment. They have nothing to do with the constitutional amendment, for it never has been submitted to them.

They are not political States. When we shall have adopted this constitutional amendment it will be by the action of the loyal States. The reconstruction of these rebel States is another matter altogether. For myself I say that when we have declared these communities without government, when we have sent the bayonet there to enforce order, we have an efficient system of government so far as the present is concerned, because you have the Federal courts, and you have the bayonet there to enforce obedience to those courts; then if you will propose a measure like the Louisiana bill, under which a peaceable election can be held and a peaceable government inaugurated, I will vote for it.

You will have no governments de facto there to regulate and control elections pursuant to the Senate amendment, because this bill very properly repudiates those governments. Hence anarchy, violence, and bloodshed will follow any attempt on the part of Unionists to establish loyal governments.

Mr. STEVENS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BROMWELL.]

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, if we concur with the amendments now proposed by the Senate to this bill, what more shall we do than to license those who have the political control and consequently the entire power to use it for evil or for good as long as they please, under the mere penalty that until they form a certain constitution they shall not be represented here?

Mr. BLAINE. Are they not under military government all the while?

Mr. BROMWELL. If we adopt this measure in its present form we shall have the satisfaction of going home and saying to the people that we have invested President Johnson with the task of protecting the Union people there by the military; and we have given him the rebel governments he set up to make up by their civil administration what his military agents may choose to leave undone; but as to the disqualification for office of any man whom the constitutional amendment proposed to disfranchise, as for any law guarding the rights of loyal men, white or black, as for any registration law, as for any officers to execute such law, as for any machinery of government whatsoever, all these things are just as the rebels choose to make them; they will control these things till they see cause to change their course, or till the constant subjugation of the loyal people shall have crushed all semblance of a loyal element among them.

This is the sum and substance of the amendment which the Senate has had the honor of attaching to this bill. I must be permitted to say, Mr. Speaker, that I expected better things; that the people expected better things. Military government, sir, is a bad enough resort in any country and under any circumstances, and I never would resort to it except from the dire necessity of the case. But to a military bill we add these provisions which only tie up the hands of Congress. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] tells us that the Fortieth Congress is a Congress he can trust. I ask the gentleman where he obtains any information that the Fortieth Congress will ever have anything to do with this question of reconstruction after we have thus consigned the whole work to the rebel authorities to take their own time to consolidate their power? The bill is a carte blanche to the rebel organizations to go on.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the gentleman want me to answer him now?

Mr. BROMWELL. Not now; but you can as soon as I am done.

This bill says, go on under the penalty of non-representation; under the penalty of having military officers among you, go on. If you have trodden upon the loyal white men and black men before you mustered and led forth your rebel armies, and have trodden on them since, go on; and the loyal men shall be under your power hereafter to the end.

You have heard what the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. STOKES) said. The loyal voice of Tennessee on this question is to the loyal North as the voice of a brother's blood crying from the ground. He tells us it will be a death-blow to the loyal people of that State.

They tell us we shall guaranty republican governments in these States. But, sir, I say that we do not do well in guarantying a State government that ties up our own hands against securing the rights of our own loyal citizens. Why talk of guarantying republican governments in States where we cannot guaranty life, limb, or property to the individual citizens?

I regard this as a flank movement by which is to be brought about that darling scheme of certain politicians: universal amnesty and universal suffrage. Whether it end in universal suffrage or not one thing is certain, it is universal amnesty.

This is what we are to say to the people by this bill. My opinion is the Congress of the United States should take measures to put an end to these things in the South. It should provide for organization, as in the Louisiana bill. It should so frame the whole organizations that the loyal men should not only be protected, but should handle and control the machinery in forming these loyal governments. I hold, sir, that as a conqueror this Federal Government has not only the right, but more, it is bound both in law and justice to protect the loyal people there. There is not a man in the House, Democrat or Republican, who will not tell you he supported the war. There is not a man who will say we did not encourage the loyal men of the South to place themselves on the side of the Government. And now, after they have done so, shall we desert them? That is the question. Are they to have no helping hand, no protecting power in the State governments under which they are to live during the pleasure of their rebel masters? What to them is military power if their hands are tied under rebel Legislatures and rebel Governors like General Forrest and General Beauregard, men who have commanded the legion that carried fire and destruction all over the fields of the South, and particularly to the homes of loyal men?

With these objections to the bill hurriedly stated I will only add I am opposed to concurring in any such amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DONNELLY] for ten minutes.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I should hesitate to trespass on the time of the House if I did not feel the overwhelming importance of the action of this day to the whole country. I shall try to state the objections I have to the pending Senate amendment in as few words as possible.

Upon its face, Mr. Speaker, this amendment concedes everything we could ask. It concedes protection to the loyal people and suffrage to the black men; it is, however, upon its face alone that it makes these concessions. It—

"Keeps the word of promise to our ear,
And breaks it to our hope."

The protection which it promises is a temporary protection. It is to cease as soon as civil governments are organized under the provisions of this bill.

So soon as such a framework of government is set up, the military protection which this bill provides is to be withdrawn and the loyal people are to be left to the mercy of the civil governments so created. So far, then, as this military protection is concerned, it is therefore in its nature temporary and can be of but little benefit to the loyal people of these States. The bill which passed the House and was sent to the Senate provided for military protection to the loyal people until such time as the Congress might conclude it could with perfect safety be withdrawn. This bill fixes a limit to the presence of our armies.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House at half past seven o'clock resumed its session.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the Senate substitute for the House tariff bill with amendments; which were ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order for Thursday next after the morning hour.

ERRORS OF BUREAU OF STATISTICS.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Whereas the report on the statistics of the United States compiled by Alexander Delmar, director of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, compiled under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with the request of the Secretary of State, for transmission to the United States commissioner general for the Paris Exposition of 1867, abounds in evidences of ignorance, carelessness, and willful misrepresentation: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State be requested to withhold from circulation any copies of said report that may be in their possession or within the control of either of them.

Mr. COOPER. I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MARSTON asked and obtained leave of absence for one week for himself.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. SPALDING. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House in relation to the government of the insurrectionary States, upon which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is entitled to the floor; and he has yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DONNELLY.]

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, in my remarks previous to the House going into recess, I took the ground that the protection afforded by the amendment of the Senate was to be temporary in its character and would cease the moment that civil government was created in those States. We are therefore referred back to that civil government to ascertain what character of protection it will afford to the people of the rebellious States. It would be emphatically, Mr. Speaker, a government of rebels; I say a government of rebels, because although the amendment which has reached us from the Senate contains the words, "Except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion," that disfranchisement has to come from the rebels themselves, and surely there is no man upon this floor weak enough to suppose that they will so disfranchise themselves. Therefore I say that the civil governments to be created under this bill will be substantially rebel governments. It is true that as a counterpoise to the rebel voters we find a proposition in the bill for universal suffrage, and we are expected to find a remedy for the disloyal vote in the vote of the loyal black population of those States.

Mr. BANKS. It is not universal suffrage.

Mr. DONNELLY. It is at least impartial suffrage without regard to race or color. Now, sir, that black vote might, when properly educated to legislation, form such a counterpoise to the rebel element; but at the present time, untaught, unskilled in legislation, unaccustomed to the exercise of the rights of citizenship, it will find itself placed in competition with the intellect of that class who created this great rebellion, who waged war for four long years with a courage and an endurance equal to our own, and with a statesmanship and a diplomacy perhaps more than equal to our own; and who can doubt the result? A people just snatched from barbarism are to be placed in competition with those able, bad men, and we are expected to find in their vote a sufficient counterpoise to rebel influence to secure the safety of the country.

I have no doubt that sooner or later that rebellious population must take part in the government of those States; but the question that we are to solve is, shall that participation be immediate or shall it be gradual? Shall it be a participation coming in at the end of one, two, three, or five years, and coming in upon a basis of established loyalty, or shall the spirit of rebellion take possession of the State governments from the very first.

In most of those States the loyal element is small; it will need cherishing, it will need nourishing; but if we pass this bill we hand that loyal element, small in numbers, weak in character, into the control of the men who now control those State governments, and the black vote, undeveloped, uneducated, would be, in such a case, a mere appendage to their power.

Turn to Tennessee. If it had been possible that that State should have been organized under such a bill as this, instead of the gallant and loyal gentlemen who now sit upon this floor as Representatives from that State we would have men here devoted to the interests of the rebellion. The vote of the loyal one third of the people of Tennessee would have been overwhelmed by the disloyal vote, and by this time the loyal sentiment of that State, as a State of this Union, would be utterly destroyed.

Take the case of Arkansas. There we have, perhaps, a still smaller loyal element struggling to the surface, an element which, if it is afforded time, so that the black vote can be educated—trained, as it were, to this work of suffrage and legislation—and brought to its support, will eventually be able to counteract and overcome the rebel power; but consign that State by the operation of this bill to the control of the men who made the rebellion, and at once your loyal element disappears and dies. For one, sir, I believe that the passage of this bill will be the death of the loyal element in all those rebel States.

I cannot refrain from quoting in this connection the quaint, grotesque, but most striking illustration made by Mr. Lincoln on this very question in the last speech he ever made. "If you would have," he said, "a chicken from the egg, you must not commence by smashing the egg—you must hatch it." So of the loyal sentiment of the South. There may be enough there to eventually save those States, but we must cherish, nourish, and develop it; and surely that cannot be done by delivering it into the custody and control of the rebels.

But we are told that this bill provides that the next Congress will have some control over this subject, and that surely we can trust that Congress. Sir, we cannot thus shift the responsibility from ourselves; we must do our whole duty and not take it for granted that a future Congress will make up for our shortcomings.

Pass this bill, and the very men who now use this argument will tell the members of the Fortieth Congress that they are bound in honor to carry out its terms and conditions, and must do so against the force of their own convictions. Have we not had just such arguments made to us during this session of Congress? Have we not been told that because at the last session we passed the constitutional amendment now pending, that we were at this session bound to ask nothing more than what is contained in that amendment? We cannot be too careful in passing laws touching the action of a future Congress. Although the legal obligation may be as nothing, the moral effect is great and may be pernicious.

But we are told that unless we pass this bill now we can get nothing at this session of Congress; we are driven into the last end of a short session of Congress, and under the dread of a Presidential veto we are told that we must take this bill or nothing. Sir, I say to you that if this bill is to prove disastrous to the loyal people of the South we cannot be too slow in passing it; better temporary anarchy than congressional reconstruction built on a basis of enduring evil.

But, sir, this argument of haste amounts to nothing. Practically this Congress continues after the 4th of March so long as it chooses to sit, even until the 4th of March, 1869, for the Fortieth Congress is in its political features and almost in its personnel substantially a continuation of this Congress. We are, then, to sacrifice the loyal people of the South to gain three or four weeks of time; nay, we may by this precipitous legislation sacrifice the great interests of the entire country.

It may be that while we deliberate a few more lives may be sacrificed to the Moloch of the rebellion; but much as we must all regret this, what will be the loss of those lives compared with the destruction of the loyal element in the rebel States and the long list of calamities that may be inflicted upon loyal men and upon the best interests of the nation itself for years to come under the operation of this bill? Sir, although it is not in our power as legislators to prevent crime, we can at least so frame our laws as to place the disloyal and vicious population under the feet of the loyal and faithful. To reverse this is for the lion to play the sculptor, and we can expect no result but the supremacy of rebellion and the destruction of loyalty in all that vast region of country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND.]

Mr. LE BLOND. I accept, sir, the crumb that is given to me, not by my master, but by the master, and shall offer a few remarks in reference to the proposition now pending.

I do not propose to harmonize the discordant elements upon that side of the House.

Mr. BUCKLAND. Would you if you could?

Mr. LE BLOND. My friend asks me whether I would if I could. I think I would, sir; and I would harmonize them in such a manner as I am sure would bring back peace and happiness to the country. I would not harmonize them with the views of either of the extremes upon that side of the House; but I would harmonize them in keeping with the Constitution and the spirit of our Government and not in violation of and in conflict with its spirit.

Now, sir, it is quite impossible in the short period allotted to me to elaborate an argument upon the positions taken by gentlemen upon the opposite side of the House; but, sir, I must be permitted to comment upon the theory of my colleague from the Columbus district, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.] That gentleman undertook the other day to enlighten this House, and he proceeded with his remarks with more gravity, more complacency, more assurance, I venture to say, than did ever Solon or Lycurgus when giving laws to the people. That he thoroughly satisfied himself no one who knows him can doubt for a moment. That he has convinced anybody else is exceedingly questionable.

But let us look at the position which he takes to justify the legislation proposed. He starts off by admitting that unless war exists at this time in the States lately in rebellion this legislation is without justification or constitutional authority. Then he says that war does exist in these States, and in his language it exists in this way: War, says he, is of two kinds, "war flagrante and war cessante;" and he says that war of the latter description exists in this country, war cessante. Now, sir, I undertake to say that such a state of war as he has built up for himself—for himself and for nobody else—does not exist and never did exist in this or any other country, and he cannot find it in any book unless he may have written one for this purpose. In some of the old authors this sentence may be found, "bellum flagrante non dum cessante," and it is from this sentence he gets his idea and creates his novel state of war, created for the occasion. Sir, there is no war. And if there is no war, there is certainly no justification for the course that is being taken here. War cessante is not war at all. I repeat there is no war in this country. The war ended when the southerners laid down their arms and sued for peace. There has been no war in this country since then, and I trust there never will be again. This is the merest clap-trap, this doctrine which has sprung from the imagination of my friend from Ohio, who seeks to be considered the great constitutional lawyer of this House, yet who presents himself before the American people with this ridiculous proposition to justify his action on this floor.

But, Mr. Speaker, to the bill. Sir, this bill, like all the others upon reconstruction, starts with a preamble asserting the existence of certain facts, which in my judgment and which I know do not exist. The preamble reads thus: "Whereas no legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exist in the rebellious States." When gentlemen put forth this preamble what do they admit? They admit that those States are without law and without any form of government, either legal or otherwise, that they have no law and no government to control and direct actions of the people. And here let me say that this bill is quite as infamous, quite as absurd, as the bill that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who is chairman of the Committee on Reconstruction, contends for and hangs so tenaciously to. It confers all the powers that that bill gives. It confers all the powers that the most radical could claim consistently. You must bear in mind that you assert in the preamble that these States are without law, without government, without any form of government. You then say in the third section that "it shall be the duty of each military officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all the rights of persons and property." You give to the military, who are to regulate the local affairs in these States, all the powers necessary to control the rights of person and of property, because they are without any law or government, as you declare in your preamble, and you confer upon them the power necessary to govern and control these people. The power is absolute and exclusive.

Now, sir, is that any less than what was given in the military bill proposed by the chairman of that committee? It embraces it all. You say, in both cases, to the military, "You are to control the people of those States absolutely, not only in their personal rights, but also in the exercise of the elective franchise; for being without law the military is to prescribe the law under which the people are to vote, there being no other power to prescribe rules."

Yes, say gentlemen upon that side of the House, "but the President of the United States has the appointing of the military officers who are to control the people of those States." Sir, that may be a matter of some consequence in the minds of gentlemen upon that side of the House; but to me it is a matter of no consequence who is to be the man that is to establish military despotism in any State within this Union or to establish a power that is to absorb all other powers.

Whoever appoints these officers lays the foundation for a military despotism that must destroy our Government, and I envy not the man who is to exercise the powers attempted to be granted by this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is to pass Congress. All the powers of the Union men of this House cannot obstruct its passage. The die is cast, and the subversion of constitutional liberty willed by the usurpers.

In conclusion, let me warn gentlemen that there is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue and where hope no longer restrains the action of men. That point is at hand or near by.

Conclude your works of destruction by impeaching the Executive and you have lopped off one arm of the Government. Circumscribe the judiciary by your net-work of laws and you have paralyzed one of its main branches; but to dismember this Union, either by armed force or usurped legislative power, is the destruction of constitutional liberty, and to establish military governments in ten States is to establish military despotism over all of the States of this Union that will justify the friends of liberty to a resort to arms.

Mr. STEVENS. I now yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I never understood fully the value of a minute until I was taught it by this Congress. The practice seems to have been established here that the most important measures that come before this House are to be discussed in the least time. Some gentleman upon the other side of the House is assigned the floor, and as upon this occasion, partitions out ten minutes to one, eight minutes to another, four minutes to another, and I believe as low as two minutes to another, for the discussion of a measure which is to abrogate the Constitution in ten of the States of this Union. Ten minutes are allotted to me. I shall not stultify myself by pretending to make an argument in these ten minutes.

I shall content myself with denouncing this measure as most wicked and abominable. It contains all that is vicious, all that is mischievous in any and all of the propositions which have come either from the Committee on Reconstruction or from any gentleman upon the other side of the House. I am not quite so certain as my friend from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] that when this bill shall have become a law, should it ever become the law, a state of war will not exist. In my judgment, this bill is of itself a declaration of war against the southern people; it is at least a revival and continuation of the war, which we had hoped was forever ended. If it is bello cessante now from the time this bill shall pass and become a law, it will be a war actual and flagrant which will I fear involve that whole people, white and black, in one common ruin.

Now, what is this measure? I do not wonder that there is some difference of opinion upon the other side of the House. I should wonder if there was not. For as you approach the final consummation of the purpose which you have had in view of virtually declaring the Government of our fathers a failure, I wonder not that you differ; that you have some controversy among yourselves, some misgivings. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGG] told us the other day that the measure then before the House similar to this was commencing at the right point; that it was to perform exactly the purpose which they desire; that it was commencing at Appomattox Court-House, where General Grant left off. The gentleman would have more truly expressed the fact, in my judgment, if he had declared that it was commencing exactly where Robert E. Lee left off. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is bold enough to declare that it is the purpose to concur in the revolution which was inaugurated by secessionists and carried on by them against the Government of the United States, and which he says he hopes to see perfected in making this a true and perfect Republic.

It was well said by my friend from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] that this bill starts out with a falsehood. It does, indeed. It declares that there are no legal governments in these States. It not only starts out with a lie, but every provision of the bill is a lie; it is one consummate, unmitigated lie from beginning to end. It will, if it shall become a law, subject the people of ten States of this Union to the unwritten, undefined, and undefinable will of a brigadier general of the Army. It will substitute for our written Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof the arbitrary, uncontrolled, and unlimited will of a military despot. It matters not who he may be; how pure, how upright; I care not if he be the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, he will be, he can be nothing less, than a military despot. Gentlemen may sugar-coat the pill if they can on that side or this side of the House by saying that it is all to be under the control of the President of the United States. Sir, I respect the President of the United States; I honor him in his position and office, and for many things he has done; but, sir, God never made the man or the angel whom I would trust with the liberties of the people unlimited and unrestrained by a written constitution. No man is so pure, so just, so generous, so unambitious that I would trust the lives and liberties of a great people in his hands without having his power controlled or restrained by some written constitution or law.

But the effect of this bill is to abrogate the Constitution of the United States, to overthrow all government and commit all the rights, all the vast interests of the people of those States subject to the supreme will and pleasure of a military despot. I cast no reflection upon any particular man or officer who may be deputed to hold position and exercise power under this bill; I make no charge against any one, for I know not who may be appointed. But I do say that whoever he may be, he will, he must of necessity, be a tyrant. He cannot fill the position and be anything else. The work prescribed, the powers to be exercised can only be performed and exercised by tyrants. And yet gentlemen affect to believe this is a restoration of the Union; this is the preservation of the Republic; this is the constitutional guarantee of republican form of government; this is the consummation of all our hopes, the reward for all our sacrifices in the fearful struggle through which we have passed. What good can gentlemen expect from this measure? what protection of the rights, interests, lives, and liberties of the people not secured by your Constitution? What laws do you expect are to be administered? Has your constitution of government proved itself in years gone by so defective and inefficient that to-night, in the presence of the civilized world, in this American Congress, you are going to declare that it is a sublime and miserable failure? You declare nothing less than this; you declare even more than this, that in the last four years you have become so much in love with military rule and military authority that you will now substitute for your written Constitution, the best the world has ever seen, exclusive military authority. Is this what gentlemen desire? Can it be that they have come to this? Is it strange that they doubt, that they hesitate, that they cannot come up with entire unanimity to the support of this terrible, this monstrous proposition? It would be strange indeed if they could.

Do gentlemen expect that the people on whom this despotic, this tyrannical measure is to be imposed will submit tamely? That they will bear uncomplainingly this kind of rule for an indefinite period of time? Do you expect that quiet, good order, peace, and amity will come out of such laws and impositions as this? I tell you, gentlemen, that if blood does not flow again, if war does not again rage in this land, it will be no fault of this measure or of those who support it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. STEVENS. The pressure for speaking is so great that I propose that, by unanimous consent, thirty minutes more be allowed for debate, and that then absolutely the vote shall be taken.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there are gentlemen on this side who desire to speak on this bill. If the gentleman will consent to postpone the vote until after the morning hour to-morrow, allowing this evening to be occupied in debate, giving this side of the House its fair proportion of the time, the vote can be taken to-morrow without the least difficulty from gentlemen on this side. All that we ask is a liberal allowance of time for debate. I hope the gentleman will consent to the arrangement I suggest. As yet, out of two hours debate, but twenty minutes has been allowed to this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. Debate is now exhausted, except the remaining fifteen minutes of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who, having reported the bill, is entitled to close the debate. It will require unanimous consent to extend the time for thirty minutes or for the evening.

Mr. HISE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is almost unnecessary for me to ask the indulgence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but I desire an opportunity to occupy some short time—

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HISE] desire?

Mr. HISE. Twenty or twenty-five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. In order that there may be no trouble, I propose that one hour longer be allowed for discussion, extending the debate till nine o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. That will do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] proposes that debate be extended until nine o'clock, and that then the vote be taken.

Mr. ANCONA. The question had better go over till to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ANCONA] objects.

Mr. LE BLOND. By permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will say that in the single hour which he proposes to allow, gentlemen on this side cannot be heard. I am sure that the gentleman will reach a vote much more quickly by permitting reasonable debate upon this bill than by hastening it in this way. I hope the gentleman will, on consideration, allow the question to go over till to-morrow, permitting this evening to be occupied in debate; and thus, when the time comes, the vote can be taken without any obstacle from this side of the House.

Mr. HISE. I ask the indulgence of the House to occupy some twenty or thirty minutes on this question. I have no desire to obtrude myself upon the House; but this question is now presented in a new aspect.

Mr. SLOAN. I will object to any extension of time for debate unless speeches be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not wish to have any contest about this matter; and I will now propose that we meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow morning and take the vote immediately after the reading of the Journal. This arrangement will leave the whole of this evening for debate.

Mr. LE BLOND. I think that will be acceptable to this side of the House.

Mr. SLOAN. Under this arrangement I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STEVENS. I now yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.]

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, I have not participated, as the House will bear me witness, in any of the discussions upon the subject embraced in this bill during the present session. I do not propose to obtrude my views to-night upon this House with any expectation that what I can say will change the opinions of members, but I desire as well as I may in the time allotted me to say upon what reasons I place my vote in favor of this measure.

I find, sir, on looking over my country ten States without governments that secure life, liberty, and property. I find in those States twelve million people, where law and order have ceased to reign, and have given place to disorder, anarchy, and confusion. I observe in those States a division of the people into two classes of different races, one once a race subjugated to the other, but, thank God, under the dispensations of His providence, made free, and free forever. And, sir, I find existing there an alienation of feeling between these two populations so unhomogeneous that this once subjugated race is not protected in its rights and privileges.

I find, also, the white race divided by the line of loyalty—one part of it, and that the greatest in numbers, hitherto disloyal, and the other loyal. I find the heretofore subjugated race and the loyal white people subject to the arbitrary and uncontrolled will of those who have heretofore been and now are the dominant party. I find, sir, the governments set up in these States for this population incompetent to protect life, liberty, and property, or to give such security for these as freemen ought to have. I ask myself what, under such circumstances, ought to be done? I discuss not to-night the right or the power of the President to establish such governments as are there; whether they be legal or illegal affects not the observations I have to make. For argument's sake I will admit these governments to be legal; but I say if they are legal they do not give such security as the American Government must give in order to have American institutions respected.

What, then, is to be done? The earth drinks daily the blood of murdered citizens, the property of men daily is destroyed by illegal combinations of men, and the wicked, blood-thirsty passions of malignant men break through the feeble barrier of cruel authority and trample down the rights of freemen. What, then, is our duty? The people of the United States have said to these people heretofore, You may return to the Government of the United States and be restored to your former privileges if you adopt an amendment to the Constitution submitted by the American Congress to the States for ratification. Twenty-five million people have approved and ratified this plan, and these insurgent rebel States have spurned this plan and hurled it forth in defiance, and have set up lawlessness and rapine and murder throughout their borders. Thus I find my country.

I find here to-night the American people, by their Representatives, charged with the duty of establishing governments that will secure life, liberty, and property in these disordered and chaotic communities. Are we incompetent to the trust? Must we let this lawlessness and anarchy reign triumphant and forever? If we do, we are disgraced before the American people and before the world.

I say, then, this bill goes to this people and says, "You have hitherto hurled from you the mild and generous propositions we have hitherto submitted; and we say to you once again, take those propositions and adopt them, and give suffrage to all your people, or take the sword." Do you call this tyranny? When terms of unmerited mercy and forbearance are offered to an offending people in order to restore concord, peace, security, and prosperity, do you call that tyranny? I call it duty that the people demand at the hands of this Congress. The people implore us to do something that law, order, and security may take the place of discord and violence, of chaos and murder.

Is there any doubt, sir, as to our duty? And I pray gentlemen, if you take not this bill, although in all its parts it does not suit you, what are you likely to give the American people? Nothing, my colleague says, nothing; and echo answers nothing from all parts of the country. I will not return to my constituents admitting that I have failed to try to do something in this great trial of the nation. It is not for rebels that I legislate; it is not for the right of those who have sought to destroy this Government that I extend mercy; but it is for the liberties, rights, and welfare of my country, for all parts of it. All over the land it is demanded of us that we make law take the place of anarchy. It is the demand of the people, and upon the platform which they have adopted I take my stand, namely, the constitutional amendment with universal suffrage now added. I dare stand there, asking this House and the country if anything better has been offered or can be done? I do not claim that this bill is perfect in all its parts. It is hardly possible in a House of intelligent, free, independent, thinking men, such as are here, that a measure of this kind should meet the approbation of all. But I pray you, gentlemen, ask yourselves this question: is not this the best that we can hope for, expect, or obtain now? And is it not the part of wisdom always in every step in life to do the best we can?

Mr. DELANO. I trust I shall be pardoned for occupying two minutes more.

Mr. STEVENS. I would grant it but I have promised to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HISE] all the time I have left. While I am up I will make a motion that speeches be limited to fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I think that is hardly fair to this side.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I move to suspend the rules, so as to limit debate to fifteen minutes each.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I withdraw the objection if the gentleman insists, but there are only three or four who want to speak on our side.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection speeches will be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to allude to one topic that has been introduced into this discussion. I think it does not belong to it. I act upon the dictates of duty, without reference to any individual man on this earth, relative to this measure. I desire to say, however, that I regard the will of the people of this country as the supreme power and authority of the land, to which all must bow, and which all must obey. And, sir, I claim for this sovereign will the right, when it is offended and obstructed by the misfeasance or nonfeasance of any officers in any branch of the Government, to call for such punishment as the law and the Constitution authorize and permit. And whoever stands in the way of the sovereign will of the nation, while she is working out through toil, trial, and blood her reorganization, her emancipation, her freedom—whenever, I say, dares to stand boldly and persistently in the way of that will, defying and refusing it obedience, subjects himself to the constitutional, lawful, and righteous punishment which all such offenders deserve and which they shall receive. So long as the liberties of this country are preserved so long the will of this mighty people will be, under legal and constitutional restraints, the supreme law and the supreme power of the land. And no decisions of courts that violate this well-established will, as thus defined, no action of man or men that defies it, can fail to reap the righteous retribution which may be authorized by the legal and constitutional provisions of the country.

I should not have alluded to this subject had it not been, as I thought, unnecessarily drawn into this discussion. All men must move on in the execution of law under the Constitution in conformity to the sovereign will and power of the nation, yielding obedience under constitutional provisions to that power, and then we shall rebuild a nation's shattered edifice, we shall renew the torn down columns of liberty, and we shall have a government the terror of tyrants and the pride and glory of all its inhabitants. That destiny God has marked out for us as a people, and we shall reach it; it may be through trials and with delays, but it will come and is coming to the relief of those who are now downtrodden and oppressed, without law, without protection; it will come to cast its shield over every person, high or low, rich or poor, learned or ignorant, in this great nation.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield the remainder of my time, which is only five minutes, to the gentleman from California, [Mr. HIGBY.]

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker I could not let this measure go to a vote without expressing my views in regard to it very briefly. I find that on this side of the House we are very much divided. To the bill as it went from the House the Senate has added an amendment. That amendment is not an original proposition. It is in substance the proposition that was rejected by this House before the bill was sent to the Senate; and we are told by several gentlemen on this side of the House that we must accept this or we will get nothing during this session of Congress. That is literally an attempt on the part of men who make the declaration to support the Senate in forcing down our throats what we rejected when we were acting upon this bill the other day. We are told that in defiance of the course we pursued we must take what we rejected or we can get nothing whatever. Mr. Speaker, if in my conscience I could vote for this bill with the amendment that the Senate has appended to it, I would do it, but so long as my conscience will not approve of it, all the Senates on God's earth will not force it down my throat. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The language of the gentleman is scarcely respectful to a coordinate branch.

Mr. HIGBY. A little out of order. [Laughter.] Well, I will take it back. I only made the remark in answer to the position that has been taken by members on this side of the House. If they had not taken that position I would not have made the remark.

The SPEAKER. No gentleman is expected to say that any number of Senates could not choke down this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. HIGBY. I did not say choke down the House, but it is asking all the members of this House to swallow it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman understands that the courtesies of each branch must be observed.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, we have been fighting through the Thirty-Ninth Congress against the proposition that those who were in rebellion against this Government should not aid in organizing it in those States where they had been disorganized. That is the position, that is one great cardinal principle that we have been contending for since the commencement of this Congress. If we might take the declarations of members of this House, we have been uniform in that declaration.

But, sir, what do we see now? A large number ready to retreat from the position they occupied and accept the proposition contained in this bill as it comes to us from the Senate, allowing all the rebels to vote in the reorganization of the southern States. It is against that proposition that I must give my vote. I never can consent to it, and for the simple reason that I think it would hazard the condition of the loyal men of the State and put them in a position where they never shall be placed with my consent. I will do anything to protect them, but I will do nothing to hazard their condition. I think the effect of this proposition in many of these States will be that the loyal people will be overwhelmed; for I have no doubt there are some of these States where, even if you take all the loyal blacks and loyal whites, the rebel population is sufficiently powerful to overwhelm them.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE addressed the House. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. HISE. Mr. Speaker, I beg the attention of the House, may I entreat the attention of the House to the few remarks I shall have an opportunity of submitting on this occasion. I have hitherto, when I have treated this subject, been cut off in the midst of my speeches in such manner as to have left unsaid some of the most important points. I hope, therefore, the House will keep in order.

Mr. Speaker, this important subject is now presented to the House for its action in a very different attitude than ever before. The House passed a bill the substance of which was simply to overthrow the State governments and the State laws of ten States of this Union, and to impose upon them a government under a single military chief to be clothed with ample military power and authority to govern those ten States, or the people of those ten States, without any restriction or limitation on his power of government as is contained in the constitution and the laws of the States themselves, or without being limited or controlled by the Constitution or the laws of the United States. In other words, the House passed a bill commanding the General of the Army to place at the head of five military districts, embodying in these districts these ten States, a military chief to rule, control, and govern regardless of local laws or constitutions, and regardless of the laws and Constitution of the United States.

The question is now presented in a very different form. The military bill has undergone two very material and radical changes by the action of the Senate. The Senate has struck out the words "General of the Army" and inserted these: "President of the United States." I therefore suppose it was in contemplation and was designed in framing the military bill by the gentleman here to set up these military despotic governments over these five military districts in such manner, and to be wielded through such sources as to make them independent of the executive head of the Government of the United States. There could have been no other motive for giving the appointment of these five despots, these five tyrants in regard to authority, to the General of the Army; whether they may be tyrants in disposition or not would have to be ascertained by the sore experience of this people after they were placed under their dominion; and that they intended and expected to place the despotic governments of these districts under chiefs to be totally independent of the President of the United States, is perfectly manifest.

Some gentlemen in the course of the discussion admitted the President was the constitutional head of the Army; that the President was by the Constitution the supreme commander of the military and naval forces of the United States; but notwithstanding that admission they at the same time declared they dared him to exercise his power in the premises; that he would not dare and would be afraid to assume to contravene or to oppose himself to the will of the sovereign Legislature of the Union by assuming to control the General of the Army in his discretion in the appointments to be made of these military chiefs. By the action of the Senate the words "General of the Army" were struck out and "the President of the United States" inserted.

We might have some assurance from the known character of the President of the United States, from his temper and disposition, from the evidence furnished by his conduct and life as a public man, that he would not play the tyrant himself; that he would not be willing to see the lives, property, and liberties of the people of these ten States depredated upon and the local laws and governments unlawfully invaded and overthrown; and therefore we could rely upon his supreme authority, although unlimited, to check and control the local chiefs in each of these districts if they attempted to exercise power unlawfully, arbitrarily, and contrary to the guards and restraints of the Constitution of the United States, in order to save the life, liberty, and property of the citizen.

But, sir, although they have substituted the name of the President in place of that of the General of the Army, nevertheless when these men are appointed it is not provided they may be removed or their commissions revoked for the exercise of any power, however unlawful or tyrannical, not even for the commission of the crimes of murder, rapine, and arson, crimes which have ever stained the annals of military dominion over an unarmed people, deprived of the means of resistance or of self-defense.

The bill supposes that until Congress shall declare that those States are in the Union and entitled to representation under the provisions of the last section of this bill these military chiefs, once inaugurated and installed, are to be kept in power ad libitum, without any interference on the part of the President of the United States, and without any power existing anywhere to remove them or punish them or hold them responsible in any way for any or all the atrocities they may commit; that they shall continue in the exercise of this irresponsible power until they are superseded by the declaration of Congress that those States are in the Union and entitled to representation; which declaration is contemplated to be made at some indefinite future time. Now, let us consider the character of this measure. The small body of Democrats and States Rights men on my side of the House have been considering, and I myself have been deliberating upon it, what we should do under these circumstances.

In this amended bill they have struck out that portion of one of the sections which, in express terms, suspended this writ of habeas corpus, sanctified as it has been by the great men of the past, who, in framing our Constitution, provided that it should never be suspended except in case of invasion or insurrection when required by the public safety. Those are the only cases in which they authorize the suspension of that writ. I have examined this bill very carefully, and I say that it is a delusion to suppose for a moment that the writ of habeas corpus can be used under it for the protection of the rights or liberties of the citizen. Why? Because the authority of each military chief put in command there is omnipotent as far as human power can be made omnipotent. It is not circumscribed in any way; there is no responsibility imposed upon him; it is not said that if he is guilty of this, that, or the other abuse of power he shall be liable to be punished by removal or by the judgment of civil or military tribunal; there is no provision whatever of this kind; and consequently he has a right, under this bill, to take all cases from the civil tribunals and send them for trial to the military tribunals if he chooses to do so.

It is plain that under such a system the writ of habeas corpus cannot really exist; because even if the civil tribunals are not entirely abolished, they will exist only at the will of the military tyrant in command, and it is but reasonable to presume that they will be controlled or influenced by him in the judgments they pronounce in any cases that may be brought before them. And is this in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States? I refer to the Constitution, because it is only under that instrument and by its authority that you have any right to govern at all in those States; and in that Constitution it is expressly said that within the jurisdiction of the United States no man shall be tried and condemned until he shall first have been indicted before a competent jurisdiction in the district where the crime has been committed, and that he has a right to be brought face to face with his accusers and to be tried by a jury of the vicinage.

Now, sir, what becomes of that constitutional provision in reference to eight million people when you place them in the position contemplated by this bill, where they may be tried and condemned and deprived of life, liberty, and property by an irresponsible military tribunal without charge, with no opportunity for defense, and without the intervention of a jury?

Mr. DAVIS obtained the floor.

Mr. HISE. I do hope the House will indulge me and extend my time.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

A MEMBER. About two hours. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISE. I have been cut off in every speech I have made. [Laughter.] I ask about twenty or thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. By the order of the House speeches are limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended fifteen minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I object.

Mr. DAVIS. I regard this, Mr. Speaker, as an eventful day in the history of the American people. We are deliberating upon one of the gravest questions that could be brought to our consideration, one that is agitating the country throughout its length and breadth, and every loyal man and every disloyal man is to-day looking to Congress to learn what shall be its action in reference to the restoration of peace and harmony to the Republic. I believe that Congress has now and here a high duty to perform. It has many high duties to perform, and the highest of all now pressing upon it is that which requires it to protect to the fullest extent the loyal men and the slaves who were made free by the action of the Government in putting down the rebellion which sought its overthrow.

Sir, there were in the southern States when the rebellion was going on more than four million slaves. They were the strength and vital power of the southern confederacy, and the Administration of this Government found it necessary to strike down that power in order to strike down the rebellion.

The proclamation of emancipation was issued strictly as a war measure. The slave did not free himself; he did not remove himself from the condition in which it was the duty of his master to protect him; he did not of his own volition throw off his claim upon his master to support him; but the Government interfered; the Government made him free, and in making him free absolved his master from his protection and support. I say, then, that the highest duty of the Government is to see that he enjoys the liberty which their action not only conferred but forced upon him.

There is another class of men in the South to whom this Government is under the highest obligations, and that is to the men who maintained their fealty to the Government, the men who sustained the old flag against the power of the southern confederacy, and resisted the influence of aristocracy, the men who were persecuted and driven from their homes, and whose families, homeless and shelterless at night, often slept beneath the shadows of the forest. The Government owes these men also protection, and I stand here to-day to demand that each of these duties shall be perfectly performed.

In the utterance of these sentiments I must say that I am actuated by not the slightest feeling of malignity or resentment. I remember that the people of the South were educated in the presence of and surrounded by institutions differing very far from those under which we were educated. I appreciate the influence of education upon opinions and character. I say to gentlemen upon this side of the House, and to Union men on the other side, that if we had exchanged with southern men positions, if we had been educated in the South under the influence of slavery, and brought up in the presence of an aristocracy and surrounded by its seductive influences, we might have been secessionists, and just as honest in those sentiments as we are to-day in our convictions of paramount duty to the Federal Government.

But we are to meet the question now in reference to the duty of the Government to those who owe it allegiance. Who are they? The men who have lost all, the men who have suffered in every regard, the men who have been refugees from their homes and who have come here to seek the protection of the Government. They demand that under that Government to which they have been loyal they shall have a right to return to the property and homes from which they have been ejected, and have a right to control the interests there of which they have been deprived.

Now, sir, when the armies of the confederacy were discomfited and laid down their arms, they acknowledged that the system of slavery and the aristocracy upon which it was based were gone forever, and having done that, they should have submitted calmly and philosophically to the result. Did they do it? We proposed terms more magnanimous than conquerors ever before offered to a subjected foe. No rebel person so far as I know has been brought to punishment for a violation of allegiance to the Federal Government; no one has been tried as a traitor, and God knows if any man ever will be. Unfortunately the very clemency of the Government, its disposition to be magnanimous and generous, has led these people to mistake magnanimity for weakness, and they have become proud and defiant; they have attempted again to enslave those whom the power of this Government has declared free; they have subjected them to indignity and insult throughout the land, and under the sanction of their courts have sold them again into slavery. Under the sanction and with the encouragement of municipal authorities the streets of southern cities have run red with the blood of loyal and true men simply because they were friends of the Union.

Now, sir, we are bound as a Government to protect these true and loyal people, and if the disorganized southern States will not have peace on terms of conciliation, on terms of generosity, on terms which shall assure the protection that we owe them, they must have peace on terms of compulsion.

And therefore, although I believe I have been for years, I may say for my whole life, a conservative; although I never was for a day of my life an abolitionist; although I have never for an hour entertained a malignant or a revengeful feeling against the people of the South, yet I proclaim it to be our duty to enforce upon them such conditions before they shall be restored to their position in the Government from whose protection they went forth without provocation, as will make them peaceful, quiet, and obedient to the laws of the Republic. I do not believe any measure of legislation which we can adopt can make them loyal. Loyalty is not a matter of legislation. Disloyalty is a moral disease, which must be cured by time; and like insanity it must be made subject to restraints. We must so legislate, keeping no unnecessary restraint upon them, as to induce the development of their material resources. Treat them with all the kindness the circumstances will permit, aid them in finding the path to prosperity; and when they see their country, which has been desolated by war, again blossoming as the rose, then I apprehend they will not longer be disposed to quarrel with the Government which is generously inclined to forgive their crimes and which affords them protection.

There are but three courses for us to pursue. One course is to do nothing; that is, leave those people as they are, leave rapine and outrage and violence and murder rampant through the whole South; everything disorganized, everything under rebel control. Or second, we must pass a military bill, such as was introduced into this House, giving unlimited absolute power to military officers to control those people; closing their courts of law, suspending the writ of habeas corpus, and holding them for a period of time absolutely and entirely undefined and unlimited in a condition from which they cannot in any way escape by any terms of submission, by any pledge, by any action of their own, or by any penitence or reformation. Or in the third place, we can pass the bill as it comes to us from the Senate. Now, I believe that the passage of this bill is the very best thing which we can do; it is the best measure for us to enact in reference to the interests of the country, or in reference to the interests of the people of the South. This bill does not close the door against mercy; it leaves an opportunity to escape from military control and its inevitable annoyances. When we say to these southern and rebellious States that they may return only upon the condition that they put the ballot into the hands of the men who once were their slaves but who are now made free, we do so alone for the reason that the action of the dominant whites at the South proves that the freedman cannot be made safe except he has possession of the ballot. Now, it is well known that I have never been an advocate for the enforcement of negro suffrage at the South, nor would I to-day feel it my duty to support this bill which indirectly encourages universal suffrage if I believed that loyal men, both white and black, would be safe without its provisions.

I submit that if the people of the southern States had peacefully and calmly accepted the constitutional amendment which we proffered to them, and faithfully submitted to its provisions, this legislation would never have been introduced into this Congress. They might and would have been restored to their representation in these Halls; and I, for one, would have hailed their appearance here under such circumstances with as much gratification as any one could have done. But they refused to accept that amendment; they trampled it under foot with scorn and contumely. They said to the freedmen: You shall still be a slave to us; we will charge you with crimes before our courts; we will so legislate as to make petty larceny, assault and battery, and various other minor offenses of that kind so punishable by imprisonment, and parties convicted of them may be sold for a term of service. And in this way they have already reinaugurated slavery in some of the southern States.

Again, sir, the State of Kentucky, never having seceded from the Union, with a magnanimity unlimited and most unwise by the repeal of her law imposing political disabilities upon disloyal citizens, enfranchised every rebel who had been in the service of the confederate States. What to-day is the condition of affairs in the State of Kentucky? Why, sir, her political power is wielded by rebel hands. Rebel generals, wearing the insignia of the rebel service, walk the streets of her cities admired and courted; while Union officers, with their wounds yet unhealed, are ostracised both in political, commercial, and social life. I shall therefore support this bill, not from choice, but from necessity; not because I desire to extend military sway over any portion of the American people, not because I wish for a law to unnecessarily deny to the southern States their representation in Congress, but because I believe that the exigencies of the Republic and our duty to protect our loyal citizens demand its passage.

Mr. LOAN. Mr. Speaker, no political question which has for a long time come before this House has occasioned such diversity of opinion as the measure now before us. I therefore avail myself of this occasion to offer briefly a few of the reasons which induce me to oppose concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The friends of the bill in its present form claim that it is a military measure. "We send," say they, "the bayonet to the rebel States for the purpose of protecting our friends and holding the rebel borders in check until civil government can be organized there." But if I understand the bill aright these gentlemen are mistaken. The preamble recites that there are "no legal State governments existing there." If this is true, then there has been no lawful government there since the dispersion of the rebel army, except that derived from military authority. Now, if this be so, I ask the friends of this bill to inform us how much greater power Congress by this bill can confer on the President than he has under the Constitution as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the Republic. His power as such commander under the Constitution, as I understand it, is unlimited in territory the possession of which by this Government is acquired by act of war. But in the military provisions of this bill, if their purpose is to accomplish anything, it would seem that the object was rather to restrict than to increase the military authority of the President, by directing him as to the manner in which he shall exercise it in the government of those rebel communities.

Gentlemen seem to suppose that through the exercise of military power proposed to be conferred by this bill protection to the Union men in the South will be secured. The answer to this is that for the last two years the President has had full authority and power as Commander-in-Chief of the Army to protect the Union people there; and what has been the result? For an answer it is sufficient to refer to Memphis, New Orleans, and other cities where the rebels have been permitted to willfully, deliberately, in defiance of the military power, to murder the Union citizens in cold blood. What assurance have we that if this bill be passed any greater protection will be afforded to the Union people under its provisions than they had under the military authority of the Commander-in-Chief? None, so far as I can see.

It is also said that the bill provides for reorganizing civil governments in the rebel States, and that therefore it should be supported by the majority in this House; that it is necessary that something should be done to accomplish that object. But does this bill contain any provisions compelling the establishment of civil governments in those States? I think not. And when my friend from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] said that the people required us to do something for the establishment of civil governments in the rebel States, I was surprised at his subsequent remarks in support of this bill. He is known to be a thorough lawyer and is always accurate in his statements, and it is inconceivable to me how he could have been so mistaken in regard to the provisions of this bill as to suppose that they could in any way meet or satisfy the just expectations of the loyal people, North or South, who require that something should be done for the protection of our friends there.

So far as it relates to the organization of civil governments in the rebel States, the bill is negative in all its propositions. It seems that its supporters are willing to permit the rebel State governments, now in authority in the rebel States, to continue for an indefinite time in the future, and to continue to subject our Union friends there to the murders, outrages, and persecutions they have hitherto endured under rebel rule; that the scenes of the 31st of July last at New Orleans shall be reenacted whenever rebel purposes require them; and in response to the petitions for relief which are sent to us from time to time by our persecuted and suffering loyal friends in the South it is proposed by this bill to permit the rebels to continue their unlawful State governments and to continue the murder and persecution of our Union friends for an indefinite time in the future, on condition that they, the rebels, in consideration thereof will consent to forego representation in Congress and thereby leave to us the legislation for the nation; that for this we will abandon to the rebels the unlawful government of ten States of this Union and subject the people thereof to rebel civil rule until the rebels are willing to reorganize their States respectively and confer the elective franchise upon the negroes therein, and by a ratification of the proposed constitutional amendment disqualify all of their rebel leaders from holding any office under the Government of the United States. It does seem to me that it must be obvious to every one that the rebels will never voluntarily make such a change in their State governments, and that the logical results of this bill, if it were enacted into a law, would be to perpetuate rebel rule in those States.

The preamble of the amendment now under consideration recites that no legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property exist in the rebel States.

Yet the supporters of this bill are willing to permit these State governments that are not legal to continue in existence, and to permit this Union to remain in its present disturbed and disorganized condition until the rebels by their voluntary act shall consent to restore it.

Such a course will not meet the approval of the loyal people of the country. Our gallant soldiers, regardless of all consequences to themselves, dispersed and destroyed the armed forces of the rebellion, and at the ballot-box the people confided to us ample power and authority to restore this Union upon a basis of loyalty and enduring peace, and required us to extend to the loyal people in the rebel States full protection to person and property. And have we discharged this duty? On the contrary, do we not propose by this bill to indirectly acknowledge the existence of the rebel State governments in the rebel States, to surrender our friends there to the tender mercies of rebel rule, to bow down to the dust the Union soldier and place upon his neck the heel of the rebel he helped to conquer on the field of battle, there to remain as long as the rebel is willing to forego representation here?

Do gentlemen suppose that these things will be tolerated? I tell you, no. The majority in Congress are required to take affirmative action. We have the power full and ample, and it is our duty to exercise it. We should by law confide the political power in the rebel States to loyal hands and to none other, and they should be protected in its exercise by the military power of the nation. The rebels should be disfranchised, and all loyal men in those States should be enfranchised by direct legislative action. Do these things, and you will meet the just expectations, and comply with the demands of the loyal people of the nation.

Gentlemen say this bill is the best that we can get. Then I prefer to take nothing, and will trust to another Congress to do something in the right direction. This is a retrograde movement and is in the interest of treason and rebellion, and I hope and trust it will get its quietus here, and let us trust to a Congress that not only knows what is right but has the courage to do it. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill of the House No. 904, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1868, and for other purposes.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1868, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I will state in a few words the reasons for my vote in support of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate. This bill declares the governments in what are called the rebel States are not legal governments. It is undoubtedly true they are not legal. They have not been recognized by the Government of the United States, but nevertheless they are de facto governments. They are governments in fact of great power, controlled by the most astute politicians this continent has known. These governments by this bill are recognized or are to be recognized. The second section declares the military officers shall recognize the legal tribunals. It uses the word may, but it is to be interpreted that they shall recognize, or if they do not they are to establish tribunals of their own.

The fifth section, which comes in the form of the amendment, speaks of a class that are to be disfranchised because they are felons at common law. Who makes felons at common law? The governments in authority in these rebel States.

Mr. BINGHAM. The governments of the rebel States cannot make a man a felon by statute who is not such at common law.

Mr. BANKS. They are to make felons at common law. Let the gentleman from Ohio tell me who are to make felons in these States at common law if not these de facto governments? This bill recognizes these as de facto governments.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.

Mr. BANKS. I cannot yield, as I have only three minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman say he objects to the disfranchisement of any man after conviction of felony at common law?

Mr. BANKS. I do not object; but I do object to the recognition of these de facto governments by these express terms.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.

Mr. BANKS. I cannot yield to the gentleman, who has had full time, while I am limited to only three minutes.

These are de facto governments. They are recognized in the third section by the military tribunals and in the fifth by express language. Let me ask what are these de facto governments, and I ask the attention of gentlemen to what I have to say. What are these de facto governments? A provisional governor, appointed by the President—one of them at least, and I think more than one—informed him that they had appointed four thousand officers to administer the government in one of those States. If that be true in one State, it is doubtless true in others; and thus there are forty thousand officers administering these de facto governments in these States. And who are they? All rebels, every man of them.

Mr. BLAINE. Did one of them hold office?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BANKS. And now what do we propose to do? We propose by statute to return the initiation of civil government to these de facto governments that are in the hands of at least forty thousand rebels. Will any man pretend to say that if the loyal men held these offices they could not organize loyal governments? And who will say that the forty thousand rebels in power will not organize rebel governments? Sir, if this bill be passed, in my belief there will be no loyal party known, and no loyal voice heard in any of these States from Virginia to Texas.

The constitutional amendment has been spoken of. It was indorsed by the people. It declared two things—that the rebels shall not have a voice, and by implication that they shall not vote. We by statute enforce these two things that are prohibited by the constitutional amendment. We give them the right to hold office, we recognize them when in office, and we enfranchise every man of them for the purpose of establishing a government.

I object to the military feature of the bill as well. There is not a man in this country who can claim the right on the part of rebels to initiate measures for the organization of these governments. Everybody will admit that they ought not to initiate them, and yet this measure confers upon them the power and recognizes their right to do so. Every man in favor of civilized institutions will concede that the military tribunals ought not to be established for the purpose of initiating or controlling civil government. If we want martial law we may accord it, but in this bill we propose to recognize the military tribunal as superior to the civil tribunal.

Mr. HILL. If anything were necessary to show gentlemen that it is impossible to obtain by legislation all that we may desire, the history of this bill will certainly demonstrate that fact. Almost on the first day of this Congress a committee was appointed called the Reconstruction Committee, to which, under the resolution of the House, were to be referred all propositions brought before this body relating to the reestablishment of relations between the rebellious States and the General Government. To that committee every proposition of this nature has been sent. After long and laborious investigations they reported a bill at the close of the last session. That bill was on the Calendar during the first part of this session. A substitute was offered by the chairman of the committee, which, after much consideration and numerous modifications by its author, was recommitted to them, and out of that has grown the proposition which we to-day are considering. And now, after the most mature and profound deliberation ever bestowed by any Congress upon any question, almost at the last day of the session we are called upon to decide whether we will accept the proposition that is before us or go home to our constituents, having done nothing.

Now, sir, I prefer the proposition under consideration to none at all. I would rather take this proposition than confess that we are unable to adopt any measure whatever. I do not pretend to say that in all respects it is exactly the thing I would desire. If I could have my own individual notions carried out in this matter I would incorporate, as a condition upon which persons should vote for delegates to the convention that is to frame the constitution and for its ratification, the same qualifications that were prescribed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the constitutional amendment, which is as follows:

"SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two thirds of each House, remove such disability."

But we must yield our individual preferences, we must take what the majority of the House can agree upon, and as this matter has been considered during both sessions of Congress and by members of both Houses, has been before able committees, and as a last resort this measure is now before us as the result of all these deliberations, I regard it as better to take the proposition we now have than to take the chances of a total failure by insisting upon incorporating a provision which would disfranchise a portion of the rebels, at least the leading portion who have done us the most harm.

But it is contended that under this bill the rebel leaders will have control and authority. It provides as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That when the people of any one of said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the persons who may vote upon the ratification or rejection thereof as hereinafter provided, and when said constitution so framed shall have been ratified by a majority of the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition of servitude, who have been resident in said State for one year previous to the day of voting on the question of ratifying such constitution, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law, and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated, and shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same, and when said State, by a vote of its Legislature elected under said constitution, shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

Sir, can we not trust this Congress? Have we no faith in the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and shall we say to the Fortieth Congress that they are not equally entitled to the confidence of the people? Is there any danger that they will betray their constituency? I am willing to trust them as the people have trusted us.

Now, sir, we incorporate in the organic law of the land a provision that forever prohibits the specified classes from holding office unless two thirds of Congress shall relieve them from that disability. We require them to adopt that constitutional amendment. While it is true we permit them to vote upon these propositions, while we allow them to vote for delegates that are to frame their State constitutions, we require them to frame those constitutions so as to secure certain rights and immunities to their citizens and to perform certain conditions which shall be acceptable to some Congress that shall meet hereafter. Are we not safe in leaving it to a future Congress to determine when these conditions are complied with?

Sir, under the very provisions of the section above quoted the Fortieth Congress may in the first week of its session disfranchise by law, if we have the power to do it now, every rebel in the disloyal States or any portion of them which it may choose, and provide that in carrying out the provisions of this bill only such persons as it shall prescribe shall participate. This power is significantly retained in the following clause of the section above quoted, namely, "Except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion," &c. Let us not refuse to take this step, because the next one, so immediately within our reach, is not also to be taken now.

More than all this: we lay the strong hand of military power upon these spurious State governments that have usurped powers and established themselves in violation of law. We sweep away by military power the governments that have been created by executive authority without the sanction of law, and which can have no validity unless recognized by the Congress of the United States. The grand question is between permitting the Executive on the one hand to assume this authority, bring these governments into existence and perpetuate them indefinitely; and on the other hand, asserting the right of the legislative department to exercise control and authority and determine when and how these States shall be restored to their constitutional relations.

It is too late now to say that these States are in all respects upon an equality with the loyal States of this Union. That question certainly has been decided in the negative by every department of the Government. The President of the United States has so decided, the judiciary have substantially so decided, and the majorities in both Houses of Congress have uniformly refused to recognize their claims by refusing admission to their representatives here.

Then if they are not States in the Union now, entitled to all the rights of States, to whom does it belong to say how these rights shall be restored? This bill properly says it belongs to the legislative department of the Government. That is a most important principle asserted, and a most important step gained. Congress fixes the terms and prescribes the conditions, even though those conditions may not in all respects be entirely satisfactory to a single man upon this floor. Shall we for ever disfranchise all the people in these several States? What will then constitute your State if all the people in it are disfranchised? Shall we disfranchise every man who has been in rebellion? Where would be the remaining people by whom to found your State? With every man who has voluntarily participated in the rebellion disfranchised, there would not be a corporal's guard of white men in each State out of which you could frame the machinery for carrying on the government of the State and holding relations to the Government of the United States. While you thus, by such indiscriminate disfranchisement, create an element there, large, powerful, and ready enough at any moment with the weight and pressure of your Government as an excuse to resist all your efforts to crush this rebel power and establish a loyal government. Sir, while I would disfranchise leading men who brought about and maintained the struggle to overthrow this Government, I would say to the masses of the people, "We welcome you back to your allegiance to the Government; only do works meet for repentance and we will extend to you the right hand of fellowship."

Now, Mr. Speaker, these objects are all gained substantially by the provisions of this bill. The military power is placed there in absolute control. It can lay its strong hand upon the pretended State government or on any officers at any moment and set the whole authority of the State aside. But it is said the President holds the power. Sir, I am glad the Senate made that change. I am opposed to doing anything directly or indirectly against his prerogative in this particular. He is Commander-in-Chief of the Army. If he sees fit to order an officer to any particular locality or service, that officer must obey; and I contend that it is utterly useless to vest the power in the General of the Army that was undertaken to be so vested by the bill as it passed the House. That was a feature to which I was opposed. The President, under the Constitution, is superior to the General of your Army, and if an issue is to be had it only necessitates either a collision between the President and the General, or between the General and the Congress of the United States, which is certainly not now to be coveted.

Now, sir, this bill as it comes to us from the Senate obviates that objection. Instead of being purely and simply a military bill, it now carries to the people of the South the terms and conditions upon which their civil rights may be restored to them and they be once again under the protection of the Government of the United States, to assert and exercise all their rights.

As there are many gentlemen who desire to be heard upon this question, I have arranged to yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, [Mr. NIBLACK.]

Mr. NIBLACK. How much time will that be for me, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. HILL] has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. NIBLACK. I can scarcely say anything in the form of an argument in the short space of four minutes. As I had an opportunity of discussing this bill when it was first introduced it is not necessary for me now to pass over the argument I then submitted to the House; I stand by all I then said. All I have since seen and heard in relation to the bill has but confirmed me in my opinion of it.

Viewing the bill from my stand-point, I confess that the bill has been much improved by the action of the Senate; but it still retains many of the first features to which I objected when it was before the House for discussion last week; and it is less consistent with any theory of our Government, in my opinion, than it was then. It is not now purely a military bill, nor is it properly a measure of civil administration. It is a most extraordinary attempt to blend the two principles together. It starts out with the assertion that there are no legal governments now existing in the lately rebellious States. But without making any provision by which the pretended governments, as they are claimed to be, which are now there are to be superseded by others, it leaves those States to continue without any legal governments.

Now, as I remarked the other day, when the bill was before the House, I think we ought to do one thing or the other. We ought either to recognize the validity of these State governments or we ought to come squarely up to the mark and take some step to supersede them by others. To leave the southern people in this position of suspense, without recognizing the validity of their governments in any respect, or providing means to secure them governments which we will recognize, is to leave them in a condition where they cannot tell what their rights are as expounded by the Congress of the United States.

This bill provides for a kind of military probation, to last we know not how long; to last until these people shall have reached a condition when they will be willing to accept any terms which the Congress of the United States may see fit to impose upon them; until they shall have become broken in spirit, as they are now broken down in many other respects. This bill ignores utterly that theory of American Government which was once held by all parties, and up to a very recent period; the theory that whenever the people of any State come to act upon their own domestic institutions they are entitled to mold and form them according to their own will and pleasure. This bill ignores that theory of our Government, and, in fact, recognizes the new principle that the Congress of the United States may prescribe to the people of a State, or the people of a Territory about to become State, what constitution they may adopt, and what constitution they may not adopt for their form of State government. In effect a constitution is prescribed to the people of those States by the legislative action of the Congress of the United States. Therefore, viewing the subject from the most conservative stand-point, this is an overturning and destruction of everything which heretofore we have recognized as the rights of a State.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, as I find myself differing from two of my colleagues, [Mr. BOUTWELL and Mr. BANKS,] who have addressed the House to-day upon this subject, and being compelled by my convictions of duty to vote to concur rather than to non-concur in the amendment proposed by the Senate to this bill, I ask the attention of the House for a few moments while I state briefly the reasons which have induced me to disagree with my colleagues upon this subject.

It is now nearly four years since a special committee was appointed by this House, charged with the special and sole duty of reconstruction; charged at the beginning of the Thirty-Eighth Congress with the performance of a duty which seemed to them and to our friends upon this side of the House to be so pressing as to require that it should take precedence of all other business before the House.

Sir, the Thirty-Eighth Congress, although a committee of signal ability and patriotism addressed itself to this subject, expired without the accomplishment of the purpose for which that committee was raised. The Thirty-

Ninth Congress signalized its entrance upon the discharge of its duties by adopting upon the first day of its session a resolution providing for the appointment of a joint committee of fifteen charged with a similar duty. And now, sir, though the last sands of that Congress are now running out nothing has yet been accomplished. Four years have thus been spent to no purpose in this work.

Sir, these committees have died of theories, and their works do follow them. I make no imputation upon their patriotism or their ability; but it seems to me that they have looked less at practical issues than at theoretical questions; have sacrificed the substance to shadows.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether the gentleman has the right to abuse the Committee on Reconstruction?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman has not transgressed the rules of debate.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention or disposition to abuse that committee. De mortuis nil nisi bonum.

As I was remarking, the last sands of this Congress are rapidly running out, and it admits of no doubt that we must take this bill or none. Members of that committee and others of our friends on this side of the House who are opposed to concurring with the Senate in this amendment do not pretend that there is the slightest probability that we can agree upon any other bill than this. The issue is between this bill and no bill. Hence, those who urge us to reject this amendment of the Senate are inviting us to close our career as a Congress, following the Thirty-Eighth in this regard, and say to the people of the country that we have lacked the capacity or the disposition to do the great work that they imposed upon us. My colleague who addressed us this morning, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] though for four years upon this committee, proposes to postpone action till the Fortieth Congress. My colleague who has just taken his seat [Mr. BANKS] proposes nothing, and votes against both the House and Senate propositions.

Sir, what are the objections to this bill in its present shape? Those objections come chiefly from members of the committee who have had this special work intrusted to them, and who have performed it, I doubt not, to the extent of their ability. Sir, the first objection which was raised by my colleague, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] was founded on the fact that the second section, as amended by the Senate, is different from its original, which I suppose was the work of his own hands; at least of his committee. He has urged us to reject this proposition because the second section has been so amended in the Senate as to repose in the President that power which, by the bill of the House, was reposed in the General of the Army. Yet, sir, when the original bill was under discussion here, it was, in reply to a question of mine, admitted upon this floor, and denied by no one, that the power placed in the hands of the General of the Army by the second section of the bill was virtually and legally, under the Constitution, reposed in the President, and could not be elsewhere. Sir, the second section of this bill, as amended by the Senate, is in its legal effect precisely the second section as it was sent to that body. It was not in our power, under the Constitution of the United States, to make the General of the Army superior to his Commander-in-Chief. No language which we might select could have the legal effect to do that. And, sir, the Senate has very properly put this section in a suitable form, corresponding with its necessary legal effect. This is all.

But my colleague [Mr. BANKS] who has just taken his seat objects that the third section of this bill recognizes the existing local governments. Yet my colleague opposed the whole bill as passed by this House and voted against it. He now presents, as a ground for non-concurring with the Senate, the precise language which was in the bill originally. A vote to non-concur cannot change that phraseology, for it is in both bills alike. But my colleague, as another ground of objection, says that the bill in its present form proposes to qualify for office all the men whom by the constitutional amendment we propose to disqualify. Now, sir, what is the constitutional amendment in this regard? The third section provides that—

"No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two thirds of each House, remove such disability."

All this body of men, all the State Legislature, all the judiciary, all the executive department of each one of these States this amendment to the Constitution disqualifies forever from holding office until relieved by Congress by a two-thirds vote. Yet my colleague says we remove this disqualification if we pass this bill. This bill says when said article fourteen shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States said State shall become entitled to representation in Congress. It is provided that that shall be a part of the Constitution of the United States, and yet my colleague says by a statute we are going to do away with that which is first to become a part of the Constitution of the United States. It is the first time I ever heard that by a statute we could repeal and annul a part of the Constitution of the United States. This is what will become of the army of four thousand office-holders; every one disqualified by the Constitution, not by statute. It comes to this: whether we shall give protection by the military arm to the people of ten States; whether the horrors of rebellion, so fully and so truthfully depicted to us by my learned friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] who now sits before me; whether we shall turn away and revel in misty theories with which we have been afflicted for the past four years, or take this bill which carries the military power of this Government into those States and plants it there for the protection of those who have hitherto been unprotected; also, whether there shall be carried the olive branch with us, whether there shall be opened the way of deliverance from military power, or, sir, whether we shall do nothing at all. It comes to this; there is no other alternative; this or none. An appeal is made to this Congress to let these men go unprotected by the military or any other arm; that we shall turn a deaf ear to their cries, and turn our backs upon them.

For one I have waited long and patiently; I have labored not only to agree with this committee, but with its illustrious predecessor in the Thirty-Eighth Congress. I have waited and this last bill has been brought to me. I am left with the alternative to vote for this bill or to vote for none. For one, as a Representative from Massachusetts, I cannot go home to my constituents and say to them, rather than extend the military arm to this people, and say at the same time they may if they choose relieve themselves from it by giving suffrage to the black and adopting a republican form of government securing this, you shall go unprotected; you all shall be at the mercy of rebels whose red right arm is dripping with blood of the innocent and the loyal; I would rather vote for this with all the criticism we have heard against it. Not everything I want, but all I can get.

Mr. ROSS. I regret, Mr. Speaker, in time so limited we have to discuss a measure of so much importance as the one now pending. Instead of calm and dispassionate consideration we have to compress ourselves within the narrow compass of a few words. It should, sir, command the scrutiny and deliberation of this body for weeks instead of only for a few hours.

The reason assigned for the extraordinary measure now attempted to be passed upon the courts is that persons and property are not secure within the jurisdiction of the United States. This may in some degree be true, but I trust not to the extent stated by gentlemen upon this floor. Civil war will necessarily draw along in its train many evils. Disorganization and confusion and crime will to some extent exist. Nor is this confined to the southern States. Cast your eyes over every State in the Union, you will find our penitentiaries and our jails crowded. It is not an exceptional case with reference to the southern States.

We should approach the question of establishing and inaugurating military governments within one third of the Union, over eight or ten million people, with great caution and circumspection. I warn honorable members that the people of this country are not prepared to adopt and indorse the extraordinary measure now being pressed upon the consideration of Congress. For my part I am willing to go to the utmost verge of the Constitution to protect the rights of person and property, to protect the lives of all our people within our broad national domain; but, sir, I am not willing to violate the Constitution of my country, which I have sworn to support and maintain.

I am not willing, sir, to inaugurate a system repugnant to American institutions and pregnant with danger to the perpetuity of the Government of the United States. What is the relief that is anticipated from this extraordinary measure? We are told that it is essential to the security of person and property in the insurgent States that we should have military law, that the civil tribunals should be subject to the military authorities.

Why, sir, this is the same story which we were told in the Thirty-Eighth Congress. Measures were then inaugurated in the Freedmen's Bureau and civil rights bills by which we were told that these important ends were to be attained. Now we are told that we must have an additional bill for the attainment of the same ends. I ask gentlemen to say if those measures which they have already inaugurated have proved inefficient for the purpose contemplated, what assurance have they that this additional one will prove more efficient?

They tell us that the desired ends can be secured by creating five military districts in the ten lately insurgent States, and by authorizing and requiring the President of the United States to assign five generals to take command in those districts, with as many troops as he may deem necessary; but they tell us also that the President has failed to execute the Freedmen's Bureau bill and the civil rights bill, and yet they now propose to enact an analogous law, the execution of which will be wholly within the control of the Executive. I suppose the reason why gentlemen on that side of the House are willing to intrust this extraordinary power to the hands of the Executive of the nation is because he is their President, and therefore they have unbounded confidence that he will prudently and judiciously exercise the powers they place at his disposal. For myself, I have as much confidence in the present Executive as I ever could have in an Executive belonging to the party to which I do not belong and under their influence; but even if the President were of my own choice I know of no man in whom I could have such unlimited confidence as to make me willing to place the property, liberties, and lives of eight million Americans at the mercy of his ipse dixit. I would never do it.

It has been charged by some gentlemen upon the other side of the House that the President has not carried out in good faith the laws of this character already passed by Congress. Now, what remedy do they propose? To diminish his power? No, but to increase it by a solemn act of Congress authorizing him to divide the southern States into five military districts, and giving him power, if he cares to use it, to assign the entire Army of the United States to service in those districts. I have confidence that the President is true to our institutions and to the country; but, supposing the theory which prevails on the other side of the House to be true—that he is not faithful to his high trust—I ask these gentlemen are you not endangering the perpetuity of the Government under which we live by placing such extraordinary powers in the hands of this one man, by whom they may be wielded either for the weal or for the woe of our common country?

Judging from the ordinary course of human actions and events, it is to be supposed that Andrew Johnson in assigning military men to take charge of those military districts which you propose to create will choose men who are favorable to him in political sentiment; and then what will be the result? You want to protect the freedmen and the southern loyalists; but suppose the military officer that is assigned to command in any one of these districts should take sides against you. How, then, will you give these classes protection? Suppose that the civil tribunals which these military officers are authorized to permit to exist should take a notion to disqualify every individual who has been in the Union Army, or who has sympathized with the cause of the Union, what can you do? Your hands will be tied by your own bill, and you and those whom you profess to protect will be at the mercy of military commanders, some of whom at least are as likely to be against you as for you.

I tell you that when you inaugurate this system you strike down the great fundamental principle of civil Government. I have hoped that the extraordinary difficulties through which this nation has been for some time passing, might soon come to an end; but such laws as this which you now propose to enact only tend to increase them and to make them perpetual.

I am not one of those who believe that all wisdom will die with the Thirty-Ninth Congress. In a few days a new Congress is to be inaugurated here. This question of reconstruction has been a long time before the country; and if this measure indicates the way in which you are going to settle it, no interest will suffer by the further postponement of that settlement.

I have been pained and mortified to hear the attacks that have been made here upon the Reconstruction Committee, a committee which has stood at the head and front of this House for the last four years, and now none so poor as to do them reverence. [Laughter.] Gentlemen seem to emulate each other in abusing that distinguished committee; and I greatly fear that there is growing up among gentlemen on the opposite side a feeling of jealousy toward this committee and a desire to overthrow it and usurp its powers and authority. [Laughter.]

We are told that the constitutional amendment is here again offered to the southern States. Gentlemen know that they have already rejected that amendment; therefore why repeat the offer? You can gain nothing in that way. But I will point out to you in a sentence the straight road to reunion, harmony, and peace. It is by going back to the Constitution as our fathers made it, and only using the military power when necessary to enforce the civil law. That is the theory and practice, and the only theory and practice, upon which this Government can be administered. That is the straight road; all other ways are by-ways.

I have listened attentively to the arguments that have been adduced by gentlemen on the other side of the House against the adoption of this measure, and candor compels me to say that those arguments have carried conviction to my own mind, and that I am satisfied that the bill is fraught with evil, and evil only, to the best interests of the country. I am therefore happy to be able to join hands with the patriotic and honorable men on the other side in casting aside and trampling under foot this nefarious measure. Every provision of the bill is bad. It gives to the President an amount of power that should never be intrusted to the hands of any one man. Wherever it goes into operation it entirely abrogates civil government, and places the property, the liberty, and the lives of the community at the disposal of an irresponsible military chieftain. I think that your southern friends, the "southern loyalists," as you term them, will pray God to deliver them from their friends if this is the "relief" that you propose to give them—placing them under military rule, and, if the military chieftain pleases, under hostile civil rule also, because, as I have already said, he may choose to take sides against you, and to say to the existing civil tribunals at the South, "Go on with your government; go on with your administration of law!"

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill to regulate the tenure of certain civil offices.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. McRUER. I do not belong to that party which desires no military government for the rebel States; nor do I belong to that party which apparently desires nothing else than military governments for those States.

Sir, I voted for this military bill when it passed the House; but I did so with many misgivings. I sought to amend it ere it left here by an amendment substantially the same as this which comes from the Senate; and now, sir, I shall support this amendment, not because it is "better than nothing," but because it commends itself to my judgment as a good, sound, and proper measure for the reconstruction of those States. In my humble opinion, this is just such a measure as the Thirty-Ninth Congress should have enacted ere it had been one week in these Halls. I have always asserted that it was the duty of this Congress to place on record its ultimatum to those southern States, to say to them, "When you conform to certain conditions," (I care not how stringent or severe,) "when you present yourselves in an attitude of loyalty, when you do that which we require you to do, then, and not till then, shall you be permitted to participate in the political management of this country." But the Reconstruction Committee sat six or seven months, and at the end of that time brought in a measure which I supposed, and which they themselves supposed, was to be the basis of this settlement; and I think it is at least disingenuous for gentlemen to come forward now and say that it never was considered as a basis of settlement. In my opinion, if those States had ratified that amendment and conformed to it in every particular, when this Congress reassembled for this session, their Representatives would have been admitted to this floor by the emphatic command of the nation. But they rejected the amendment and now we are no longer held to those conditions.

Gentlemen here are appealing to party feeling, saying, "We have the power now in this Congress and in the next; let us use it." I beg leave to remind gentlemen that we have been invested with this power by this mighty nation only that we use it wisely and for the best interests of the whole country.

Now, sir, this amendment of the Senate meets with my hearty, with my cordial approbation. I voted for the military bill of the joint Committee on Reconstruction in the hope and trust that it would not be passed by the Senate ere they had attached to it some conditions by conforming to which the southern States could reorganize and reconstruct themselves.

I think that we have made this mistake in regard to this question of reconstruction: that we ourselves could and should reconstruct these southern States. Sir, they must reconstruct themselves; they must work out their own salvation. And what do we propose to do by this bill as it comes to us from the Senate? To invest rebels with power? Not so; but to dissolve the State governments now in existence there; to resolve society into its first elements. We say to their people, without regard to race, without regard to condition, reorganize yourselves, come to Congress with a constitution which shall provide that the elective franchise shall be exercised by all male citizens within your borders of the age of twenty-one years, and upward, which constitution shall also be acceptable to the Congress of the United States in every other particular, and then, and not before, you may be again admitted into the fellowship of States.

In that respect we reserve to ourselves the exercise of a wide discretion. If they bring us a constitution which is not acceptable in every respect, that is one which we feel we cannot safely accept, having due regard to the interest of the whole country, then we will tell them to return and form a constitution that will be acceptable to us. We propose here that the rebels themselves shall throw the dice which we have loaded. We propose that when they shall come in an attitude which appears to us to evince sincere loyalty we will admit them again to a participation in the government of the country.

Now, I have got to hear any man assert that we expect for an indefinite period of time to deny to these rebels any right to the elective franchise or to a participation in the Government. And when shall they again be admitted to exercise those rights? When they present themselves in a loyal attitude. And should we desire to have that period far removed? For one I prefer that it shall come within three months rather than be postponed for three years longer. And although we cannot forget personal resentments, although we cannot forget the great wrongs which have been committed, we must not take vengeance into our own hands. We must alone regard what the best interests of the whole country require in relation to its trade, its commerce, its every industrial pursuit. We must recollect that time alone can efface the impressions and passions that actuate us as well as them.

I hope this amendment of the Senate will be concurred in by the House; I hope the bill as amended will be signed by the President, and I hope that the people of the southern States will hasten to bring forward constitutions which shall be acceptable to Congress. I trust that ere the last of the columns of this Capitol shall be elevated to their places these States one by one will have their Representatives upon this floor, and that this nation will again resume its rounded and perfect form. And then our flag shall represent on every sea and everywhere a reunited nation, powerful, great, to be feared, and to be respected.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. HENDERSON.]

Mr. HENDERSON. How much time is there left for me?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is about as much as I shall need for what I have to say.

I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the measure now under consideration is one that I cannot consistently vote for and approve. I had intended to vote for the amendment of the Senate, until it was laid upon my desk in a printed form. But upon examination I found that it proposes, not only that the loyal men in these southern States shall take part in the reorganization of those States, but that the disloyal shall enjoy equal privileges with the loyal. It not only proposes that the disloyal shall have the right to vote, but to control the elections; and not only to vote for delegates to conventions to frame new constitutions of State government, but it proposes that disloyal men may themselves be elected delegates to those conventions.

And in my imagination I see such men as Lee and Beauregard and Semmes and Quantrell and all such characters sitting in the conventions which are to form constitutions under which loyal men are to live. When I look at the subject in this light I recoil from supporting this bill in its present shape. The glorious young State that I have the honor to represent on this floor expects this Congress to place the reconstruction of those governments in the hands of loyal men, not in the hands of those rebel leaders who have brought suffering and ruin and death upon our land. In obedience to what I believe to be the will of the loyal men of the State of Oregon, I feel bound to cast my vote against any bill which authorizes the rebel leaders to form constitutions and governments under which loyal men are to live. Taking this view of the subject, I shall with a hearty good will vote to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House with but a few remarks on this bill. The Thirty-Ninth Congress is now fast drawing to a close. If anything is to be done by this Congress toward providing for the government of the States that have engaged in the rebellion it is time that decisive action should be taken. I do not concur in the opinion expressed by some of the gentlemen who have preceded me, that the Committee on Reconstruction has done nothing practical on this subject. That committee has done good work. It reported at the last session a constitutional amendment, which was adopted by more than two thirds of both Houses of Congress and submitted to the people. The people have declared that that amendment is right and what the country demands. It was on that constitutional amendment the Union party went before the people in the State which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor. The result is that while in this Congress the Representatives from that State stand sixteen Union men to eight Democrats, we shall in the next Congress stand eighteen Union men to six Democrats. Our success at the election was based mainly upon that constitutional amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this House has passed what has been called the "military bill." I will not undertake now to discuss the merits of that bill, because I have given my views upon this subject on a former occasion. The bill which has been returned to us by the Senate, passing that body by a vote of 29 to 10, is a bill somewhat similar to that which was passed by this House, with the exception of the fifth section, which was added in the Senate. But one objection which is strongly urged to this bill as it comes from the Senate is founded upon the fifth section. Now, sir, I do not appreciate the force of the objections which have been urged against that section by some gentlemen on this side of the House. That section is as follows:

That when the people of any one of the said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition, who have been resident in said State for one year previous to the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law; and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for electors of delegates; and when such constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the persons voting on the question of ratification who are qualified as electors for delegates, and when such constitution shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same; and when said State, by a vote of its Legislature elected under said constitution, shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this act shall be inoperative in said State.

Now, sir, this section provides that the people shall assemble together and call a convention to frame a constitution. The black man as well as the white man is to have a voice in the formation of that convention; and when a constitution has been formed, black and white alike have the right to vote upon the question of its adoption. After that, this constitution is to be submitted to Congress. If such a constitution be submitted to the Fortieth Congress have we any right to presume that that Congress will not scan it and give it a thorough examination? If it be shown that the constitution submitted was gotten up fraudulently, that it was concocted by rebels, by such leaders as attended the 14th of August pad-lock convention at Philadelphia, the Fortieth Congress will doubtless reject it. That Congress will be politically as strong as, if not stronger than, that of the Thirty-Ninth; and I trust that the Fortieth Congress will find no weak-kneed men on this side of the House.

When that constitution is presented, if it is in accordance with the Constitution of the United States and if said States ratify the constitutional amendment and send loyal Senators and Representatives who can take the oath prescribed by the law, we should admit them.

This is a question which must be met some time, and why put it off? We are as well prepared to-day to meet it as the next Congress will be, or we will be any time hereafter.

It is evident that the courts in those States do not afford sufficient protection to life and property. They have not returned to full obedience and loyalty to the General Government. They need some higher law, that is the military power, which is necessary for their protection, and that protection this bill affords.

But by this bill we say something more. We give these States another opportunity. We say to them we are going to govern you by martial law; but we will say if you will form a proper constitution, allow colored as well as white people the right to vote on its adoption, and make such laws as will conform therewith, so as to protect all classes and adopt the constitutional amendment known as article fourteen, then you will be again admitted to representation and not before. I may say that constitutional amendment is the only safeguard we have. Gentlemen upon this floor may talk of forming a constitution in the South without the ratification of the constitutional amendment. If we do that, how soon will those States abide with us? Let the constitutional amendment be adopted and ratified and we have a guarantee against rebels holding office except by a two-thirds vote of Congress.

We also have in that amendment a guarantee against the rebel debt amounting to over $2,500,000,000, of which $500,000,000 is held in Europe. I tell you if the constitutional amendment is not adopted by which that enormous debt is repudiated, you will soon have application made to Congress for its payment. You will find lobbyists here, agents for these Europeans, who hold $500,000,000 of the rebel debt, pressing its payment and holding out glittering offers. I do not want that any men here should be compelled to undergo such temptation. I want the constitutional amendment adopted, and then the country is safe.

I am for the passage of the bill sent to us from the Senate. They have in substance adopted the bill of the House with the addition of the fifth section added. That learned body passed that, and it came to us. They passed it by a large majority. The question now is whether we will agree to the Senate amendment or non-concur and send the whole subject to a committee of conference. Send it to such committee and it is dead. To-morrow is the last day we have to pass this measure, so that in case of a veto or the neglect of the President to sign it we can pass it over the veto, or it is allowed to become a law by that neglect of the President. If we do not pass it by to-morrow, then the President can pocket it and prevent its becoming a law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman says the President may pocket this bill within ten days of the close of this session. I wish to know if there is anything in the Constitution of the United States to authorize such action. It reads in this wise, that the bill shall become a law if not returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, unless Congress, by its adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law. Here Congress does not adjourn. I say there is an exception in this case. The new Congress assembles the same day this one adjourns, and he may return it to that body.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to suggest to the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania there is another provision in the Constitution which he overlooks: that the President shall return it to the House in which it originated. This bill originated in this House, and this House ceases to exist at noon on the 4th of March next. The gentleman will see the next House, meeting on the 4th of March, may not organize for four weeks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to be heard a moment in reply. It says it shall be returned to the House, that is, to the branch of Congress in which it originated. Now, there is no interregnum in Congress; Congress never dies.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I have already suggested, there was an interregnum in the Thirty-Fourth Congress for eight weeks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was in posse.

Mr. BINGHAM. How could the President send a bill to a House of Representatives in posse?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I differ with my learned colleague. If the bill goes over, and the President pockets it, then at the next Congress we must begin de novo.

Mr. MILLER resumed: Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] is mistaken. It has been the practice and opinion of the ablest statesmen that Congress expires on the 4th of March, at twelve o'clock m., and that the President cannot under the Constitution return bills to the next Congress; thus the importance of immediate action on the bill under consideration to concurring in the Senate amendment. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say in the fifteen minutes allotted to me under the rules of this debate, a few words upon the important question now under consideration. I regret exceedingly that a question of such grave import to the country should be disposed of in two or three hours' discussion. No one is more desirous than myself to see harmony restored to every section of the country and all the States once more reassembled in this Hall in deliberation under the Constitution. I have carefully examined and considered the provisions of this bill, and I cannot bring my mind to consent to its adoption. It is less objectionable, it is true, than the bill which was passed last week by this House, introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Reconstruction; but, like that measure, it is a bill in palpable violation, in my judgment, of the plainest provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Under what clause in the Constitution is it proposed to be adopted? By what authority do you propose to inaugurate this system of military governments in these ten States? These States are by the bill styled rebel States, and it proposes to parcel them out into military districts. There is nothing, however, in the language of the bill which implies that they are not States within the Union; but it declares in the preamble that no legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exist in those States. Well, sir, in my judgment we have no evidence before us to sustain these declarations. I ask gentlemen who are in favor of this bill to show that there does not exist governments republican in form in each of these ten States. There can be no question that each one of them have republican forms of government. Under what clause of the Constitution, then, do you propose to invade these States by military power and subvert their local governments?

Section five provides that when the people of any one of said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the persons who may vote upon the ratification or rejection thereof as hereinafter provided, and when said constitution so framed shall have been ratified by a majority of the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition of servitude, who have been resident in said State for one year previous to the day of voting on the question of ratifying such constitution, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law, and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the proper qualifications herein stated, and shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same, and when said State, by a vote of its Legislature, elected under said constitution, shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

This, then, is your proposition. You go to the people of these ten States with the bayonet in one hand and your proposed constitutional amendment in the other, and ask them to make their choice—the amendment with negro suffrage or the bayonet and the sword and military government. That is, you propose to coerce by military power the people of these States into a ratification of your constitutional amendment and negro suffrage. If these are not States in the Union why do you ask them to ratify the constitutional amendment? None but States can ratify amendments to the Constitution. And if they are States in the Union, then, like all the other States, they should be left free to act upon these proposed amendments. If I am not mistaken the State of Massachusetts has not yet ratified the amendment, and you have just as much authority to send the Army into that State and compel the people of Massachusetts to ratify the constitutional amendment as you have to send it into Virginia to compel that State to do so.

My colleague [Mr. DELANO] speaks of the nation's will, and admonishes us that it must be obeyed. Sir, I have the highest regard for the nation's will, and propose to obey it. But let me inquire what is the nation's will? Sir, it speaks by no uncertain voice or vague clamor. It has been expressed in a language which neither my colleague nor myself can safely disregard.

That will, sir, is not found in partisan declamation or political expedients. No, sir; it has been expressed to us in the clear and distinct tones of the Constitution itself. That instrument, sir, embodies the will of this nation, and however eloquently gentlemen may declaim about the nation's will, I repeat it, that will is the Constitution, and until it shall be changed in the manner provided in the fundamental law it must be obeyed without hesitation.

Now, let me inquire, Mr. Speaker, under what clause in the will of the nation, as expressed to us in that Constitution, do you find warrant for legislation like this?

I deny that under this expression of the nation's will in the Constitution, you have any authority or power whatever to establish military governments in any of these States. You propose in this measure to strike down all the safeguards which belong to citizens of the United States. You propose to interfere with the rights of the people of those States to appeal to their local courts unless some military commander shall graciously allow it. You propose to deny to them the right of trial by jury and the privilege of the great writ of habeas corpus. And all this you propose to do in palpable violation of the provisions of your Constitution. That Constitution provides that—

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentation or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger."

Now, in defiance of this provision, you declare by the third section of this bill:

That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose; and all interference under color of State authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void.

I say, sir, that by the provisions of this third section you strike down the State governments in all these ten States, and you subject the people of these States to the arbitrary control of military commanders, who are to be appointed under this bill and to have this despotic jurisdiction.

Sir, is this in accordance with the great principles of our system of government which makes the military subordinate to the civil authority? More than this, the Constitution provides (article six of the Amendments) that—

"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State or district wherein the crime shall have been committed."

But this bill provides that when, in the judgment of the military commander, it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, and that all interference under color of State authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void.

I ask gentlemen who support this bill where do you obtain authority to subject the people of nearly one third of the States of this Union to the control of military commissions or other military tribunals? Are we still in a State of war? Is there in either of these States invasion, rebellion, or insurrection? Not at all; no one pretends that there is. The complaint is, and that is the extent of it, that the tribunals already existing in those States do not administer justice fairly and speedily to some of their people; that certain persons in these States do not receive full and adequate protection in their courts and redress of their grievances. And do gentlemen claim that upon complaints of this nature they have a right to subvert State governments, to strike down all civil authority, and to establish military jurisdiction in its stead? I deny that Congress has any such authority. It is not conferred by the Constitution, and if you assume it and exercise it, you do so outside of that Constitution and in violation of its great principles, and you do it by the mere arbitrary exercise of the power which you find temporarily in your hands.

Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for this kind of reconstruction. Congressional committees have been in existence for the last two or three years, and have from time to time reported propositions for the reconstruction of the governments of these States, yet they have accomplished nothing but to delay the restoration to these States of their just and constitutional relations with the Union. Gentlemen complain of the President's policy; but up to this time, now in the last days of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, they have utterly failed to present to the country any constitutional or satisfactory plan of reconstruction. Now, you offer this plan; and what is your proposition? It is to subvert civil governments in those States and to substitute in their stead military governments. Sir, this attempt at reconstruction, like all your former plans, will fail to restore harmony among the States.

This measure confesses before the American people and before the world, your failure to adopt any constitutional plan of reconstruction. This one is the most desperate of remedies, and one that is never resorted to by a free people, except in the expiring throes of their government, when the last expedient of subverting the civil by the military power is adopted. Sir, I trust we shall escape this humiliation and that this measure will be defeated.

It seems to me the path of duty is plain. Accord to the people of these States their plain constitutional rights; admit their Senators and Representatives who may be legally and constitutionally qualified; treat these people as American citizens; let the spirit of magnanimity and conciliation take the place of revenge, and true harmony will be restored; the great question of reconstruction solved, the bonds of the Union cemented, and we shall go forward as a great, free, and united people to that noble destiny which most assuredly awaits us if we shall be faithful to our system of Government.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, in separating as I must from some with whom I have uniformly acted in the House upon political questions, I desire to state in a word the reasons which induce me to vote to concur with the Senate in their amendment to this bill. It is evident to my mind that this is the only measure of reconstruction that can pass at this session, and the only alternatives presented to us are either to pass this bill, or so to be placed before the country, without any distinct policy or measure of reconstruction in opposition to that lately announced by the peculiar friends of the President. If we adopt this amendment, what do we get? First, we settle the question of the right of Congress to reconstruct the State governments which were destroyed by the rebellion, and we repudiate those governments that have been set up by the President, as we believe, by an usurpation of power dangerous to the liberties of the country if it shall be allowed to succeed and to pass into precedent.

The preamble of this bill declares that there are no legal governments in those States, and provides for the protection of the citizens in their persons and property by the military, and it is provided that all interference under color of State authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void. It is said, I know, that this will be no protection, but the reasons urged for this opinion have failed to satisfy my judgment. What has been the reason that loyal men have not been protected in the southern States; was it the fault of Sheridan in New Orleans, or of General Sickles, in his department, or of General Thomas in his? Has not the testimony of those officers proved that it was the action of these pretended State governments which this bill sets aside that prevented efficient protection to loyal men by the military, recognized as these governments were by the President? I have not time to quote this testimony, but it is very apparent that if there had been no government in New Orleans but the military rule of General Sheridan there would have been no riot and no slaughter of loyal men. But it is said that the bill leaves the whole matter in the hands of the President. I answer, the Constitution makes the President Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, and that we cannot change if we would. If we detail the officer the President will command him there. The President claims that State governments exist already in those States, and he remits the loyal men of those States to those governments for protection. If we make this bill a law, we take from him this plea. We make it his duty to protect the persons and property of the citizen by military power, and then if he fails to perform this solemn duty, if one loyal man shall fall a victim to rebel hate, and by his failure to act, punishment strict and stern shall not follow, then I for one will vote to impeach him and remove him from the office whose duties he will have failed to discharge. The remedy is in our hands; we can protect loyal men by this bill.

This bill secures the great principle of universal manhood suffrage, the only foundation upon which republican governments can safely and justly rest. It for the first time makes real and practical the principle we have so long acknowledged in words, that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. It is idle for us to enact in words that all men shall have the right to be heard in the formation of the laws of which they are to be governed, unless we sustain that enactment in those rebel States by military power. This bill does both. With the most solemn law that could be enacted a negro could not vote in the South except he was protected in his right by military power. This bill, if it becomes the basis of reconstruction, secures the adoption of the constitutional amendment, which has been decided to be essential and just by the people with such remarkable unanimity. Every principle embraced in the bill has been approved and indorsed by the people emphatically, except it be the principle of manhood suffrage, which they will indorse when the question is presented to them.

The only reason urged against this bill is that it does not, by congressional action, disfranchise all who have aided the rebellion. If there is in any State a majority of loyal men, white or black, they may limit the suffrage to suit themselves; if there is not, the question arises can we maintain republican governments in States in which a majority of the inhabitants are disfranchised? can we exclude from the ballot-box all the white men in South Carolina and Louisiana except the very few who were loyal, and place the State governments in the hands of the negroes alone? And what good end would be accomplished thereby? In a very few years the governments of those States would be controlled by those who, too young to take active part in the rebellion, could not be excluded from the ballot, but yet who, inheriting the feelings, opinions, and the natures of their parents, would be as disloyal as they. It is impossible permanently by mere legislation to keep the government of those States in the hands of loyal men; but then it is asked, Shall we abandon the loyal men and compel them to accept institutions to be framed for them by rebels which will be oppressive and will crush them out? By no means. We by this bill reserve the right in Congress to inspect the constitution that shall be formed and to see whether it duly secures the rights of loyal men; and we shall have the power to protect them. Can we not trust ourselves?

I am in favor of proposing some distinct plan of reconstruction which shall be just and which shall be an answer to those who have reproached us, that we have presented no plan by which the Union could be restored and the people again enjoy the right of self-government under the Constitution. But it is said by gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber that this bill overturns State governments and sets up a military despotism. The conclusive answer is this: these governments are not loyal governments. They do not secure protection to loyal men. They are mere instruments in the hands of disloyal men to oppress those who have the strongest claims to protection at our hands. Loyal men are not protected in the rebel States to-day. The fact that a man is a loyal man is a reason why he is not secure in person or property. The duties of allegiance by the citizen and protection by the Government are reciprocal and coextensive. If we cannot protect loyal citizens of the United States in life and property, we have no right to claim their allegiance; if we have no right to protect the rights of loyal men except through State governments, then we have no right to claim their allegiance except through State governments; and the doctrine of State rights is established, which justified every man in becoming a traitor to the Union upon the call of his State. And however consistent gentlemen who denounced the doctrine of coercing States may be in advocating this doctrine, it is impossible that those who believed in crushing the rebellion by military power can be influenced by such sophistry to such an extent as to fail to extend practical and efficient protection to the men who need that protection, only because they have been faithful to the Constitution and the Union.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state very briefly my views on reconstruction and the duty of Congress, and to explain some votes which, standing alone, are liable to be misunderstood. On the 13th of February the House had under consideration House bill No. 1143, to provide a more efficient government for the States lately in insurrection, reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] from the Reconstruction Committee, and which, as modified by him, was in these words:

That said late so-called confederate States shall be divided into military districts and made subject to the military authority of the United States as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama, and Florida the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district; and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the General of the Army to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the regular Army not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose; anything in the constitution and laws of any of the so-called confederate States to the contrary notwithstanding; and all legislative or judicial proceedings or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of said military tribunals, and all interferences by said pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under this act, shall be void and of no effect.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That courts and judicial officers of the United States shall not issue writs of habeas corpus in behalf of persons in military custody, except in cases in which the person is held to answer only for a crime or crimes exclusively within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States within said military districts and indictable therein, or unless some commissioned officer on duty in the district wherein the person is detained shall indorse upon said petition a statement certifying, upon honor, that he has knowledge or information as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged detention, and that he believes the same to be wrongful; and further, that he believes that the indorsed petition is proffered in good faith, and in furtherance of justice, and not to hinder or delay the punishment of crime. All persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district, and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

The gentleman who reported the bill moved to recommit it to the Reconstruction Committee, not with a view to have the motion prevail, but for the purpose of preventing any amendment from being offered thereto, and then after discussion to have the motion voted down and a direct vote taken on the bill. Under the rules of the House no amendment could be offered, and the only way to secure any addition or modification was to move to recommit the bill to some committee, with instructions to report it back with an amendment. The Globe shows these proceedings:

"Mr. BLAINE. I move, then, that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report [it] back immediately [with] the following [addition]:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States; and when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects; and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion or for felony at common law; and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State as thus defined, for ratification or rejection; and when the constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State."

In the discussion of this motion the Globe shows these remarks:

"Mr. STEVENS. For the last few months Congress has been sitting here, and while the South has been bleeding at every pore, Congress has done nothing to protect the loyal people there, white or black, either in their persons, in their liberty, or in their property." "The South is covered all over with anarchy and murder and rapine."

"The President has sought to establish what he says will effect the union of these States, if yielded to by Congress. The Congress has declared that the President has usurped powers which do not belong to him; that all that he has done is void in the face of the law; and that Congress alone has the power to protect these people and to create governments, and yet we sit by and move no hand, we sit by and raise no voice to effect what we declare to be the duty of Congress."

"We are asked by gentlemen why we who are upon the joint Committee on Reconstruction have not presented some plan [of reconstruction] upon which Congress could act."

"Now, it must be remembered that during this session of Congress we had no opportunity of acting until after the holidays, and since that time we have but little over a month. It must be remembered that when the holidays had passed and Congress had again assembled there was a plan, whether good or bad, presented to this House for consideration, upon which a debate of three weeks took place without any attempt to amend it."

I may here remark that a motion was made to recommit the reconstruction bill, to which reference is here made, to the Reconstruction Committee, which prevailed January 27, and it has not since been reported back.

I now continue to quote again from the Globe report of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] not on his reconstruction bill, but a continuation of his remarks from which I have just quoted. He proceeded to say:

"I warned the House that if that bill should go back to the committee it must die. My vigorous friend from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] assured me that such would not be the effect, that the bill would come back here fresh and blooming in the course of a couple of days. Where is it now? Why have we not something in lieu of it that suits the gentleman? for I may say that this bill comes from that same committee, after careful examination, with the unanimous consent of every member of the committee belonging to this side of the House except one."

"It was not intended as a reconstruction bill. It was intended simply as a police bill, to protect the loyal men from anarchy and murder until this Congress, taking a little more time, can suit gentlemen in a bill for the admission of all those rebel States upon the basis of civil government."

"Mr. BROOMALL. If this bill is committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, and immediately reported back, as it will be, will it then be in order to move, as a substitute for the entire bill, the substance of the Louisiana bill applied to the rest of the States?"

"The SPEAKER. After it is committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, the chairman of that committee will report it back instantly under the instruction of the House; and then if the House does not close the debate by seconding the previous question that amendment will be in order."

"Mr. BROOMALL. Then I give notice that I will offer that amendment when I have the opportunity, should the motion to commit prevail."

"Mr. JULIAN. If the motion to commit the bill to the Judiciary Committee should be voted down, what would be the effect?"

"The SPEAKER. The previous question having been seconded and the main question ordered, if the motion to commit is voted down, the previous question will not be exhausted until the third reading of the bill."

"The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BLAINE, to commit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with certain instructions."

"The yeas and nays were ordered."

"The question was then taken on the motion to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions, and there were—yeas 69, nays 94, not voting 27; as follows:

"YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Hawkins, Hill, Hise, Chester D. Upon these proceedings the Chicago Tribune of February 15 comments thus:

"BLAINE'S AMENDMENT.—One half of the Republicans of the House of Representatives aided by all the Copperheads voted down Mr. BLAINE'S amendment to Mr. STEVENS'S military government bill on Wednesday. In examining the yeas and nays we find the names of some of the most radical members in both lists, and in order to account for the very equal division of the party on the question we are driven to an examination of the bill and amendment themselves. On prima facie evidence the minority (those who voted for BLAINE'S amendment) were right. Andrew Johnson being the constitutional head of the land and naval forces of the United States, military government and martial law mean simply Andrew Johnson."

"The two central and son." "The leading ideas of Mr. BLAINE'S amendment were: 1. Impartial Suffrage; 2. Reconstruction when impartial suffrage shall have been obtained. Now it is impossible to believe that Mr. Cook, of Illinois, and Mr. JULIAN, of Indiana, would vote against a proposition in itself and far in advance of anything yet proposed in Congress, unless they had good ground for believing that something still better was in reserve in the arena of the Reconstruction Committee. On the other hand, it is difficult to believe that the Iowa delegation, which is perhaps as radical and far-seeing as any in the House, or even Mr. BLAINE himself, would vote for a proposition which might perhaps foreclose and conclude the action of Congress on the subject if there were a fair prospect of obtaining something better. Before the vote was taken, Mr. STEVENS announced that the Reconstruction Committee were prepared to propose further action within a reasonable time."

"The public will await with anxiety the unfolding of this plan, and the event will show which half of the Republicans in Congress were right and which wrong in the vote upon Mr. BLAINE'S amendment. A military government for the South, with Andrew Johnson to control and direct that government, and nothing in the future, is the most undesirable state of things that can be conceived."

The author of this article has inadvertently fallen into one or two errors. He is mistaken in saying that—

"Before the vote was taken Mr. STEVENS announced that the Reconstruction Committee were prepared to propose further action within a reasonable time."

No such announcement was made, and the committee I undertake to say were not prepared to propose further action, and have not done so. The only "fair prospect of obtaining something better" than the "Blaine amendment" was to recommit to the Judiciary Committee, and then when the bill with the amendment was reported back it would have been open to amendment by way of addition or otherwise.

This is shown by the answer of the Speaker, which I have already quoted in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Mr. BROOMALL.] I am authorized to state a fact which I know and which was decisive of my vote in reference to the "Blaine amendment," that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee was ready to make the report and then immediately to yield to an amendment, which would if agreed to have placed the whole subject of reconstruction in the hands of loyal men or in their hands along with those not conspicuous in rebellion. I was prepared to vote for that addition to the Blaine amendment. I voted to recommit the bill to the Judiciary Committee in order that such addition might be secured. The failure to recommit prevented an effort to secure this, and rendered it impossible to obtain at this session of Congress legislation so desirable, for it is impossible now for want of time to mature any bill which may not be defeated by the "ten days pocket veto," to which the President would undoubtedly resort.

I do not wish to detain the House at this late day in the session with any lengthy statement of my views on reconstruction.

I voted for the bill reported February 11th, by the select Committee on the New Orleans Riots "for the reestablishment of civil government in the State of Louisiana," because I regarded it quite as well adapted to accomplish the work of reconstruction in that State as any bill we could probably pass.

That bill contained a section in these words:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the following persons, and no others, shall be electors and entitled to vote at all elections held under the provisions of this act, namely, every male citizen of the United States, without distinction of race or color, who has attained the age of twenty-one years, and has resided in Louisiana one year, and who has never borne arms against the United States since he was a citizen thereof, and who can truthfully take the oath prescribed by the act aforesaid of July 2, A. D. 1862: Provided, That any person otherwise qualified as an elector, as herein provided, and who never voluntarily gave aid, countenance, encouragement, or support to any rebellion against the United States, nor any such aid, countenance, encouragement, or support to any government inimical to the United States in any other manner, capacity, or rank, than as a private soldier in open and civilized warfare, may be admitted to the rights of an elector by an order of any court of record of the United States, upon establishing to the satisfaction of the court, by the testimony of persons who have at all times borne true allegiance to the United States, that he is one coming within the description of persons designated in this proviso, and upon establishing as aforesaid that such person after the 4th day of March, A. D. 1861, never gave any voluntarily aid, countenance, support, or encouragement to such rebellion nor to any government inimical to the United States. Upon such proof being made, and upon taking and that all the upon the records of the court an oath that all the things are true which bring the applicant within the exceptions of this proviso, and also that such person will at all times bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States and to the perpetual Union of the States thereunder, such person shall receive a certificate which shall entitle him to the rights of an elector.

This bill did not meet my entire approval, and I wish now to put my views on record lest the vote I am about to give may be misunderstood.

I hold that State governments should be reorganized in the ten rebel States by loyal citizens only, excluding all who participated in rebellion. I have high authority for this. Andrew Johnson, in his speech of April 9, 1864, used this language:

"I say that the traitor has ceased to be a citizen, and in joining the rebellion has become a public enemy. He forfeited his right to vote with loyal men when he renounced his citizenship and sought to destroy our Government. We say to the most honest and industrious foreigner who comes from England and Germany to dwell among us and to add to the wealth of the country, 'Before you can be a citizen you must stay here for five years.' If we are so cautious about foreigners, who voluntarily renounce their homes to live with us, what should we say to the traitor who, although born and reared among us, has raised a parricidal hand against the Government which always protected him?"

"In calling a convention to restore the State, who shall restore and reestablish it? Shall the man who gave his influence and his means to destroy the Government? Is he to participate in the great work of reorganization? Shall he who brought this misery upon the State be permitted to control its destinies? If this be so, then all this precious blood of our brave soldiers and officers so freely poured out will have been wantonly spilled, all the glorious victories won by our noble armies will go for naught, and all the battle-fields which have been sown with dead heroes during the rebellion will have been made memorable in vain. Why all this carnage and devastation? It was that treason might be put down and traitors punished. Therefore, I say that traitors shall take a back seat in the work of restoration."

For one, sir, I am unwilling to abandon the loyal men of the South, who stood firm amid the gloom and darkness and storm of rebellion, and who at the peril of life and under persecution, atrocious in character, steadily clung to the flag of the Union. I hold that the enemies of the Government should have no part in setting up the fabric they destroyed in the States.

The existing State governments in the ten rebel States were set up by military authority under illegal and unauthorized proclamations of the President, and they are utterly invalid. They should be speedily set aside.

If the President could be relied on faithfully to execute the laws in the interest of loyal men, instead of executing them in the interest of rebels as he does, Congress should at once pass an "enabling act" for each rebel State prescribing the mode of reorganizing State governments.

But, sir, we cannot trust the President. I am, therefore, in favor of passing a law which shall simply protect all loyal citizens in all voluntary conventions which they may hold for the purpose of adopting a constitution and frame of government in each rebel State, to be submitted to Congress for approval or rejection, and if approved, then let State governments be set in operation. And the law should provide military protection to the person and property of all the inhabitants in cases where the national civil authorities may be unable to protect them.

I do not suppose it desirable or practicable in all, and perhaps not in any, of these ten States under the new State governments so to be reorganized to disfranchise all rebels, but those high in office during the rebellion; and the most culpable of the rebels should be denied the right of suffrage as well as the right to hold office, at least while as now they continue to manifest a disloyal spirit.

I would intrust the primary decision of that question to the loyal citizens alone, subject to the revision of Congress. Rebellion places all who aid it in a position to retain only such political rights as their loyal conquerors may concede to them; for by the laws of nations and of the civilized world rebels have "no rights which loyal citizens are bound to respect."

On the 8th of February I submitted for consideration an amendment to the bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr.

STEVENS,] which was designed to carry into effect these views. It was by no means perfect; but the venerable and distinguished chairman of the Reconstruction Committee, [Mr. STEVENS,] in his speech of February 13, in speaking of this amendment, did me the honor to say:

"Of the amendment of the other gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] I have already spoken. The amendment of his colleague [Mr. LAWRENCE] shows great care and wisdom."

I do not suppose my amendment merited this remark, but the general purpose which it aimed at, I believe, was right in principle; and so believing, I will never surrender that object so long as it is practicable to obtain it.

The bill reported from the Reconstruction Committee (House bill No. 1143) was modified by the Senate, as it passed that body yesterday, and is now before the House in this form:

A bill to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States.

Whereas no legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exists in the rebel States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas; and whereas it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That said rebel States shall be divided into military districts, and made subject to the military authority of the United States, as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama, and Florida the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district, and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the Army not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and try offenders, or when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose; and all interference under color of State authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void.

Sec. 4. That all persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted; and no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district; and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they may conflict with its provisions.

Sec. 5. That when the people of any one of said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition, who have been resident in said State for one year previous to the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion or for felony at common law; and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for election of delegates; and when such constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the persons voting on the question of ratification who are qualified as electors for delegates, and when such constitution shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have approved the same; and when said State, by a vote of its Legislature elected under said constitution shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this act shall be inoperative in said State.

Section six consists of an amendment offered by Senator DOOLITTLE, to the effect that the death sentence shall not be executed without the approval of the President of the United States.

At this late day in the session it is evident that we must accept the bill in this form or fail to pass any measure on the subject.

Under the Constitution the President is entitled to ten days, exclusive of Sundays, to consider every bill. After to-morrow he cannot be required to return any bill, and all such as he disapproves will of course fail.

This bill leaves to the ten rebel States the right, by voluntary conventions, or such as local, but illegal, authorities may prescribe, to reorganize new State governments. If this shall be done it secures the adoption of the constitutional amendments. It provides for military protection, which may or may not be faithfully carried into effect. This was the object of the bill as originally reported. If the military features of this bill will not be faithfully enforced the original bill would secure no greater efficiency—for in this respect both are substantially alike. Something is gained if by law we declare it the duty of the President "to protect all persons in their rights of person and property;" and if he fails to execute that duty the remedy by impeachment exists. This bill practically requires universal suffrage. It leaves all the reconstruction that may be effected under it to the approval or rejection of Congress hereafter. I do not believe it will result in reconstruction. The rebels will not accept it. At the last session of Congress we practically proposed to the rebel States that their illegal State governments should be recognized and ratified if they would adopt the constitutional amendments. By these we said to them: "You may settle the question of suffrage for yourselves." They have all spurned and rejected these moderate, just, and reasonable terms by a refusal to ratify the constitutional amendments.

No alternative is left but for Congress to take the work of reorganization in hand and regulate it by law, and settle for the rebels the questions which they refuse to settle for themselves. They have illustrated the adage that "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad." They will never again get terms so liberal as those offered at the last session of Congress.

"There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will."

The rebel States will, in my judgment, reject the terms embraced in this bill. Then, sir, we will, as I predict, provide for reorganization by loyal men alone.

One of the great objections to this bill is that it does not at once set aside the existing State governments in the rebel States, and it leaves reconstruction practically in rebel hands, to be controlled by military power wielded in their interests. But the original bill was open to the same objection, and in submitting the constitutional amendments at the last session of Congress to the States of the South no remedy was proposed for the same evils then existing. They are evils which future legislation can remedy. The next Congress may furnish the remedy, and whatever influences I may be able to exert shall be given to accomplish that object, so as to place the whole power of reconstruction in loyal hands. If the loyal men of the ten rebel States will proceed at once to hold voluntary conventions, make constitutions, and submit them to the next Congress, if they shall be found republican in form and in all respects acceptable I will vote to ratify them on their adoption of the constitutional amendments, and thus set in operation State governments which may be the work of loyal citizens, and I would protect them by all the power of the national Government.

I have given my views briefly on reconstruction and the merits of this bill, and I shall cast my vote with more reluctance than any I ever have given, in the hope that if the bill shall fail a better one may be enacted by the next Congress, or if it passes that its defects may be speedily supplied by legislation in favor of loyal government under the control of loyal citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote for this bill as the only measure of reconstruction now attainable. I am unwilling to go back to the people and say we have provided no definite plan of reconstruction. It affords all the military protection of the original bill, and is in that respect no less liable to be executed in the interest of rebels. In addition to this it lays down a plan of reconstruction far in advance of all that Congress demanded during its last session and far in advance of any legislation ever enacted on the subject. If it shall result in reconstruction, it cannot fail to secure State governments under which the rights of all men will be respected. It may not give ascendancy to the Union men of the South just now, but we cannot reject legislation in the interest of humanity because it is not in the interest of a party. If reconstruction shall not be fairly conducted, if the loyal people of the South are denied their full share and influence in the great work, if force or fraud is employed, if the result is not all that we can desire, as I fear it will not be, then we have in express terms reserved to Congress the right to reject all that may be done and prescribe new terms of reconstruction which will secure all that may be desirable.

Gentlemen on this floor who do not act with the Republican party object to this bill because, as they allege, it attempts to force governments on the South and to compel them to adopt universal suffrage.

It does not propose any such object. Once more it leaves to the people of the ten rebel States the privilege of voluntarily accepting or rejecting the terms of reconstruction prescribed in this bill.

For two years the people of the North have declared that the existing State governments in these ten States were illegal and must be reconstructed. During all that time the people of these States have stubbornly refused all terms, and they neither tender nor accept any plan of reconstruction. We do not yet compel them to adopt or accept any plan. All is left to their voluntary decision. And if they shall voluntarily accept the terms now proposed and adopt for themselves universal suffrage, it does not become gentlemen here to object.

This bill does not, as did the "Louisiana bill," which passed this House a few days since, prescribe a system of reconstruction which left to the people no discretion to accept or reject it. And yet we were asked by delegates representing the loyal men of every one of the rebel States to pass a similar bill for each of those States. Once more we hold out the olive branch, and if it shall again be rejected the public mind will then be prepared to deal with this great subject in a mode and by the enactment of laws which will accomplish their purpose without the sanction of those who by rebellion have forfeited the right to be consulted.

Mr. DARLING. At this late hour I do not intend to occupy the attention of the House for more than a few moments; but I feel that I ought not to return to my constituents without having expressed upon this floor my conviction that at last we have reached a measure which will enable this country to be restored once more to peace and prosperity. I was induced, though with much reluctance, to vote for this bill when it was before this House originally; and I rejoice that the Senate has so amended it that it will commend itself, I trust, to a majority of the members of this House.

Now, sir, in my judgment we have not lost time, although two years have elapsed since the surrender of the rebel armies. When Grant and Sherman held in their iron grasp the attenuated and vanquished armies of the rebellion, and when the soldiers of the Republic confronted the cohorts of secession, submissive and subdued, when victory perched upon the banners of the Union, then, in my opinion, was the proper time to commence the work of reconstruction. But that time having passed by without advantage having been taken of the placable condition of the people of the South and the prevailing feeling of magnanimity at the North—for anguish was then in every household and the Treasury was bleeding at every pore—we are called upon now to take up and do the work so long delayed. That, Mr. Speaker, was the time when the President of the United States should have convened the Congress of the United States and should have submitted to them this question of reconstruction; and if that had been done then, I believe that to-day we would be a happy and reunited people.

But, sir, the experience of the past two years has taught us a sad but perhaps a necessary lesson, and we must now profit by that experience. Practically we might as well left the State governments of the rebel States in the same condition as found by Grant and Sherman at the surrender of Lee and Johnston, as nothing appears to have been gained under the organization of provisional governments by direction of the President. We have seen four million people set free by one stroke of the pen, restored to their liberty by a bloody and exhausting war of four years; people who had heretofore been deprived of all the rights due to manhood and kept in a state of the most abject oppression and degradation. By this measure we propose to extend, not only to them, but to all of the loyal men of the South, that protection which under the Constitution they have a right to demand at our hands. We intend that while the military arm of the Government is extended to protect them, the people who have been inflicting these hardships and cruelties upon them, and who have sought to destroy the best Government that the sun of heaven ever shone upon, shall be subjected to the supervising power of the Government, with prompt and swift punishment, unless the opportunity is improved to abandon the error of their ways, to come back into a restored Union, and be once more represented in the Halls of Congress.

I regard this measure as liberal, as magnanimous, as charitable, while in all respects it is just to all. The constitutional amendment proposed by Congress at its last session was accepted by the people of the North in a great degree as the basis of a final settlement of this question. We then declared in the great State of New York that upon its ratification and acceptance by the southern States, and the election of loyal men to represent them, they would be entitled to representation in Congress. We have held out for six or eight long months in hopes that they would accept the conditions which we extended to them. But they have refused totally and wholly to do so; and it now becomes our duty, although we are in the last hours of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, to do that which the people of this country expected us to do when they elected us to this House, and that which they have looked to us to do from the time we first assembled here down to the present hour; that is, to submit to the people of this country a plan of reconstruction which would restore this nation to its former condition of peace and prosperity. I believe this measure will accomplish that result. I have no misgivings; I have no fears such as have been expressed by other gentlemen upon this floor. I trust that the Representatives upon this floor of the great party to which I belong and to whose expressions of regard I owe my seat in this body, will be true to themselves and to the great principles which they represent by concurring with the Senate in its amendment to this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I deem it proper upon this important question to offer some remarks by way of explanation of the vote which I expect to give, or which I may fail to give.

It seems to me that there are three alternatives presented. We have been offered the original bill from the joint Committee on Reconstruction; we have now offered to us the substitute proposed therefor by the Senate, and if that substitute fails to receive the concurrence of this House then the result will be a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. That committee of conference, it is presumable, will agree upon some compromise between the original bill and the substitute now before us; and it is also presumable that their report will be a compromise between the original bill and the substitute now before us.

I am conscientiously opposed to both the bill and the substitute as original propositions. I am opposed to the original bill, because I regard it as one which tramples the Constitution of the United States in the dust. I am opposed to it because it substitutes for civil government the most despotic form of military rule. Human ingenuity in my opinion could not desire a measure more despotic, more unconstitutional, more perfectly opposed to the spirit and genius of our republican institutions than the original bill known as Stevens's military bill.

I am also opposed to the substitute passed by the Senate, as an original or abstract proposition, upon constitutional grounds. I believe that the Congress of the United States has no constitutional authority to establish the sort of government which is proposed by that substitute on any State government. I believe that Congress has no constitutional authority to dictate to any State of this Union the kind of constitution to be adopted by that State, or to dictate to the acceptance by any State of any amendment to the Constitution of the United States; it has no authority to do this either by direction or by indirection. I believe that Congress has no constitutional authority to dictate to any State in this Union what qualifications it shall prescribe for its voters. I am therefore upon constitutional principles opposed to the original bill as well as to the substitute proposed by the Senate.

But the measure presented to me now comes not as an original proposition, to be determined upon its own merits, but as an amendment to the original bill, and is therefore in the nature of an alternative proposition; and while I shrink from it with instinctive horror as an original abstract proposition, I am now called upon to consider and act upon it as better or worse than the measure for which it is a substitute. We must either take the original bill, the substitute proposed by the Senate, or the measure which the committee of conference will present.

Now, in this state of the case it becomes us to ascertain the comparative merits and demerits of the original bill, the Senate substitute, and the measure which will be presented by the committee of conference, should this subject be finally referred to them. I regard the form of despotism embodied in the original proposition from the Committee on Reconstruction as the very worst that has ever been imposed on any people in war or peace. I regard the substitute of the Senate as a favorable modification, in some of its provisions, of that original proposition, and I believe the work of a committee of conference will partake of the character of each of the others, and perhaps may be worse than either of them, certainly not less objectionable than the substitute.

Then as a practical statesman, looking to the best interests of the whole country, and particularly of the communities most narrowly affected, what do prudence and wisdom and patriotism demand of me in reference to these several measures? As I said before, I repudiate each of them as an original measure. I believe this Congress has no constitutional right to pass either of them. Yet it is certain that this Congress will pass one or the other, or perhaps substitute for them both something that will be worse than either. Therefore it seems to me I am compelled to make a choice, and by my vote, or by my failure to vote, give my influence or support in favor of the one or the other. It is a choice between evils, and when the vote comes to be taken I shall endeavor to do my duty. I shall either not vote at all or I shall vote for the substitute of the Senate as the least of the two evils.

I believe that there is a wiser, a better, and an infinitely easier solution of these reconstruction difficulties, one perfectly consistent with the Constitution of the United States, better than either the one which emanated from the other side of the Chamber, or from the Senate of the United States. That solution is embodied in what has been popularly denominated "my policy," the policy of the President of the United States. If I had my choice, if I could exercise a controlling influence in the settlement of this vexed question, I would select the wise, the constitutional, and practical method of settling it by adopting the wise and lucid policy of the President. But that has been rendered, for the time at least, utterly hopeless by the overwhelming majority on the other side of the Chamber who are opposed to that policy.

What, then, are we to do? The majority will force the adoption of one or the other of their propositions upon this subject, and I shall take the position which I think is defensible before the country and before my constituents which I have indicated here to-night. I regret the spirit of malignity and of vindictiveness which has been manifested in various questions, as well outside of this Hall as in it, toward the President of the United States. I have the honor to represent the district which he so long represented in the Congress of the United States; and when I see him unjustly assailed as he has been assailed, when I hear him traduced and maligned as he has been traduced and maligned, I deem it my duty to lift my voice, feeble though it be and uninfluential, in his defense. When I say I am in favor of the policy enunciated by him in reference to the questions of reconstruction, I think I am but saying that I am for the policy initiated and inaugurated by Abraham Lincoln, his illustrious predecessor, and indorsed, in my opinion, by every department of the Government down to the present Congress.

Sir, there is a remarkable parallel furnished in the Declaration of Independence which prefaces the Constitution of the United States to the condition of things recently presented by parties in this country. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Half a minute.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Then, sir, I will spend that half minute in referring briefly to the singular coincidence between some of the changes in the Declaration of Independence and the condition of things we see to-day. If you will read that document you will find that it says:

"The history of the present King of Great Britain is the history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having, in direct object, the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States. To prove this let facts be submitted to a candid world. He (the King) has refused to pass laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the Legislature; a right estimable to them and formidable to tyrants only. He has kept among us in time of peace standing armies without the consent of the Legislature. He has affected to render the military independent of and superior to the civil power. He has imposed taxes on us without our consent. He has taken away our charters, abolished our most valuable laws, and altered fundamentally the powers of our Government. He has suspended our own Legislatures, and declared himself invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I ask for two minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Now, sir, substitute Congress for king in that document and you will have a history of the transactions of the great majority of this body in reference to the existing state of the country.

Mr. GRINNELL. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I will conclude, and then you can answer. All I have to say in conclusion is, I believe the distinguished patriot, now President, who has been maligned and traduced perhaps more falsely and fiercely than any man who ever lived in the United States, will shine brightly and tower conspicuously in history as a great and good man, as "the noblest work of God—an honest man," when the names of his traducers with their bodies shall have perished in the earth and been forgotten.

Mr. GRINNELL. Does the gentleman refer, when he charges us with abolishing their most valuable laws, to those whereby three million men were treated as chattels and were bought and sold?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I have nothing to reply to the gentleman's remark, as I did not hear it distinctly, further than to say, so far as the acts of the enemies of this country, if his question relates to them, are concerned, and so far as the motives which led to those acts are concerned, so far as the individuals who perpetrated these acts against the Government are concerned, I have as little sympathy with them or their acts as the gentleman from Iowa, and I have as much condemnation for their acts and the motives which prompted them.

Mr. ARNELL. Mr. Speaker, at this late hour, midnight, the remarks I make shall have the merit of brevity. For speech-making generally I have but poor respect. I belong to that class of men who believe what a man does is infinitely more valuable than what he says. Yet I cannot sit by quietly without expressing my protest, ay, my horror of the principle incorporated in the fifth section of the bill before the House, that makes rebel electors the basis of reconstruction. I do not believe that the country is ready to abandon the doctrine that loyal men must control. That such a proposition should be made even in the American Congress strikes me with apprehension. Is this the fruit of our long struggle? Can the heart and the brain and the patriotism of the Thirty-Ninth Congress frame nothing better than this? Why, pass this bill as it comes from the Senate, and you hand over the South to hopeless and irretrievable rebel rule and ruin. It is the "iron chamber" in the Inquisition, and seemingly fair and beautiful and inviting; yet in the end, with closing and narrowing walls, will crush its poor victims to remorseless and unavailing death. Say the best of it, it is a delusion and a cruel snare. What does this section propose to do? To set aside the rebel governments of Andrew Johnson and to build up other rebel governments in their stead that will overshadow the first as the mountain overshadows the dark rock at its base.

I think we have had enough of rebel rule acted in terrible tragedy. But the answer to all this is, Congress will have control of them. Do you distrust the Fortieth Congress? What ought to be distrusted and indignantly rejected is rebel rule. If the Thirty-Ninth Congress, with the cries of murder and suffering borne to it upon every breeze from the South, is disposed to shuffle off its duty, what right have we to expect aid from any future Congress? What is really the object of reconstruction? To establish loyal governments at the South. How? This Senate bill proposes to do it by giving the matter entirely into the hands of the rebels. Some one says, "Except such as may be disfranchised by rebellion." Ah! Who is to disfranchise them? Themselves. Now, considering their native modesty and backwardness in such matters, when is this likely to occur? In Tennessee it required Union men. The fifth section to this bill gives the entire power and the leadership to the rebels. And who ever gets the leadership at the South will prevail. The colored man is the last reinforcement of the Republic; yet this bill proposes to give his aid to whom? To the national cause, to progress, to civilization, to liberty, to human rights? Oh, no! but to the enemy, to treason! Are we encompassed with some hideous nightmare that men talk so wildly?

"Gentlemen tell us that we must not disfranchise the masses of the South, or the 'intelligence and honor' of the South. Was it not this 'intelligence and honor' that opened your three hundred thousand Union graves, whose occupants to-day are not safe from sneers in their very coffins. And have these martyrs not died in vain if our reconstruction is rebel reconstruction? Under the mask and claim of fairness I see stalk to the front the armed traitor. And, Mr. Speaker, when the "respectability of numbers" outweighs the demands of world-wide justice, I tremble for the safety of my country. Will this nation, even by indirection, set the precedent that "first-class" criminals cannot be punished? False, hollow paganism pointed its votaries to a higher idea of justice than this. Apollo was banished from the court of heaven for crime, and made to keep the flocks of Admetus.

Mr. Speaker, what I rose to say particularly was that in my opinion there is no cure for the evils that afflict the country; but to render hopelessly powerless the rebel element at the South. Congress exhibits an unaccountable indecision in this matter. Let it no longer hesitate, but do its duty.

One other thing I wanted to say. In every one of the non-reconstructed States there is a Union sentiment that only needs your support to assert itself; a poor, downtrodden, ostracized, maligned, and persecuted class; yet men who hoped on and prayed on, and to-day hope on and pray on, when seemingly every friend but God has left them. I appeal to you on their behalf. A word more and I close.

I pray this House not to strike down at one fell blow the organizations of Tennessee, Missouri, and West Virginia. The North pledges itself to stand by the Unionists of these States. We ask their representatives to fulfill this pledge. Time has shown the wisdom of the action of the loyalty of these States. In Tennessee we have planted ourselves upon the broad platform of the "rights of man." All this has been effected by loyal suffrage. A new civilization is beginning at the South. Do not turn it backward. We are getting further and further away from old beliefs and prejudices, and are approaching nearer to new and better ones. In Tennessee we are skirmishing, bringing on the battle, and remember it is the nation's battle, and the victory, when won, will be the nation's victory. Dally, truckle, falter in the great work, and we are gone. We must fight at close quarters. I hope that the Senate bill in its present form will not be agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this amendment: first, because it involves an entire departure from the object of the bill passed by this House, which it destroys while it professes only to amend it; second, because it reverses the action of the House in the Louisiana case, wherein we have just declared that the work of reconstruction shall belong only to loyal men; and thirdly, because it mocks the agonizing prayers of suffering loyalty by giving back the sword to the merciless hands from which that loyalty has just now appealed.

The bill of the House was but a response to the cry of an oppressed and bleeding people. It unsheathed the sword of the Republic, and placed it in the hands of the first of its Generals. It intended to charge him with the task that a faithless Executive had declined. It implied a resumption of our authority over the rebels we had conquered, and the provinces we had won. It looked only to the re seizure of what had been perfidiously surrendered. Its object was to extinguish the embers of an expiring rebellion, that had been fanned into new life, by the breath of the ruler who had been commissioned to destroy it. It involved no plan of reconstruction; it proposed only to save our suffering allies from the persecution of their enemies.

It went out from this House, the Hall of the people, reflecting, as it must always do, their opinions and their will, wielding the avenging sword of justice in its hands; and it comes back from a branch of the Legislature which is not intended in theory, or expected in fact, to answer to the popular breeze, until it has blown with more than the steadiness of the trade-winds for a period of six years—shorn of its menacing features, with the sword sheathed, and an olive branch in its hands, withdrawing the protection we had offered to loyalty, and tendering in its stead a propitiatory offering to treason. We sent to the Senate a proposition to meet the necessities of the hour, which was protection without reconstruction, and it sends back another which is reconstruction without protection, and we are expected to defer to its will by giving the possible and probable control to rebels, while it holds unacted upon, another proposition of our own, looking to reconstruction through the agency of only loyal men.

And what is the argument upon which we are expected to go back at the bidding of another body, which is so far removed from the people, to abandon their defenses and our own, and allow them to crumble about our heads, like the walls of Jericho, at the first blast of the horns that have been sounded at the other end of the Capitol? Why, just this: that if we do not take their bill, we shall get nothing. Well, I prefer nothing, unless it be protection, which is all that is now wanted, and just what this bill refuses. This point is an urgent one. For the other we can afford to wait, as we have waited, until this Congress shall have expired. It is about to die. Does the legislative power of the nation die with it? Is it to have no successors? Are we to make a last will and testament in extremis, only because another Congress, which is to assemble in two weeks, and will come here bearing the latest expression of the will of the people, cannot be trusted to do the thing which we have so long neglected? It is not a question, as gentlemen suggest, whether we can trust ourselves—which they very confidently think they can always safely do—but whether we can trust our successors. There are men in both Houses, I doubt not, who think we cannot. They know of course that the next Congress will be essentially different in its texture in both branches, and particularly in the other, from the present one. I humbly think it will be an improvement. I shall hail the infusion of new blood, as no disadvantage at all events. The people have commissioned that Congress to declare their will upon all the great issues of the times, and I for one am prepared to adjourn this question, as the greatest of all of them, for their decision. Nay, further, I humbly think that it is our duty to do so.

The argument in favor of action now, is that there is no time left for consideration. Upon the same argument precisely, I am of the opinion that it is our duty to leave this question to our successors. If the work is to be done, and well done, it must be done slowly. I for one am in no hurry about it. I would offer no terms of compromise to the conquered States. I prefer to wait until they are in a condition to come back. I want evidence that the hearts of their people are changed. I am not credulous enough to believe that after such a war, there is any mollifier but time, and would not give them my faith, even though they professed to have changed, and were willing to attest it by all the oaths which you can impose. They will consent to anything, of course, that we may demand, because there is no help for it. But why should we desire their precipitate return? Is it because the country would be satisfied with the mere hollow semblance of a Union, and that all we want is to see these people back in our Halls, to embarrass our legislation, and defy our power, as they did before? I desire no such Union. It would only reconvert these Halls into a Pandemonium—a hell of discord, instead of such a Union as the people long for. Better they should remain outside for a generation. True statesmanship would so decide, at all events. That anybody should think of bringing them back just now, upon any terms whatever, is and always has been a marvel to me. I undertake to say that it cannot be done with safety to our institutions. We can govern them outside of the Union; we cannot govern them inside of it, with the alliances they will form here. I propose to hold them where they are, until they have come to love the Government which they now avowedly hate; until, in a word, they have come to show it, by honoring loyalty instead of dealing with treason against this Government, as the highest of virtues, instead of the most enormous and irremissible of crimes.

Mr. HILL obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. GRINNELL, who said: Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to express my dissent to what has been said by gentlemen that the constitutional amendment was the issue in the last Congress. And I wish further to express the fear, if there is a concurrence with the Senate, we shall find ourselves by the veto of the President and the filibustering anticipated when it comes back from the President, we shall be like the man who went to hear the celebrated George Whitfield. Overjoyed to hear the great orator, and having rolled himself upon the ground and dirtied his coat, he found it was not Whitfield, and then said, "I have dirtied my coat for nothing." If we are to vote for that which is unsatisfactory, there ought to be some greater assurance that we are to gain something for the humility of the position into which this concurrence places us.

I greatly fear if I overcome my prejudices, and yield my judgment to the Senate and vote for this concurrence, I shall find myself exactly in that position of the admirer of Whitfield. I hope to sleep over this matter, and come here in the morning to vote upon the proposition understandingly, so as to please one person at least, who cannot transfer his individual responsibility; that person is myself. I therefore move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILL] had the floor to make that motion and yielded to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GRINNELL.]

Mr. HILL. I am glad to have given the gentleman an opportunity to clean his coat, and I now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at eleven o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BRADFORD: The petition of citizens of Denver, Colorado, in relation to the national currency.

By Mr. COBBE: The petition of citizens of Reedsburg, Sauk county, Wisconsin, for improvement of water communications between the Mississippi valley and the Atlantic sea-board.

By Mr. CONKLING: The petition of 1,500 citizens of the State of New York, praying that incomes to the amount of $1,500 may be exempted from taxation.

Also, eight petitions, severally of citizens of Akron, Pittsford, Churchville, Frankfort, Corfu, Middleport, Oriskany, and of Orleans county, all of New York, praying that incomes to the amount of $1,500 may be exempt from taxation.

By Mr. CULLOM: Four several petitions signed by numerous citizens of McLean county, Illinois, asking Congress to repeal the law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw from circulation the national legal tenders.

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of William S. Eddy, of Middleboro, Massachusetts, praying for issue of a United States note for one accidentally destroyed.

By Mr. FERRY: The petition of C. B. Albee, Charles T. Pagelson, B. F. Curtis, James A. Rice, N. H. White, Henry Brouwer, David E. Rose, S. Gale, and 80 others, citizens of Grand Haven, Michigan, praying that the five per cent. tax upon manufactures be removed.

By Mr. HART: The petition of Ailing Brothers, of Rochester, New York, and 20 others, manufacturers of and dealers in leather, praying for a reduction of the internal tax on leather.

By Mr. HOLMES: The petition of Thomas Kehoe and Matthew Kerwin for American register for Canadian-built schooner Annexation.

Also, the petition of J. D. Briggs & Co., and Strong & Hubbell, of Oswego, New York, for removal of internal revenue tax on manufactures.

By Mr. LOAN: The petition of citizens of Ironton and vicinity, Missouri, for the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, acting President of the United States.

By Mr. LONGYEAR: The petitions of J. N. Howland, and 107 others, and of J. Weil, and 84 others, citizens of Washtenaw county, Michigan, asking that the tax on manufactures may be removed.

By Mr. McCULLOUGH: The petition of Josiah Kerr, Thomas H. Webb, George D. Smith, A. S. Evans, Henry Straughn, and others, citizens of Dorchester county, Maryland, protesting against the removal of the collection district at Vienna to Crisfield.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of citizens of Sunbury, Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, asking that the five per cent tax imposed on manufactures be removed.

By Mr. PAINE: The remonstrance of William Blair, and others, citizens of Waukesha, Wisconsin, against legislation depreciating or unsettling the national currency.

By Mr. ROSS: The remonstrance of 97 citizens of Canton, Illinois, against legislation disturbing the national currency.

By Mr. SAWYER: Sundry claims of soldiers for money deposited with the Merchants' National Bank.

Also, reports of the Secretary of War and Paymaster General.

Also, the petition of A. Grant, for relief in the matter of the contract for the rebuilding of certain buildings at the Norfolk navy-yard.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The memorial of Lorenzo Thomas, Adjutant General, United States Army, on the subject of the pay of the Army.

Also, the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Davis, praying for legislation to facilitate the payment of bounties and pay due the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers.

By Mr. UPSON: The petition of J. V. Phillips, Dwight Plimpton, and 31 others, citizens of Berrien county, Michigan, praying Congress for an appropriation for the construction of a harbor at New Buffalo, Michigan.

Also, the remonstrance of N. M. Thomas, B. S. Brown, F. W. Hatch, and J. W. Briggs, of Schoolcraft, Michigan, against legislation depreciating or unsettling the established national currency.

By Mr. WINDOM: A concurrent resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, on the financial condition of the country.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m., pursuant to the order of yesterday. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BONTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SOUTHERN RELIEF.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the application of the contributors, to assign one of the vessels of the United States for the transportation of supplies of food and clothing to Charleston, Savannah, and Mobile, for the use of that portion of the people of the southern States that may be suffering from the failure of crops or other causes, under such regulations as may by the Secretary of the Navy be prescribed.

Mr. SPALDING. I am afraid that will give rise to debate. I object.

SERVICE ON A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I ask to be excused from service on the special committee of which the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. WENTWORTH, is chairman.

No objection being made, the gentleman was excused.

Mr. WARD, of New York. I ask leave to print some remarks on the pending bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask leave also to print some remarks.

Leave was granted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained leave of absence for three days for Mr. GARFIELD.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed House bill No. 674, to establish additional offices for the assay of gold and silver, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in answer to the resolution of the House of the 15th instant, relative to the rules by which the beginning points of the claim of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific railroad were ascertained; which was printed, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous order of the House it now proceeds to vote upon the pending question pertaining to the bill now on the Clerk's table, providing for the government of the late insurrectionary States. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] moves that the House non-concur, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment. The motion to concur takes priority.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to inquire if the vote is against concurrence whether that does away with the second motion to non-concur?

The SPEAKER. It does not; if the House refuses to concur and no conference is asked, the bill will be sent back to the Senate for their action, and that body may recede, which will of course pass the bill.

Mr. THAYER. I call for the reading of the Senate amendment.

The amendment was read.

Mr. THAYER and Mr. SPALDING demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROSS. I inquire if it is in order to lay the preamble on the table?

The SPEAKER. It would be to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The House has already voted on that.

The SPEAKER. This is at a different stage.

Mr. STOKES. I ask unanimous consent of the House to have a telegram which arrived yesterday, read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 73, nays 98, not voting 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Doming, Dodge, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Griswold, Hart, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburt, Kasson, Ketcham, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Marvin, Maynard, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Orth, Patterson, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Rousseau, Schenck, Spalding, Stillwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Campbell, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eldridge, Eliot, Farguhar, Finck, Goodyear, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Koontz, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, McCullough, Mercur, Moulton, Myers, Nowell, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Wright—48.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Conkling, Culver, Dixon, Eckley, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Hale, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jenckes, Jones, Marston, McClurg, Morrill, Noell, William H. Randall, Strouse, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Winfield—19.

So the House refused to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ROLLINS stated that his colleague, Mr. MARSTON, had been called home by the serious illness of his father. If present, he would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BAXTER said: My colleague, Mr. MORRILL is absent on account of the serious illness of his mother. From what I know of his good sense I believe that if present he would have voted to non-concur.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE said: I desire to say that my colleague Mr. BAXTER is not present. If he were here I have no doubt that in the exercise of his good sense he would have voted in favor of concurring. [Laughter.]

Mr. EGGLESTON stated that Mr. McCLURG was necessarily absent and had requested him to state that if present he would have voted "no" upon this motion.

Mr. ANCONA stated that Mr. STROUSE had been called home by sickness in his family, and he understood that he had paired off with Mr. ECKLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. SPALDING stated that if Mr. ECKLEY were present he would vote "ay."

Mr. RADFORD stated that Mr. WINFIELD was confined to his home by sickness and was unable to attend the sessions of the House.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. STEVENS, that a committee of conference be asked upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I would ask whether the committee of conference have a right to sit during the sessions of the House?

The SPEAKER. They have.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now commences, and the House will resume the consideration of the bill reported on Thursday last from the Committee on the Militia, upon which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to take up an appropriation bill, that will not occupy more than fifteen minutes. The Senate have sent us word that they have no appropriation bill to act upon.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I will yield for that purpose.

TENURE OF OFFICE.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] moves to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I ask him to allow me to make a report from the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 453, the bill commonly called the tenure of office bill.

The SPEAKER. The report of a committee of conference is a privileged subject.

Mr. SCHENCK. I submit a report from a committee of conference.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. No. 453) regulating the tenure of certain civil offices, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the first amendment of the House with an amendment as follows: at the end of section one of said bill, insert the following words: "Provided, that the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, shall hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed, and for one month thereafter, subject to removal by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the second amendment of the House, and agree to the same.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

THOMAS WILLIAMS,

JAMES F. WILSON.

Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to demand the previous question upon the question of agreeing to the report of the committee of conference. But before doing so I will explain to the House the condition of the bill and the decision of the conference committee upon it. It will be remembered that by the bill as it passed the Senate it was provided that the concurrence of the Senate should be required in all removals from office, except in the case of the heads of Departments. The House amended the bill of the Senate so as to extend this requirement to the heads of Departments as well as to other officers.

The committee of conference have agreed that the Senate shall accept the amendment of the House. But inasmuch as this would compel the President to keep around him heads of Departments until the end of his term, who would hold over to another term, a compromise was made by which a further amendment is added to this portion of the bill, so that the term of office of the heads of the Departments shall expire with the term of the President who appointed them, allowing those heads of Departments one month longer, in which in case of death or otherwise other heads of Departments can be named. This is the whole effect of the proposition reported by the committee of conference; it is in fact an acceptance by the Senate of the position taken by the House.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of this report whether it becomes necessary that the Senate shall concur in all appointments of executive officers, and that none of them can be removed after appointment without the concurrence of the Senate?

Mr. SCHENCK. That is the case. But their terms of office are limited, as they are not now limited by law, so that they expire with the term of service of the President who appoints them, and one month after, in case of death or other accident, until others can be substituted for them by the incoming President.

Mr. LE BLOND. I understand, then, this to be the effect of the report of the committee of conference in the event of the President finding himself with a Cabinet officer who does not agree with him, and whom he desires to remove, he cannot do so and have a Cabinet in keeping with his own views unless the Senate shall concur.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman certainly does not need that information from me, for this subject has been fully debated in this House.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I hope the House will not agree to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call the previous question, upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. FINCK. I call for the yeas and nays upon this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 111, nays 41, not voting 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brownell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Doming, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farguhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Abner C. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Winfield—38.

So the report was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to defer for a short time his motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and allow me to report back the Indian appropriation bill as amended in accordance with the instructions of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. No. 1039) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1868, with the amendments indicated by the order of the House when the bill was last under consideration. The instructions of the House under which this bill was recommitted to the committee were a little broader in their terms than I think was intended by the mover of those instructions or by the House. The first item which under those instructions the committee was obliged to strike out is embraced in lines eight to twenty-eight, inclusive, of the printed bill, embracing some items necessary for the maintenance of the department here at Washington, with some few other items. I am instructed by the committee to move to amend by reinserting that item, which is as follows:

For the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, namely:

For the pay of superintendents of Indian affairs and of Indian agents, $110,550.

For pay of sub-agents, $6,000.

For pay of clerk to superintendent at St. Louis, Missouri, $1,200.

For pay of temporary clerks by superintendents of Indian affairs, $5,000.

For pay of clerk to superintendent of Indian affairs in California, $1,800.

For pay of interpreters, $28,400.

For presents to Indians, $5,000.

For provisions for Indians, $11,800.

For buildings at agencies and repairs thereof, $10,000.

For contingencies of the Indian department, $36,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. The next item struck out under the instructions of the House is found on page 44 of the printed bill, being the appropriations for the Senecas of New York. These appropriations not being called for by any treaty stipulations, the committee, acting in obedience to their instructions, were compelled to strike out. But I desire to state that these appropriations were included in the bill to carry out obligations on the part of the United States, resulting from the fact that the United States took into its Treasury a certain trust fund, in consideration of which, by a law which has been in force for a great many years, we agreed to pay annually the interest on that fund for the benefit of the Indians. The obligation is as distinct and imperative as if it were imposed by treaty. The committee, therefore, have instructed me to move to amend by reinserting in the bill on page 44, after line ten hundred and forty-nine, the following:

Senecas of New York:

For permanent annuity, in lieu of interest on stock, per act of 19th February, 1831, $6,000.

For interest, in lieu of investment, on $75,000, at five per cent., per act of 27th June, 1846, $3,750.

For interest at five per cent., on $43,050, transferred from Ontario Bank to the United States Treasury, per act of 27th June, 1846, $2,152 50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. The next item struck out by the committee, in obedience to the instructions of the House, is found on page 48 of the printed bill, under the head of "Sioux of Dakota." The committee have directed me to move the reinsertion of this paragraph with a modification of the language, so as to show that the appropriation is in accordance with treaty stipulations, which does not appear by the language of the paragraph as originally reported. I therefore move to amend by in-serting on page 48, after line eleven hundred and fifty-seven, the following:

Sioux of Dakota:

For expense of transporting and delivering articles furnished for the nine bands of Sioux aforesaid, as required by treaties made at Fort Sully in October, 1865, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. The principle items that were intended to be struck out in pursuance of the instructions of the House commence on page 55, under the head of "general incidental expenses of the Indian service." I do not propose to enter into any debate on this subject. I have only to say that the Committee on Appropriations, upon a careful reexamination of all those items, have felt it absolutely necessary for the continuance of peaceful relations in the sections of country inhabited by the Indians that these appropriations should be made. The Representatives from the States and Delegates from the Territories named in these clauses are very urgent in insisting on the necessity of the several appropriations, fearing wars as the immediate result of a failure on the part of Congress to provide these necessary current appropriations to preserve the peace. I shall therefore ask that the several clauses be read in their order, and that the Representatives and Delegates interested may state the facts bearing upon the question.

The SPEAKER. The provisions can only be inserted as amendments.

Mr. KASSON. I move as the first amendment to insert the following:

General incidental expenses of the Indian service: For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Arizona, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $35,000.

The estimate is for thirty-five thousand Indians. The amount asked for originally in the estimate submitted to the committee was $70,000. We have reduced it to $35,000—a dollar for each Indian.

These Indians are now upon a reservation; and in consequence of not having received this money they, believing they had been defrauded by the agent, actually murdered him, saying their Great Father must have sent the money, and that the agent was responsible for their failure to receive it. We are informed this appropriation is indispensable.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. This is an appropriation of $35,000 to assist these Indians to locate in permanent abodes, and to sustain them in the pursuits of civilized life. We have never been able to accomplish the civilization of any body of Indians, although to that end we have expended a large amount of money. It seems the more money we expend on them the worse we make them.

Now, sir, I do believe the Indians had good reason to suspect the Indian agents had kept the money, because they knew the character of these Indian agents and what they had done in other instances. They have come to know, little as they know about civilized life, all the money the Great Father sends to them never comes to them. If we appropriate this $35,000 I do not believe ten per cent. of the amount will ever reach the hands of the Indians, and what little does will be filched from them in some wrongful trade.

Mr. KASSON. I have but a word to say in reply. I regret my friend from Pennsylvania is not willing to trust, to some extent at least, to the gentleman who represents that region of country. There are few persons who have not been there who must not trust to these representations. In reference to all matters touching oil or any other interest of his district we consult the gentleman, and in like manner we are bound to consult and take the recommendations of the Representatives here from these remote Territories. These Indian relations have suffered interruption, and it is necessary they should be restored. We have reduced the appropriation one half. These Indians are already upon this reservation. This amounts to only one dollar an Indian.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. In a full House we decided against this appropriation, and I do not feel disposed to let it pass without question.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. WINDOM and Mr. BRANDEGEE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move the following as the next amendment:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, including traveling expenses of the superintending agents, $7,500.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 11; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. HIGBY and Mr. ANCONA.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 31.

The SPEAKER voted in the affirmative.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Colorado Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire of the gentlemen from Iowa whether this is not a reintroduction into this bill of the items that the House upon careful consideration ordered to be stricken out, and the bill to be reported without them. It will be remembered that this question of Indian appropriation was very much debated a short time since, and after full discussion the Committee on Appropriations were instructed to reconsider the bill and strike out all these items. I would like to know how many of them have been reintroduced in the form of amendments to the bill.

Mr. KASSON. The committee have reexamined these items, and as I stated at the opening, but I presume the gentleman did not hear me, have sought to relieve the bill entirely of the appropriations that were objected to unless the necessities of the case required them to be retained or reinserted. The question was whether the amounts appropriated could be reduced. In accordance with the order of the House we have reported the bill back with certain necessary items reinserted. I am obliged to differ with the gentleman in his statement that all these items were stricken out on careful consideration. They were stricken out without special consideration upon the general theory that what were called incidental expenses ought to be disavowed entirely from the bill in all cases. The committee in executing the order of the House have reinscribed certain appropriations that were in accordance with existing obligations, money obligations of the United States, resulting from the taking of trust funds and agreeing by law with the tribes whose funds were taken by the United States to pay them annuities or money in the shape of interest. In several instances of this kind to strike out the appropriations would be a repudiation of the obligations of the Government, and these items are therefore reinserted.

Then, in regard to these expenditures, the committee made a thorough examination, and upon consultation with the Delegates from the Territories, as well as with the Indian Bureau, we found that to break off suddenly and interrupt completely the habits to which the Indians have become accustomed, as if by the force of law, of receiving annually certain aid and assistance from the United States, would inevitably, in many instances, tend to promote war, robbery, and murder of the whites. We were so entirely convinced of that fact that there was no dissenting voice in the committee when they instructed me to move to rein-sert these items with, in some cases, additional provisions.

I will say in order to cover all these cases, that a new section has been proposed by the committee which we have not yet reached, to come in at the end, imposing new duties upon the Indian Bureau to report the items in particular of these expenditures in future as they shall be made annually; so that we may know exactly the articles for which the money is paid, thus putting a new check upon the entire disposition of this fund. I would be glad, of course, if I could conscientiously, as the gentleman desires, ask the House to strike out these items, but we cannot do it without exposing the country, and especially the peaceful whites in those regions to outrage and murder.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire simply to say that I understood the debate the other day quite differently from what seems to be the impression of the gentleman from Iowa. If I understood it, the action the other day went over the ground that this House had recently passed a very important bill looking to a change of the administration of Indian affairs, transferring it from the Department of the Interior to the Department of War. Should that bill become a law the War Department would desire to have appropriations made under its own estimates. It was stated that the current or existing appropriations were sufficient to carry on the Indian Bureau till the end of the present fiscal year, and as the Fortieth Congress would assemble on the 4th of March there would be ample time for it to mature an Indian appropriation bill for the next fiscal year. Therefore the House determined that all the appropriations not necessary to carry out the stipulations of existing treaties should be stricken out, and that it would postpone action during the present Congress upon that portion of the bill, and leave it to our successors in the next Congress to act upon estimates from the War Department, should the change anticipated by the action of the House be made.

I will not go over the ground. I refer to the recollection of gentlemen that the complaints of the management of the Indian Bureau under the Department of the Interior have been long and grievous. The House may determine to remedy them if a remedy is possible in the nature of things.

It does seem to me, with all deference to the Committee on Appropriations, that the House did decide this matter, and decided it upon full consideration and discussion—decided it, knowing what they were about, and decided that these items now sought to be reintroduced into the bill, were not necessary to be passed by us at the present session, but could be provided for by our successors in the next Congress, and that we might safely leave the work to be done by them, in the light of such legislation in regard to the Indian Bureau as this Congress may enact.

Mr. THAYER. I hope the House will understand the process to which they are now being subjected. The other day the House voted by a very considerable majority, instructions to this committee to strike out of this bill the very provisions which now, upon the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] are sought to be reinserted. The House in coming to that conclusion had made up its mind to abandon the mistaken policy which had hitherto been pursued, in voting large sums of money with the ostensible purpose of preserving peace in the Indian country, but with the real effect of supplying sums of money to be plundered by Indian agents.

Now, let the House consider this matter. The gentleman from Iowa, in regard to one of the amendments already acted upon by the House, has told us that the sum appropriated would, in that particular instance, amount to about one dollar for every Indian. I ask the common sense of this House how far one dollar a head to an Indian tribe will go to enable them to build houses and enter into agricultural pursuits. Sir, if the Indians ever get that dollar a head which you have just voted, it will not be spent on houses or agriculture, but in the purchase of whisky.

But in point of fact I believe that a very small portion of that dollar will ever reach the Indian for whom it is supposed to be intended. Sir, we have proceeded upon this mistaken policy long enough. It has failed to accomplish the purposes for which its advocates claim that it was intended. It has not prevented Indian wars. We have pursued this system steadfastly for years, and yet Indian wars still continue to desolate the whole western country, and the passage through that country is now, as we all know, impracticable unless by armed men. It is in vain that you continue this useless policy of expenditure. It does not accomplish the purpose, it does not prevent Indian wars; and those wars and atrocities will rage as they have always raged heretofore, notwithstanding all the money you may appropriate to appease the Indian tribes.

Sir, I do not know from what cause, but either because this money is improperly applied or because it is squandered by the agents to whose hands it is intrusted, or owing to the fact that the receipt of the money has no effect upon the savages who receive it, the fact stands out incapable of denial that, while you pour out your money like water for this purpose, Indian warfare is prosecuted with unabated vigor, and to the unceasing destruction of our emigrants and pioneers.

Sir, I hope the House will adhere to the action which they took the other day, and that they will keep out of this bill all sums which are not necessary for actual expenditure in the Indian department, and for carrying out in good faith the treaties which we have made with the Indian tribes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to hear gentlemen who live so far from the scene of these difficulties as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] get up and tell us about useless expenditures upon the Indians. It strikes me as exceedingly strange that men who have hardly ever seen the track of an Indian should rise in this House and state that money which has been expended thousands of miles from them has been uselessly expended.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] anticipates, however, the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, and therefore he thinks there ought to be no appropriations of this kind made at this time. I understand, sir, that the Senate has not passed the bill which received the approval of this House, and there is very little probability that it will be passed in that body. It will not do for us to wait to see whether the Senate will pass that bill, meanwhile making no provision for the Indian difficulties which may occur during the ensuing year.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] talks about the continued expenditures for Indians. He seems to think that this matter ought to have been all closed up many years ago. Now, gentlemen when they entertain such an idea forget the principle which governs them on other questions. Gentlemen come here and ask for appropriations for improving their rivers and harbors, which have been in use for three hundred years. I might inquire, will they never get done asking for such appropriations?

Mr. THAYER. If the gentleman refers to me, he will allow me to say that I voted against the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that just so long as the United States Government is taking new lands from the Indians, so long will there be new expenses. Just so long as the settlements of the whites are pushed forward to the hunting grounds of the wild Indians we may expect new difficulties, and we shall be required to make new appropriations. I am perfectly astonished that a statesman should rise here and manifest so little knowledge of the principles of our Government as to imagine that appropriations made to feed and clothe the Indians a hundred years ago ought to answer for the present day, when thousands and tens of thousands of wild Indians are being brought within the circle of civilization every year.

Mr. Speaker, there must be appropriations probably for the next hundred years unless the Government kills all the Indians or civilizes them, or builds an impassable wall between the whites and the Indians. Just so long as white emigrants continue to push forward into the wilderness, the native home of the Indians, you may expect renewed applications for appropriations either to kill or to feed and clothe those Indians.

The people I have the honor to represent have within the last two years lost $250,000 by depredations of Indians who were not under treaty with the Government. These Indians are in wandering tribes. They acknowledge no authority. They rob and steal when and where they please, and they will continue to do so until they are collected, put upon reservations, and taught the arts of civilization. The people in eastern Oregon and in Idaho Territory have suffered to such an extent from these wandering Indians that they have banded themselves together and offered a reward for the scalps of Indians, men, women, and children. I do not say that the government of that State or Territory has done this; but individuals, feeling the necessity of having the Indians either civilized or killed, have formed associations and offered rewards of $100 for the scalp of a full-grown male Indian, fifty dollars for the scalp of an Indian woman, and twenty dollars for the scalp of an Indian child. This is the horrid system into which the whites may everywhere be driven unless this Government will take proper care of the Indians.

I received yesterday a letter from the Governor of Idaho Territory, an intelligent, honest, loyal man as any in the nation, and he urges that these Indians, these fragments of bands, must be collected, placed upon reservations, and cared for by the Government, or their depredations will cost ten times as much as the appropriations necessary to provide for them properly. In the State of Oregon and the Territory of Idaho alone at least one hundred thousand dollars ought to be appropriated this year for collecting and placing Indians upon reservations. If this were done it would be a vast saving, not only of money, but of lives. I said that the people of my own State have lost perhaps two hundred and fifty thousand dollars by Indian depredations. I will now say that nearly that many valuable lives have been lost in the same way.

Now, I ask members of the House what is to be done? Shall this stealing and murdering continue, or shall we make the necessary appropriations for collecting the Indians upon reservations and teaching them the arts of civilization? I do hope that the Government will not be "penny wise and pound foolish," but will act with a prudent generosity upon this subject.

Mr. SCOFIELD obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. With the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] I wish to put to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HENDERSON] a question which I would have been glad to put to him before he took his seat.

I desire greatly any information on this subject which the gentleman from Oregon may be able to give us. He may have information which we have not. In the remarks which I submitted to the House I did not pretend to speak from any special knowledge that I had upon the subject, nor did I advance any opinions of my own. I spoke of the opinions largely prevailing in this country and on which the action of this House has been taken. One of those opinions is—and on this point I would like to hear from the gentleman from Oregon—that the men who have been selected as Indian agents have been in general, or certainly to a very large extent, very unsuitable persons to be intrusted with the care of the Indians, much less with the expenditure of the public money. I would like to hear from the gentleman whether that opinion is well or ill founded, so far as he knows.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will answer the question with a great deal of pleasure. Some of the Indian agents and superintendents are good men, honest and true; while others of them are very dishonest, bad men. That is about the state of the case.

I will say that the warmth with which I have spoken on this question of Indian affairs has arisen from a deep conviction of the necessity for proper care of the Indians on the part of the Government. I did not intend any personal reflections upon any gentleman.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to know further, whether, in point of fact, the large expenditures which have been made for the removal of the Indians to reservations and the care of them there have been attended with any practical benefit, either to the Indians or to the white settlers.

Mr. HENDERSON. There have been hundreds and thousands of them on our reservations. They are, to a great extent, supporting themselves, and are not disturbing the whites in any manner. They show great docility, and are being taught to take care of themselves. This is the fact.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to ask in relation to one further point.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I cannot yield further to the gentleman. I yield now to the gentleman from California, [Mr. HIGBY.]

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me to be the duty of those members who represent States where there are a great many Indians, and who are familiar with their condition; to give any pertinent information on this subject. There are in some localities Indians residing on reservations and under the care of the Government, but who are not under treaty. This is the condition of the Indian system in the State of California; and the case is the same in the State of Nevada; and I presume a similar state of affairs is found in the other States and in the Territories.

There is a vast distinction between the Indians on reservations under the care of the Government and those in roving tribes living in a wild manner. As far as regards the State of California the whole expenditure is for Indians upon reservations, with the exception that the superintendent may have asked for some small appropriation to provide seeds, agricultural implements, &c., for the Indians called Mission Indians in the southern part of the State, who are living by agriculture. They are peaceable Indians, and must be entirely cared for by the Government or the people, unless they are aided and encouraged in cultivating the soil and providing the means of their own sustenance. They have been educated and civilized by the Roman Catholic mission, established in that country many years ago when it belonged to the Mexican Government. With this exception all the expenditures in our State are for Indians on reservations. Many thousands of them have gone on those reservations with the understanding that if they remain peaceable they shall be provided for by the Government, and these annual expenditures are made for that purpose.

I will state further, sir, in 1865 when, as a member of the committee investigating the condition of Indian Affairs I made the investigation in that State, the War Department had several hundred Indians upon the Sand Spit at Humboldt bay, as prisoners of war, and from there they were taken and settled upon the Round Valley reservation, with the understanding, at least on part of the War Department, they should be kept there by this Government so long as they remained at peace. We have now there some fifteen hundred Indians altogether. These Indians had been at war with the Government, but they are now living there at peace. This is not according to treaty stipulations, but, as I have already stated, there is an understanding to keep them there.

Whatever may be the case in reference to other superintendents, I know Mr. Maltby, our superintendent, and by whom these appropriations are recommended, is an honorable and high-minded gentleman. I can speak of his fidelity and usefulness.

There is another point to be considered. California will not be represented here after the 4th of March next, because our election does not take place until the first Tuesday of September, and I therefore ask this appropriation shall be made now.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it is very hard to kill a worthless appropriation. It is very easy to destroy an honest one. A real meritorious claim can almost always be defeated, but a bad one never can it seems. It comes back here every year and always has its advocates.

Mr. LYNCH. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Not now. It is not so, Mr. Speaker, because members of Congress prefer a bad cause to a good one, but because the persons interested in a bad appropriation are everywhere around to press their claim, to misrepresent and to deceive with wrong information.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HENDERSON] tells us the people who live upon the borders know more about Indians than we do. I have no objection to acknowledge that. They know more about the Indian character than we do. I am opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa because it is not for the benefit of the Indians. It does not even profess to be for the benefit of the Indians. It is as follows:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Colorado Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, &c.

Who are them? I ask the gentleman from Iowa. There is nothing said about the Indians.

It provides for general incidental expenses, &c., to assist them. Them means the Indian service, and the Indian service means the men who get the money. That is all.

The gentleman from California says they are keeping in subjugation some Indians, something that is not in the amendment. The paragraph is as follows:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, including traveling expenses of the superintending agents, $7,500.

It is all for the service, and the service is all stealing off the Government. Now and then, perhaps, you get an honest agent.

A MEMBER. And they kill him.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Then they kill him as the gentleman suggests. I do not mean to charge all the men in the Indian service are bad men, but they get into bad habits in the service.

The gentleman from Iowa does not pretend this amendment is for the Indians. The very language employed says it is for the Indian service for them, without saying whom them means. They are very bad in grammar in that committee; or them means this appropriation shall go to the Indian agents.

This has been stricken out once on full consideration, and here we have it attempted to be put back again.

The committee have done just as they did before. After having come here with their appropriation bill and the House having sent it back with instructions to strike out all these items, they now come back with it to the House with all the items in. I think they ought to be satisfied with the instructions. But as I said before a bad cause never dies.

Mr. LYNCH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has remarked how easy it is to kill a good measure. I presume he remembers a striking illustration of that fact in the fortification appropriation bill, that was killed the other day on his motion.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have no doubt but what these mischievous appropriations will come back here in some way. If we do not originate them here they will do so in the Senate. They are of the class of mischievous appropriations that never get their death-blow anywhere, and they will come back in some shape or another until the firmness of one member after another yields and they get through at last. You cannot kill them.

Mr. KASSON. I had hoped that after the very full discussion the other day on the general question the discussion to-day might be confined to the specific facts that should enlighten the House. There are two or three gentlemen from the Territories who desire to be heard on this question, and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs desires also to be heard. I propose therefore to retain the floor, but to yield it first to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. Speaker, I did not desire to make any remarks on this subject when, a few days ago, the House at one fell swoop struck out the whole of these appropriations. I chose to content myself simply with voting against it. I was so astonished at the action of this body that I felt as though a little reflection on the part of members who thus voted would be all that was necessary. I suppose it is a little spasm of economy that has seized a few gentlemen here, who expect to save a few dollars to the Treasury by this operation. Now, let me say that in the eight years' experience that I have had here I have seen on almost every question these spasms seize the House. A few years ago they seized it with reference to Indian affairs. To-day the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] seems to have been seized with a more severe attack than any of the rest.

Now, all I desire to say upon this point is simply this, that these Indians in the Territories and new States have been collected in large numbers on reservations. They have been fed and they have had certain appropriations made for their benefit. They need at certain seasons of the year, and expect to receive, these gifts which they understand the Government intends to distribute to them. What, then, is the result of striking out these appropriations? Not being possessed of the wisdom and economy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, they will come in at the next season as they have done hitherto, expecting to receive these presents which they understood the Government is bound to give them, but which, in a fit of economy, it has determined to withhold. They will come there destitute and they will go away dissatisfied, believing that the Government has violated its obligation. The only remedy the Indian knows under such circumstances is war, and war it will be in every Territory of this Union if this monstrous and reckless proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania prevails. I call it monstrous, because it will expose the lives of our frontier settlers and of every man whose business it is to cross the plains. I pronounce it reckless also for the same reason. If the House shall follow the lead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and strikes out indiscriminately all these provisions, you will in less than two years from to-day appropriate $100 for every dollar you save to-day by this sort of economy, for there will be war all over the Indian country.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman ought to add cruelty to agents.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know what the gentleman means by cruelty to agents. I am glad he mentions it, however, for I want to say here so far as agents are concerned I have not the slightest interest in one of them. I have had the honor of serving as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs four years, and I have never had but one friend appointed to the Indian Bureau, and the moment the last Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Harlan, came in he was removed. I have not now a single friend anywhere in the Indian service, and I never have asked an appointment, simply for the reason that I always wanted to be entirely independent.

I do not desire to say anything further. I simply wanted to put in my warning voice, for I have studied this subject, and I wanted to notify gentlemen that this proposed action will involve a much larger expenditure hereafter, to say nothing of the loss of human life.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to answer two or three of the objections which have been raised, and then to get a vote upon this clause and upon the other clauses, for the principle which guided the committee on this clause guided them on all. I repeat that the committee have examined these various clauses and have reduced to the last dollar every appropriation proposed here, several of them being decidedly under the estimates.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would ask if any of them have been reduced since they were last reported.

Mr. KASSON. We reduced them from the estimates before we reported them, and we have modified them in one or two clauses since the bill was sent back to us.

Mr. SCOFIELD. By enlarging them?

Mr. KASSON. No, sir; there is no enlargement at all; on the contrary, there is a restriction.

I must again call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman who makes this attack upon these appropriations has failed to show in one single particular that we can get along without them. I call the attention of the House to the fact that not one member upon the floor who has ever been among the Indians and knows anything about the treaties we have made with the Indians or of our usages in dealing with the Indians has risen upon this floor to say that these appropriations should now be suddenly cut off. There is, I venture to say, not one gentleman here from States where Indians have recently been or are now who will declare that these appropriations are not necessary. No member on the floor of the House has been more earnest in the direction of economy than myself, and I have been convinced against my will that whether the Indians be under military or civil management we have got to have these appropriations for the necessary incidental expenses of the Indian service.

I pass over the questions of grammar, leaving the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] to settle them as he may best be able to do. All I have to say is that he is entirely mistaken when he says that the gentleman from Iowa does not pretend that this Colorado appropriation is for the Indians. It is directly appropriated for the Indians, and for nobody else.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Not in the text of the bill.

Mr. KASSON. The text of the bill provides that it shall be for the Indian service, which we all know is for the service of the Indians; and it provides what articles shall be supplied to the Indians. The point in which the appropriations have been defective heretofore has been in the administration of them; and in order to check that vicious administration a new section has been proposed by the committee, requiring a specific report in the case of each Territory of the manner in which the money has been expended, the men to whom it has been paid, and the articles purchased under the appropriation, thus imparting to Congress a knowledge it has never had heretofore as to whether these appropriations are disbursed honestly and for honest purposes. This, I believe, is all I have to say; and I ask the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert the following:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Dakota Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert the following:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Idaho Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Montana Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Nevada, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to make the appropriation $20,000, and put Nevada upon the same footing with the rest.

Mr. KASSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in New Mexico, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The amount here named is more than double the amount given to any other Territory.

Mr. CHAVES. There are double the number of Indians there.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVES] says there are double the number of Indians there. I would like to know why this appropriation is made? I know it is said that we economists, of which there are but few, make the most monstrous propositions, because we are unaccustomed to these Indian affairs, and therefore we do not know how to economize properly in reference to this general "Indian steal." Now, I would like to know from the gentleman from Iowa, who makes this motion on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, why it is proposed to give $50,000 for the Indians in New Mexico and give only $20,000 to each of the other Territories?

Mr. KASSON. I shall be glad to yield the floor to the Delegate from New Mexico, [Mr. CHAVES,] who has already answered the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] in part, by the statement that there are twice as many Indians in New Mexico as there are in either of the other Territories. And I will say in addition to that, that they are the worst Indians we have anything to do with. We are most anxious to get influence over the leading chiefs of the tribes there. We must first get these Indians upon reservations; and after they are once located there so much money will not be needed. I now yield to the Delegate from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVES. I hope that the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations will be adopted by the House. In New Mexico we are entirely surrounded by Indians; there are many tribes of Indians there, among them the Navajoes and Camanches. It is nearly impossible to move about or get out of the Territory without coming across some hostile band of Indians.

In 1848 the United States voluntarily ratified a treaty with the republic of Mexico, by which this Government agreed that if Mexico would cede to the United States the territory comprised within the boundaries of California and New Mexico this Government would see to it that Indian depredations should cease, not only in reference to the people living within the territory ceded to the United States, but also depredations from those Territories into and within the Mexican republic; and by this same treaty, commonly known as the Gadsden treaty, this Government agreed to pay any damages resulting from such depredations into the territory of the republic of Mexico.

We have now in New Mexico Indians who have been accustomed to commit depredations upon the people of Mexico for the last one hundred and fifty years. Within the last two years some of these Indians have been collected and colonized upon the Bosque Redondo reservation. They have been entirely under military rule within the last few years, and a very small appropriation of $100,000 has been made to sustain them. The War Department has entire charge of their subsistence.

As regards the other Indians, they are spread over a very large extent of territory. They reside in the northwestern, the northern, and the northeastern portions, and in fact over almost the whole Territory of New Mexico. The $50,000 proposed to be appropriated here for general incidental expenses of the Indian service in New Mexico, to be expended for agricultural implements and other useful articles, is really a very small appropriation considering the necessities of the case. I think that the House, in deciding upon this matter, ought to take into consideration the fact that, although New Mexico has so long remained a Territory, yet at no distant time we shall, from the now meagerly developed but inexhaustible wealth of our country, be able to repay the appropriations which the Government may expend for our benefit.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVES] be kind enough to inform us what agricultural implements are usually distributed among the Indian tribes in his Territory?

Mr. CHAVES. Plows, spades, axes, hatchets, and things of that sort. The Indians are also furnished with horses, oxen, and mules; and men are hired to assist and instruct them in cultivating the soil.

A MEMBER. Are they furnished with whisky?

Mr. CHAVES. No, sir; no whisky is furnished to them.

Mr. MAYNARD. Are we to understand from the gentleman that these are roving bands of Indians, or Indians located upon reservations?

Mr. CHAVES. Those of whom I speak are actually upon the reservations; but some of the things I have mentioned are sometimes furnished to those whom the gentleman from Tennessee would perhaps call roving Indians, from the fact that those not located upon reservations are not necessarily at war; many of them are peaceably disposed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is well that the House should understand that an Indian resembles in some respects a child. For years the Congress of the United States has been appropriating to certain Indians money for presents. The Indians consider that this is in accordance with a contract between them and the Congress of the United States. The moment that Congress fails to make the customary appropriations that very moment the Indians will say that the Congress of the United States is talking with two tongues. That is the way they will regard it.

In order to show the gentleman from Tennessee and the House the purposes for which these appropriations are expended, I will read a brief paragraph from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1866:

"For the Pueblos, as will be noticed, I have recommended an appropriation for the purchase of school-books and the employment of competent teachers to conduct and carry on a system of education among these people, who would be largely ben-edited thereby. And I have also recommended an appropriation for the purchase of agricultural implements, household utensils, grist-mills, and fruit trees, which would be of incalculable service and comfort, and tend to facilitate the advancement of this interesting race. Government, while spending millions of money in fighting hostile Indians, should remember the peaceable disposition of the Pueblos of New Mexico, and generously assist their well-directed efforts. As a race they are the most interesting of all the Indian tribes of the United States, and the fact of their being self-supporting and peaceable rather than warlike should be sufficient argument in favor of their immediate assistance by an assortment of implements and utensils, as briefly enumerated."

Mr. MAYNARD. Are these the Indians who are so perilous to those who come from and go to New Mexico?

Mr. CHAVES. Not these particular ones. It is necessary the Government of the United States should do something.

Mr. Speaker, since I have been a Delegate in this House I have noticed as a general thing members eulogize the enterprise, skill, and success of the Anglo-Saxon race. Although I am not of that race, still I can feel as proud as any of the glory of this great country. But I must be permitted also to say that great as we are, yet the United States has failed entirely and utterly in the attempt to solve the problem as to the best manner in which these Indians are to be treated so as to result in their civilization. Look at the policy of the Spanish government, under which twenty pueblos of civilized Indians have been established in New Mexico. They raise nearly all the productions they need, and all we want is that the Government of the United States shall furnish schools and teachers, so that they shall be not only good citizens but educated and useful. This is all I have to say.

Mr. KASSON demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered: and under the operation thereof the amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Oregon and Washington Territory:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon and Washington Territory, including insurance and transportation of annuity goods and presents, (where no special provision therefor is made by treaties,) and office and traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and sub-agents, $35,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Utah Territory:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Utah Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes, and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

For the transportation and necessary expenses of delivery of provisions to the Indians within the Utah superintendency, $22,500.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reduce the appropriation to $20,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Miscellaneous:

For the expenses of colonizing, supporting, and furnishing agricultural implements and stock, pay of necessary employes, purchasing clothing, medicine, iron and steel, maintenance of schools for Indians lately residing in Texas, but now residing on the Choctaw lands, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $22,825.

Mr. MAYNARD. This seems to be a new appropriation, and I should like to know what transmigration of Indians there has been from Texas to the Choctaw country. If we once commence this, as has been well said, it will continue to be a leak in the Treasury for years to come. We are told it may go on indefinitely for one hundred years. We had better, therefore, understand what we are doing.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman asks a very proper question. I find that several tribes located in Texas, the Tankoways, Cadoes, and Lipans, were driven off, and with the consent of the Choctaws were allowed to come up among them. This appropriation is for the purpose of settling and establishing them where they are now. It is not a new appropriation.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have had no opportunity to examine whether the treaty appropriations for the Choctaws have been paid since the war. They were suspended during the war.

Mr. KASSON. The preceding clauses of the bill make appropriations for the Choctaws.

Mr. MAYNARD. We suspended appropriations for them during the war, but have we ever renewed these appropriations? I intended to follow this up by another question: whether these other tribes in the Choctaw country were not liable to the same treatment that the Choctaws received from us for their participation in the rebellion?

Mr. KASSON. These are entirely separate tribes, coming under no provisions relative to the Choctaws, except that they have been sent to live there now. We do make some appropriations for the Choctaws under certain treaties requiring specific appropriations.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire whether these tribes took part in the rebellion?

Mr. KASSON. We have no information in regard to any of them as to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, to insert the following:

For the Wichitas and other affiliated bands:

For the expenses of colonizing, supporting, and furnishing said bands with agricultural implements and stock, pay of necessary employes, purchase of clothing, medicines, iron and steel, and maintenance of schools, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $37,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was as follows:

California:

For pay of one physician, one blacksmith, one assistant blacksmith, one farmer, one carpenter, upon each of the four reservations of California, at the rate of fifty dollars per month, $12,000.

For the purchase of cattle for beef and milk, together with clothing and food, teams, and farming tools for Indians in California, $55,000.

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon and Washington Territory, (not parties to any treaty,) and for pay of necessary employes, $50,000.

Mr. BIDWELL. I suggest that the appropriation is very inadequate for the physician. It would be better not to have any physician on the reservation. The pay does not amount to anything. I move to amend by doubling the appropriation for the physician, blacksmith, assistant blacksmith, and farmer, making it $25,000.

Mr. KASSON. I am not authorized to consent to any increase in the appropriation.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask the House to consent to the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. Better let it go.

Mr. BIDWELL. I am willing to let almost anything go, but really the sum appropriated is not at all adequate to the wants of the reservations.

Mr. KASSON. I am not authorized to make any change.

Mr. BIDWELL withdrew his amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the following item:

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon and Washington Territory, (not parties to any treaty,) and for pay of necessary employes, $50,000.

On a preceding page of the bill we made this appropriation for Oregon and Washington Territory—

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon and Washington Territory, including insurance and transportation of annuity goods and presents, (where no special provision therefor is made by treaties,) and office and traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and sub-agents, $35,500.

It seems to me we had better let that stand.

Mr. HENDERSON. This item that the gentleman from Tennessee proposes to strike out is a very necessary one. These Indians to whom it relates are not under any specific treaty, and they ought to be cared for until they can be permanently provided for. This can be done under the direction of the superintendent of Indian affairs, and I hope the appropriation will not be stricken out.

Mr. MAYNARD. We have already passed an appropriation for the general expenses of the Indian service in Washington and Oregon.

Mr. KASSON. That related to treaty stipulations.

Mr. MAYNARD. Unfortunately it does not say so.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is for the specific purpose of collecting these Indians and locating them on reservations.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman from Iowa says the appropriation we have just made is for treaties. Now, we are running this whole thing by guess, and I guess the gentleman from Iowa does not know much more about it than the rest of us. About the middle of the appropriation which we made for general incidental expenses you will find in parenthesis the words "Where no special provision therefor is made by treaties." Now, the gentleman says that is made by treaties in spite of that language.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will answer that.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would like the gentleman who has charge of the bill to explain it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Suffer me to make my explanation. In the first place the appropriations that have been passed are for incidental expenses under the stipulations already in existence not provided for under treaties. This is a new item for collecting the Indians on reservations, locating and feeding them until permanent provisions can be made.

The amendment of Mr. MAYNARD was disagreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of the committee, it was adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the next paragraph in the bill, as follows:

Navajo Indians in New Mexico:

For subsistence for the Navajo Indians, and for the purchase of sheep, seeds, agricultural implements, and other articles necessary for breaking the ground on the reservation upon the Pecos river, $100,000.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a question of order. The propositions now before the House are only the amendments proposed by the committee. The bill as reported back in accordance with the order of the House has been acted upon.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires the whole bill should pass it is open to amendment.

Mr. KASSON. The resolution of the House was that the bill should be reported back embracing all the treaty stipulations and provisions for Indians in the custody of the United States. These Navajos are in the custody of the United States, consequently the appropriation is not stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the whole bill is open to amendment.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The appropriation for these Navajos is $100,000. The appropriations commenced with $5,000 and $10,000, soon went up to $50,000, and now it is up to $100,000. Most of these appropriations are divided; that is to say, first, there is a clause for Oregon, appropriating some $30,000; and after two or three pages, where the House has forgotten that appropriation, there comes in a clause containing $50,000; and so it goes on repeating and accumulating. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM,] says that I am presenting a monstrous proposition in asking the House to stop these small leaks in the Treasury. I move to strike these items out, and seek to get a vote of the House upon them. If everything is to be voted down and we are to take this as it is all through, why, then, I will sit down and trouble nobody any more. But it does not occur to me that it is such a monstrous thing to save a little to the Treasury, although it is somewhat unusual.

Mr. KASSON. As to this item I wish to say what I apprehend the House understood in the debate the other day. This is a tribe of Indians numbering from six thousand to nine thousand, caught by the United States troops after wars running through two or three generations, caught with great difficulty and securely placed upon a reservation and in the custody to-day of the United States. This is an appropriation which was retained in the bill in the action of the House the other day, and without which you cannot feed these Indians, in order to prepare them for the pursuits of civilized life. I greatly regret that my intelligent friend from Pennsylvania gets up here and denounces these things without knowing one solitary fact connected with the subject of which he speaks. I do not deny that he knows a great deal; I only say he does not state any facts to the House. I think when he denounces these appropriations he should show the facts upon which his denunciation is based. There are from six to nine thousand of these Navajo Indians to-day in the custody of the United States under trial. We have got to take care of them, and this appropriation of $100,000 is, in my judgment—which is about as narrow in regard to economy as that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania—the least that can be tolerated.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. Speaker, is the amendment subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would be if the previous question was not seconded.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to strike out the paragraph relating to the Navajo Indians; and upon a division, there were—ayes 24, noes 22; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and Mr. HUMPHREY were appointed. The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 34, noes 64.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to move to amend this paragraph by making the appropriation $150,000 instead of $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to say a single word upon this subject.

No objection was made.

Mr. WINDOM. I moved the amendment which has just been adopted for the purpose of making an explanation in reference to these Indians in New Mexico, not that I have any expectation that this House will do them justice, but for the purpose of answering the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.] I desire to show that his proposition now is not a monstrous one; it is simply an absurd proposition; he has descended from a monstrosity to an absurdity.

For the last two years, according to estimates I laid before the House some days since, these Indians have received $1,500,000 from the War Department. I know the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] differs from me in this respect: he thinks the expenditure has been but $700,000. Now, for the sake of argument, I will admit his estimate. At the same time the Indians have been receiving this $100,000 from the Department of the Interior. Within the last six months arrangements have been made, as I understand, to turn these Indians over to the Interior Department. Consequently they cannot longer receive the amount they have hitherto received from the War Department, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] proposed to strike out the $100,000 which they have received from the general fund appropriated by Congress, making a difference of $800,000, according even to the admission of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON;] and that, too, without any earthly reason being assigned why it should be done. I pronounce that proposition as absurd as it is monstrous.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Do I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] has been adopted?

The SPEAKER. It has been adopted.

Mr. WINDOM. It should have been made $600,000.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. There is evidently some mistake in regard to this matter. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] when he moved the amendment stated that he did so simply for the purpose of making some remarks. The House did not evidently understand the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot tell whether the House understood the amendment or not; it was distinctly stated to the House by the Chair. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] has moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, perhaps for the reason that it was not understood by the House.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] says that these Navajo Indians have already received about a million dollars. Now I ask if the appropriations heretofore made were not for the purpose of changing the locality of these Indians?

Mr. WINDOM. It was not for any such purpose; they have been upon this reservation more than two years.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have not examined the records to see whether or not we have paid these Indians $1,000,000. But if the gentleman has heretofore succeeded in getting Congress to appropriate $1,000,000 a year for this purpose then it only shows that he was worse heretofore than he is now. He is reforming by degrees, having now come down to $100,000; next year I hope he will come down to $50,000, and the next year to nothing.

Mr. WINDOM. That proves the gentleman has not investigated this subject at all, as he says. I stated that this expenditure of $1,500,000 was not made by Congress, but it was expended by the War Department. The controversy between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] and myself has been whether the expenditure by the War Department was $1,500,000 or $700,000.

This appropriation of $100,000 has been heretofore appropriated. It is now proposed to turn these Indians over to the Interior Department, where they cannot receive these bounties from the War Department. And the gentleman proposes to cut off even the $100,000 heretofore received from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would cut off the whole of it. These Indians never got the $100,000 I am sure; and we may be certain that any other appropriation of a like sum will be entirely lost to them.

I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] for coming down from his monstrosity to an absurdity. A little while ago he thought it was monstrous to propose a little economy here in the appropriations for Indian service; and now he says that it is only absurd. I have no doubt but what it seemed monstrous at first; but to any gentlemen who have had anything to do with these Indian appropriation bills it must, after reflection, appear absurd.

Mr. WINDOM. Cannot the gentleman understand that this appropriation of $1,000,000 was never made at all; and this is not coming down at all?

Mr. SCOFIELD. There is no such thing as these Indians getting $1,000,000 from the United States Treasury without an appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. But the War Department, to which the gentleman voted to transfer the Indian Bureau, appropriates millions without rendering any account. It is taken out of the rations of the War Department, and we cannot know anything about it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. That bill turning the Indians over to the care of the War Department is what is the matter with the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. KASSON. The appropriation for the support of these Indians while under military control covered simply the cost of their subsistence. We held them as prisoners of war and maintained them. Inquiries were made as to how much that cost, and it was upon those estimates that the discussion arose. This is what is complained of as the large amount expended heretofore. This appropriation, however, has a different object. It is to assist the Indians in maintaining themselves and to educate them so far as they may be educated.

I hope now that the motion to reconsider will be agreed to, as the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] was not offered with the view of being adopted, but simply to enable him to make his remarks.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the motion to reconsider will be regarded as adopted, and the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota as negatived.

There was no objection.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to take charge of certain stray bands of Potawatomi and Winnebago Indians, in the State of Wisconsin, $5,000.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman from Iowa be good enough to explain the necessity of this item? In looking at the appropriation bill of last session I do not find any such appropriation. There was an appropriation of $1,500 to pay a special agent for these Indians—a similar item to that which in this bill follows the one just read.

Mr. KASSON. We have been asked for an appropriation of $10,000. I think that is the amount which was asked for last year; and my impression is that we appropriated at that time either $5,000 or $10,000.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not find any such item in the act of last year.

Mr. KASSON. My impression is that $5,000 was appropriated. If any further explanation is required the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McINDOE] will give it. He has already advised with the committee on this question.

Mr. McINDOE. I hope that this clause of the bill will be retained. The Indians for whose benefit it is designed are stray bands of Potawatomis and Winnebagoes, who probably belonged originally in Kansas and Dakota. They were removed some years ago to the reservations in the State of Wisconsin; a special agent was appointed by the Government to take care of them; and although previously they caused a great deal of trouble to us, yet since this small appropriation has been made we have had no difficulty with them.

Mr. MAYNARD. I cannot find in the act of last year any such appropriation as this, though as the act is very long I may have overlooked it. I propose that the two clauses be consolidated, and that the appropriation of $5,000 be the only one made. Then let the Secretary of the Interior, if he needs a special agent, pay him out of this appropriation.

I think that this appropriation is an entirely new one. If it once gets into our appropriation bills it will stick there as long as grass grows or water runs. Five thousand dollars is not a large sum, but in a hundred years it becomes $500,000. And we have the pleasing assurance given us to-day that the appropriations made a hundred years ago are of no avail at present. They must be renewed from year to year like the leaves on the trees.

I think the State of my friend from Wisconsin will be able to take care of its Indians, as New York and other States have done.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I have been in the habit of voting in this House when I did not understand the question perfectly myself on the advice of the committee which had the subject-matter specially in charge. As far as I can learn the action of the committee reporting this ordinary appropriation bill, I think it is entitled to some weight and influence with the House in coming to a conclusion. But I understand in addition to the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Indian Affairs, whose business it is to look into these matters, concurs in this appropriation; and, in addition even to this, the Delegates of the Territories, who understand this subject, surrounded as they are by Indians, give this measure their approval.

The House and country must feel indebted to the distinguished and able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] for the exhaustive investigation they have given to this subject. They ask us from their investigations to set aside the action of our Committees on Appropriations and Indian Affairs and the recommendations of the Delegates representing this section of the country. The country and their constituents must be fully advised of the anxious desire of these able gentlemen to protect the Government, and to that end we have spent all this day. The obligations of the people are great to these able gentlemen for retarding the public business and throwing obstacles in the way of the passage of this bill. If they have satisfied their constituents they are watching every loop and have got themselves upon the record to the satisfaction of themselves, I hope they will let the House go on with its legitimate business and act upon the report and suggestions of the committees, who are responsible to the country for action on these subjects.

Mr. MAYNARD. I accept the rebuke of the gentleman from Illinois, and concede there is no gentleman in the House so well qualified or so much entitled to lecture the House, the individual members of the House, as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSS. The gentleman will pardon me. I did not mean to cast any reflection upon him.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the distinguished gentleman will continue to act as censor morum, and see to it none of us depart from the strictest rules of legislative propriety. I am aware, sir, of the short-comings on my own part as a legislator; I am conscious of it.

Mr. ROSS. I did not mean to reflect on the gentleman.

Mr. MAYNARD. I did not understand the gentleman to reflect on me, but in the exercise of a patronizing, paternal oversight over the country and over the less distinguished and less able, the more ignorant or rather the less-informed gentlemen than he, to indicate what ought to be their course on the floor in legislating on these matters. I will say, however, by way of apologizing to the gentlemen—perhaps no other gentleman would require an apology but himself—but by way of apology for the course I have thought proper to pursue on this and some other bills to explain that having in a former Congress been a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, from which appropriation bills then came, I am somewhat conversant with the manner in which these bills are originated. I will inform the gentleman how I have known appropriations to find their way into bills. We receive estimates from the Departments. When a subject is up and no member of the committee knows anything about it we follow the estimates.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considers this debate to be wandering from the bill although no gentleman seems disposed to take exception to it.

Mr. KASSON. I regret when these side issues are made, but when they are made I do not care to stop them.

Mr. MAYNARD. When the estimates are sent from the Department to the committee you inquire who they came from, and you are told from the head of the bureau. You inquire there where they got the estimates, and you are told from the desk of some clerk who is unknown and utterly unheard of outside of his own room. And hence it was appropriately said years ago in this House by gentlemen of whom, probably, I ought not to speak except in the same terms of respect that are due to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. ROSS.] It was well said that to a very large degree this Government is a Government of clerks. The clerks in the Departments make estimates at their desks; these estimates are adopted by the heads of the bureaus, who send them to the heads of the Departments, who send them to the Committee on Appropriations, where they are accepted and adopted; and when any member like me and others, if there be any others as ignorant as I am, get up to inquire wherefore these expenditures are made, and call for information, we are always met, as we are met to-day, by the statement that the subject has been examined by the committee, and that it is presumption, assurance, impudence, absurdity to call it in question or to seek to get that sort of information that will enable us to act from our own judgment upon the facts, instead of standing here and recording decisions that have been already made elsewhere—not even in the committee-rooms of the House, but at the desk of some irresponsible clerk in one of the Departments.

Sir, legislating here for the country, and with that responsibility upon me, I am not willing to legislate in that way; and if other gentlemen are disposed not to call in question any of these appropriations or to examine the facts, but to legislate upon faith, taking everything that comes from any committee of the House to be necessarily right without investigation, I certainly am not willing to do it.

I think we are entitled to have, that we should have, that we may justly demand, and that we should demand, a statement of the facts upon which these millions are legislated out of the Treasury.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROSS. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I only want to say that I suppose the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has now said enough to satisfy the Speaker and the House that he is the proper man to be put at the head of that committee in the Fortieth Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not happen to hold a seat in the Fortieth Congress; and therefore I will turn over the compliment to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. ROSS,] who is eminently fit for the position.

Mr. McINDOE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KASSON. I understand that the gentleman desires to make an explanation, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. McINDOE. This is no new appropriation. It was commenced at the beginning of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. The sum then appropriated was $10,000 annually, but last year it was reduced to $5,000; and that is all we now ask.

Mr. KASSON. As I presume the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] did not intend to imply that I had failed to give any desired information about this appropriation, I have nothing to say touching his seeming implication that information was not given when it was asked for.

This appropriation now is for stray bands of the Potawatonic and Winnebago Indians, in the State of Wisconsin—

Mr. SCOFIELD. I said to the gentleman from Iowa a few moments ago when I left this Hall, that I surrendered upon this bill and left it to him. So I do; but I understand that while I was out the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] spent some time in attempting to satisfy the House that he knew more about these Indian swindles than I did. All I wish to say in reply is, that I "acknowledge the corn." I have no doubt that he does. [Laughter.]

Mr. KASSON. These stray bands were ordered some time since to be removed from that State, and some of them were actually taken away; but with true Indian attachment to their old hunting-grounds they came back in small numbers from time to time, and were liable to commit, or did commit, murders, larcenies, and other outrages, so that they were a cause of constant danger and alarm to the whites.

The committee were satisfied that it was necessary to have some one specifically designated to take charge of them, and, by small gratuities, to keep them quiet and in places where their presence would not interfere with the whites. We reduced the former appropriation of $10,000 one half, hoping that sum would be sufficient for this object; and I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment of the committee was then agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert the following:

For salary of a special agent to take charge of Winnebago and Potawatonic Indians now in the State of Wisconsin, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert the following:

For subsistence, clothing, and general incidental expenses of the Sisseton, Wahpaton, Medawakanton, and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux or Dakota Indians, at their new homes, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert the following:

For payment of interest on $1,690,300 non-paying stock, held by the Secretary of the Interior in trust for various Indian tribes, up to and including the interest payable July 1, 1867, $100,153.

For payment of interest on $15,000 abstracted bonds, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, for the Cherokee school fund, $900.

For payment of interest on $63,000 abstracted bonds, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, of the Cherokee national fund, $4,080.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. These items of appropriation are called for by existing law.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would ask the gentleman if this embraces all the bonds which were stolen during a former Administration?

Mr. KASSON. My recollection is that it does not include all.

Mr. MAYNARD. These are the bonds which were stolen at that time?

Mr. KASSON. I cannot remember the date of their abstraction. It is a liability of the United States, existing by law, and which the Government accordingly is compelled to meet and satisfy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert the following:

For expenses attending the vaccination of Indians, $2,500.

For expense of collecting and locating the Colorado river Indians in Arizona on a reservation set apart for them by section first, act of March 3, 1865, including the expense of constructing a canal for irrigating said reservation, $50,000.

For actual necessary expenses incurred, and that may hereafter be incurred, by officers of the Indian department in the rescue of prisoners from Indian tribes and returning them to their homes, and for expenses incident to the arrest and confinement within the Territory of the United States, by order of such officers, of persons charged with crimes against the Indians, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the amendment providing an appropriation to pay interest upon certain bonds.

I can hardly suppose this House understood what it was doing when it voted for this provision, or it would not have agreed to it. Why should we vote an appropriation to pay the interest on these stolen bonds? It will surely be time enough to make an appropriation to pay these bonds which have been stolen from your Treasury when you find out where they are. If these bonds should turn up in the hands of men who have received them in good faith and who honestly hold them, we may perhaps properly be called upon to pay the interest upon them. But, for one, I will not sit silent while I see such an appropriation as this passed to pay interest on bonds which are acknowledged to be in the hands of thieves.

Mr. KASSON. I hardly understand the ground upon which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] opposes this item of appropriation, which year after year has been a recognized liability of the United States as the trustee, who by its own power controlled the deposit and custody of these bonds, which it held in trust for the Indians. I do not comprehend the principle, either of law or of equity upon which the gentleman opposes this appropriation. Shall the United States take the money of the Indians, put it in bonds, and appoint its own officers to take care of the bonds, and then coolly say, when its own custody has been insufficient to protect them, that it will not respond to its liability to the Indians? If there be any principle upon which the gentleman maintains his opposition, I wish he would state it. I think the mere stating of the proposition is its own best refutation.

In the first place, the larger part of the sum he has alluded to is not embraced within the objection he urges. It refers to the non-paying stock, which the United States held for the Indians, and which has never been abstracted. The United States by the misconduct of its own officers invested the funds of the Indians in certain State bonds, which proved worthless. And now the gentleman asks the United States to avail itself of its own wrongs, and to refuse to account to these Indians for these funds. If my friend can tell me the principle upon which he rests his claim I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. THAYER. What I object to is the express recognition by Congress of the validity of these bonds in the hands of the persons who stole them. If these debts are due to the Indians let the gentleman put in the bill a specific appropriation for that purpose. But I will not vote for anything which acknowledges the validity of these bonds in the hands of their present holders when everybody knows they are stolen.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman is sadly mistaken in regard to the provisions of this bill; I will not say he is ignorant of their meaning. The first clause of the amendment, which contains the largest appropriation, has nothing to do with the stolen bonds.

Mr. THAYER. I am not speaking of the first clause.

Mr. KASSON. Then that clause should not be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and agreed to by the House, contains three clauses, and the motion to reconsider any one of them must be a motion to reconsider all, as they are all embraced in one amendment.

Mr. KASSON. As to these bonds, I repeat for the information of the gentleman and of the House, that these bonds were in the custody of the United States; the moneys were invested by direction of the United States; the officer in charge of them was appointed by the United States; and they were stolen from the United States. In the whole matter, from the beginning to the end, the Indians had nothing to do with it, except to submit passively to the orders of the United States Government.

Now, these bonds were not negotiable; they can never turn up against the United States in any other hands. They were a separate fund in the custody of the United States, their numbers, character, and description all kept; and the question now simply is whether the United States shall acknowledge its legal liability to pay the interest annually on the bonds which they themselves have allowed to be abstracted through their negligence or misconduct. I do not think there is another side to the question, and I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The next and last amendment reported by the committee was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall hereafter be the duty of the officer in charge of the Indian Bureau to report separately to Congress at the commencement of each December session a tabular statement showing distinctly the separate objects of expenditure under his supervision, and how much disbursed for each object, describing the articles and the quantity of each, and giving the names of each person to whom any part is paid, and how much paid to him and for what objects, so far as they relate to the disbursement of the funds heretofore or which shall be hereafter appropriated for incidental, contingent, or miscellaneous expenses of the Indian service during the fiscal year next preceeding each report.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to ask if we have yet had a morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Not yet.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I will not call up the appropriation bill now, but will take my chance after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. There must be a morning hour to transact business.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for the morning hour.

NOTARIES PUBLIC IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MAYNARD submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 336) fixing the compensation for bailiffs and clerks of the courts of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses that the House of Representatives recede from its action in disagreeing to the amendments made by the Senate and concur in said amendments.

HORACE MAYNARD,
JOHN F. FARNSWORTH,
F. C. LE BLOND,
Managers on the part of the House.
LOT M. MORRILL,
JOHN CONNESS,
DAVID T. PATTERSON,

Mr. MAYNARD. It may be proper for me to say a few words in explanation of this report. The last Congress passed an act, approved April 8, 1864, concerning notaries public in the District of Columbia. That was an act of eleven sections, the first of which is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notaries public for the District of Columbia may be appointed by the supreme court of said District, whose term of office shall be five years, and who may be removed by said court for cause. There shall be no new appointment of a notary public until the number in this District is reduced to twenty-five; and when the number is so reduced, as vacancies thereafter occur, they may be filled by said court."

It will be recollected that when the House was considering the propriety of concurring in the amendment of the Senate to this bill, it was urged that the adoption of that amendment would leave the appointment of notaries public for this District in the hands of the President. It will be seen by the section which I have just quoted that such is not the fact, as these notaries are now appointed by the supreme court of the District.

One word as to another point of difference. The bill, as passed by the House, provided for the repeal of the provision limiting the number of notaries to twenty-five, and allowed the number to be unlimited. The Senate thought it better that the law in this respect should stand as it is. The conference committee, on consideration of the question, were satisfied that the present number of notaries public will be fully adequate for all the business which they will be required to perform. Hence the recommendation of the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 140) to restore Lieutenant Joseph P. Fyffe to his grade in active service of the Navy; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander S. L.

Breese, United States Navy, to the active list from the retired list.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed an act (H. R. No. 878) to quiet title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 140) to restore Lieutenant Joseph P. Fyffe to his grade in active service of the Navy; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander S. L. Breese, United States Navy, to the active list from the retired list.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit a letter of the 26th ultimo, addressed to me by W. T. M. Army, secretary and acting Governor of the Territory of New Mexico, with memorials to Congress by which it was accompanied, requesting certain appropriations for that Territory. The attention of the House of Representatives is invited to the subject.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1867.

The message with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of yesterday, making further inquiry as to the States which have ratified the amendment to the Constitution proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1867.

The message, with the accompanying report, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (S. No. 453) regulating the tenure of certain civil offices; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed a bill (S. No. 467) to amend an act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes, approved July 23, 1866; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

DEATH OF A REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House the following telegram:

AMSTERDAM, NEW YORK, February 19, 1867.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Samuel Downing, the last of the soldiers of the Revolution, died yesterday at his home in Edinburg, Saratoga county, New York.

R. H. ROSA.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the telegram will be spread upon the Journal. There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

MILITIA BILL.

The SPEAKER stated the morning hour had now commenced, and the House resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1145, to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I simply intend to present a few observations on the pending subject. The bill has been carefully and laboriously prepared and considered by the Committee on the Militia, and by a body of distinguished gentlemen who might almost be said to have been volunteers in their service on that committee.

Now, sir, if we look over this country it is at once evident we have no well-regulated and disciplined militia, which our forefathers believed to be so essential to the security of our liberties. The people of the free States are without arms. They have recently returned to their homes from a gigantic struggle. They have surrendered their arms up to the Government, and those arms are now deposited in large quantities in the various United States arsenals. This proposition is to return them to a small portion of the people selected by enlistment from the militia body, to the number of about two hundred thousand stand of arms. It is contemplated the regiments of infantry being fully armed and equipped, and as I have said enlisted from the militia, shall be constituted and called the "National Guard." In addition to small arms they are to have a battery of artillery. The effect will be to place a force in the country constituted of patriotic people holding arms in their hands, thus providing that element of safety so essential in the estimation of our forefathers to our security.

I have already said more than I intended, but let me now answer some of the objections. It may be objected that the bill infringes on the constitutional powers of the States, and exercises more power by the General Government than is authorized by the Constitution. To that I will only reply that the committee have carefully considered the relative powers of these two authorities, and have come to the conclusion it infringes neither. They have respected the constitutional right of the States to train the militia, and they have obeyed the injunction that Congress should provide for the organizing and arming of this militia.

They do not propose by this bill to appropriate a very large amount of money from the public Treasury. The cost of the bill will not be as much as one day's war during the late rebellion. The aggregate amount that may be called into employment under the provisions of this bill in an extreme emergency will be about four million dollars. It can be fairly estimated in the present condition of the country that the ranks will be filled at an expense which will not exceed one million and a half or two million dollars, a sum scarcely in excess of the extra compensation paid to the civil employes of the Government in this city. The cost to the Government is real economy in the end.

We have in our magazines and store-houses nearly four million small-arms. After we have taken out two or three hundred thousand, more than three million will still remain. But I will send some papers up to the Clerk's desk to be read which will fully explain this whole matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Table showing the amount of camp and garrison equipage and clothing held by the United States Government on the 30th day of June, 1865, and the amount required for the National Guard when filled to the maximum.

	On hand June 30, 1865.	Required for National Guard.
Knapsacks.....	1,027,618	286,752
Canteens.....	992,356	286,752
Haversacks.....	611,176	286,752
Tents.....	29,064	30,914
Camp-kettles.....	156,539	76,464
Mess-pans.....	489,878	95,584
Fifes.....	13,955	4,120
Drums.....	5,991	4,120
National colors.....	750	412
Regimental colors.....	1,000	412
Camp colors.....	7,834	1,648
Coats.....	452,969	286,752
Caps.....	1,020,511	286,752
Pairs pants.....	1,022,333	286,752

Table showing the amount of ordnance and ordnance stores required for the National Guard if filled to the maximum, and also the amount purchased and manufactured by the United States between January 1, 1861, and June 30, 1866, not including those on hand January 1, 1861, nor those captured during the war, and not showing the number lost or destroyed:

	Purchased and manufactured.	Required for National Guard.
Cannon.....	7,892	412
Small-arms.....	3,477,655	286,752
Swords, &c.....	544,475	75,852
Infantry accoutrements.....	2,146,175	286,752
Horse equipments.....	559,544	3,340

Table showing the annual cost of the National Guard, when filled to the maximum, in case every officer, non-commissioned officer, and private does full duty.

Per diem.....	302,452 rank and file, five days, at $2.....	$3,024,520
Clothing.....	15,700 officers, at $20.....	314,000
Care of property, 4,660 officers responsible, at $100.....		466,000
Total.....		$3,804,520

But the actual expense will be less than half of this amount, because—

1. It cannot be expected that organizations will be maintained in every district;
2. The organizations actually maintained will not all be filled to the maximum; and
3. Not more than one half of the National Guard will be able to perform duty at the same time.

The annual cost of the entire system will not, therefore, exceed the extra compensation of twenty per cent. granted by a bill which lately passed the House to the clerks of the city of Washington. This seems to be a small price to pay for the national security provided by the bill now before the House.

Letter from the Governor of Michigan relative to the bill for the better organization of the militia.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LANSING, January 23, 1867.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 7th instant inclosing your proposed militia bill, and requesting that I would examine the same and make such suggestions as might occur to me for its improvement, &c. In accordance with your further request I have brought the bill to the notice of our adjutant general, and after consultation with him on this subject I have directed that officer to embody our views in a statement of proposed amendments, accompanied by his report to myself.

Inclosed I have the honor to transmit to you this report with said proposed amendments, in all of which I concur. I also inclose herein a special report of our adjutant general to myself, recently made, in relation to the reorganization of the military forces of this State, but previously to the receipt of your bill.

The Legislature of this State is now in session, and I most earnestly hope that Congress may be able to take some decisive action upon this important subject at an early day, in order that we may adopt such State legislation as will harmonize with the action of Congress.

I have the honor to be, very truly, yours, &c.,
HENRY H. CRAPO,
Governor of Michigan.

Hon. H. E. PAINE, Military Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MILITARY DEPARTMENT, MICHIGAN,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
DETROIT, January 22, 1867.

SIR: Having been directed by your Excellency to examine the bill introduced by Hon. Mr. PAINE in the House of Representatives, January 3, 1867, "to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for other purposes," and to make such suggestions in relation thereto as I might deem proper, I have, therefore, the honor most respectfully to submit the inclosed schedule of proposed amendments, with some notes in relation thereto, and in regard to supposed omissions in the bill referred to. They are not made nor intended as objecting to or opposing the portions of the bill which they profess to amend, but are submitted more for the purpose of calling attention to them, as being, in my judgment, susceptible of alteration and improvement in the direction indicated, and of respectfully expressing an opinion that the bill might be improved by the adoption of amendments and additions of a similar import.

The general plan set forth in the bill referred to is feasible, well conceived, and exhaustive in its character, and I am satisfied that in the main it cannot be improved upon, being, in my humble opinion, the only one practicable for a popular, permanent, and efficient organization of an active uniform militia for the various States, universally acknowledged to be so necessary.

Its success, so far as the numerical strength of the organization proposed and the result desired are concerned, is properly and mainly based and depending on patriotism, which should always be recognized by our citizen soldiery as a greater inducement to serve their country than pecuniary reward. Its requirements as to qualifications for membership are, in part, most wisely made dependent upon loyalty, which should now be one of the tests as to fitness in any one to serve the country. It is extremely liberal toward the States in its provisions, and also toward those who are intended to constitute the proposed force, and is as economical as a due regard for encouragement will admit of. It is well guarded in every respect. It provides for as much encouragement, and will be as conducive as to the result desired as any militia law possibly can without incurring an expense which would be objectionable, and will be as forcible and binding as is possible without resorting to a draft. While the force which it proposes to organize would be ample as a protection to the States, it would at the same time be available and reliable, possessing strength sufficient to prevent any possibility of inaugurating rebellion, and would also be ready upon requisition to take the defensive in repelling foreign aggression or to assume the offensive in redressing an insult offered the nation.

The proposed national guard schools, if adopted, would add much to the military education of the country, and would establish a just and liberal policy with regard to admission into the Military Academy, and also as to appointments in the regular Army.

I strongly recommend to your excellency that the plan may receive your most favorable consideration and indorsement.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN ROBERTSON,

Adjutant General.

His Excellency HENRY H. CRAPO, Governor of Michigan, Lansing, Michigan.

Letter from Hon. W. J. Smith, chairman of the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, Tennessee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, January 16, 1867.

MY DEAR GENERAL: As chairman of the Military Committee in the House, I thank you for the copy of your bill disciplining the militia, and for other purposes. The committee of the House has instructed me to report or rather to frame a bill, and report on that subject. I am delighted with yours, and am anxious to learn whether you think it will pass and become a law; if so it will answer every purpose, and we can afford to wait. If you do not think it is sure to pass we shall have to get up a bill to protect ourselves, as I fear we can never canvass West or Middle Tennessee till we have protection, particularly when we enfranchise the colored man, as we certainly shall. There appears to be a thorough understanding among the rebels that prominent Union men shall not live among them. Only the other day Corcoran Brickson was murdered in the town of Somerville, Fayette county. This morning we have the sad news of the murder of Dr. Almon, State Senator from Obion county. A few days before his son was murdered. I have been repeatedly warned not to trust myself on my farm.

The fact is, general, we want some protection, and must have it. Andy has betrayed us, and left us to the mercy of Congress and Brownlow. We are safe. Please keep me posted about your bill, and accept the thanks of your obedient servant.

W. J. SMITH.

Hon. H. E. PAINE, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor and ask the previous question on the bill and amendments which I have just submitted to the House. I wish to give notice to the other side, as I did the other day when it was first before the House, of the arrangement entered into between members of the committee opposed to and in favor of the bill, that half of the time would be given to the opponents of the bill and half of it to its friends. That half would have been forty minutes had the opponents of the bill not seen fit to consume twenty minutes in calling the yeas and nays. That twenty minutes I will give them now after the previous question has been seconded, and I will add ten minutes to it, making thirty. I now send to the Clerk's desk the amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would inquire of the gentleman if he intends to pass under the operation of the previous question a bill which in the opinion of gentlemen around me is designed to establish a standing army in this country, and then allow only thirty minutes to those gentlemen to express their views upon the subject. If so, I give him notice that it will not be satisfactory. Gentlemen here upon the committee desire to explain the provisions of the bill. We regard it as a most extraordinary measure, looking to the establishment in all the loyal States, as you call them, of the same despotic rule that you have endeavored to fasten upon the southern States.

Mr. PAINE. I will say in reply to my colleague that nothing would afford me greater pleasure, if the state of business before the House would admit it, than to have a full discussion of this bill in all its aspects. But it must be apparent to all that an extended discussion at this stage of the session is out of the question. And I am obliged to remind him and the House again of the arrangement made between my colleague on the committee to whom he refers, and to say that while I would be glad enough to allow the fullest discussion, I am compelled to carry out that arrangement.

Mr. ROSS. I suggest to the gentleman that after the 4th of March there will be two years in which to discuss this question, and there certainly does not appear to be any pressing necessity for reorganizing the militia within the next few days. I think the state of the country is such that we can safely defer this question of organizing the militia at least until we get through the tax bill and the tariff bill, those two great measures to which the country is so anxiously looking. For one, I am not willing to give my assent to have this pass without going through the bill and examining it in all its features. I want free debate and investigation. If this country is to be turned into a military despotism it is time the people of the United States were made aware of the iniquity that is attempted to be fastened upon them. I demand that it shall not be pressed through this Congress without giving to the Representatives of the people an opportunity to show the nature of this scheme.

I therefore appeal to the gentleman to allow an opportunity to examine this measure in all its bearings, and for that purpose let it be postponed until the next Congress. There have been received no petitions from any portion of the country for such a measure; and it is, in my judgment, a violation of the great principles upon which our fathers established this Government to create a great standing army to eat out the substance of the people and overturn their liberties.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for—

Mr. ROSS. I ask the gentleman to allow an opportunity for debate.

Mr. PAINE. I have said three or four times I would be extremely glad to do so, but it is out of my power. I am obliged therefore to call the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, have I not a right to demand the reading of the whole bill as amended? The other day it was amended after being read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the bill was amended after it was read; if so, any gentleman can have it read again.

Mr. PAINE. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to withdraw it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I demand the reading of the bill as amended; it was amended after the call for the reading the other day.

Mr. PAINE. There has been no amendment since the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the yeas and nays were called on agreeing to the amendments which was after the bill was read; therefore the gentleman can demand the reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like to make one suggestion. This bill proposes very radical changes in the laws of the States in regard to the militia. I do not know how it is with other gentlemen, but for myself, under the press of business upon me as a member of Congress, I have been unable to give this bill any consideration whatever, and I apprehend that is the case with many others.

Mr. PAINE. How much time does the gentleman desire for discussion? I am disposed to give all the House can allow.

Mr. LE BLOND. I was going to say that business which it is absolutely necessary to carry through is pressing upon us, and that under the circumstances the gentlemen ought to permit this to be deferred until the Fortieth Congress. It must be apparent that it is quite impossible that this bill should pass the House and Senate within the eleven remaining days of this Congress, and it is therefore only consuming the time of the House to attempt to pass it through this branch. I hope the gentleman will see the necessity of putting it over, if he has not already seen it.

Mr. PAINE. If the gentleman can name any time which the other side will require, I should be glad to have them do so.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAINE. I cannot consent to lay it over till next session.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] insist upon the reading of the bill?

Mr. LE BLOND. Not if the yeas and nays are taken on laying the bill on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on laying the bill on the table; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 82, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Bergen, Boyer, Brandegee, Campbell, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Defrees, Delano, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Kelso, Kerr, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McKee, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Plants, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Whaley, and Wright—50.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullom, Darling, Dawes, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Ketchum, Koontz, Ladin, Latham, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Maynard, McIndoe, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shollabarger, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Blow, Broomall, Buckland, Conkling, Cook, Culver, Doring, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Hale, Hart, Hise, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, Morrill, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Raymond, Rousseau, Sloan, Stilwell, Stokes, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—58.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ARNELL said: My colleague, Mr. STOKES, has been obliged to leave the House on account of indisposition.

The question recurred upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. I would ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] if it would not suit him just as well to let the bill be postponed as to have the remainder of the morning hour taken up by the reading of the bill as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] proposes?

Mr. PAINE. I prefer to have the previous question first seconded.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the effect of that motion if seconded will be to take the House over to to-morrow morning.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 33, nays 101, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Eldridge, Fink, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Harris, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Radford, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and Wright—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eliot, Farquhar, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kelso, Koontz, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McKee, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Scofield, Shollabarger, Spalding, Starr, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—101.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Bingham, Blow, Bromwell, Bundy, Conkling, Culver, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Higby, Hise, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Jenckes, Jones, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Ketchum, Longyear, Marston, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Patterson, Phelps, Raymond, Rollins, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Stevens, Stilwell, Stokes, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Winfield—58.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the bill accordingly goes over until to-morrow.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That five hundred and fifty extra copies of the report on the commercial relations of the United States with foreign nations, for the year 1866, be printed for the use of the State Department.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, also reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That fifty copies of House bill No. 1163, entitled "A bill in relation to the merchant marine of the United States," be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

USURY LAWS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the same committee, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two thousand copies of the memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for the abolition of legal restrictions upon commerce in money, be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. LAFLIN. On Saturday last, as directed by the Committee on Printing, I offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to furnish to the publishers of the Globe at each session of Congress a list of the members of the House of Representatives, with their post office address, and the number of the seats occupied by the same.

In connection with that report I desire to state that under an arrangement made with the proprietors of the Globe there will be printed in one volume of the Globe for each session a list of the names of the members, with their post office addresses, as well as a plan of the House showing the seat of each member, upon the terms named in the following letters from the publishers of the Globe:

GLOBE OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1867.

Sir: We have received your letter of the 8th instant in which you make inquiry as to whether, under the existing contract, we can comply with the provisions contained in the resolution offered by Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, in reference to adding to the Congressional Globe and Appendix plans of the Halls of Congress, showing the seats occupied by members, with the profession or occupation of each, and his post office address. In reply thereto, we will say that we are perfectly willing to make any addition to our work (the Congressional Globe) which Congress may see fit to authorize us to do.

In reply to that portion of the resolution which refers to the more copious indexing of the Congressional Globe, namely: to insert the "number and title of every bill and resolution introduced into Congress with a reference to the pages thereon," we would say that those features were at the time the resolution was offered already embodied in the index for the present session, which has been in course of preparation since the middle of December last.

We are, very respectfully,

F. & J. RIVES,

Reporters and Printers of the Debates of Congress.

Hon. A. H. LAFLIN, Chairman Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives.

CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE OFFICE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1867.

SIR: In answer to your inquiry of yesterday's date, we would say that we consent to print "the list of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives with their post office addresses," and insert the same in one volume of each set of the Congressional Globe for each session, at the same rate that is paid per page for the body of the work, namely: two mills per page. Provided, the copy shall be furnished us, in due time, from the offices of the Senate and House, respectively. We will provide, at our own expense, the plans of the Halls with references showing the seat occupied by each member, and print and insert these at the same rate per page, namely: two mills.

Trusting that this statement is clear, and will prove satisfactory, we remain, very respectfully,

F. & J. RIVES,

Reporters and Publishers of the Debates of Congress.

Hon. A. H. LAFLIN, Chairman Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives United States.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

M. LAFLIN. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

The first business upon the Speaker's table was the consideration of amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1099, to provide for the election of a Congressional Printer.

The question was upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. LAFLIN. When this bill passed the House it provided that the House of Representatives should elect the Congressional Printer. The Senate has amended the bill so as to give to that body the power of electing the Congressional Printer, instead of leaving it entirely to the House. The question will naturally present itself, Why is it necessary that this power should be intrusted to the Senate alone, rather than to the Senate and House of Representatives together?

Sir, every one who has looked at this bill at all knows its purpose, which is that the Government Printing Office may be placed under the control of Congress. On examination it has been found that if we should provide for the selection of this Printer in the terms proposed by the original bill, he would under the Constitution be an officer to be named by the President of the United States. To avoid this confusion it is necessary that either one or the other branch of Congress should elect the Printer. It has been thought that the Senate is a more suitable body to exercise this power. I move, therefore, that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate; and on that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. NIBLACK. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment for an inquiry?

Mr. LAFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. NIBLACK. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether one of the amendments of the Senate does not propose to increase the salary of the Public Printer? As I am advised the salary of this officer is at present $3,000 a year, while the amendment of the Senate proposes to increase it to $4,000. If this be the fact, I would like to know the reason for the proposed increase.

Mr. LAFLIN. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to that point. I think, however, that all the answer required will be furnished by the reading of the Senate amendments. I call for the reading of those amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the first section strike out the words "House of Representatives," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Senate;" strike out the words "viva voce;" so that the section will read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Senate shall elect some competent person, who shall be a practical printer, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office.

In the second section strike out the word "selected," and insert in lieu thereof the word "elected;" strike out the words "House of Representatives," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Senate;" strike out the words "and shall hold his office for two years and until his successor shall be elected;" strike out the words "print and bind," and insert in lieu thereof the words "superintend the printing and binding of;" strike out the word "execute," and insert in lieu thereof the words "superintend the execution of;" so that the section will read as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the person so elected shall be deemed an officer of the Senate, and shall be designated "Congressional Printer." He shall superintend the printing and binding of the Journals and such other documents as shall be ordered by each House of Congress, and shall superintend the execution of all the printing and binding for the respective Departments of the Government now required by law to be executed at the Government Printing Office, and shall, in all respects, be governed by the laws in force in relation to the Superintendent of Public Printing and the execution of the printing and binding.

Add at the end of the third section the words "and the salary of the said officer shall be at the rate of $4,000 a year;" so that the section will read as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the passage of this act and the election of a Congressional Printer in pursuance thereof, the office of Superintendent of Public Printing shall be abolished; and the salary of the said officer shall be at the rate of $4,000 a year.

The question being, "Will the House concur in the amendments of the Senate?"

Mr. FINCK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 88, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. ALLEY, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broome, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Deming, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laflin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, Maynard, McKee, McKuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—99.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baldwin, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Cooper, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hogan, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Williams, Windom, and Wright—38.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Blaine, Blow, Bromwell, Chanler, Conkling, Culver, Dawson, Delano, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Hart, Hawkins, Hise, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Jenckes, Jones, Latham, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Moulton, Patterson, Pike, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Sloan, Stilwell, Stokes, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—53.

So the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VACANCY ON COMMITTEE FILLED.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. VAN AERNAM to fill the vacancy on the WESTWORTH special committee.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 594, to provide for the payment of compound-interest notes.

Mr. LYNCH. I object.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. ALLEY, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported the annual bill to establish certain post roads; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ALLEY. There is no general legislation in the bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 1099) entitled an act providing for the election of a Congressional Printer; when the Speaker signed the same.

ASSAY OFFICES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 674, to establish additional offices for the assay of gold and silver, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON moved that they be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The motion was agreed to.

TO QUIET TITLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 878, to quiet title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California.

The amendments of the Senate in line three, page 1, after "Santa Clara," insert "Petaluma and Placerville," and make verbal changes to correspond in other parts of the bill.

Mr. McRUER moved to non-concur, and to ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The pending bill in committee is the tax bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that be postponed to take up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. STEVENS. It will not take long to consider the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. If we are going to have a tax bill we should pass it here at once.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 69, noes 30.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and the tax bill was postponed in committee to take up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the vote now on the motion to go into committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RAYMOND in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 1126, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

The first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by sections for amendments.

Mr. LE BLOND. I raise the point of order that the following section is not germane to the pending bill:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the headquarters of the General of the Army of the United States shall be at the city of Washington, and all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the Army, and in case of his inability by the next in rank. The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters without the previous approval of the Senate; and any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

This is a general law circumscribing the powers of the President. It has no connection with an appropriation bill, and I move it be excluded.

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose that it is hardly a point of order, the bill having been referred to the committee by the House for their action.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Ohio to raise a point of order, but to move to strike out an appropriation.

Mr. LE BLOND. If the Chair overrules the point of order, of course I shall make that motion; but certainly the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] cannot claim that we cannot raise the point of order now, from the fact that the House had not the means of knowing what was in the bill when it was originally reported, for it went to the committee at once, under the rules of the House; and I raise the point now, that this is not germane to the subject-matter.

Mr. STEVENS. Does not the gentleman know that there was no reservation when this bill was referred?

Mr. LE BLOND. I move now to strike out the section.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. That will strike out the only good thing in the bill.

The question was taken upon Mr. LE BLOND's motion; and there were—ayes 26, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend by adding "and report the bill to the House."

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to amend the motion for the committee to rise is not now in order.

Mr. THAYER. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill cannot be reported while there is an amendment to it pending.

The question was taken upon Mr. ROSS's motion; and there were—ayes 31, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. LE BLOND demanded tellers; and Mr. THAYER and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed tellers.

The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived, the Speaker resumed the chair, and the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House resumed its session at half past seven o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, to bill of the House No. 1143, to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States.

HEIRS OF JOHN E. BOULIGNY.

On motion of Mr. THAYER, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Private Land Claims was discharged from the further consideration of bill of Senate No. 428, for the relief of the heirs of John E. Bouligny, and the bill resumed its place on the Speaker's table.

COMPENSATION FOR MAIL SERVICES.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to report to this House, or as early as possible after the organization of the Fortieth Congress, what, if any, readjustment of compensation for mail service by railways is necessary so as to more justly equalize the amounts paid the respective companies, in accordance with the services rendered by them.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI.

Mr. DEMING. I ask unanimous consent to report back a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs for the purpose of building a bridge over the Missouri river, within the limits of the military reservation.

There can be no possible objection to the bill, and it is a matter of great public importance that it should be passed before the session closes. It is House bill No. 1118, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I object.

VACANCY ON A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER stated that he had appointed to fill the vacancy on the committee of conference on the part of the House on Senate joint resolution No. 90, to suspend the temporary collection of direct taxes in the State of West Virginia, Mr. SCHENCK in the place of Mr. GARFIELD.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to the resolution of the House of the 12th instant, relative to the ultimate cost of the Union Pacific railroad and its branches.

On motion of Mr. WENTWORTH, the communication was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL LAWS.

On motion of Mr. ALLEY, by unanimous consent, bill of the Senate No. 527, to amend the postal laws, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SOUTHERN HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back an act amendatory of an act for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida; which was recommended to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted upon their amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 234) to incorporate the National Capital Insurance Company, had agreed to a conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. PATTERSON, managers of the said conference on their part.

RESOLUTIONS OF TENNESSEE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. COOPER presented the resolutions of the Legislature of Tennessee in regard to the Pacific railroad; which were referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

On motion of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, bill of the Senate No. 594, to provide for the payment of compound-interest notes, was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LYNCH. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire, in connection with this subject, to ask the gentleman who is acting as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means during the absence of the regular chairman, at what time the House may expect the Committee of Ways and Means to obey the instruction of the House which was sent to that committee on last Monday week, embodied in the resolution introduced by my colleague from the fourth district, [Mr. GRINNELL.] It seems to me that we should have some report from that committee in obedience to that resolution. The committee was instructed to report a bill to carry out the object embraced in that resolution; and as that committee has leave to report at any time, I do not see why we have not a report, and I desire to know when we will have it.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order. There is a bill now pending before the House, which is not at all connected with the inquiry made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suppose inasmuch as the bill is connected with the subject about which I am inquiring, the acting chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means can be allowed to answer my inquiry.

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is insisted upon, the Chair must rule that debate must be confined to the bill before the House.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] I would state that the Committee of Ways and Means have been engaged upon the tariff bill, as it was thought very important that that bill should be reported to the House at the earliest moment. We propose to-morrow—

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order; the reply of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is not addressed to the bill now before the House, and therefore it is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As my inquiry has been made, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] has begun to answer it, I hope he will be allowed to go on and give the information I desire.

Mr. DAVIS. I insist upon my point of order.

The SPEAKER. All debate must be confined to the bill before the House.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. LYNCH to so amend the motion of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, as to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 35, noes 27; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will not object to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill was accordingly referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of the House that it is not likely that the Committee on Banking and Currency will again be called in its regular order this session.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and I also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope the reference will be reconsidered. If the House wants to cast a fling at the Committee of Ways and Means, let them do so when its regular chairman is present.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 42, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baman, Bergen, Bingham, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cooper, Cullom, Dawson, Defrees, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Kelley, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Lynch, Marshall, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Morris, Moulton, Niblack, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Sloan, Starr, Stokes, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aeram, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Wright—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Cook, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dodge, Eliot, Hise, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Ladin, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Miller, Moorhead, Myers, Newell, Orth, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Upson, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Baldwin, Barker, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Bundy, Chanler, Cobb, Conkling, Culver, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eiskyle, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Garfield, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Marston, Maynard, Mercer, Morrill, Nicholson, Neell, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Stillwell, Strouse, Thornton, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Windom, and Winfield—69.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. FARQUHAR said: If I had been present in time, I should have voted against laying the motion to reconsider on the table.

SUFFERING PEOPLE OF THE SOUTH.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for action at this time a joint resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The joint resolution was read. It directs the Secretary of the Navy, upon the application of the contributors, to assign a public vessel for the transportation to Charleston, Savannah, and Mobile of any supplies of food or clothing which may be contributed by the people of the United States for the use of any portion of the people of the southern States who may be suffering from the failure of crops or from other causes, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

No objection was made.

The joint resolution was received, read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAINE. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. When the House went into Committee of the Whole this afternoon, it was engaged in executing the order of the House to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table. The regular order of business is the completion of the execution of that order of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Raymond in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill of the House No. 1126, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. LE BLOND to strike out the following:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the headquarters of the General of the Army of the United States shall be at the city of Washington, and all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the Army, and in case of his inability, by the next in rank. The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters, without the previous approval of the Senate; and any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was in session this afternoon, just before the recess, the question was taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND,] and no quorum voted.

Mr. LE BLOND. I now withdraw my motion to strike out the second section of this bill, and I wish to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who has charge of this bill, that I desire to have a separate vote taken in the House upon this section and also upon the following portion of the first section:

Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands:

For salaries of assistant commissioners, sub-assistant commissioners and agents, $147,500.

For salaries of clerks, $32,800.

For stationery and printing, $63,000.

For quarters and fuel, $200,000.

For commissary stores, $1,500,000.

For medical department, $500,000.

For transportation, $800,000.

For school superintendents, $25,000.

For buildings for schools and asylums, including construction, rental, and repairs, $500,000.

For telegraphing and postage, $18,000.

Provided, The Commissioner be hereby authorized to apply any balance on hand at this date of the refugees and freedmen's fund, accounted for in his last annual report, to aid educational institutions actually incorporated for loyal refugees and freedmen: And provided further, That no agent or clerk not heretofore authorized by law shall receive a monthly allowance exceeding the sum of $200.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman does not wish to occupy time now, I will consent that a separate vote be taken upon this second section.

Mr. LE BLOND. And upon the other part also?

Mr. STEVENS. Upon the second section.

Mr. LE BLOND. I believe I am entitled to an hour upon this subject, and as there are other gentlemen who desire to debate this proposition as well as myself, I propose, therefore, to retain the floor and to farm out my hour to members on this side of the House, in pursuance of a custom established by gentlemen on that side. Inasmuch as this is the first time we have had any sunshine of this kind, it is best perhaps for us to improve it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, the second section of the bill ought never to have been incorporated into an appropriation bill. I regret exceedingly that the bill was not read at the Clerk's desk when it was first reported. If it had been, then I should have been enabled under the rules of the House to have required that this section be stricken out as not appropriate to this bill. However, it has taught me this lesson: that in future, so long as I am a member of this House, no appropriation bill shall ever go to the Committee of the Whole until after it has first been read in detail at the Clerk's desk.

I do not expect to remain in this Hall very long. The place that knows me now will soon know me no more.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Forever. [Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. It is suggested that I add the word "forever;" and I willingly accept the suggestion. And when I have escaped from these Halls I shall feel that I am once more a free man, in a country that once was free, but, alas! is free no more. I shall be where the previous question cannot be ordered and compel me to hold my peace.

Sir, this section of the bill embraces more than one would suppose from a first reading of it. It is provided that no order shall be executed by any military commander unless it passes through the General of the Army, who is required by this section to reside in the city of Washington. Now, if the section stopped here it would not be so objectionable; but it provides further:

The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters, without the previous approval of the Senate; and any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Now, let us look at this for a moment. Suppose an outbreak should take place in some part of the country; or that some foreign Power should seek to invade our soil, say from the Mexican borders. The General of the Army located here may possibly be averse to any action being taken. The President, who is made Commander-in-Chief of the Army and the Navy by the Constitution of the United States, is by this provision estopped from sending any other general there to repel the forces which may be attempting to come upon our soil, or to put down any insurrection that might take place within any of the States.

Now, sir, what particular object the gentleman who is chairman of this committee had in view when he reported this section I know not. I can scarcely conceive what can induce any man to throw such an obstacle in our way in case of invasion if any such should take place. But, mysterious as it may be, it has found its way into this bill without any objection whatever from that quarter.

What else does it provide? It provides if an order issues—of course meaning from the President of the United States, the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy—to any officer, and that officer should undertake to carry out the order given to him by his superior officer, he is to be fined and to be imprisoned not less than two nor more than twenty years; imprisoned, sir, for executing an order made incumbent upon him by the laws and by the Constitution of the United States. If the bill does not show the cloven foot, yet when the author of the bill is remembered and the feelings he entertains toward other parties are called to mind, we must come to the conclusion there is a good deal of the cloven foot in it.

The Constitution, as I have already said, gives the command of the Army and Navy to the President. If he finds he must take immediate action, and issues orders to an officer to go into a particular locality to suppress insurrection, and that officer undertakes to execute the order, he is to be fined and imprisoned. If, however, he does not obey the order of his superior then he may be cashiered and dealt with as military courts generally deal with such cases. He is bound to execute the order of his superior by law.

But if the President shall issue such an order then he is to be guilty of a misdemeanor. If guilty of misdemeanor in carrying out the plain provisions of the Constitution he then becomes liable to impeachment, the very thing that gentleman wishes to bring about. He seeks to put the Executive in a position where, by the laws and Constitution, he is forced to issue orders to the military; and when these orders are issued it subjects him to the penalty of impeachment for misdemeanor. I am opposed to this system of legislation. I am opposed to laying a network to catch any officer of the Government who is carrying out what he believes to be his duty under the law. I believe in fair dealing and plain sailing; and if the Executive is guilty of any act whereby he subjects himself to impeachment, in God's name let him be impeached. Do not lay this network to force him into a position to manufacture ground for his impeachment.

I hear, sir, little about impeachment now. I suppose gentlemen have found on examination nothing upon which to found it. The press has been speaking, and those who have been foremost in the matter feel as did Belshazzar when he saw the writing on the wall. This section ought not to be left in this bill, and I hope this House will strike it out.

The other subject on which I shall ask a vote is the appropriation of over three million dollars for the Freedmen's Bureau. When that comes into the House I shall, with its permission, call for the yeas and nays to see whether the people of this country are willing to contribute from the Treasury such a sum as this for the purpose of keeping up one class at the expense of another. We have objects of charity all over the country if we have money to bestow in this way more worthy than this.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations that reported this bill, and although I claim to be pretty punctual in my attendance upon that committee, I happened, I believe, not to be present when this bill was considered and ordered to be reported. At all events, from some cause or other which I do not profess to understand fully, the second section of this bill is entirely new to me. I never heard of it until it was read at the Clerk's desk this afternoon when we went into committee for the consideration of this bill. I must say that it struck me when I heard it read as a most extraordinary kind of legislation.

Under the Constitution, as we all, of course, have been advised very frequently in debate, here and elsewhere, the President is Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. He nominates all the officers that are required above a certain grade, all commissioned officers, I believe, in the Army and Navy. He appoints them, in other words, subject to the consent of the Senate. It has always, so far as my reading has taught me on the subject, been conceded to him that he was entitled, as Commander-in-Chief, to assign to officers whatever duty in his judgment he thought they ought to be called upon and were best qualified to perform.

It is not a practicable thing for the Congress of the United States to regulate matters of detail connected with the military service at all events. Whatever law we pass on the subject has to remain in force until repealed by Congress, and if the particular section to which I am alluding shall become a law, it will remain the law of the land, of course, until repealed by Congress. It will tie up, if it be a valid law, the President and the General of the Army for all time to come until modified or repealed by the Congress of the United States. As has been well said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] we cannot foresee what contingency may happen in regard to the future of this country. We may have an invasion, we may have an insurrection, we may have some trouble upon the northern border with Canada, or upon the southern border with Mexico, and it may be a matter of the first importance that the General of the Army should be assigned to duty in some one of those localities. But if you pass this bill, and it becomes a law, and is sustained by the courts of this country, or by acquiescence in it on the part of the President and others in authority under him, then the General will not be permitted to go outside the limits of the city of Washington, nor can he be assigned to duty anywhere except at headquarters in this city. I take it there must be more urgent reason for this sort of legislation, some reason which the public does not fully understand, some reason which certainly we on this side of the House are unable to appreciate.

In the first place, it implies a want of confidence in the President of the United States.

Well, sir, I very much regret this apparent want of confidence in him on the part of the majority here. But we have seen some few faint indications of it upon some previous occasions, and I am not so much surprised, therefore, at the manifestation of that want of confidence as shown in this particular bill. But I go further, and insist that it implies a want of confidence on the part of the majority in the General of the Army himself. Why do you seek to coop him up in this way, and threaten him with punishment if he should obey the orders of the President, if there is not a sort of lingering suspicion somewhere that he will be derelict in his duty in this respect? It is only the other day that the majority on the other side were proposing to place the whole military power of this country, especially in the lately insurrectionary States, in the General of the Army, to charge him with the entire military operations within those States, and give him supreme control. Well, I concede that if Congress has the power to do this it is a very extraordinary attempt at legislation.

That provision of the bill, however, which passed this body last week for the government of the late insurrectionary States has been so amended by the Senate that I presume whatever may happen, that feature is not likely to be reinstated. I am not in the secret, however, in these matters, and about that I may be mistaken.

But what I was drawing the attention of the House to is that now the whole thing seems to be changed, and there is an apprehension that the General of the Army intends to do something that is inconsistent with the safety of the people of this country, that some kind of coup d'état, as the French call it, is anticipated; that the President is going to do something terrible and the General of the Army is likely to be used in this effort at rebellion or resistance or whatever else gentlemen may imagine is likely to occur; for I take it for granted that they would never agree to a proposition of this sort if there was no such apprehension.

By this provision the General of the Army is only to be assigned to duty in the city of Washington, and any effort on the part of the President to assign him to duty elsewhere is to be null and void. And not only is the order to be void, but the President is to be punished for issuing such an order, and the General of the Army is also liable to punishment for obeying such an order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the present General of the Army has by his own superior skill as a military man, by a succession of excellent good fortune, become a very important personage in this country. He is a man, I believe, that all parties are trying to get possession of. These victorious generals are particularly serviceable sometimes in elections, and I confess that one great dread we have had to encounter on this side of the House for some time past has been that the majority were likely to capture him and make him their candidate for President in 1868. But seeing this suspicion which seems to linger in the minds of the majority in regard to the fidelity, loyalty, good faith, and honor of this officer as manifested in the second section of the bill, I am inclined to think that our apprehensions have not been well founded. I am inclined to think, instead of confiding in him and desiring to make him their leader in a future contest, they desire to tie up his hands, embarrass him, and advertise him by the legislation of the country as an officer in whom the Congress of the United States have no confidence.

I may be mistaken in all this, but I confess this second section looks to me a little as if I am about right. Whatever gentlemen of the majority may feel in relation to the President of the United States, I insist that it is unfair to attempt to involve officers of the Army in these troubles who have never been politicians, who have simply, so far as their acts are concerned, indicated their desire to perform their whole duty to the country in their military capacity, and thus complicate them in the present unfortunate and unsettled political condition of the country.

It is competent for the Congress of the United States to withhold appropriations for the Army altogether if it chooses. It is competent when we make appropriations, for us to prescribe the manner in which the money thus appropriated shall be disbursed. We may, I suppose, annex provisions to such appropriations limiting and prescribing the terms upon which the disbursements shall be made and the contingencies upon which the appropriations shall be withheld. But, sir, I never heard it urged seriously anywhere, even at the hustings, where debate runs wild and gentlemen are not reported in what they are saying, where whatever may be said in the excitement of the moment passes away from the memory; that the Congress of the United States shall prescribe to what particular duty an officer shall be assigned, and may by legislation tie up the hands of the President in such a way that he cannot assign an officer to the particular kind of duty to which, in his judgment, that officer is adapted.

In all seriousness, Mr. Chairman, I do regard this as a most extraordinary section. The more I think about it the more am I surprised. I am aware that these are times of revolution to some extent. I am aware that many very extraordinary things have been said, done, written, and published in the last five or six years, and I am aware that the limitations of the Constitution have not borne very heavily upon those who are in the majority here; and in view of that I confess I ought not to be surprised at scarcely anything, especially after having witnessed what I have here in the last two years.

But, sir, this is so far in advance of anything that has yet been attempted; so entirely novel in its character; so revolutionary, if I may be allowed to use that expression; so unprecedented in all ordinary matters of legislation, that I should be recreant to my duty, recreant to every dictate of justice, if I should permit a provision of this sort to be passed by this House without entering my earnest protest against it.

I am inclined to think, sir, that such a provision as this would be wholly nugatory, so far as it attempts to restrain the action of the President or the action of the General of the Army. Certainly, sir, this would be so if the Constitution were applied in its strict construction to the question. But, sir, this is a stronger argument why we should not attempt to enact such a provision into a law. It is not always safe for an executive officer, for an officer in any branch of the public service, to refuse to obey a law because in his judgment it may be unconstitutional. The decision of such a question imposes upon him a responsibility which it is not right to throw upon his shoulders. He should not be called upon to take the risk of determining what the judicial tribunal of last resort may decide upon one of the most important and at the same time one of the most intricate and delicate questions.

If this provision were clearly unconstitutional, then, sir, there would only remain the question as to its expediency. But, sir, in the aspect in which it is presented here it is, in my judgment, not only unconstitutional but inexpedient. I do hope that before we take the vote on this question we shall at least hear from the other side—from the distinguished chairman of the committee who reported this bill—why we are asked to enact such a section as this, especially in connection with the ordinary appropriations for the support of the Army. There must be some reason for it which the public does not understand; there must be some reason which even this House does not understand.

If such a measure as this ought to come before the House, if Congress ought to enact such a law, then I submit that it should properly have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, who are specially charged with the consideration of all questions pertaining to military operations. Although the Committee on Appropriations embraces gentlemen of talent, of distinction, of ability, and of experience, some of whom perhaps have done some service in the field, yet that committee is not specially charged with the consideration of the military condition of the country. I am quite sure, sir, that the distinguished Presiding Officer of this House would never have appointed me a member of that committee if he had anticipated that it would be a part of the duty of the committee to take into consideration the military situation of the country.

The duties of that committee are of a financial character; they relate to the computation of dollars and cents, the consideration of the exigencies of the country in regard to appropriations. But it is certainly no part of our duty to inquire what military operations are contemplated, or the relative merits of the different officers of the Army, commencing with the President and extending down through his subordinates.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. I insist that it is not in order for gentlemen to hold a caucus on the floor of the House of Representatives. It must be evident to the Chairman that that is going on. Besides that, there is a great deal of talking, evidently to disturb the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] in his argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. Gentlemen on the left of the Chair will please be seated and preserve order in the House.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Does the Chair decide that there is a caucus? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Chairman, I would have much preferred that some gentleman on this side of the House who understands the military situation better than I do should have assumed the duty of discussing this question; but being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, which is responsible to the House and to the country for this bill, I have felt it my duty to say at least a few words before the vote was taken upon it. Other gentlemen, however, desire to speak upon it, and I will not attempt to hold the floor any longer. I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BOND] for his courtesy in yielding to me.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Chairman, there are several Republican members who have expressed to me a desire to speak on this question. I will yield now to one of them. The usual courtesy extended from that side of the House to this is two minutes; but I will be more generous and extend three minutes to my friend from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. DAVIS. I decline to accept so short a time.

Mr. LE BLOND. My time is very precious, and I have promised portions of it to several of my friends. I now yield ten minutes to my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDRIDGE.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I have consented that my friend from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] shall occupy five minutes of my time.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Chairman, I have been for some time apprehensive that there is an intention on the part of the Republican party of this country to abandon that time-honored principle termed the "Monroe Doctrine." I think it must be apparent, sir, to you and to the country that the design of the dominant political party at the present time is to ignore that great doctrine by which our fathers stood from the foundation of the Government.

With reference, sir, to the questions more immediately involved in this bill I may be allowed to say that during the last session I called the attention of the House to the danger of creating a large military establishment in this country. But, sir, my feeble voice was not heard or was unheeded. It was determined that we must have in the field in time of peace an Army of at least eighty thousand men. We are now beginning to realize the fruits of our legislation during the last session. One of the first fruits is the bill now reported by the Committee on Appropriations, proposing the extraordinary expenditure of nearly twenty-eight million dollars for the support of the military establishment during one year. Sir, it is a startling fact for the country to consider that now, in a time of profound peace, the military establishment of this country costs us more than the total expense of administering the Government in the earlier and better days of the country, when the Democratic party was in power.

These, Mr. Chairman, are serious considerations for the American people. Perhaps they will submit to this system of legislation. Perhaps the sunburnt sons of toil will uncomplainingly bow their necks to the burdens imposed upon them and will be content to deprive themselves, not only of the comforts, but the absolute necessities of life—for what? For the luxury of having a Republican Congress to rule over them. Go on, hardy sons of toil; labor from early morn till the stars shine at night; bow your necks to the burden imposed upon you as the price of enjoying the rule of a Republican Congress!

Mr. Chairman, the time has come when every patriotic citizen of this country should be aroused to the danger which hangs like a thick pall over our institutions. The time has come when the question must be decided whether the people of this country have any longer any rights that deserve to be respected. The glory of the fathers was that we had a Government resting so lightly on the shoulders of the people that they hardly knew they were taxed. The idea on which our Government was founded was that we were to dispense with all the traditionary notions of monarchy and aristocracy; that among the other abuses of monarchical government from which we were to be exempt were standing armies and navies, needlessly eating out the substance of the people. But, sir, this old doctrine is being entirely reversed; we have been placed under military despotism; a permanent military establishment has been created; provision is made for putting one third of the people of this Union under military law; and we are having pressed upon us in this House a militia bill providing for the military enrollment of the entire community.

Mr. Chairman, these are important moments in the history of our country, and I call upon patriotic Union-loving men who revere and venerate the institutions under which we live to come to the rescue. There is no time to be lost; ere long the chains will be around our necks; there is great danger in permitting this thing to go on. I call upon the honorable and distinguished gentlemen on the other side to come to the help of our imperiled free Government. I only intended when I rose to call the attention of the House and country to the great danger which gathers and thickens over our political horizon; and I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for yielding to me.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. WRIGHT.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, although I am upon the Committee on Appropriations I was not present when this proposition was submitted to that committee. Assuredly if offered in my presence I would, as I do now, object to it. I do not think, as was well said by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] it is germane to the body of an appropriation bill.

This is a proposition to restrict the office and control the power of the President of the United States; to tear away from him by a single act of this Congress his powers under the Constitution of the United States, which makes him Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. Now, what a farce it would be to allow him to be the Commander of this force, and yet to say his chief officer, the General of the Army, can be so strongly fixed in his headquarters in Washington that no power on earth, except a power unknown to the Constitution of the United States, the Senate of the United States may interfere, and give him a leave of absence for a few days.

Mr. Chairman, I see not only in this, but in other bills, an attempt, a deliberate attempt, to limit and circumscribe the power of the President of the United States. And why? I well remember when he made an address in Nashville, Tennessee, and told the negroes there he would be their Moses to lead them to the promised land, [laughter,] the whole country appeared to be on his side; he was the consummation so devoutly wished for. Since then times have changed. Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur cum illis. He entertains now in his own mind a different system of political economy, keeping pace with the progress of the age, and forsooth, his old friends withdraw from him and refuse to give him that sustentation and support which he enjoyed before and to which he is entitled. We do not claim him. We who profess to be Democrats acknowledge only one rule of conduct, and that is the Constitution of the United States; loving the flag and respecting the laws made under the Constitution. We have no other faith; we have no other hope, and under the blessing of God we desire no other destiny.

The proposition here in this second section is outside of any appropriation, except it may be appropriation of the powers of the President. It is that he shall be shorn of his authority. He cannot, dare not, order one of his subalterns, no matter how great the danger may be, to go to any portion of this Republic for the purpose of putting down a rebellion. If a subaltern undertakes to execute the order of the President he becomes liable to be considered guilty of what we call in New Jersey a high misdemeanor, and to be imprisoned for from two to twenty years, at the discretion of the court.

I tell you you dare not override the Constitution of the United States. This is not a question to be put to gentlemen as a matter of mere volition. There is a day of reckoning at hand; it will come to you as well as to us. We may be mistaken; but I say to you again, you dare not override the Constitution of the United States in this way to-day and then rely upon it to-morrow. That Constitution gives the President of the United States entire command of the Army and Navy of the United States; and that being so, why do you propose, in this outside and incidental way, to restrict him and to take away from him those ordinary powers which, by virtue of his office, he has a right to exercise?

I really do not know why this thing is suggested; but I repudiate the insinuation that has been made by one of my own party, that it is intended as a trap to catch the President in order to impeach him. I do not believe it. I do not believe that the Republican party, seated there upon the other side of the House, would do such a mean act as to set a trap to catch the President of the United States. I think that the President has manliness enough to declare his sentiments, to act upon his principles, and to discharge the duties of his office in accordance with them; and if, in doing so, he shall subject himself to the criticism of the Congress of the United States, that may give rise to questions to be decided by the action of this House and of the Senate.

But I repeat, I do not believe that this bill is designed as a trap. I think rather that it is an ill-advised scheme, put into a bill which originally did not contemplate anything of the kind, and brought in here just at the close of the session, intended to confine the General of the Army in his quarters here, and at the same time to hold out by way of penalty the threat that punishment would follow disobedience of orders. I have examined that section, and desiring to discuss this matter fairly, I say it does not appear to me that the President of the United States may not give an order to General Grant that he may execute; but I think that if General Grant were to issue an order to any of his subordinates, and they should undertake to execute it in contravention of the provisions of that section, then they would be liable.

However that may be, is it appropriate that now at the close of the session a proposition of this kind should be suddenly sprung upon this House, when, if the Constitution is left to stand where it is and if the laws of the land are left in full force, there is no reason why the matter may not very well be allowed to rest until the Fortieth Congress comes in?

The Latins tell us, experientia docet. Let us wait and see; let us postpone action in this matter until after the next Congress shall have assembled, and let us endeavor to consider calmly in the mean time whether any action of the President of the United States calls for such an extraordinary measure as this, which seeks to restrict his powers by act of Congress, although they cannot properly be restricted except by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I will now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Hise.]

Mr. HISE. If there are only three minutes of time remaining, which I understand is the fact, I must decline to occupy them. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the committee rise, and I do it with a view of going to business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. FINCK. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Hise] has the floor and the gentleman from Maine has no right to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky resigned the floor.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman allow us to take separate votes in the House upon the propositions which I have indicated.

Mr. BLAINE. I will say to the gentleman that I do not propose to go on with this bill at all. I have made the motion to rise for another purpose, in order that we may proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. LE BLOND. What particular business?

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman will find that out when the committee rises.

The question was taken on Mr. BLAINE's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. RAYMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly bill of the House No. 1126, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. That will not be in order unless the Army bill shall be postponed by a vote of the House. The tax bill was postponed this afternoon by a vote of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, the Army appropriation bill, and pending that motion, I move that all debate in committee be confined to five minutes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. What is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to postpone the regular order of business for the purpose of finishing the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. FINCK. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 30, nays 97, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Baxter, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Hawkins, Hise, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, and Andrew H. Ward—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hayes, Higby, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Laffin, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stokes, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—97.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Benjamin, Chandler, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Marston, Moorhead, Morrill, Noell, Phelps, Radford, Rogers, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Stilwell, Strouse, Thornton, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Williams, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—63.

So the House refused to postpone the regular order of business.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The SPEAKER. The first business upon the Speaker's table is the following message from the Senate:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 19, 1867.

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Attest: J. W. FORNEY,
Secretary.

By J. W. McDONALD, Chief Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] having called for the regular order of business, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the House concur in the substitute proposed by the Senate, with an amendment to come in at the end of the fifth section, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. WRIGHT. Are we to be sold out? [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no person excluded from the privilege of holding office by said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be eligible as a member of a convention to frame a constitution for any of said rebel States nor shall any such person vote for members of such convention.

Mr. BLAINE. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a question of order. We have already voted to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate; the motion to reconsider that vote was made, and laid upon the table. I now ask whether we can be again called upon to vote upon the proposition to concur?

The SPEAKER. The House is now acting upon a message from the Senate, and the Clerk will read the rule in relation to the progress of business.

The Clerk read as follows:

"When either House, e.g., the House of Representatives, send a bill to the other, the other may pass it with amendments. The regulation progression in this case is: that the House disagree to the amendment, the Senate insist on it; the House insist on their disagreement; the Senate adhere to their amendment; the House adhere to their disagreement."

The SPEAKER. The House this afternoon disagreed to the amendment of the Senate, and the motion to reconsider the vote was laid upon the table. The Senate have sent to this House a message, stating that they insist upon their amendment. The question now is upon receding from the disagreement of the House, which is an entirely different proposition from the one upon which the House acted this afternoon. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] now moves to recede from the disagreement of the House and to agree to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment. The Clerk will read the rule under which that motion is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Either House may recede from its amendment and agree to the bill, or recede from their disagreement to the amendment and agree to the same absolutely, or with an amendment. And the motion to recede takes precedence of the motion to insist."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it now in order to move to lay the amendment of the Senate upon the table?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order; but if it is agreed to it will take the bill to the table also.

Mr. BLAINE. I called the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The call for the previous question will be pending, and will be the first question in order should the motion to lay on the table not be agreed to.

Mr. FINCK. I call the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division, there were—yeas 27, noes 78.

So (one fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 27, nays 108, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Finck, Glossbrenner, Hise, Hunter, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stokes, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—108.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Benjamin, Blow, Chanler, Conkling, Culver, Defrees, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Marston, Morrill, Noell, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Thornton, Trowbridge, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Williams, and Winfield—55.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. FINCK. I move that the House take a recess until one o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House now adjourn, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Thursday next at twelve o'clock, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. THAYER. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. THAYER and NICHOLSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-nine; noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ELDRIDGE, that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Thursday next; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 27, nays 110, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Cooper, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hise, Kerr, Le Blond, Leitwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Starr, Stokes, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—110.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blow, Buckland, Chanler, Conkling, Culver, Deftrees, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Marston, Morrill, Myers, Neill, Orth, Phelps, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Thayer, Thornton, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—53.

So the motion of Mr. ELDRIDGE was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. ELDRIDGE said: The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] who is absent on this vote, informed me a short time since that he was unwell and must go home.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, an act (H. R. No. 478) for the relief of John C. McFerron of the United States Navy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 1134) declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as part of the Army; and

An act (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 595) to regulate the disposition of an irregular fund in the custody of the Freedmen's Bureau; and

An act (S. No. 543) to abolish and forever prohibit the system of peonage in the Territory of New Mexico and other parts of the United States.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. FINCK. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next; and on that motion I call the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that when we adjourn we adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at half-past eleven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. The rule which fixes the meeting of the House at twelve o'clock cannot be suspended except by unanimous consent, or by the adoption of a motion to suspend the rules, when that motion is in order.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think the House will grant unanimous consent. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I will say there is no desire to prevent certain action on any bill except the one which came recently from the Senate. We do desire that bill shall not pass before twelve o'clock midnight. We do not expect to make any successful opposition to its passage to-morrow; and when we come here to-morrow we will not object to the vote being taken. We shall not then indulge in any dilatory motions.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to a question of order. It appears in the papers that the President will sign this. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That is no question of order.

Mr. DAWES. Let us take a recess until twelve o'clock to-morrow, and then proceed to vote on this bill after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I object. Let us finish this business to-night and get it out of the way.

Mr. DAWES. Then say to-morrow at twelve o'clock m., and after the reading of the Journal this question shall be disposed of without dilatory motions.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I object.

Mr. BLAINE. Last night, at the request of gentlemen on the other side, was allowed for discussion, with the fair understanding—

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object to debate.

The question then recurred on the motion that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet on Friday next; and being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 24, nays 111, not voting, 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hise, Humphrey, Kerr, Le Blond, Leitwich, Marshall, Niblack, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Taber, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hart, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hunter, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—111.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Baker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Asahel W. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Julian, Longyear, Marston, Morrill, Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pike, Radford, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—55.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays. If we are now allowed to adjourn there will be no dilatory motion to-morrow to prevent the taking of the vote on this subject.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope we will not adjourn. Let us get rid of this question to-night so that we can get to something else to-morrow.

Mr. BLAINE. I feel it to be incumbent upon me to object to adjournment until this bill is passed. I may be overruled by the House, but I hope those who support the pending proposition will stand by it and see it through.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I am glad to hear it.

The SPEAKER. If objection be made the question then recurs on the motion to adjourn on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from Maine to listen to a suggestion, that the House adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent. A majority can adjourn till twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BLAINE. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I understand perfectly well that the gentlemen on the other side desire this bill shall not by any possibility go to the President till morning; but they must see very plainly that it is now impossible it should get to him before to-morrow. I appreciate their motives; they have the power and I am willing they should exercise it. But I do say it is a mere capricious demand on their part that this bill shall again be postponed a whole day.

Mr. FINCK. I object to further debate.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. We did not make the demand; we have only acceded to a request made to us by the other side.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 64, noes 62.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to make a statement.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, I now renew the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 63, nays 79, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Donnelly, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Higby, Hise, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Hunter, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Leitwich, Loan, Marshall, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Scofield, Shanklin, Stevens, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Wright—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Cobb, Cook, Darling, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Eggleston, Farquhar, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stilwell, Strouse, Thornton, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, and Winfield—48.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the motion to take a recess till one o'clock.

Mr. FINCK. I rise to a privileged motion; that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order pending the present motion to adjourn till one o'clock, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to a privileged question. We directed the Committee for the District of Columbia to report a bill to prevent the sale of ardent spirits. I desire the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring the members of that committee to the bar to show an excuse for not having executed the order of the House.

The question was taken on the motion to take a recess till one o'clock; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 27, nays 98, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brandegee, Campbell, Cooper, Pinck, Glosbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hise, Hogan, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Taber, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Whaley, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Koontz, Marston, McIndoe, McKee, Morrill, Newell, Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pike, Plants, Radford, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Strong, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Van Aernam, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—65.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to submit a proposition to the House. I suggest that the House adjourn now until the usual hour to-morrow, and that the vote be taken upon the pending proposition immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. We have no objection to that.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. We agreed to that long ago.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I object to it very decidedly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would move to adjourn if we could have that understanding.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. We are willing to stand to that agreement.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there objection to the proposition I have submitted?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] objects.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I object to any proposition to adjourn to-night until we pass this bill.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOORHEAD. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays, and I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Allow me to submit a proposition to the other side of the House. I propose that we adjourn now and take the vote to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. [Cries from the Democratic side of the House of "Agreed;" and "Take it when you please."]

Mr. SCOFIELD. I now insist on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at eleven o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. ALLISON: The petition of John Reams and 107 others, citizens of Sioux City, Iowa, praying for the early completion of the Sioux City Pacific railroad as now located.

Also, petition of H. B. Williams and 67 others, citizens of Hesper, Winneshiek county, Iowa, against the contraction of the currency.

By Mr. BROMWELL: The petition of citizens of Carroll, Vermilion county, Illinois, praying Congress to pass no law for the curtailment of the currency, &c.

By Mr. CULLOM: Two petitions, signed by citizens of McLean county, Illinois, asking Congress to prevent the further contraction of the legal-tender currency.

By Mr. DODGE: The concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of New York, asking the continuance of the Government ships now in use at quarantine for use as hospitals.

By Mr. DONNELLY: A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Green Bay and Lake Pepin railroad, in the State of Wisconsin.

Also, the memorial of the same, for a mail route from Richmond, in Stearns county, to Chippewa, in Douglas county, in said State of Minnesota.

By Mr. EGGLESTON: The petition of John S. McAndrew and 10 others, of New York city, praying for reduction of duty on licorice.

By Mr. INGERSOLL: The petition of James McCull and 100 others, citizens of Winona, Illinois, asking for the repeal of the law imposing a tax of five per cent. on manufactures.

By Mr. KOONTZ: A petition of five soldiers of the war of 1812, asking that they be allowed pensions from the date of their discharge or muster out of service.

By Mr. LAFLIN: The petition of L. Paddock, and 37 others, citizens of Jefferson county, New York, adverse to the withdrawal of national bank currency from circulation.

By Mr. LONGYEAR: The petition of J. M. Parsons and 145 others, citizens of Calhoun county, Michigan, asking that the tax on manufactures may be removed.

By Mr. PLANTS: The petition of Christopher C. Callan, Julius S. McAllister, Robert E. Talbot, John S. E. Thorn, John M. Palmer, T. J. Bickler, and others, for an act to incorporate the Temperance Hall Association of Georgetown, District of Columbia.

By Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts: The memorial of the citizens of Newport, Rhode Island, for location of the United States Naval Academy near that city.

By Mr. UPSON: The petition of Alexander Cameron and 144 others, citizens of Kalamazoo county, Michigan; also of Murray & Finley and 52 others, citizens of Berrien county, Michigan, praying that the five per cent. tax on manufactures be removed.

By Mr. WINDOM: A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, for an appropriation to improve the navigation of the Minnesota river.

Also, a memorial for the establishment of a mail route from Geneva, in the county of Freeborn, to the village of Freeborn, in said county.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 15, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York, ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed to the several States by a joint resolution of Congress, passed on the 13th of June, 1866, to be designated as Article XIV of amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota, praying the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 718) to provide increased revenue from imports, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against any legislation calculated to depreciate the national currency; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUCKALEW presented a memorial of the officers of the Polytechnic College of the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the law which allows the importation of books and maps intended for colleges, and other literary institutions, free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. YATES presented a memorial of members of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, remonstrating against the removal of Governor Pickering from the office of Governor of that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SUMNER presented a memorial of the French Canadians of the United States, remonstrating against the proposed confederation of the British Provinces of North America; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of citizens of the United States residing in Illinois, praying for such an amendment of the Constitution as will more fully recognize the obligations of the Christian religion; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HENDERSON. I present a petition of certain citizens of Missouri, praying that the negroes of the United States may be colonized in Africa. I do not indorse the petition, but I present it because I think these citizens have a right to petition. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the adoption of measures to secure the protection of the frontier of that State by the establishment of permanent military posts at some eligible points between Fort Kearney and Fort Harker; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands in that State; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Virginia, praying that a territorial government may be established in that State in place of the present State organization, and that Hon. J. C. Underwood may be appointed provisional governor; which was referred to the joint Committee on Reconstruction.

Mr. HOWE presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation to aid in defraying the expenses of forwarding articles to the Paris Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I present resolutions of the Rhode Island Institute of Instruction, in favor of the organization of a National Bureau of Education. As the Committee on the Judiciary have reported a bill to effect this object, I ask that the resolutions lie on the table; but in order that they may go on the record of our proceedings I desire to have them read.

The Secretary read as follows:

RHODE ISLAND INSTITUTE OF INSTRUCTION,
January 28, 1867.

Whereas it is the earnest belief of this association that universal education is a matter of vital national concern, and that in a republican form of government the whole power of education is required for its prosperity and progress; and whereas it is our unanimous opinion that the interests of education would be greatly promoted by the organization of a National Bureau of Education which could render needed assistance in the establishment of school systems where they do not now exist, and which would also prove a potent means for improving and vitalizing existing systems: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Senators from this State in the national Congress be earnestly and respectfully requested to endeavor to secure the passage of a bill by the United States Senate which shall provide for the establishment of such a national educational department as shall accomplish the purposes proposed.

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be signed by the president and secretary of this association, and be transmitted to each of our Senators at Washington.

THOMAS W. BICKNELL,
President.

THOMAS B. STOCKWELL, Secretary.

The resolutions were ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant, a copy of the report of the commission relative to improvements at Rock Island, Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF UPPER MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on

Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for the printing of extra copies of General Warren's report of the survey of the Upper Mississippi river, reported in favor of the resolution; and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That five thousand copies of the report of Major General G. K. Warren of the survey of the Upper Mississippi be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARKANSAS LOYAL TROOPS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of Albert W. Bishop, Adjutant General of Arkansas, praying that an appropriation be made for the publication of his report presented to the Legislature of that State, have instructed me to report a resolution in conformity with the prayer of the memorialist; and if the Senate will now indulge me I will state the object of the resolution, and ask for its present consideration if no one objects, because as the Senate nearly always indulges the Committee on Printing with the present consideration of their resolutions, I do not wish to ask for it unless it is necessary for the public service. All the loyal States have prepared rosters of the men who served in the loyal Army, and they have been published with the reports of the adjutant general of the various States. The State of Arkansas furnished over ten thousand men to the loyal Army. The adjutant general presented his report with a roster of those names to the Legislature of that State, which is now under disloyal control, and they have refused to publish it, so that there is no record whatever of the services of these gallant men. It seemed to the committee that it was due to them that this dereliction on the part of their own State should be made up by Congress. They have also received a letter from General Grant strongly urging the publication of the report. It will cost about five hundred dollars. Now, if no Senator objects, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the report of Albert W. Bishop, adjutant general of Arkansas, be printed for the use of the Senate, and that one thousand extra copies be printed for the use of the adjutant general of Arkansas, to be distributed among the loyal officers of that State mentioned therein.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I reported yesterday a bill to provide for the election of a Congressional Printer. I should be much obliged to the Senate if they would take up that bill. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island refer to a bill reported to-day?

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir. My motion is to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1099) providing for the election of a Congressional Printer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope that bill which the Senator from Rhode Island has charge of will not be taken up this morning. It will, no doubt, elicit considerable debate. It seems to be a vexed question in the Senate as to what we shall do with the public printing. There are other measures that are much more important. I desire to call up the bill which has been reported from the Reconstruction Committee.

Mr. CRESWELL. I object to the consideration of bills that have been lying on the table for some time past until we get in our reports.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to the morning business going on. I merely wanted to get my motion in ahead of any other motion to take up a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island withdraw his motion?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will waive it for the morning business.

TOWING ON THE LAKES.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a petition of owners of tags and vessels on the lakes and rivers on our northern frontier, praying an amendment to the twenty-first section of the act of July 18, 1866, by adding thereto this proviso:

Provided, That this section shall not apply, or be held to apply, to any case where the said towing in whole or in part is within or upon foreign waters—

Have directed me to report a bill in conformity with the prayer of the petitioners. The bill simply enacts the provision I have stated in two or three lines, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866, was read three times, and passed.

CUSTOMS, FORFEITURES, FINES, ETC.

Mr. CRESWELL. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 577) to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs, have instructed me to report it with amendments. I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope this bill will be allowed to lie over to-day. It is a very important one, and this is the first time my attention has been called to it. I should like to have time to look at it before it is acted upon. I do not desire to interpose delay, as it is a bill reported from a standing committee of the Senate; but I confess that it is of sufficient consequence to the people I represent here for me to wish an opportunity to examine it before it shall be passed. I find that at the last session of Congress a very important bill passed here, into which I will not say were smuggled, but into which provisions of a very important character were placed without any knowledge on the part of several of the Senators. That was a bill affecting commerce materially; one provision, for instance, repealing and setting aside all the pilot laws of the States of the Union. I hope this bill will lie over before we act upon it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the present and all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1143, to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am in favor of bringing up that bill, but I want to make some reports.

Mr. SUMNER. I am in favor of bringing up this bill and the Louisiana bill, but I wish that there should be some understanding in the Senate as to the order in which they are to be brought up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon proceeding to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SUMNER. That is the question before Senate; but the point is, whether we had better begin with that bill or with the bill which stands first on our Calendar. The bill first on our Calendar certainly has the advantage in point of time. I do not wish to go into any question now between the comparative merits of the two bills I am so cordially in favor of each; but I must say that I should prefer to see the Senate approach what I would call the main question by considering first the Louisiana bill. It came to us first, and I think we ought to decide it first; indeed, I see no reason why the other bill should be put in before it. If there is any good reason for it, I certainly shall withdraw all objection.

Mr. WADE. The other bill did get the start of that, but I confess that if I were to take my choice between the two bills I should prefer the Louisiana bill with an amendment making it applicable to all the insurrectionary States.

But, nevertheless, these bills have different objects entirely as I read them. The bill of the Senator from Oregon is a military bill, which gives immediate protection to the Union men in the southern States where murder and vice of every kind are predominating. A remedy should be applied as soon as it possibly can be. The Louisiana bill contemplates reconstruction and will go slower, and will not, in my judgment, be as efficient to defend the Union people of the South as the other bill. The one is local and the other general, applying to all these States. For this reason, although I seem to have charge of the local bill as you may say, I have thought that perhaps it was as well to take up the other; and as I am for both of these bills, and believe they both ought to pass, I do not want to take up any time in antagonizing one against the other. I am indifferent which is considered first, but I moved yesterday to postpone the Louisiana bill until to-day so that the other bill might have one reading at all events. I suppose it will now come in ahead, and for my part I am willing that it should.

Mr. ANTHONY. I certainly do not wish to antagonize anything against this bill, but I thought I had put in a caveat that I might take up the bill which was reported from the Committee on Printing yesterday. I ask the Senator from Oregon if he will not give me ten minutes, if his bill is taken up, for the consideration of that measure?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot accede to the request of the Senator, because evidently that bill will lead to protracted debate, and then Senators ought to remember that there are certain bills which must be passed within a given time if they are to become laws, because they are expected to encounter a veto.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is one of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is of less consequence than these other bills.

The motion of Mr. WILLIAMS was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I am willing to yield a few minutes to let the morning business be disposed of.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 170) to facilitate the settlement of claims for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies, furnished by loyal persons to the Army of the United States in the late rebellion, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) granting certain public property to the State of Ohio, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Michael Mangan; which was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred a memorial of the National Association of State and City School Superintendents, praying the establishment of a National Bureau of Education; a petition of members of the bar of the city and county of Philadelphia, praying an increase of the salary of the judge of the United States district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania; and a petition of members of the New York bar, praying an increase of the salary of the United States judge for the southern district of New York, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, the subjects having been reported on; which was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 226) extending the provision of section two of an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864, reported it without amendment.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year 1866 twelve hundred extra copies, for the use of the Senate, and one thousand for distribution from the office of the Coast Survey.

MONUMENTS TO DECEASED SENATORS.

Mr. POLAND submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be instructed to have the ordinary monuments erected in the Congressional Cemetery in memory of Senators who have died since July 4, 1861.

Mr. GRIMES objected to the present consideration of the resolution, and it was laid over under the rules.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 606) to amend an act entitled "An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts," approved July 27, 1866; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to submit now some amendments, which I propose at the proper time to offer to the joint resolution of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] relative to the amendment of the Constitution in regard to the presidential office. I propose to strike out the proposed article of amendment submitted by that resolution, and in lieu of it to insert:

ARTICLE—.

SEC. 1. Each State may, in the month of January next, before the expiration of any presidential term, nominate to the two Houses of Congress one of its citizens having the constitutional qualifications for the office of President; and on the ensuing second Wednesday of February the two Houses shall meet in joint convention, and from the persons so nominated shall proceed viva voce to vote for President until one of them shall have received a majority of the votes of the whole number of members of both Houses of Congress, dropping, when necessary, those having the smallest number of votes on each succeeding ballot, until some one shall have received such majority, who shall be President of the United States for the ensuing term.

SEC. 2. After the President shall have been chosen, the two Houses shall proceed in joint convention in the same manner to elect a Vice President from the remaining persons that may have been nominated for the presidency.

SEC. 3. All persons hereafter elected to the presidency or to the vice presidency, and succeeding to the presidency, shall be thereupon forever ineligible to the presidency.

I move that an order be entered for the printing of this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LARCENY OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The House of Representatives has disagreed to our amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named and asked for a conference. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Messrs. HENDRICKS, HARRIS, and CRESWELL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 146) for the relief of Charles Clark, marshal of the United States for the district of Maine; and with an amendment the bill of the Senate (S. No. 435) for the relief of Alexander F. Pratt.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1168) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Almonson Eaton, receiver of public money for the land office at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin;

A bill (H. R. No. 1078) to amend section two, chapter one hundred and twenty-nine, of public acts of 1849.

A bill (H. R. No. 1170) for the relief of Colonel L. C. Houck, of Tennessee;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) for the relief of Thomas W. Fry, jr., late captain and acting quartermaster, Alton, Illinois; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) for the relief of James J. Hudnall.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1054) for the relief of Hiram Hedrick;

A bill (H. R. No. 1055) for the relief of John Morean, of Machias, New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 1056) for the relief of Lemuel Worster;

A bill (H. R. No. 1125) granting an additional pension to Samuel Downing, one of the last surviving soldiers of the revolutionary war;

A bill (H. R. No. 1146) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Fletcher;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 206) in relation to the pensions of widows of revolutionary soldiers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1052) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Clements.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope we shall go on with House bill No. 1143.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are but fifteen minutes of the morning hour left, and I hope the Senator from Oregon will allow me that time for the consideration of the bill providing for the election of a Congressional Printer. I think we can pass it in that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should have no objection if the bill would elicit no debate; but if there is to be debate upon it I shall insist on proceeding with the bill regularly before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not desire to speak more than five minutes on the bill to which I have called attention, and I do not suppose the friends of the bill desire to discuss it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I insist on going on with the bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The preamble recites that the pretended State governments of the late so-called confederate States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas, were set up without the authority of Congress and without the sanction of the people; and that those pretended governments afford no adequate protection for life or property, but countenance and encourage lawlessness and crime; and that it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in these so-called States, until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established.

The bill then proceeds to declare that these late so-called confederate States shall be divided into military districts and made subject to the military authority of the United States, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama, and Florida the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district; and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

The second section makes it the duty of the General of the Army to assign to the command of each of these districts an officer of the Army, not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Section three makes it the duty of each officer so assigned to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, anything in the constitution and laws of any of the so-called confederate States to the contrary notwithstanding; and all legislative or judicial proceedings or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of these military tribunals, and all interference by the pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under the act, shall be void and of no effect.

It is provided by section four that courts and judicial officers of the United States shall not issue writs of habeas corpus in behalf of persons in military custody, except in cases in which the person is held to answer only for a crime or crimes exclusively within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States within these military districts, and indictable therein, or unless some commissioned officer on duty in the district wherein the person is detained shall indorse upon the petition a statement certifying, upon honor, that he has knowledge or information as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged detention, and that he believes the same to be wrongful, and further, that he believes that the indorsed petition is preferred in good faith and in furtherance of justice, and not to hinder or delay the punishment of crime. All persons put under military arrest by virtue of the act are to be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment is to be inflicted.

The fifth section declares that no sentence of any military commission or tribunal authorized by the act affecting the life or liberty of any person shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district; and that the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by the act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I gave notice last night, at the suggestion of some members of the Senate, that I should propose an amendment to this bill; but as I am impressed with the necessity of its passage at this session, and have consulted with persons who know and advise me that any amendment to the bill will endanger if not absolutely defeat its passage, I have concluded not to present the amendment which I intended to propose, and I deem it my duty under the circumstances to oppose all amendments to this bill, because I think it is necessary that this bill should pass. Although it will not suit, I presume, the wishes or views of individuals, yet under the circumstances it is probably as near meeting the views of a majority as any bill that can be prepared.

If Senators who favor the passage of this bill will pardon the suggestion, I hope that it may be put forward with as little discussion as Senators may think advisable on the part of those who support the bill, and I shall press it to a vote as soon as practicable, and shall endeavor to secure its passage through the Senate before to-morrow night, or by to-morrow night at any rate.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the amendment proposed by the honorable member yesterday had been adopted by the Senate, or was now to be adopted by the Senate, it would make the bill very much less objectionable than it is to me. I should not have voted for it, even if that amendment had been adopted; but I am very desirous to do what I suppose would be done by the adoption of that amendment, to improve the bill. I therefore, if I am at liberty, offer that amendment myself, and on it call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, which was to insert as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects, and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion, or for felony at common law, and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection, and when the constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

Mr. STEWART. I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Oregon has changed his mind with regard to this amendment, and has not offered it as he proposed to do yesterday. The military bill without that, it seems to me, is an acknowledgment that after two years of discussion and earnest thought we are unable to reconstruct and are compelled to turn the matter over to the military. It seems to me that the people of the United States want and demand something more than a military government for the South. It seems to me that the emphatic vote that they gave last fall indicates that they desire that the programme which Congress agreed upon should be carried out. It seems to me that they desire and demand that there shall be some voting; that somebody in the South shall have the right to vote. I am still in favor of universal suffrage as soon as it can be obtained, and universal amnesty whenever it is practicable and advantageous. I am aware that the southern States do not stand in the same position that they did twelve months ago. I regret that we cannot do for them what we would have done for them then. But Congress did pass a certain constitutional amendment, and several Senators have stated upon this floor during this session that if that amendment had been adopted they would have regarded it as a finality. I myself wanted something more; I wanted impartial suffrage in the South. I do not believe that we can reconstruct in the South until the people of the South are invested with power there. The amendment to this bill which was proposed by the Senator from Oregon last night has been drawn with remarkable care. It embodies all that any one has heretofore demanded, and in order that it may be better understood I propose for one moment to call the attention of the Senate to this very concise and well drawn and comprehensive amendment. The first clause provides for the adoption of—

The constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress of the United States.

That constitutional amendment provides for all the guarantees we asked for last year. It did not and does not satisfy me on the question of suffrage; but it excluded from office a large class of rebels and provided for the security of the national debt; it provided for equal rights; it went a great way to accomplish the demands of the country, and has been emphatically indorsed. This amendment proposes that when that article shall have become a part of the Constitution—

And when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects—

This, without the further conditions, is a compliance with all the conditions that were demanded last year literally.

The amendment proceeds as follows:

And when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in rebellion, or for felony at common law.

This is an additional requirement which is fundamental, and which is more valuable than the entire constitutional amendment; for it places the power in the hands of the people. This is something that was not demanded last year. This amendment says to the people of the South, "You must go further; you must not only adopt the constitutional amendment, but in regard to suffrage you must make all men equal"—a great step; and it is one of the great guarantees. I have said before, and it is manifest to everybody, that we must either give to all men in the South the ballot or we must resort to the military. I have seen that for the last two years; and because we did not give the ballot, because we did not meet the issue last year squarely, we are now called upon to give them military protection. I know that one or the other is inevitable. I am willing to give them military rule until they will take the ballot.

I see no other course. The amendment further provides:

And when said Constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State as thus defined for ratification or rejection, and when the Constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution shall be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

Now, I submit to Senators, are you anxious to continue military law in any southern State after that State shall have complied with the conditions that you yourselves laid down last year, and shall have complied with the conditions that humanity makes now and ever has made, that all men shall be enfranchised? Do you want any more of the military? You say this military bill is only an experiment, it is only provisional, it is only to last for a short time. That has always been the history of military bills; they were always temporary in the beginning; but suppose the President of the United States hereafter, or the next President, if you please, should like the bill, and should veto your measure repealing it; or suppose a bare majority in one House of Congress should like it, then you could not repeal it. It may be years after you desire to get rid of it before you can do so. Now, I say while you use the military for temporary purposes, give the people of the South a chance to comply with all the requirements which you propose to make. If in the Blaine amendment (as it is called) there are not sufficient guarantees, not enough conditions, put in more, and make it sufficient. When you use the military, use it for the purpose of securing civil government, and say that it is your object to attain the civil government, and avow your purpose in using military force. Do not acknowledge that you are unequal to the task, and that after two years of consideration here you can do nothing but turn it over to the military because the question is too difficult for you. I say I am willing to meet this question; I am in favor of the constitutional amendment which Congress settled upon last year, although it did not then suit me in all respects. I am in favor of that now, and I am in favor of more. Since the South have refused to accept that I think we have a right to require more, and I now insist upon the additional guarantee of universal manhood suffrage.

Mr. HOWE. I rise to ask if the unfinished business of yesterday is not in order at this hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule the Chair thinks it is.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senator from Nevada be allowed to proceed and finish his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is the joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York.

Mr. HOWE. I did not understand the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I wish to move that the Senator from Nevada be permitted to proceed until he finishes his remarks.

Mr. HOWE. And that the special order be laid aside?

Mr. SPRAGUE. For that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood that the pending and all prior orders were postponed to take up House bill No. 1148.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the vote of the Senate during the morning hour; but this joint resolution, being the unfinished business of yesterday, was not then in order; and it was not postponed at that time by the vote of the Senate postponing all prior orders, for it was not then in order. According to the practice of the Senate, at the expiration of the morning hour the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I dislike very much to interpose, as I know the business which the Senator from Wisconsin has in charge, but I must insist that we continue the bill which is under discussion; and I make a motion now that the present order—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin give way to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOWE. I do not understand for what purpose I am asked to give way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That I may make a motion that the present order be postponed, and that we continue the consideration of House bill No. 1148.

OBER, NANSON AND COMPANY.

Mr. HOWE. No; I cannot give way for that motion. This joint resolution was in order last night. The Senate proceeded at nine o'clock in the evening to take it under consideration. It is a joint resolution which has received the assent of the House of Representatives. It is a joint resolution which the Committee on Claims of the Senate have recommended to the consideration of the Senate. Upon a vote of the Senate it was taken up last night at about nine o'clock. There were no great public measures then pressing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Allow me to suggest that I think the Senator is mistaken. The bill was moved by the Senator himself, and during its reading the Senator from Iowa moved to adjourn, and the motion was carried.

Mr. HOWE. And that is the joint resolution which is now before the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A private claim?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I thought the Senator was speaking about the ship-canal bill.

Mr. HOWE. Not at all. There were no great public measures then pressing upon the attention of the Senate. We had abundant time to consider this measure. The joint resolution, however, was no sooner read than the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] interposed a motion that the Senate adjourn, declaring that he did not intend to have the Senate spend its time hearing such cases as this. There was no opportunity of course to explain the resolution. There was no possibility of resisting the motion. The Chair, then occupied by a gentleman not now occupying it, declared that motion carried, and the Senate left in very much of a hurry.

Now, Mr. President, I do not like to rest contentedly under the imputation of urging the Senate to consider measures that are not fit to be heard, that are not proper even to be explained. It is a gross imputation upon me; it is a gross imputation upon the Committee on Claims which reported this resolution; it is a gross imputation upon the House of Representatives which has already agreed to this resolution.

Ober, Nanson & Co. are merchants doing business in the city of New York. So far as I know they are fair and respectable men. If they have ever committed any penitentiary offense they have either paid the penalty or they have been pardoned, for they are now doing business. They have petitioned, as under the Constitution of the United States they have a right to petition the Congress of the United States, to provide for paying them the amount of certain compound-interest notes issued by the Government, and which they undertook to transmit to New Orleans through the mails, and which were lost by the sinking of the vessel on which the mails were sent.

The Senator from Iowa remarked aside last night, as a justification for his motion, that they ought to have got their property insured. If the Senate would have waited a moment, would have listened to a word of explanation, they would have ascertained that Ober, Nanson & Co. did get their property insured. They would have ascertained by a very slight inspection of the papers that they were informed at the post office in New York that the New Orleans mail for that day was to be sent on the steamer United States; and they would have ascertained that a shipping gazette published in that city also informed the public of the same fact; and believing that the mails were to be forwarded on that steamer they procured a policy of insurance for those notes upon that boat; but on the same day, and after the insurance was obtained, and without notice to these shippers, the postmaster at New York, as he had an undoubted right to do so, altered his mind, and concluded to send the mails by the steamer Republic. The steamer Republic was lost; the mails were lost; all sunk at the bottom of the ocean. Neither the boat nor the mails nor an individual upon the boat has ever been recovered.

The testimony upon all these points seemed to the committee clear and conclusive, and the question submitted to the committee was whether the Government ought to make $60,000 out of that calamity or not. The numbers, letters, and dates of the notes are all given, identified by the sworn testimony of a notary public who made a minute transcript of the whole with a view to obtain this very policy of insurance which was obtained.

The resolution provides that the Government may take security against all loss. There is no possibility, therefore, of the Government losing anything, unless it be reckoned a loss for it to pay its debts. If these notes had been issued by the Senator from Iowa or any other Senator on this floor and had been lost in the same way, or if they had been issued by any banking company in the United States, they would have been paid, either voluntarily by the individual or the company, or they would have been paid upon compulsory process issued by a court of law; and they would have been paid because the law of the land enforces upon all companies and individuals just such conduct in just such contingencies. And I do not understand why the law of the United States should say that the individual must pay his notes, even though they are lost, and yet say the Government itself shall be exempt from such payment, notwithstanding the notes are lost in its own mails, forwarded by its own means of transportation, selected to suit its own pleasure.

So the committee did not think they were very dishonest in recommending this resolution to the consideration of the Senate. I have had the honor of a seat here for nearly six years; I am not aware that I have ever developed any strong or irresistible tendency for plundering the Treasury of the United States, and I supposed I could move the Senate to the consideration of a bill without engendering any alarming suspicions that the Treasury was about to be plundered. I did not suppose a motion of the kind submitted by me at the dictation of the Committee on Claims was to be a signal for scattering the Senate; and I have been obliged to take this opportunity, the first that was offered me by the rules of the Senate, to make this explanation and to clear my character from this imputation. Whether this explanation will induce the Senate to further consider the resolution this afternoon or not I cannot say. Whether it will induce them to assent to the passage of the resolution is not for me to know. The Senate is under no constitutional obligation to assent to a bill because it is recommended by the Committee on Claims; but I think there is a legal obligation resting on the Senate to hear a bill which comes from that committee or from any other committee when they have nothing else to do, which was the case last night. If the Committee on Claims has established such a character for recommending groundless claims upon the consideration of the Senate as has led to this apprehension, then it is the duty of the Senate to change the committee, and that work ought to be done at once. The Senate has no right to impose this labor, which is not a pleasant one, upon any of its members without paying to them the respect, when they have made a recommendation, of hearing the grounds upon which the recommendation has been made.

During this session I believe that committee has not called upon the Senate to assent to more than half a dozen claims out of over one hundred and forty on our Calendar. We have been obliged to turn away a great many suffering citizens of the United States whose claims we would have been glad to recommend if we felt we could do so in justice to the Treasury, not feeling that we were obliged to report against them; and I do not like to stand first between the Treasury and those petitioners before the committee, who ask us to indorse their claims, and when we do conclude to indorse one have an individual Senator by a motion to adjourn thrust himself between the committee and the Treasury. While we occupy this position I think we have a right to ask at the hands of the Senate the same consideration that other committees do.

I said I did not think I had developed any very strong tendency for plundering the Treasury. I do not know when I have been convicted of any such attempt. I have voted against a great many measures that I thought very unjust to the Treasury. I voted, without saying a word, against the proposition to take League Island under the fostering care of the Government of the United States, and to embark the national Treasury upon the somewhat formidable enterprise, as it seemed to me, of building it up above the river into which it is sunk and establishing a navy-yard there. I voted against it. I did not say a word against it. The debate I thought was ably conducted by others; but I thought that a very dangerous demand to make upon the nation. I think so mainly in view of two facts: first, that a board, constituted of some of the most distinguished naval officers we have in the service, protested against it; and I thought that was one reason why Congress should hesitate to take it. Another reason why I thought we ought to hesitate was because it was proposed to submit the propriety of taking this place to the vice-admiral of the Navy, to a lieutenant-general of the Army, and to another citizen of the United States, and that proposition was rejected, rejected under the lead of the Senator from Iowa. The Senate followed his lead, listened to his advocacy, and against all this testimony concluded to embark in that enterprise. I have not the information which enables me to say that it was not wise after all. But when a Senator, against such testimony as this, embarked the country upon such an enterprise as that, I think he can afford to sit in his seat a few minutes to hear what can be said in favor of paying those who claim to be public creditors, and who, if I know anything about the facts in this case or anything about the law of the land, are the creditors of the Government of the United States as much as the Senator from Iowa is the creditor of any man whose note he ever held in his life or holds now.

Mr. President, I have said what I have to clear myself of the imputation thrown out last night. I was obliged to take this opportunity to say it. The Senate would accord me no other opportunity to say it. I should be glad to have the Senate consider and pass this joint resolution now. I know that when I relinquish the floor it will be at the option of any Senator to move to postpone it and proceed with the consideration of the measure which was taken up in the morning hour. Perhaps the Senate will feel bound to do so; but when they thrust such measures as this aside at a time when they have nothing to do, I think they are bound to give very conclusive reasons for proceeding to the consideration of any other measure at the expense of this.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat, whether the Government securities for which this claim is made were destroyed?

Mr. HOWE. They were sunk in the bottom of the ocean, in the United States mail locked up in the steward's room of the steamer Republic. Everything on the boat went down and has been there ever since.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then there is no probability that they are in existence at all?

Mr. HOWE. No human possibility of their being in existence. The postmaster swears that nothing of the mails has been recovered.

Mr. GRIMES. So far as the lecture of the Senator from Wisconsin is designed for me, I have simply to say this: upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. LANE], last evening was assigned for the consideration of pension bills; I came here with about a dozen or at any rate not exceeding fifteen other Senators, and sat until nine o'clock transacting that kind of business. The Senator from Wisconsin got one or two bills passed of minor importance, and then came this bill, which I was satisfied would be a contested one. I have given not so much attention to the subject as the Senator from Wisconsin, but I have always voted against paying claims of this sort; and as I was going to call for the yeas and nays I knew the bill must go over as a matter of course. I thought that the best way was to adjourn so that the whole question could come up before the Senate when there should be a quorum present, when we might have the benefit of the report and the whole argument of the Senator, together with the bill at the same time. I therefore made the motion to adjourn.

As to the imputation that was thrown out, I do not know where it was. I did not say anything that I know of except simply to move an adjournment, and I was surprised that a majority of those present, according to the decision of the Chair, voted in favor of it. I intended no reflection upon the Senator from Wisconsin and I regret exceedingly that he imagines that I did. I threw out no imputation on him. On the case as I understood it, and as I have understood all these cases before, I should have voted against him and should have felt it my duty to call for the yeas and nays, and that would have been the end of the case for last night, and then we should have the debate split up into two different sessions in place of having it all in one.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator is correct in saying that we had sat here listening to bills presented by the Committee on Pensions, with the Senate constituted just as it was when the Senate agreed to proceed to the consideration of this joint resolution. It is true the Senate had also considered and passed one bill reported by the Committee on Claims, which was to accord a year's pay to a private soldier from New Hampshire retained in the military service for a year after he had been in fact mustered out. Then the Senate agreed to take this joint resolution under consideration. The joint resolution was read. The Senator from Iowa had an undoubted right to move an adjournment. If he had stated any such reasons for moving the adjournment as he has now stated, I should not have felt that I was reflected upon or that the committee was reflected upon; but he offered no reason whatever to the Senate for moving an adjournment. He said by a side remark that he did not intend the Senate to sit here and hear such cases. I thought I knew as much what the case was as he could know, and I thought he had no right to impute to me a purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to cases that were not fit to be heard.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senator chooses to drag in before the face of the Senate and the country any side remarks he may have accidentally heard me make to another Senator, it is a matter of taste. He has a right to indulge in that if he chooses. He has a right furthermore to indulge in criticisms as to my vote and my course on the League Island question if he chooses. He has a right to take offense at my exercise of my constitutional privilege to move an adjournment when I do not think the Senate as constituted at the moment is prepared for the consideration of a question involving such issues as I thought were involved in this case, as to whether we shall pay a large sum of money for Treasury notes lost, a question that involves a great many issues, I think, and a large amount of money. Certainly, as I said before, I had no reason to apprehend that the Senator was influenced by any improper considerations, or that his committee had made a report which they believed to be wrong. I differed with them as to the principle upon which the resolution was predicated, and I did not think the Senate was prepared to consider it; and for that reason simply I made a motion to adjourn. I have nothing further to say, except that under similar circumstances I should do the same thing again.

Mr. HOWE. One further word. The Senator complains of my taking notice of a side remark. When a gentleman makes a remark which is a reflection upon my public or private course I do not feel under any constitutional obligation to wait for him to repeat it on the floor of the Senate. If he makes it in my hearing I do not think I am called upon to stop up my ears so as not to hear it. All I know about it is the remark was made, made as an interpretation of his motion and as a statement of the reasons upon which he based his motion. I could not help hearing it; I could not help feeling it; I am very sorry—no, I am glad to say, I could not help resenting it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I find that this matter is to lead to discussion. I move, therefore, to postpone this joint resolution and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1143.

Mr. HOWE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is the question on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to take up his joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon to postpone the present and all prior orders, the present order being joint resolution No. 173, for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York, and proceed to the consideration of the bill on which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was upon the floor at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would very reluctantly interrupt the Senator from Nevada in his argument, because it is disagreeable thus to be interrupted of course; but as this joint resolution was the order of business at one o'clock, and as I suppose the discussion of it is substantially through, it seems to me we might as well dispose of it. If I understand the resolution I shall give it my support, and do that upon a principle that I think was established by the Committee on Claims when I had the honor of being a member of that committee. It is this: that when Government securities are destroyed by any accident, and they cannot come up in any form against the Government, it is right for the Government to issue new securities to the party who shall prove that he was the owner of the lost or destroyed instruments. I supported that then, and will support this measure now, on the well-known principle that a man is not discharged from his obligation simply because it is lost or destroyed, and I think the same principle applies well to a Government. If an individual be sued upon his promissory note or bill of exchange, or an insurance company upon its policy, and the averment in the declaration be that the instrument sued upon is lost, and that be proved, of course there is a recovery. The loss of the instrument does not destroy it, at any rate in the absence of any connivance on the part of the owner in its loss or destruction. I think we might as well dispose of the joint resolution as it will take but very little time.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the Senator from Oregon to withdraw the motion to postpone, and let us take a vote on the measure now before us.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That will be debated necessarily.

Mr. CONNESS. I apprehend it will not be debated. It is a measure that comes from a committee after having been thoroughly examined, in regard to which there cannot be much doubt; and since it has been made a question of here, I hope we shall vote upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is nothing but a private claim.

Mr. CONNESS. If it is nothing but a private claim, there is now involved in it the consideration of whether the chairman of one of the standing committees of the Senate, after his committee has fully investigated a question, shall have the ear and attention of the Senate for a few minutes or not; and I hope, in that view of the case, we shall come to a vote on it. I hope the Senator from Oregon will withdraw his motion for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am satisfied that this bill cannot pass the Senate without discussion. If it could, if the Senate would at once proceed to take a vote upon it, I perhaps should be willing to give way.

Mr. CONNESS. Withdraw your motion and let us see.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot consent to withdraw the motion I have made. I am on the Committee on Claims, and should be glad to see the joint resolution passed; but under the circumstances I must insist upon my motion. The Senate can vote it down if they see proper.

Mr. ANTHONY. Owing to this misunderstanding, I think we ought to give the Senator from Wisconsin an opportunity to have a vote on his resolution. If, in the course of half an hour the discussion goes on, I will then vote with the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, there were—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Creswell, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cattell, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fogg, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Patterson, Ross, Saulsbury, and Van Winkle—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Edmunds, Guthrie, Lane, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Stewart, and Willey—9.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the report in this case read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted to the House of Representatives from the Committee of Claims of that body by Mr. W. B. WASHBURN.

The Committee of Claims, to whom were referred the petition and papers of Robert H. Ober, of New York city, submit the following report:

The petitioner claims to be a citizen of the United States, a resident of the city of New York, and a member of the commercial firm doing business in said city under the firm name of Ober, Nanson & Co., and in the city of New Orleans under the firm name of Ober, Atwater & Co.; that on the 18th of October, 1865, Ober, Nanson & Co. had occasion to remit $60,000 to their house in New Orleans to make payment for cotton purchased there. In order to make said remittance, the petitioner drew from the National Bank of the Republic in the city of New York $60,000 in compound-interest notes of the United States of the denomination of fifty dollars each, as follows: $5,000 letter D, Nos. 272801 to 272900 inclusive; $5,000 letter A, Nos. 272901 to 273000 inclusive; $5,000 letter C, Nos. 270801 to 270900 inclusive; $5,000 letter A, Nos. 268601 to 268700 inclusive; $5,000 letter C, Nos. 268801 to 268900 inclusive; $5,000 letter C, Nos. 275501 to 275600 inclusive; $5,000 letter D, Nos. 275001 to 275100 inclusive; $5,000 letter C, Nos. 275301 to 275400 inclusive; $5,000 letter D, Nos. 276201 to 276300 inclusive; $5,000 letter A, Nos. 275601 to 275700 inclusive; $5,000 letter A, Nos. 275901 to 276000 inclusive; and placed the said notes in the hands of James W. Hale, notary public of the city of New York, who sealed up the same in a package with his official seal, which package was addressed to "Ober, Atwater & Co., New Orleans, Louisiana," and was delivered to the postmaster of New York, and duly registered and receipted for by that officer, to be dispatched in the United States mail to its destination; that the mails containing said package were dispatched by the steamer Republic, which was lost at sea at a point 140 miles east of Savannah, Georgia, on the 25th of October following, as appears by the affidavits of Edward Young, Sarsfield E. Young, and William H. O. Moorhouse, captain, mate, and purser of the said steamship, respectively. No part of the mails were saved, nor have any part thereof been since recovered, so far as is known to the postmaster of New York, as appears by his certificate in writing, dated the 11th of January last.

The following is an analysis of the evidence: James W. Hale, notary public, 54 Wall street, New York, certifies, under his official seal, that on the 13th of October, 1865, he placed in a parcel, sealed with his official seal, $60,000 in fifty-dollar United States compound-interest notes, all dated September 1, 1865, which was directed to "Ober, Atwater & Co., New Orleans, Louisiana." This certificate describes the notes by letters and numbers corresponding with the description in the petition. The petitioner's affidavit, sworn to before T. E. Stillman, notary public, New York city, asserts that he is a member of the commercial firm of Ober, Nanson & Co., of New York, and of Ober, Atwater & Co., New Orleans; that on the 18th day of October, 1865, the New York desired to remit to the New Orleans house $60,000, to pay for cotton purchased there; that he drew from the "National Bank of the Republic" in New York city $60,000 in compound-interest notes of the United States, each dated September 1, 1865, and each note of the denomination of fifty dollars and of the numbers designated in the certificate of James W. Hale, notary public; that he caused said notes to be placed in a parcel by said notary public, sealed with his official seal, which was then directed to Ober, Atwater & Co., New Orleans, and was by him delivered at and deposited in the New York post office, to be carried in the United States mails to New Orleans; that the said parcel was duly registered at the post office; that the said mail containing said letter was dispatched by the steamer Republic, which was lost at sea October 25, 1865. The receipt attached to his affidavit is the original receipt of the New York postmaster for said letter, and that the certificate thereto attached is the certificate of said postmaster as to the registry of said letter, the dispatch of the mail containing said letter, and the loss and non-delivery thereof.

The receipt referred to in the foregoing affidavit is as follows:

No. 1839—Registered letter.

POST OFFICE, NEW YORK, October 18, 1865.

Received of Ober, Nanson & Co., a letter addressed to Ober, Atwater & Co., New Orleans, Louisiana. (To which is printed the name of)

JAMES KELLEY, Postmaster.

The certificate referred to in Mr. Ober's affidavit is dated at the post office, New York, January 11, 1866, signed by James Kelley, postmaster, and certifies that a letter directed to Ober, Atwater & Co., New Orleans, Louisiana, was received in this office October 18, 1865, from Messrs. Ober, Nanson & Co., was registered and dispatched in the mail forwarded the same day per steamer Republic, which was lost at sea, no part of the mail, so far as he knew, ever having been recovered.

Affidavits of E. Young, master and commander of the steamship Republic; of Sarsfield E. Young, chief officer or mate, and of William H. O. Moorhouse, purser of the same, taken before notaries public, establish the following facts: that said vessel "sailed from New York for New Orleans on the 19th of October, 1865, having on board the United States mails; that on the 24th of October, 1865, during a severe gale of wind, the vessel sprung a leak, which continued to gain upon her until about four o'clock p.m. of the day following, when she went down at a point about one hundred and forty miles east of Savannah, Georgia, and nothing was saved on board the ship except the lives of the passengers, who were taken off in the vessel's boats and upon a raft made for that purpose; that the mails remained on board the vessel locked up between decks against the bulkhead of the ladies' cabin, and at the time the vessel went down were lost with their contents in the sea.

The affidavits of Walter Kelley and James Young, of the city of New York, and of J. B. Kelly in the post office having charge of registered letters, establish clearly that said package directed to Ober, Nanson & Co.

was placed in the mail-bag for New Orleans, which was delivered on board the steamer Republic.

The committee are of opinion that the evidence leaves no reasonable doubt in regard to the destruction of the notes described in the petition. As the securities supposed to be destroyed are in the nature of bank notes, having been issued for circulation, the committee unanimously agree that it would be unwise and unsafe to order duplicates to be issued, no matter how clear and conclusive the evidence of destruction may be.

This, it is hoped, will be a satisfactory conclusion, when it is remembered that all compound-interest notes have but three years to run from the date thereof.

As a reason why extreme caution should be exercised in issuing duplicates for any security alleged to have been destroyed, the committee deem it best to inform the House that there have been frequent efforts made to defraud the Government of large sums under the false pretense of the destruction of bonds, Treasury notes, and other certificates of indebtedness.

It is, therefore, considered expedient, in regard to compound-interest notes alleged to have been destroyed, to postpone the actual payment to parties until after their maturity, which, at furthest, must be less than three years. After the maturity of such notes, if time confirms the evidence of destruction by failing to produce the notes, the Secretary of the Treasury, it is believed, will have ample authority to pay the same to the proper parties upon the production of satisfactory evidence of destruction, and requiring a sufficient bond of indemnity against their future presentation.

In view of the large amount involved in the present application, and of the exceedingly clear and irrefragable proof of destruction, the committee report a joint resolution expressly authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the notes within six months after their maturity, provided that no proof of their existence shall hereafter be presented, and provided also that a sufficient bond of indemnity shall be given by the parties before payment is made.

This resolution is reported not because it is deemed absolutely necessary to enable the Secretary to do what it authorizes, but because it may enable the claimants to obtain credit in carrying on their business while the notes are maturing, without which credit it is believed they will be seriously embarrassed by reason of their loss aforesaid; and the committee do not regard this as a precedent for recommending relief in cases of like character.

Mr. GRIMES. If I may be permitted to make an inquiry or two in regard to a matter of this kind, I should like to know, in the first place, whether or not this bill is predicated upon the idea that the United States are underwriters and responsible for all property that is sent through the mails in a registered letter. I suppose there cannot be any doubt as to the loss of this property. Then I should like to know whether this, being lawful money of the United States, made so by an act of Congress, taking the place of gold, if it had been actual gold bearing the effigy and superscription of our nation, and sunk in the steamship Republic, as these notes were sunk, should we be responsible to the owners of that gold, and would there not be precisely the same reason for holding the Government responsible in that case that there is in this? As to the conclusion of the report, that this is not to be regarded as a precedent for future cases, I have only to say that I presume everybody knows it will be regarded as a precedent; and if we make an allowance to this rich firm for their $60,000, we must expect hereafter to have claims for the $5,000 and the $10,000 and the $20,000 of notes lost and destroyed.

Mr. COWAN. I wish to ask the honorable Senator whether these very notes that were lost were not payable in actual money by the Government. The case differs entirely from the loss of gold in that respect. Gold carries with it its intrinsic value, but United States notes are a promise on the part of the Government to pay in that other and actual money of the Government. There is a distinction to be taken as well as to be noted in this case.

Mr. HOWE. In reply to the Senator from Iowa, that so far as my own individual opinions are concerned I had no idea that the Government stood in the attitude of an insurer. The Government simply stands in the character of a promisor. The Government has promised to pay the holders of these notes so much money. It has agreed, to be sure, that in the mean time, for domestic purposes, they shall answer the character of money, but when the time comes around the Government has promised to pay the amount of these notes in money, that which the world recognizes to be money. The written evidences of that promise are lost now beneath the ocean, and we simply propose to put the Government in the condition in which every banker and every individual would be whose notes were in the same position.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that an order be entered for the printing of House bill No. 344, as amended, the Niagara ship-canal bill. The motion was not agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate now take up again House bill No. 1143.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. JOHNSON.

Mr. STEWART. When I was cut off by the termination of the morning hour I was making some remarks with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, known as the Blaine amendment. I was saying that this amendment is in perfect harmony with the action of this Congress at its last session. It is to be regretted that the South did not accept the terms proposed in the constitutional amendment then submitted by Congress. It is to be regretted that they did not only not accede to that, but that they did not go forward and proceed to do that which it was manifestly their duty in the name of humanity—extend the right of suffrage to all men. It is to be regretted that they have not done that. It is to be regretted that in the South there is so little loyalty. It is to be regretted that Union men are not safe there. It is to be regretted that the southern people will not come in and support the cause of the Union and the cause of liberty and submit in good faith to the verdict of the war. But because they have not done that, and it has become necessary for us to apply a remedy, shall we therefore forget all the teachings of the past and pass a bill to create a permanent military government? You say it is but temporary; I wish, I hope that it may be temporary; but while I am willing to pass this bill, and while I am willing to subject these people to this fearful ordeal that they have brought upon themselves, I am anxious at the same time to point to them a road of escaping it. I ask Senators to look at the terms of this bill and see what an ordeal the people in the South must pass through under its provisions.

I have become convinced that something of the kind is necessary preliminary to any reconstruction, but I am not convinced that it is necessary to pass such a bill now and trust to future legislation to open a road for escape. The refusal of a bare majority in one House of Congress, or the refusal to assent on the part of the President, or any accident or casualty whatever, may result in a failure to get proper legislation to relieve them, and leave upon your statute book this as a permanent, lasting law. The terms of this bill are fearful to contemplate as a permanent system. If the South must be permanently governed by this bill there is an end of republican government, for there is no republican government in this bill. The only justification for such a measure is immediate and pressing necessity. The only excuse is that we hold out to them at the same time a means of escape, and say to them, "Whenever you will adopt republican principles, whenever you will do justice to all men, we will relieve you from the pains and penalties inflicted by this military bill."

I wish now to call the attention of Senators to the provisions of the bill. The first section divides the insurrectionary States into military districts; the second provides for assigning to these districts by the General commanding the Army of appropriate military officers. The third section makes it the duty of each officer thus assigned—

To protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace, and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or when, in his judgment, it may be necessary for the trial of an offender, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, anything in the constitution and laws of the so-called confederate States to the contrary notwithstanding; and all legislative or judicial proceedings or processes to prevent or control the proceedings of said military tribunals, and all interference by said pretended State governments with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be void and of no effect.

The military commander can organize at his discretion military commissions. Suppose that the military commander is not a great and good man, suppose he has prejudices and passions like other men; suppose he allows those prejudices and passions to control his action, and suppose the innocent are punished. There are no constraints of law upon him; his will is the law. Suppose that he, being a mortal and liable to err, punishes the innocent with the guilty; suppose the tyrant who is thus enthroned is not perfectly just, and the innocent suffer with the guilty, how will Senators under such circumstances excuse themselves before their God and their country? Can they do so by saying that a future Congress may remedy it; that some other legislation may be had? No, that will not do. If you vote for this bill you must put in it your excuse. Without a reason appearing in the bill, and without a road open to these people to escape, I never will vote for the bill, though I stand alone, though all the world beside vote for it. I never will vote to place any people permanently under military rule. I never will vote for any one man to have absolute control of life and liberty and property in any of these States. I would not trust it to myself. I dare not trust myself with such power. I would only trust it to any man in great emergencies. I believe such an emergency does now exist in the South. I believe that temporarily we must have the strong arm of the military for protection; but while I believe that, I believe that these people should have a road open to escape. I believe it is my duty to say to them, "Whenever you will do right, whenever you will do justice, you shall receive mercy."

What more do Senators want, what more can they ask than that the South shall adopt the constitutional amendment, which contains many excellent provisions, which provides for the rights of man, which provides for the repudiation of the rebel debt, which provides for the payment of the Federal debt, which excludes from office all those who have taken an oath to support the Constitution and have subsequently gone into rebellion. What more do you want in addition to that? I want but one more thing, I want suffrage extended to all men, so that each man, high and low, shall have the ballot in his hand for his own protection. The negro needs it more than the white man. The original theory of extending the franchise was that by that means the poor man could protect himself against the powerful; and the poorer a man is, the weaker he is, the more he needs protection. The theory that only the wise and the great and the powerful shall vote is the theory of despotism. The theory of our Government is that all men have an equal right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. When you take that from them, you take from them their rights under our Government. I say that I do want something more than the constitutional amendment. Indeed, it contains some things that I do not care much about. I do not care much about the exclusion from office for which it provides, and I think we shall take that back after awhile; but I demand security for the future, and I demand the ballot for all, so that the black man may protect himself. This amendment provides for that. It provides for those who want the constitutional amendment only, and it provides also for those who want humanity protected by the ballot. When the South have done that I ask Senators what more do you want? I ask Senators, when the South have done this, will you continue military rule over them, and subject them to the caprice of some little officer who may not be perfect in wisdom and judgment? I would not trust a modification of this law to any future Congress, and therefore I want the two things to go together. There must be a road of escape or I cannot vote for this military bill.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "common law," in the twelfth line, these words:

And have provided by constitution and laws that all citizens of the United States shall equally possess the right to pursue all lawful avocations and business, to receive the equal benefits of the public schools, and to have the equal protection of all the rights of citizens of the United States in said States.

I am disposed, sir, to vote for this bill as it came from the House of Representatives without amendment; but if it is to be amended at all I desire that the amendment I have offered shall be adopted. The original amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland provides that on the adoption by any of the southern States of the constitutional amendment and the extension of suffrage by the adoption of the principle of manhood suffrage, such as we have established in this District, without qualification, and when it shall have amended its constitution to conform to the Constitution and laws of the United States, its representatives who can take the prescribed oath shall be admitted to their seats in Congress, and that then this bill shall cease to be effective in such State. I simply propose to add this provision that the State shall also provide that all citizens of the United States within its limits shall have the right to pursue all the avocations and business of life; that they shall have the equal benefits of the public schools, and that they shall have the equal protection of the laws. I believe this provision ought to be adopted. We have as much right to ask this as we have to ask the other conditions contained in the amendment of the Senator from Maryland. We have a right to ask for everything that is requisite to put every human being in those States upon a footing of equality under the protection of equal laws.

I believe, Mr. President, that the wisest thing would be to pass this bill just as it came from the House, and then to pass the Louisiana bill, and then to pass a resolution reciting the fact that the constitutional amendment has been adopted by a sufficient number of States, and providing that those States in rebellion which will assent to the constitutional amendment, change their constitutions and laws in conformity with its requirements, give manhood suffrage, and put all its citizens, without distinction of color or race, under the equal protection of the laws so that they may engage in all the avocations of life, have the benefits of the public schools, and stand on the same ground with all others, protected by just, humane, and equal laws, shall be thereupon entitled to representation in Congress by those who can take the prescribed oath. In such a resolution as that following this legislation we can declare, if we wish to do so, that this act shall cease to operate in any State which adopts that course. Besides, if we pass this act now we can amend it at any time hereafter, but it seems to me dangerous to send it back to the House of Representatives at this stage of the session, and dangerous to send the Louisiana bill back. I think we ought to pass those bills and pass them immediately. They will be, like the constitutional amendment, great steps, great means to the final adjustment and settlement of this whole question.

Sir, universal manhood suffrage has ceased to be a contested issue in America. Although it is not yet incorporated into constitutions and laws, it is just as much an achieved fact in the ten rebel States as it is in the District of Columbia, the State of Tennessee, or the Territories. The battle of manhood suffrage is fought and won; all we have to do now is to provide for the formal incorporation of that principle into constitutions and laws.

Mr. STEWART. I am afraid to pass this bill without having something of that kind in it.

Mr. WILSON. I do not believe there will be much further opposition from any quarter to universal manhood suffrage. That great battle is fought and won, and the only remaining question is as to the mode of doing it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the merits of the bill, particularly at this time; I do not know that I shall feel it my duty to do so during the debate in this body; but I wish to say a few words on the subject of this amendment, and what I shall say will have as much application to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts as to that offered by the Senator from Maryland.

I think the amendment entirely incompatible with the scheme and provisions of the bill itself, and that gentlemen will discover that incompatibility on looking into it. The principle upon which the bill proceeds is the principle for which I have all along contended, that the rebel States, as communities, have been conquered by the arms of the United States in the prosecution of the war which resulted in the suppression of the rebellion waged by those States. I hold that, subject to the Constitution of the United States and to the duty of ultimately restoring the rebel States to their former standing under the Constitution, the Government of the United States has the same power in reference to those conquered communities as it would have had they been foreign territory.

Let me not be misunderstood, sir. I do not say that the Government of the United States has precisely the same authority over the rebel States which it would have in reference to conquered foreign territory; but we hold them by the sword and by the right of conquest; yet we hold them in a fiduciary capacity, and the trust imposed upon the Government is ultimately and in our own good time, as Congress shall judge most fit and expedient in reference to the public interest, to restore them to the enjoyment of all their former rights as members of the Union. But at present we hold them as conquered country. The governments which have been established there under the imperial edicts of the Executive have all depended for their vitality and force upon the military power of the United States; and it cannot be denied to-day that all these bogus governments in the rebel States—I call them bogus only in the sense of their being unconstitutional—rest upon the military edicts of the President of the United States, so far as they have any foundation and operation. I hold further, that in assuming to establish governments, in assuming to appoint provisional governors, and to set in motion the machinery of these State governments, a most unparalleled usurpation has been committed upon the authority of Congress, delegated plainly by the Constitution to Congress, to whom and to whom only belongs the right and the power of reconstructing, so to speak, and readmitting these States to the enjoyment of their rights as such. We hold these countries as military conquests. We have won them by our arms. We subdued the rebel military forces, have disarmed them, and at least half a million men now residing in these rebel States are our prisoners of war to-day, having been captured and paroled, sent home upon their parole d'honneur. The bill before us proposes to regulate this military occupation by the appointment of several major generals, each one to his proper department, who is authorized and required to protect all persons in their rights of person and of property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace and other criminals. It will be seen that the bill itself recognizes the military authority of the United States over these countries. It recognizes the right and the duty of Congress to provide for their military government, for the protection of persons and property, and the preservation of any vestige of liberty that may remain among them. If we have the power thus to act in the rebel States, then these so-called States themselves are not now invested with State rights and the power of State legislation. The amendment of the honorable member from Maryland clearly recognizes the present existence of this power of State legislation in them.

It declares that "when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States," &c. That may be done, it is very true, without consulting the rebel States; it is possible that it may become a part of the Constitution without the votes of the rebel States; and here suffer me to remark that I do believe most sincerely that it is the right of three fourths of the loyal States remaining in the Union at any time to amend the Constitution, and that such amendment would be valid as an amendment, and that it is not necessary in amending the Constitution that we should take into the account the votes of the rebel States.

The amendment goes on: "and when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its consent to the same and conformed its constitution and laws thereto," clearly recognizing these confederate States as being invested with full authority to act as States in the most solemn proceeding in which a State can act, the ratification or rejection of the amendment of the Constitution, and recognizing those States as competent to amend their own constitutions without any reference to us, indeed recognizing them as at present vested with all the State rights pertaining to loyal States under the Constitution. Now, sir, if these States are thus invested with State authority, if they can legislate as States, if they can amend their constitutions as States, if they can change their legislation so as to conform, in the language of this amendment, to the amendment of the Constitution suggested at the last session, then they can adopt any other kind of State legislation which they may see fit; then they are indeed sovereign States, and in the language of Mr. Seward, in his Cooper Institute speech of the 22d of February, 1866, they are as fully and completely invested with State authority as the Legislature of the State of New York then in session. Suppose the Legislatures of these States during the reign of this military power which we propose to send among them should see fit to enact laws utterly inconsistent with its continuance among them, is it not perfectly plain that such State legislation would produce an immediate and bloody conflict with the military authorities we send there? We say in our act that the military commanders shall govern these States so and so. The Legislature of one of these States says the contrary: "The people of this State shall not be governed so and so;" and they claim to act in virtue of their "State sovereignty." This must inevitably produce a collision between the Federal military authorities and the State authorities which we thus recognize by this amendment. Sir, the two things do not consist; they are incompatible with one another; and if we assume to permit the exercise of the two powers, the military and the civil, the Federal military and the State civil power, we shall produce, and within a very short time in my opinion, a bloody conflict, which it will demand the employment of the superior forces of the Government to bring to a close. If, therefore, we are to govern these States by military power, let us say so plainly, and not in the same bill insidiously and deceitfully grant civil powers to the States themselves which we propose to rule by the sword.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not propose to take any time in discussing this amendment or the bill itself. I stated the reasons why I thought it not advisable at this time to amend this bill, and I think the Senate is entirely familiar with such reasons, considering the time and the circumstances in which we are placed. This bill contemplates future action by Congress, and proceeds upon the assumption that the measure is altogether a temporary measure; and therefore there is no occasion for the Senator from Nevada to be so much troubled about the permanency of military governments in the South. Why, sir, the very preamble of this bill declares that "it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said so-called States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established." This bill is proposed simply to enforce good order in these so-called States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established; but the argument proceeds upon the assumption that this is the end of all legislation, that if this bill be passed Congress has no power to make any subsequent laws in reference to these southern States. Now, sir, instead of loading down this bill with the various amendments proposed, it seems to me true policy on the part of the friends of the measure would indicate that this bill should be passed, and then subsequent bills or resolutions may be passed by Congress indicating, if desirable, that this is altogether a temporary measure. This amendment could be put in the shape of a joint resolution and passed separately after this bill shall have been disposed of. That could be done, and that course would not endanger the bill; but I am assured and feel confident that to amend the bill at this time and send it back to the House of Representatives would eventuate in its defeat. It is simply upon that ground that I oppose those amendments without undertaking to discuss them at this time.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. I understood him yesterday evening to admit that the bill as it came from the House should be amended. This morning he thinks it should not be amended for the single reason that, if it is amended, it may not pass the House of Representatives again. I understand him now to say that the defect in the bill, supposing there to be any defect, can be cured by the passage of a new bill or a joint resolution after this shall have been passed. Is there any reason to suppose that we can pass a new bill or joint resolution through this body and send it to the other House and have it passed there more easily than we can now amend this bill? Is it any more easy to pass a new bill entirely through both Houses than it is to amend this bill and send it back to the other House for concurrence?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can answer the Senator's question in this way: when this bill is passed by Congress, the President has ten days time in which to determine whether he will veto the bill or not; and if vetoed it will have to be repassed by a two-thirds vote of both Houses in order to become a law. This proposed amendment, as I understand, is only valuable to indicate on the part of Congress that this measure is altogether a temporary measure, and that it only contemplates the existence of this military authority until loyal and republican State governments can be established.

If this bill becomes a law, if it shall be passed at this time without amendment and sent to the President, a joint resolution can then be passed by both bodies of Congress embodying substantially what this amendment contains, and there is no reason to suppose that the President of the United States would veto that joint resolution simply declaring that this military authority in the South is altogether temporary, and is only intended to operate until certain events transpire; but if he should veto it it would make very little difference, because it is not particularly operative at this time; it is simply a declaration on the part of Congress that at some future time, if those States will accede to certain conditions, this military authority shall cease. If the President should take the responsibility of vetoing a measure of that kind, Congress would be placed in a wretched condition before the country, and nobody could object to this policy on the ground that Congress intended that it should be a permanent policy for the southern States.

This amendment, I say, will have no immediate operation if put into this bill. It is simply intended as a declaration on the part of Congress that at some future time, if these States will accede to the conditions embraced in the amendment, this military authority shall cease. It is necessary, in my judgment, that some bill should be passed for the protection of the loyal people of the southern States. That is a subject which I think has been too long overlooked. The measure ought to be an efficient measure, one that will produce some effect. You may theorize as much as you please; but until you create a power that can act; and place it where it will be efficient, just so long these people will be without the necessary protection.

Mr. STEWART. This amendment does do something more than indicate; it declares that when these people have complied with all we require of them they may be represented. That is an important declaration, and it requires no further legislation. I cannot understand why the Senator from Oregon has changed his mind since he proposed to offer this very good amendment last night. I understand it is because he has been advised by members of the other House that if we put this very proper amendment on the bill it cannot be passed in that House. If the bill cannot be passed by the House in a proper shape, I ask what hope is there to get through any provision hereafter that will relieve these people from military law, save this nation from military despotism, if you will not indicate it in this bill? It is not true that our friends in the House are opposed to this amendment. On a vote upon this very proposition sixty-nine members of the House voted for this amendment, and it was only defeated by a coalition between the friends of extreme measures and the Democrats. The great body of the Union members of the House voted for this same amendment; and when the Senate shall sanction it, tell me not that the House will refuse to adopt it. It was voted for in the House by the great body of Union members. It is true that some did not vote at all, because the whip and lash were a little too severe; but sixty-nine Union men did vote for it. The Democrats, on the contrary, voted against the amendment, and then against the bill, showing that their effort was to make it a bad bill.

Now, the Senator from Michigan says we have the constitutional power to pass this bill. I am not discussing the constitutional question involved in the measure. I suppose we have the constitutional right and constitutional power to treat these States as conquered provinces. I do not doubt that, because I believe we have the power to do about as we please with them. I believe when they fell into our hands we were controlled by no law except the general laws of humanity and the laws of war and of nations with regard to them. It was in our power to do with them pretty much as we pleased. We might have treated them as subjugated provinces if we felt so disposed. But after this length of time is it policy, is it humanity, to place over eight million people six or eight or ten military commanders with absolute power of life and death?

When we are passing the bill it is said we cannot put a limit to it. Sir, if we cannot put a limit to it now, when can we? I ask if a free Government was ever usurped except under the plea of necessity for temporary purposes? I ask if the freedom of any people was ever lost except upon this plea? I ask if any tyrant ever set up his throne except in the name of justice and necessity? Did any one when he assumed tyrannical authority declare that it should be permanent? No, he said it should be only temporary. Now, while I am willing to assert this authority, while I am willing to hold these southern States in iron hands till they shall do right, I want to place a limit upon my own power. I would not trust myself with absolute power; I will not trust another; and I want to say in this very bill "thus far will I go and no farther." When the bill is passed I may love this power too well to surrender it.

I say, then, place the limit in this bill; say to these people, "Whenever you comply with the demands of the loyal masses of the North, whenever you comply with the dictates of humanity, whenever you make your institutions correspond with the principles of the Declaration of Independence, we will then recognize you as free communities, and remove from you the iron hand which the necessity of the case has made us place upon you, unfortunate rebels. We will hold that hand upon you until you learn to do good and cease to do evil, till you stop your New Orleans riots, till you cease to persecute Union men, till you acknowledge the rights of all men; and when that is done we will release it at once, and we will not hold it there an hour afterward." I do not want any man to have the power by a veto to prevent our repealing this bill, or to have a capricious majority in either House enabled to hold this power on these people one moment longer than is necessary. It is easier to exercise power than to relinquish it. Let us place the bound about it ourselves; let us make a limit for ourselves. If they continue rebellious we can remove that limit if necessary, because it will be only a congressional act, subject to our power. I am only willing now to go to this extent. I will bound my power in this way. It is always easier to get men to extend their power than to release it.

I say, then, leave it within the function of the rebel States to do justice and receive mercy, and then I will vote for this bill with all its rigor, with all its exercise of extraordinary power, which I believe may be justified by the circumstances. So believing, I will vote for the bill if there is a limit that I can see; otherwise not.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me that my honorable friend from Nevada is a little premature in the haste he makes to declare an unqualified opposition to this measure; and I can hardly think that he has very well considered the grounds upon which he declares his opposition to the measure unless it is amended. I have thought it very likely that I should be obliged to persuade myself that it was best to vote for this bill as it came from the House of Representatives if we could do no better, and it had not occurred to me that there was anything so frightful in the powers conferred by it upon the military authorities as seems to have supposed the honorable Senator from Nevada. He says that the Congress of the United States now propose to institute military rule over eight million people and over ten States. Well, what of it? Are we, who have stood here for five long bloody years and witnessed the exercise of absolute military power over those rebel States, to be frightened now by a declaration of that sort? That is not the temper in which I find myself to-day. I have got so accustomed, if you please, to the exercise of this authority—

Mr. STEWART. That is the trouble.

Mr. MORRILL. "That is the trouble," says the honorable Senator. That has not been our trouble.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to say a word.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. That is what alarms me, because the Senator says he is accustomed to it.

Mr. MORRILL. That has not been our trouble, that we have exercised power; that has been the salvation of the nation. The trouble has been from the hesitation to exercise authority when authority was required. That has been the trouble; that has been the infirmity of the nation, and that is our weakness to-day.

Now, Mr. President, this is the "mildest mannered" bill in the world. Nobody ever proposed to do a thing so fearful in some respects as we do now who was so mild in the manner of it. No man ever "cut a throat" with half the mildness we propose to do this. Sir, this bill is a modification of the action of this Government in these States for the last six years, and I thank Heaven that we have come to the time at last when we can modify our action. What have we been doing? We have held these twelve million people at the absolute control of the military, have we not—life, property, estate, reputation, everything in our grasp? By the exercise of this power we have subdued them and conquered them, reduced them as "insurrectionary States," put down civil war and rebellion. We no longer levy armies; we no longer plan campaigns into that country; we now propose to interpose the military rule in a subdued form to preserve order throughout a country where there is no civil authority. That is all. Does that honorable Senator need be told that there is no civil authority in all that country? Does not the world know that there is no such thing as civil rule, no courts of justice, no administration of law there, and has not been of late? Well, sir, how then do you propose to restore order, to preserve order, to maintain the public peace, to protect individual rights, except by the interposition of the military authority?

Mr. COWAN. I should like to call the honorable Senator's attention to that part of the bill which declares that—

It shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property.

How are they to do it? Are they to try an indictment for an assault and battery, or an ejectment for the title to a tract of land, or an action of trover for personal property?

Mr. MORRILL. I was addressing myself particularly to my friend from Nevada; if I have occasion to speak upon the details of this bill, I will by-and-by answer my honorable friend from Pennsylvania. But it is the apprehension of the exercise of military power of which I was speaking; and I undertake to state as a proposition that this bill modifies the action of the military authority which has been exercised since the war began; and it proposes to furnish a rule, a military rule, as an article of war, if you please, to the commander in that region of country where now they are without any except such as arise from the general Articles of War. Now, let me say to the honorable Senator that when he talks about the apprehension of being accustomed to military authority, and that here is an imposition of military governments, he is mistaken. It is no such thing. It is simply in the nature of an article of war or a rule for the government of the Army in a conquered country, and that is all it is. Sir, by the triumph of our arms we have overthrown rebellion and civil war. These civil and political communities, recently in insurrection and war are subdued and at our feet. I assume that there are no civil tribunals there, no State governments which we are bound to respect, or which it is safe for us to respect and trust. What, then, is to be done? We are to restore those communities, of course; when? As soon as it is practicable to do it. In the meantime it is the duty of Congress to define by law what the military authorities in that region of country shall be bound to do, and that is, by this proposition, to keep order, preserve order in these insurrectionary States, protect the persons and the property of the people, and that is all.

Now, allow me to remind my honorable friend from Nevada that since these insurrectionary States were subdued and overthrown the military power in that region of the country has been absolute, and we have sat here since 1865 and witnessed the military acts of the President of the United States unlimited and absolute over the whole country. We have seen him set aside States and State constitutions and State laws and State institutions and govern that entire country by his absolute military authority. Nobody denies that. I do not stand here to complain of it. I think when the war was ended, the insurrection was overthrown, and these States were subdued; it was the duty of the President of the United States without attempting to organize State governments to preserve order, and it becomes necessary now to interpose the legislative authority in that direction because he does not preserve order. Does not the honorable Senator from Nevada understand that? Does he not understand that it is because the President of the United States, when by the power of our arms this rebellion was overthrown, neglected to preserve order by military authority, and give protection to persons and property, and because he neglected to do that, and turned his attention to the reconstruction of States without authority, that the Congress of the United States to-day is called upon to direct the Army of the United States in all those military districts in the way of a military rule, what shall be done for the protection of person and for the protection of property.

So much, then, for the question of military rule. Instead of its being military rule in the sense of Government, as the honorable Senator seems to apprehend, permanent, unlimited, unqualified, and despotic, it is military rule in a limited, mitigated form, applicable only to the extraordinary state of affairs in that region of country, and in the very nature of things temporary.

But the honorable Senator says he wants this amendment as an apology for what we are doing. Well, sir, I may persuade myself to vote for the amendment. If it will help the honorable Senator to vote for the bill, very well; so much the better; but that the amendment in any form modifies the question of military power nobody will contend. No lawyer on this floor, and no Senator who has examined the measure, will pretend that the amendment modifies the severity of the power of which the Senator complains; it only discloses the fact that the Congress of the United States, while it extends this military rule over these States, accompanies it with a statement of the conditions on which the rule may be abated; that is all; and to that extent I welcome it, and may not be unwilling to vote for it, but it has no reference whatever to the extent or limitation of military power provided for in the bill.

But, sir, if the honorable Senator had been desirous of ascertaining reasons or of finding an apology for the exercise of this military authority which we undertake to assert, he would have found them in the preamble to the bill itself. What is the reason assigned for the assertion at the present time of this military power? It is set forth in the preamble in concise terms:

Whereas—the governments of certain States which are named—were set up without the authority of Congress and without the sanction of the people; and whereas said pretended governments afforded no adequate protection for life or property, but countenance and encourage lawlessness and crime.

Here you have the reason why the Congress of the United States proposes to authorize the interference of military power in these States.

Sir, need any one stand here to-day to remind the Senate of the United States that since the surrender of the confederate armies there has been no civil authority in that country? Have we not over and over again declared that all that has been done there in the reconstruction of States has been a usurpation? Does not the honorable Senator from Nevada know that there is no protection of person or property in all that region of country? Has he not been advertised of the innumerable murders, cruelties, and oppressions of all sorts to the loyal people of that country? Are not we, all of us, persuaded of that? Have we not been told by constituted committees of this body and of the other branch of the national Congress that there is no such thing as order or peace in all that region of country, no such thing as personal security, no such thing as security to property? Do we not know that to-day, under these sham governments, the state of things is that of misrule in all that region of country? Do we not know to-day that the President of the United States, having set up these sham governments and feeling bound by them, does not propose to execute the laws which the Congress of the United States has passed? Does not the honorable Senator from Nevada know that the civil rights bill enacted here to open the courts of justice to the oppressed people is a dead letter throughout the South? And yet the honorable Senator rises here and undertakes to alarm this body upon the idea that we are about to assume the exercise of military power. Sir, we are about to assume an authority under the Constitution to preserve order in that region of country which we have declared insurrectionary, in that region of country which we know to be in a state of disorder, in which we know that the loyal men have no security either of person or property.

I say to the honorable Senator from Nevada that he should be—I fear he will have occasion to be—vastly more solicitous for an apology for not passing this bill than for reasons to justify himself in doing so. Sir, if there ever was a measure demanded of a legislative tribunal, this is the one. It is the first measure on the part of the American Congress since the rebellion closed by which it has said to the loyal people in that region of the country, "We come to you now with protection; we have overthrown the rebellion; we know the animus of those who were in arms against the Government of the United States toward the loyal population of this region of the country, and we come to stand by you for your protection and security." This, I think, it is our bounden duty to do; and then, as to the rest, protection and reconstruction are intimately connected. I agree that you cannot do them both at one and the same time. That is impracticable. We can give protection, and we ought to give protection; and if we delay protection when we can give it we are culpable, and the American people I believe will hold us so.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am for this measure either with or without amendment. I am for it as a great measure of protection to a people downtrodden and oppressed as few people in any age or country ever have been, and I am for it at the earliest practicable moment. The amendment very properly shadows forth the terms and conditions upon which these people may reorganize State governments. It is perfectly easy for me to accept it if it is any relief to any gentleman. If anybody desires that I should express as much as that, I am perfectly willing, and to express it in this bill. If we should pass this bill without the amendment, I do not suppose it will be likely to be misapprehended by the American people. I do not suppose, as the honorable Senator seems to apprehend, that if we pass this bill as a measure of protection to-day the people would fear that we intended to make this military rule permanent. I am sure nothing has gone from the American Congress which authorizes any such inference or justifies any such presumption. No one can fail to see the difficulty of instant protection and reconstruction; that this is an advance measure; a measure demanded by the times; a measure quite too long postponed, in my judgment.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] although he approves of this amendment, has seen fit to read me a severe lecture because I do not desire military rule as an end, but as a means, because I have no particular love for military despotism, because, while I acknowledge the necessity of it, I do not love it. Now I do recognize the fact that the civil rights bill has been trampled upon, that human rights are trampled upon in the South, that loyal men are not protected, and but for those facts I could not vote for this bill at all. It is the existence of these facts that makes me vote for a bill of this extraordinary character, a bill that places the life of a citizen in the hands of a military man. If he is a good man, that life may be safe. If he is a drunken man, if he is a passionate man, if he is a wicked man, that life is in danger. But, sir, this measure grows out of the necessity of the case, and I resort to it because I cannot do anything else. The reason why I am willing to use it temporarily is because we cannot enforce the civil rights bill, and because we cannot protect our citizens there. I justify it on that ground.

The Senator says I want an apology to vote for placing the life and liberty of citizens in the hands of military men, I want an apology for voting for military commissions, I want an apology for violating the republican principle and giving all power to one man. Yes, sir, I do want an apology for it. I want a reason for it. I want a reason of necessity which no man can gainsay before I vote to place any man at the mercy of another. If I did not want an apology and a reason for such action I should be false to truth, false to honesty, false to justice, false to republican institutions. I must have a reason, and a cogent reason. I believe that reason exists. I must vote for the bill, provided in doing so I am not to destroy republican institutions altogether; but when you pass this bill, I care not what there is in the preamble, although you may desire to modify it, it is by no means sure that you will have the power to do so. Although you may think it will be temporary, you have no declaration that it shall be temporary. We are already told that the other House will not pass it if we put a limitation on this military rule.

The Senator from Maine says he is accustomed to military rule and does not fear it. I hope that he nor his posterity may never feel it. I hope it may never fall upon his gallant State. I hope it may never fall upon any State in this Union now here represented. I hope the cup may soon be taken away from the people of the rebellious States. I regret as much as any man that I must place this cup to their mouths; and while I do it, I will not trust myself lest I should not relinquish the power when they have complied with all that is written in the bond. If to-day the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, while exercising this high and important prerogative of placing the life and liberty of all the citizens in a given State under one man, are unwilling to place a limit on that power, if the leaders of that House have been driven to unite with Democrats to force this bill through in its present form, if they will take nothing but this and this unlimited, if they will make the military an end and not a means of securing liberty, if such be the temper of the House it is time that an appeal is sounded for liberty. If they are so greedy of power that they are not willing to say "Thus far will we go and no farther," it is time that somebody should come forward and demand an apology for all this.

I should blush to vote for this bill if the reason of my act was not recorded with the act. I am glad, and I congratulate the Senator from Maine that he is willing to vote for this amendment. I believe the Senate will adopt it. I believe the Senate is not disposed to use unnecessarily arbitrary power. I believe the Senate is desirous of placing limitations upon any necessary exercise of power in the southern States. If when you pass this bill with this limitation it shall be found that the limitation is wrong, you can repeal the limitation; but pass the bill without limitation, placing all these people under the control of military power, and do you not believe you can get a report from every military man in the South who is sent there to control the people that it is necessary to continue that state of things? When they get power do you not believe they will report in favor of continuing that power? Do you think it absolutely certain that you can pass a law repealing it? I fear it. I am not attempting to alarm the Senate; but let me say this is no ordinary bill. It is erecting tribunals unknown to the Constitution, and which can only be justified by war. It erects tribunals by which men are subjected to the loss of life at the will of a single man. It can only be justified by a law higher than the Constitution, the law of necessity, by which nations maintain their existence.

It is not in pursuance of the Constitution; it is above the Constitution. It results from that higher law to which we all bow, the law under which we acted in suppressing the rebellion. I am for invoking that law no longer than it is necessary, for exercising it only within the limits of the necessity. Enacted into a system of permanent laws, with no limit to the duration of such a system, and it does look, and the world will believe, that this struggle is for military despotism as an end, and not for military rule as a means for the preservation of free institutions.

I wish the Senator from Oregon had stood by the proposition he offered last night. I am sorry that he has listened to the minority of Union men in the House, who by a coalition with the Democrats rejected this amendment there. I am sorry that they have so much influence in this body. I wish we could have on this question the cool, deliberate judgment of grave Senators. I believe the majority of Union men who voted for this amendment in the House will carry it through instantly if we send it back with this amendment, and those who seek for military rule as an end will be bound to come to that majority. I am opposed to the minority of the House, first coalescing with the Democrats and forcing a measure of this kind through, and then telling us and telling the world that if we put a limitation upon our own power, if we put limitation in this bill, they will not pass the bill; that they will have absolute power; that they will place that power in the hands of military men; that they will have men in the South who shall have in their hands arbitrary disposal of life and death, or the Union people shall have no protection. The bill with this amendment gives the same protection and in the same way that it does without. The amendment simply says to the South, "If you will repent and comply with our terms you may have civil liberty." That is all. It does not change the form of the bill.

The Senator from Maine calls me to an account because I say that this is an extraordinary bill, an extraordinary remedy, and can only be sanctioned by extraordinary reasons. I think that if any lawyer will read the bill he will say so. In times gone by the power to put a State under the control of a single man, to make him a dictator and more than dictator, to give him the power to execute his own will without appeal to any higher tribunal, to give him absolute power of life and death, seemed to the fathers of the Republic to be an extraordinary power that could only be justified in perilous times. I have, from the reports before me, come to the conclusion that those times do exist temporarily now; but I believe that the people of the South, when the necessary consequence of their conduct is brought home to them by this bill, will reconsider their contumacious conduct and learn to do right. I am not here to justify the setting up of governments over them by the President. I admit that all that was irregular, and that is one reason why it is necessary for us to legislate; but it is no reason why we should make this institution, which we think is justified by present necessity, a permanent one, to be exercised as a military despotism in the South. I know that the President has exercised somewhat similar power. If an officer did not suit him he removed the officer and placed another in his stead. I do not object to the President's exercising power where it was necessary; I do not object to continuing its exercise in a regular manner so long as it may be necessary, but we might well have complained if the President had proclaimed that he intended to exercise it through all time.

You say that in the nature of things this is to be temporary. Plead not the nature of things, plead not the nature of man. Show me an instance where any one who had such power ever relinquished it. It is according to all history and the nature of man that those who have power hold on to it as long as they can. Let no man say, then, give power without a limit which must necessarily lead to the destruction of free institutions. The Senator from Maine says to me in a very self-confident manner that there is no such thing as civil government in the South. I admit that civil government in the South is a miserable apology; but the bill itself provides for this civil authority acting in subordination to the military. It recognizes its existence. I do not object to that. There is some civil authority there which the gentleman proposes to use in the exercise of this military power. It is a civil authority that we have allowed to grow up, but it was not sanctioned by any law. It was a usurpation when it was started. I do not approve of that. It should have been submitted to Congress; but it is then actually in existence, and it is recognized by this bill.

All I have to say, then, is, the emergency has arisen when extraordinary means must be provided, but there will be a time when we shall want civil government. When all our conditions have been complied with—and this amendment states what the conditions are—do we not want to have civil government restored? The arrival of that time depends on the good or bad conduct of the southern people themselves. They are left free agents; they are the arbiters of their own fortune. If they act right they shall have civil government. If they continue to oppress they shall not have it. Let them have the power to choose between right and wrong; but put your military power there and hold out an inducement to the people to have it removed. Otherwise what inducement is held out to the southern man to do right, when if he does right you continue your military rule; and if he does wrong you continue it, and he must be under a military government anyhow.

The loyal as well as the disloyal are placed in that position, and then they are without hope. Let me suggest one consideration on this point. What kind of men will these military rulers be? They will be stationed among these people. Now, the disloyal have just as fine houses, just as fine wines, just as fine places of entertainment, just as many fascinations in society as the loyalists; in fact I think it will be admitted that they stand a little higher in society there. If you pass this bill in this shape, you may have military men there who will not be above the arts and the inducements and the allurements that may be thrown around young men. The loyal may suffer while the disloyal will be rioting. Establish this bill without any such amendment, and all the military men you send there will send you reports that the continuance of their power is necessary. No man will be exerting himself to throw off the yoke because no hope is held out, no promise, no salvation, no matter what they do. The loyal and the disloyal alike will sink down into hopelessness and despair. But suppose you hold out to them a prospect that when they do right they shall have mercy, then you put an argument into the mouths of the loyal and they can say to the disloyal, "You have brought this misery upon us; if you behave yourselves we shall be free; you are our enemies; it is your rebellion first and your tyranny now, it is your denial of human rights that has caused us to be deprived of the rights of States and placed under military power; come go with us and do right; accept these generous propositions of Congress and be free." Would not that be an argument in the mouths of the loyal? But if there is no hope held out what will be the consequence? I believe every Senator now thinks and believes that if they would comply with these conditions he would relieve these people. Then why not say so now? Is it not quite as important to say it now as at any other time? You admit it to be just. The only argument against this amendment that I have heard is that if adopted the other House will not sanction it and pass the bill. Why not? A majority of the Union members of the House have already voted for it. It was defeated by a minority of the Union members coalescing with the Democrats.

But, Mr. President, I need not say more. I hope honorable Senators will not place me in a false position again by pretending that I am unwilling to give adequate protection to the Union men in the South, by pretending that I am any more in favor of rebels than any other man is. I recognize the necessity for this bill; but I want the Union men in the South to have an argument to show that there is redemption for the South if they do right. Southern men tell me, "We are overpowered by the disloyal; they say to us, you are treated as we are treated; Congress does nothing for you; what is the use of your making efforts; nothing will be done to admit even the loyal." The southern people who are Unionists are not in the front rank of intelligence; many of them are poor, low, and oppressed. The argument that Congress does not care any more for them than for the rebels, and that there is nothing they can do which will enable them to get into the Union, overpowers the Union men. The disloyal are teaching the Union men of the rebel States to-day that we in Congress seek military despotism as an end and not as a means, that we seek disunion as a perpetual end of this controversy; that we desire to hold the South as conquered provinces; that we will not say on what terms we shall let them in. They say we have now assumed the same language which they started out with when they declared that if you gave them a blank sheet of paper they would not write the terms upon which the Union could be saved. They turn around to loyal men in the South and say the North are victorious and they will not accept a blank sheet of paper and write the terms upon which we shall have free government, and thus they silence the clamor of those who have stood firm and fast to the Union. It is a powerful argument. If you want men to rally around you in the South you must state the terms of restoration. The terms proposed in this amendment are all that humanity demands. Make that statement and my word for it you will have a party in the South eager to avoid this military rule and accept the terms of restoration which you propose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should be glad if it would please the Senate to have a vote at this time indicating its sense upon this amendment, because the discussion proceeds upon the general merits of the bill; and for some reasons—I need not state them—I should be glad to know whether the Senate intends or does not intend to attach this amendment to the bill; and as the discussions that occur do not relate particularly to the amendment, but to the general merits of the bill, it seems to me they might go on as well after the Senate has determined whether to amend the bill or not, and if agreeable to Senators I should like to have a vote at this time upon the amendment.

I find that I failed to make myself understood here. I gave notice last night that I should propose this amendment to the bill. I do not indicate any hostility to the amendment now; but I say that upon consulting persons who know the state of things in the other House, it was represented to me that the condition of business there is such that to attach an amendment to this bill and send it back would probably, if not certainly, accomplish its defeat. I took those representations from persons of the highest authority in the House. Of course I do not propose to mention names.

Mr. SHERMAN. Allow me a word on that point, for I am pretty well acquainted with the rules of the House, having been a member of that body for several years. There is no trouble in a majority of the House at any time reaching a bill on the Speaker's table if it does not contain an appropriation of money. A majority of that House in favor of it can reach this bill within ten minutes after it goes back to the House, beyond a doubt. A motion to go to the Speaker's table is in order, and then the House can lay aside one bill after another until they reach this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the honorable Senator differs from the Speaker of the House on that question, and I do not propose to decide between them. The honorable Speaker indicated to me a manner in which the enemies of this bill might prevent any final vote upon it until after Tuesday night.

Mr. SHERMAN. They might perhaps by filibustering.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a possible thing, as we all know. It is necessary that this bill should go to the President on Tuesday night in order to have his decision as to whether he will or will not approve it before Congress adjourns; and it is to be remembered that if the President should veto this bill his objections to it are to be sent to the House of Representatives, and then of course there will be more or less opportunity both in the House and in the Senate to discuss the question upon the objections of the President, and then both Houses must by a two-thirds vote sustain the measure in order to secure its passage. I do not wish to go into that matter more particularly; but I simply state these things to indicate the reason why I should prefer to have this bill pass in its present shape and to have this amendment, or the substance of it, embodied in some bill or resolution to be passed by Congress before its adjournment; and my object in rising now was simply to ask the Senate, if agreeable to them, to vote on the amendment at this time, and then proceed with the general discussion of the merits of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It strikes me as rather harsh to hear the action of the House quoted to influence the action of the Senate, or observations or threats made by persons in the House that if we choose to amend one of their bills it cannot pass at this session. Such a thing is in violation of the rules, to commence with, because the rules expressly declare that no such observation shall be made. A member of the House has no right to influence or to attempt to influence our action by what he may say, and it is out of order in the House to make any allusion to what a Senator desires on the passage of a bill. That is the established rule of Parliament.

Now, Mr. President, this is the gravest question, in my judgment, that has come before this Congress at any period of its deliberations. I am not disposed to consider any amendment to this bill or the bill itself under any suggestions such as have been made here. I want to give this subject the most serious consideration possible, and I want to vote on these propositions after I have heard Senators on both sides, and I do not think we ought to be influenced in the slightest degree by the rules of the House or by what may be done by the House. I have no doubt the House of Representatives are as patriotic as we are, and that after our action has been had they will deliberate upon it in good faith. The long delay in bringing this bill before Congress is not, perhaps, the fault of either House. At any rate, it is here at this late period of the session, and I wish to give it a fair and full consideration. Nor am I to be influenced in the slightest degree by any observations that may be made by a member of the House as to the effect of our amendments. If they can pass a bill and send it to us, and we are not at liberty for any cause to amend it, as a matter of course there is the end of the joint action of the two Houses. I am not disposed to legislate in that way.

Mr. CONNESS. The suggestion made by the honorable Senator from Oregon who has charge of this measure as to the order of our proceeding I think has a good deal in it, and I rise to express the wish that the Senate will pay attention to his suggestion, which is that we discuss the amendments proposed and act upon them, leaving the discussion upon the main proposition until the amendments shall have been disposed of. If the discussions here generally should take that regular order we should get along with business much more rapidly than we do. I hope the Senator's suggestion on this point will receive the attention of the Senate.

I desire to add a word to what the honorable Senator from Ohio has said in regard to governing our legislation by what members of the other House may say, and the remark I would make is with respect to the frequent allusions that have been made here to what the President may do. I think allusions of the one kind are about as much out of place as those of the other. I have no fears that the President will, to use the technical language, pocket important bills upon this subject. I believe that if bills upon this great subject reach him giving him time enough to consider them, he will either sign them or return them to this body within the proper time or before its adjournment with his objections. I have little doubt upon that point. What would be the consequence if he did not, and if by such a course as the pocketing of bills, as it is termed, he should challenge the opposition of both Houses of Congress? Already the law provides that the new Congress shall meet on the 4th day of March. The inevitable result would be that Congress would go on and reconsider and act upon the measures which the President had refused to return. Now, I apprehend there is scarcely a Senator who is ready to believe that the President desires to compel us to remain in lengthened session after the 4th of March. I have yet to meet the first Senator or member of the House of Representatives desirous to continue that session beyond its organization. But the refusal by the President to consider a bill of this character and to return it to the House in which it originated, before the adjournment would be a challenge to Congress and compel Congress to go on after the 4th of March with renewed legislation upon these subjects. Sir, I have no fears upon that point. I hope we shall go on with deliberation upon the legislation now before us. When other Senators shall have discussed the subject further, and before a vote is taken, I may claim the attention of the Senate for a very short time. At present I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Oregon insists that a vote be had on the pending amendment immediately, and that all discussion which may be necessary be had on the general provisions of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. I desire not to enter into the discussion of the amendment or the bill, but simply at this stage of the proceedings to get some information if I can from the Senator from Oregon, who seems to have charge of the bill. I discover that the second section of the pending measure provides—

That it shall be the duty of the General of the Army to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the Army not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

At the present time, as I understand, officers have been assigned to those different States and are now there in command; for instance, General Schofield is in command at Richmond, assigned there by the President; General Sickles is in command at Charleston, and General Sheridan at New Orleans. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Oregon that the President, under this measure, will have any command of the officers after they have been assigned by the General of the Army? Will the President be still Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States? After they have been assigned to these respective States, what position will they have assumed different from the position now occupied by them in these States? That is the point to which I wish to direct the Senator's attention, and his answer to it will control materially my vote upon the proposition he now insists shall be voted upon at once.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the Constitution of the United States makes the President Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, and of course Congress has no power to deprive him of that office; and this bill will not and cannot in the nature of things have that effect. But as I understand, it is usual for the General of the Army, without consulting the President, to detail officers and men for certain purposes, and this bill recognizes that practice. I have no doubt, in my own mind, that the President of the United States by virtue of the authority vested in him by the Constitution, may overrule any order that may be made by the General of the Army that does not controvert this law. So far as the disposition of the forces is concerned, and as to what particular generals shall be assigned to a particular district, the bill requires the General of the Army to designate; but I do not suppose that the bill can overrule the Constitution and deprive the President of his functions as Commander-in-Chief of the Army.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to ask the Senator if in his judgment General Grant is now subject, so far as the government of the Army is concerned, to the orders of the President, and whether General Grant, in making these assignments, would not be compelled to obey the orders of the President of the United States. I believe, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests to me, that, in issuing his general orders, General Grant signs them "by order of the President of the United States," those that affect the management and control of the Army; for instance, assigning a military commander to one of the districts, or a general order to operate in the government of the military forces of United States.

The Senator from Oregon says it is immensely important that this bill shall be passed, and that it shall be passed in such time that the President shall not be able to pocket it and prevent its passage till after the 4th of March. I have no idea that the President of the United States will desire exceedingly to pocket a measure of this sort. I cannot see that he would desire to do so. If I have any complaint to make, it is that things have been done in the southern States by order of the military that I have not been able to give the consent of my judgment to. I have thought that the President heretofore exercised a military authority in the southern States perhaps not in accordance with the wishes of the people of the United States. I have not been pleased with the military administration of affairs there, and I took occasion to make some complaint a year ago of orders that were being enforced in the southern States.

Now, if I understand the extent and scope of this measure, it will simply be to give the sanction of Congress to military administration in the southern States by the President. If there is anything else in it I desire to have it understood now before we proceed any further. If the Senator desires to have speedy action on this measure, let us understand what it is; let us know who is to control the armies and who is to be the real party issuing the orders. I am not exceedingly favorable to military government anywhere, and if I can get along without it in the southern States I am very anxious to do so. I am not pleased with it anywhere. I believe that despots and tyrants have generally resorted to it to accomplish their ends and purposes. Cromwell, I believe, partitioned out England and appointed major generals, who ruled the country with a rod of iron, and finally the entire civil administration of the affairs of the kingdom fell into the hands of these major generals. The history of that time is well known to us all. Even Cromwell himself, after having used them for years in carrying out the wrongs that he desired to perpetrate and to accomplish his own schemes of ambition, had to abandon them and leave them to work out their own salvation.

I do not desire to have the history of that time repeated in this country. I do not intend, if I can avoid it, to have the history of similar periods in other nations repeated here. If Congress is to control the Army, to give the orders, and to determine what the administration of civil affairs shall be in the southern States, it is a different matter; but if this is to be left entirely to the President, and he is to give such orders through General Grant or compel General Grant to issue such orders for the government of the southern States as he chooses, then I suppose it is proper for us to discuss the measure anyhow, not to have it hurried through without discussion, and every man condemned who may for a moment hesitate or doubt as to the propriety of its passage.

Mr. President, I have my views as to the settlement of the difficulties in the southern States. I presented them to the Senate a year ago. There is but one solution, and there will never be but one solution, and that is to ascertain what the disease originally was, and then apply the remedy. The disease was aristocracy. The disease was that there were persons in the southern States not entitled to civil or political rights. I mean the negroes. It is a clear proposition that we have got to do one of three things: we must, first, either kill the negroes; or second, we must send them out of the country; or third, if we intend to retain them, we must give them civil and political rights. What is the use of hesitating about arriving at that result? If we have made up our minds to reconstruct in the South there is no other way of reconstruction; and we need not send the military there. I do not know that the military in times of peace have ever been exceedingly favorable to civil rights. It is not my impression that they have been.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Nor in time of war.

Mr. HENDERSON. In war it is known they are not. The object, as I understand, is to take away the freedom of the individual.

Mr. WILSON. What protection have loyal men there now but the military?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not remember whether the Senator from Massachusetts voted for the proposition which I offered twelve months ago as a constitutional amendment, and that was to give political rights to the negroes. Some Senators said it was a humbug, that it was Jacob Townsend's Sarsaparilla, or something to that effect, that it would amount to nothing. Now, I will ask what other protection can you give to a Union man in the southern States than the ballot? If something like the bill that has already passed the House of Representatives, and is now lying upon your desk, providing for civil government in the southern States can be passed, I am perfectly willing to have a Governor and provisional council appointed in each State to initiate the forming of civil government. Civil government will protect the rights of individuals; the Army is not very likely to do it. We all know what the tendency of a government by military power is. We are not injuring the southern people half so much as we injure ourselves by a military government. I think we shall regret it if we enter into it; I think we shall have cause to regret it; and I doubt exceedingly whether it will be any protection to loyal men. We often commit blunders, we often commit errors. It is not the first time gentlemen have gone off in a rage to accomplish something, and found twelve months afterward that they have not accomplished it.

Mr. WILSON. When have we done that?

Mr. HENDERSON. We frequently do it. I know I do it.

Mr. WILSON. I thought you spoke of something that the Senate had done.

Mr. HENDERSON. I say we as individuals commit blunders. I commit blunders, and the Senator from Massachusetts I apprehend is not free from them.

Mr. DIXON. Allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Missouri. He speaks of giving the ballot to the colored people of the South. Let me ask him whether it would not be better that that privilege or right should be given them by the free action of the southern States themselves, by amendments of their own State constitutions?

Mr. HENDERSON. Will they do it?

Mr. DIXON. I think they will; but I put the hypothetical case, suppose they would do it, would not that be better?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly, if they will do it.

Mr. DIXON. That proposition has been made.

Mr. HENDERSON. My impression is that we committed a blunder when we voted down, twelve months ago, the constitutional amendment to which I have alluded. Now, let me say that the northern people should determine to do justice, and if the Senator from Connecticut himself will give us a pledge that his own State will vote negro suffrage—

Mr. DIXON. I can give you a pledge that I will vote for it, and I have always afforded what feeble aid I could to the attainment of that result in my state. I have voted for it myself twice at the polls.

Mr. HENDERSON. The southern people do not believe we are in earnest about this thing. Why, sir, Connecticut eighteen months ago, I believe, voted down negro suffrage by a majority in every county in the State but one.

Mr. DIXON. But the State of Tennessee has granted suffrage to the negroes by her own action. Now, would it not be better for the other States to do it in that way than for us to force it on them?

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not intend to occupy any of the time of the Senate nor to interfere with the progress of the measure according to the course desired by the Senator who has it in charge. All that I rose for was to insist that we must not be hurried on to the adoption of the measure without consideration, merely to gratify the House, or to gratify individual members of the House. If the President wishes to veto the measures we pass, let him do so. We meet again on the 4th of March.

We have been ever since 1865 considering questions of reconstruction, and I do not know that we have lost anything by failing to reconstruct heretofore. I do not know that we are not better able now to reconstruct fairly and with proper judgment than we have ever been; and perhaps we shall be more capable of reconstructing permanently, and to the satisfaction of the American people six months hence than we are to-day. I am in no hurry about it. Who is suffering? The Senator from Massachusetts says our Union friends are suffering down there. I ask him is there to be any change in the policy under this bill? Is this bill to change the policy? That is the reason why I asked the Senator from Oregon whether the President would control the military under this bill. If so, what is gained? The President is controlling the military now. He puts officers there and he can change them. If this bill passes, will he not have the same power? If there is to be no change, what is the use of inducing the country to believe that we are passing a great measure of reconstruction?

The Senator from Nevada a little while ago said, in discussing this question, that we passed the civil rights bill twelve months ago, and that fails to protect anybody. Is that so? I thought last year that that would be the result; and I said to the Senator from Illinois when he was pressing it and urging it that it would amount to nothing. We say civil rights shall be given to individuals; and we say if the State courts do not administer justice to the negroes and the Union men they shall have the right to appeal to the Federal courts. They have appealed to the Federal courts; but we cannot do away with the right of trial by jury under the Constitution of the United States. We insist that the negro shall be a witness in court under the civil rights bill. That is right; that right ought to be guaranteed; but how can it be accomplished? A case is tried in a southern court—a State court; a negro is brought forward to testify for one of the parties; his testimony is refused; the case then goes to the United States court, and the negro testifies there under the civil rights bill; but how much good does it do the man for whom he testifies, provided the jurors turn their backs upon the negro's testimony? That is the truth of the matter; they do not believe a word he says; and they discard his testimony in finding a verdict. Then have you remedied the evil; have you done any good; have you accomplished anything? Nothing upon earth; the negro's testimony is just as valueless as if he had been incompetent to testify. He is not a credible witness in the view of those who hear him, and therefore nothing is accomplished. We have accomplished very little by the administration of the civil rights bill; and let me tell you I know the fact, living in what was once a slave-holding community, that the parties who thus believed, believe so still. They have not changed their minds. Until you reorganize in such a way as to give each and every individual the power to protect his own rights, I say reconstruction will be a humbug and a failure. It is useless to tell me that this military power left in the hands of the President, just where it is now, is going to accomplish a great deal. I cannot see it so.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the honorable Senator from Missouri allow me to call his attention to the language of the second section of the bill?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. The second section provides:

That it shall be the duty of the General of the Army to assign to the command of each said districts an officer of the Army, &c.

I regard that as an authority given to the General of the Army, irrespective of the President.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Michigan to say that General Grant is superior in his orders to the President of the United States?

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir; I have not said so.

Mr. HENDERSON. Can he be so made by law?

Mr. HOWARD. Does the Senator wish me to answer that question?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do, because I am seeking light.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no doubt that it is within the competency of Congress, under the Constitution, in the form of a law, to impose any duty it may see fit upon any military officer by name or by rank, and that it is not in the competency of the President, after the passage of such a law, to thwart its execution or interfere with its execution in any way.

Mr. HENDERSON. What becomes of the constitutional provision which declares that the President of the United States shall be the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy?

Mr. HOWARD. That is a mere rank conferred upon the President.

Mr. HENDERSON. But after the officers have been assigned by the General of the Army, has the President power to issue orders to those subordinate officers in the districts? I should like to have an answer to that question.

Mr. HOWARD. Not in a way to thwart the execution of the orders of the General, upon whom the whole duty is imposed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, Mr. President, all I can say is, that the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Oregon, who has the control of this bill, differ about the construction of it. If the friends of the measure differ about it, how are we to ascertain what will be the construction of it. I am no enemy to the measure. I have not announced any enmity to it, nor do I say now that I shall not vote for it. I am seeking light. I want to know the operation of the measure. I want to know what it is going to do before I record my vote in favor of it. I want to know whether the President will have any authority there after the passage of this bill; whether General Grant will issue all orders to the other officers, or whether the President will issue the orders.

I can state to the Senator from Michigan what I know to be a fact: that this is not a palatable measure to the Union men of the southern States. I understand that some of the most radical Union men in the southern States do not desire that it shall be passed. I understand that Governor Hamilton, of Texas, a very radical man, is opposed to it. I understand that various others regard it as a very dangerous measure for the government of the southern States. I have not conversed with them; but such I understand to be the fact. All that I rose for was to ascertain what would be the construction of it.

Now, if I understand it properly, there is but one question about it, and that is, the amendment which the Senator from Oregon proposed to offer yesterday evening, and which has been renewed by the Senator from Maryland; and permit me, sir, to congratulate the Senator from Maryland. Last year, I believe, he voted against the constitutional amendment; he voted against negro suffrage. Now he offers an amendment to the pending bill in favor of negro suffrage and in favor of the constitutional amendment. That is progress. If the Senator from Maryland can make such an advance in twelve months, if we would just hold on, and not be hurried about reconstructing, in six months from to-day everybody will be in favor of negro suffrage, pure and unadulterated. I know how slow the Senator from Maryland is in making advances of this character; and, by the common rule of three, if the Senator from Maryland in twelve months can advance from opposition to the constitutional amendment, and bitter, unrelenting opposition to negro suffrage in every shape and form, deeming it to be the overthrow of the institutions of the Republic, I simply ask how long will it take other Democratic gentlemen to march up to that point?

Now, Mr. President, what is the use of hastening about this matter? Everything is doing well. I know there are wrongs committed in the southern States, but this measure does not help the matter at all, as I think I have demonstrated. The Senator from Oregon says it will not, because the President will have command of the Army there yet and can issue his own orders. Then had we not better stop and undertake to reorganize?

Is this proposition to be eternal? If it is to govern the southern States by military power from this day on, then I demur. There is no proposition to limit it in time except the amendment. Hence the amendment is the bill. The Senator from Oregon says, do not discuss the amendment; let us vote on the amendment and then discuss the bill. I cannot see that there is anything in the bill except the amendment. That is all there is in it. That looks to forcing the southern States if they do not like this measure; but I do not know but they will like it. What Senator has the assurance that the southern States will not take this measure and be very fond of it; take that as a government for all time? If it be true that these Army officers are favorable to the southern people, and if they want to control matters there in the interest of the rebels and rebel sympathizers of the southern States, I do not know that they will demur to it. In all probability those blandishments and allurements that were spoken of a little while ago will win over the Army, and the first thing we know we shall be as Cromwell was, trying to get rid of our eleven major generals. Cromwell had a great deal of difficulty in getting rid of them. They wanted to set up for themselves. It was one of the most difficult things Cromwell had to do, and when he undertook to make himself king, his eleven major generals said, You shall not be king. They did all the acts necessary to make him king; they did mean things enough to have made either him or anybody else king; but they were looking out for themselves. Perhaps our major generals may be seduced into that position themselves. I cannot tell. We had better anyhow not be in any great hurry about this matter. We meet again on the 4th of March. If the President is not satisfied with our legislation we can go on. The weather is not very warm on the 4th of March. We can remain here until the 1st of June, if necessary.

Let us reconstruct properly. When we build our house the next time let us not build upon the sands, so that when the winds come and the rains fall it shall tumble down; let us build upon the rock. What is that? Mr. President, as I said the evil has been that the ballot has been partial in the southern States; it has been in the hands of a few, and they have controlled it in their own interest. That was the disease there was in the body-politic. It brought on the war; the war is over; and now instead of going back and remedying the difficulty, we stop short and send military men down there to govern, not according to the views of Congress, but in all probability according to the views of the President or somebody else. General Grant, I am told by the Senator from Michigan, is to have the authority conferred by this bill. I do not know exactly how General Grant feels. I should like the Senator from Michigan to inform me on that subject. Is General Grant desirous of carrying out the views of Congress, or will he carry out the views of the President? I should like to have some information on that subject.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no authority to speak for General Grant except that which arises from his previous history and his honest and heroic services to the country. From this source of information I feel perfectly authorized in assuring the Senator from Missouri that U. S. Grant will do his duty, as he understands it, faithfully, promptly, and well. Of that neither he nor any other gentleman need entertain a doubt.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Michigan tells me that General Grant will do his duty as he understands it; but does he understand it as I understand it? [Laughter.] That is the practical question.

Mr. BROWN. As Congress understand it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I understand it as the majority of Congress do.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know how General Grant may understand his duty; but he is a man of considerable intelligence and perspicacity of intellect, and I shall be entirely content if General Grant does his duty as he understands it, for I think he will understand it right. As to whether he will act in accordance with what the Senator denominates the President's policy, or in accordance with the policy of Congress, I have nothing to say.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Michigan is very much mistaken if he supposes I have not as much confidence in the integrity, the patriotism, and the good judgment of General Grant as he has. No man has a higher regard for General Grant than myself. I do not permit anybody to go further in his estimate of the character and of the services of General Grant than myself. But that is not the question. This is a proposition to take away the constitutional power of the President, as I understand it, to control the Army and to put it into the hands of General Grant; and without knowing exactly how General Grant is going to govern, I am called upon to vote immediately, not to discuss the measure at all, but to haste on and vote at once. I see no necessity for that thing, and I am not going to be hurried on into it. I may vote for the bill, but if I do I must know all the facts and circumstances surrounding it, and I must know what sort of control I am going to have afterward.

If there is one thing that I desire to see secured it is that we build aright, and that we get a loyal representation from the southern States here immediately. That is what I want. I want the Union restored. I do not desire that this state of affairs shall continue any longer. It is possible to get loyal men from the southern States. It is an easy matter. It can only be done, however, by rooting out the disease that has existed. What is that disease? It is that the ballot-box has been in the hands, as I said before, of but a part of the people. Now, take it and give it to all, and then reserve the power to Congress to determine whether the members shall be admitted when they come here or not. Let us try that rather than try a doubtful expedient. When we try that and it fails, then I shall not say a word about reconstruction again, but will let other gentlemen control it; I will sit perfectly still and never undertake to control the question of reconstruction again.

I insist, however—I did insist twelve months ago—upon the adoption of an amendment which would have made suffrage equal to everybody. If that had been adopted, my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Dixon] would have been compelled to go for negro suffrage in Connecticut, and the southern people would have taken it, and they would take it to-day peaceably and willingly, provided they thought that our northern friends were in earnest in insisting upon their taking it; but they do not believe it. Connecticut votes it down by every county except one in the State; various other States in the North vote it down; and the southern people say, "Why do you insist that we shall adopt negro suffrage when you yourselves refuse it and reject it." It has been said, and said very properly, that to raise a child in the way it should go it is necessary to travel the way a little yourself; and in order to induce the southern people to adopt negro suffrage, to which they have just as little objection, in my opinion, as a great many of the northern people, it will be well for the northern people to adopt it for themselves. Hence I want to make it as broad as the Union; adopt it by constitutional amendment; make it applicable to South Carolina and Connecticut; make it applicable to my own State. We shall adopt it this winter anyhow in the State of Missouri; there is no doubt about that; but let us show our faith by our works and make it broad and universal, make it apply to every State in the Union. Then the South cannot regard it as a reflection upon their loyalty to the Union; they cannot regard it as an insult to them because it is taken by ourselves; it is received by us all.

But, Mr. President, even though we do not accept it for ourselves, I yet believe it is the true plan of reconstruction, and that we should proceed to the establishment of civil governments of some sort in the southern States; and if it becomes necessary to use the Army in order to prevent outbreaks against the authority of that civil government which we establish, I am willing to go to that extent. What else do you want? Is there anything else needed? Let us first establish civil government, and then let us declare that any opposition to that civil government that we establish there shall be suppressed by the military, and I will go to any extent necessary in the use of military power to put down opposition to the governments which we establish. That, in my judgment, is the proper way of reaching this thing, and I rose merely for the purpose of ascertaining how we stood.

Now, sir, the pending amendment proposes that this military government, when established, shall cease to exist whenever the southern people adopt the constitutional amendment and adopt negro suffrage. As I said, that is all there is in it, and I shall vote for the amendment, not that it accomplishes what I want to accomplish; but I shall vote for the amendment, and when the amendment is put on, that is all the bill. There is not a thing in it except that. That ceases to be effective that will not effectuate my desires on the subject, because if the southern people say, "Rather than adopt negro suffrage we will take military government," we have accomplished nothing; we have not reorganized, and still we go on, one half the Union governing themselves and the other half.

Mr. President, I desire soon to see reconstruction. I desire to see it upon a proper basis. I am willing to use civil power, and I want to use that first, because I have my fears of military power. It ought to be resorted to in times of peace as little as possible. Let us resort to the machinery of courts of justice where the laws of the land are administered rather than to the mere dictates of a military commander, and then if the civil power ceases to be effectual in the protection of civil rights let us resort to the military. That is a last resort, the dernier resort. It is a resort never to be used until all other means of effecting justice among men shall have proved unavailing. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. YATES. I do not understand the force of the argument of the Senator from Missouri, nor do I see the pertinency of his question. If we suppose that the power is in the hands of the President, that he being Commander-in-Chief of the Army can control all generals under his authority, does it follow that we may not impose upon him, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, the obligation by law to do his duty? Suppose he shall appoint some generals who are disloyal; suppose he shall appoint all generals who are disloyal; suppose he shall not assist Congress at all in the execution of this law, in the protection of the loyal citizens of the South, does it follow that we shall not impose upon him the duty to give that protection?

Sir, I conceive it to be the duty of the Senator when, for the reason he has stated, he opposes this plan, the only plan that the committee has been able after long discussion and thorough investigation to decide upon, to give to the Senate a better plan. If you take the ground that the President of the United States is to exercise this authority, and that he is the only person to exercise it, how else are we to have protection in the South or anywhere unless we impose upon the Commander-in-Chief the duty of giving that protection? Is it a fact—the Senator will not deny it—that all over the South now the civil tribunals refuse and fail to give protection to the loyal citizens? And, sir, will you hesitate to say that the President of the United States, by virtue of the authority conferred upon him by the Constitution of the United States, shall give that protection under the law? If he fails to do it, then there is another question. He is not so supreme, his power is not so unrestricted and unlimited that he is not answerable for an abuse of the power or the privileges that have been conferred upon him. Is it a fact that murders and persecutions of loyal men prevail all over the South? Is it a fact that your civil courts fail and refuse to give protection, and that no convictions are found upon indictments when they are presented?

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to ask the Senator, with his permission, if it is not the duty of the President now, through the Army of the United States, to give protection to the people of the South?

Mr. YATES. It is immaterial as to that question. If it is his duty he should do it. If he has not power under the law of Congress or under the laws of the United States to do it we should confer upon him that power.

Mr. HENDERSON. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to have him point me to the clause of this bill which requires the President to change his course of conduct in the southern States in any particular.

Mr. YATES. This bill requires the President to appoint these officers. It is entirely immaterial to the point which I am making whether the President has the power to say to the subordinate officer of General Grant that he shall not do what General Grant has commanded him to do. The Congress of the United States says that the President shall do his duty; he shall give this protection as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. If he fails to give it, then there is another question; then Congress still has the power in its own hands.

Mr. HENDERSON. With the permission of the Senator, because I am seeking light, I desire to ask him another question. I suppose the third section of the bill is the one to which he alludes:

That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, &c.

I desire to ask him this question: if he were a party in one of the courts in the State of Virginia, and he offered a negro as a witness in the case, and the court would not receive the testimony, would it be the duty of the officer in command to force the court to receive the testimony of the negro, and if the jury would not believe the testimony of the negro after it was given in, would it be the duty of the officer to compel the jury to believe it and return a verdict in accordance therewith?

Mr. YATES. I understand that this is an extraordinary proceeding; I understand that it is a summary proceeding which arises from the exigencies of the hour and of the day. I understand that protection is refused the loyal people of the South; and now I understand this bill to confer upon the President, or upon the officer who is appointed by the President, the extraordinary power, if in his judgment he shall deem it right and best and necessary to the protection of the citizen, to organize a military commission. The civil court refuses to perform its duty. Congress says if the civil court refuses to perform its duty then the officer in command shall organize a military commission, and that that commission shall give a fair trial and protection to the loyal citizens.

But, Mr. President, this is the military part of our plan of reconstruction. We must take it in connection with the other bill which is pending. We cannot control the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy; but there is one thing we can do and do in the other bill; that is, we say that the President shall appoint no Governor, he shall appoint no officer who is not loyal to the Union, who has been engaged in the war against the Union, who will not take the test oath. Now, sir, take that bill in connection with this and the plan of the Committee on Reconstruction and we have the two bills giving the protection which is necessary.

I will say one word as to the amendment before I close my remarks. I hope that we shall be unanimous in favor of this amendment. It is not proper to refer to the other House, as has been stated, but I have no doubt that this amendment will give strength to this bill in the other House and everywhere. Why, sir, this amendment only says that when the South has done all that we require, when these rebel States have done all that we require of them, when they have adopted the constitutional amendment, when they have declared in favor of universal suffrage, when they have called constitutional conventions, and in their constitutions have declared in favor of universal suffrage, when Congress has ratified the proceedings of those constitutional conventions, when they have acceded to all the terms that we require, when they have done everything which we think is necessary, then this military rule shall cease. That is right, sir. When they are admitted as States into this Union, when they have State sovereignty, when they have all their courts in operation, when they are independent States, as independent as the State of New York or Illinois, then there should be no military protection and no military authorities in those States which we would not have in the free States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to say one word. I have been reproved, as it seems, by nearly every Senator who has spoken on the subject for an allusion to the other House. If I have violated any rule of the Senate, I hope I shall be excused on account of my inexperience; but it so happens that I have heard, I presume, more than twenty times during this session the same argument. No longer ago than yesterday the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] argued against an amendment to a proposed bill which he had in charge, because to adopt the amendment would compel the bill to go back to the House, and the situation of affairs was such in the House that the bill would not be adopted. Nobody complained of that; but simply because I have undertaken to say here that the business was so jammed together in the House that it would be difficult to pass this bill with amendments, honorable Senators are exceedingly excited, and think that I have violated the rules of the Senate. If I have, I hope to be excused.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock, and I wish to say that I expect to proceed with this bill to-night until there is a final vote upon it.

Mr. GRIMES. It will be remembered that a few days ago the Senate ordered that this evening should be set aside for the prosecution of business relating to patents. The Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. WILLEY,] who is the chairman of that committee, is now absent, and I believe that the Senator from Indiana and myself are the only remnants of the committee on the floor. I do not want to interfere with this bill; and with the permission of the Senate, therefore, I will move that next Wednesday evening—

Mr. CONNESS. Oh, no; there will be time enough to fix an evening.

Mr. GRIMES. As the Senator from West Virginia is absent, I think it is due to him that he should have some day fixed, so that he shall stand exactly in the same position as he does now. If the Senator from Oregon will withdraw his motion I will say Wednesday or Thursday evening.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. GRIMES. Senators suggest Wednesday evening, and I will name that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) It is moved that Wednesday evening next at seven o'clock be assigned for the consideration of business from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I expected that my colleague would have been here before the session of the Senate this morning, and it is entirely probable that he will be here before seven o'clock. He has gone out a distance on the railroad, and probably missed the morning train, and will take the afternoon train, which will bring him to the depot about six o'clock. It was not his intention when he left to be absent to-day.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am a little surprised at the announcement of the Senator from Oregon, that he expects to press this bill to a vote to-night. It is extraordinary that a bill of this kind, that proposes to establish a military despotism over eight million people and a country larger than England, France, and Spain combined, is to be pressed to a vote in this Senate the first day it is taken up for consideration. I say I am surprised that the Senator from Oregon should make an announcement like that. I for one have no purpose to delay a vote on this bill; but, sir, this bill must receive a fair and reasonable discussion, and gentlemen must have a fair and a reasonable time for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. They shall have it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator on my left says they shall have it. How can they have it if the Senator who has the bill in charge, on the very first day it is introduced here, undertakes to announce to the Senate, as by authority, and as having charge of the bill, that it will be pressed to a vote to-night?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have often heard that notice given.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I know the Senator has heard the notice given often enough. I do not object, when a day or two or three days have been spent in the discussion of an important measure, if the Senator having charge of the bill announces that he intends to bring it to a vote. It is proper to bring a bill to a vote when it has had a reasonable discussion. But, sir, on this subject there are a good many gentlemen who desire to be heard, and they do not propose either to be compelled to be driven into this night, and the late hours of the night, in the discussion of such a measure. Sir, no such proposition has ever been made before in a civilized nation for six hundred years; and gentlemen must understand that it is a measure upon which we cannot speak in a single moment and give utterance to all that we desire to say. We expect a full, free, open discussion of this great question before it comes to a vote in this body; for, though military despotism may be established from the other side of the Potomac to the Rio Grande it has not yet come this side of that river. We are not compelled for our freedom here, nor is the citizen compelled, if he applies for a habeas corpus, even to the Chief Justice of the United States to ask the permission of some little lieutenant, dressed in a uniform with a strap on his shoulder.

Mr. President, so far as this measure is concerned, I, for one, shall speak with that freedom and earnestness with which I always speak upon great measures. While I question not the sincerity of other men I shall give utterance to what I feel, to what I think, and, if I have the power, to all that abhorrence which I feel for this proposition, which, of itself, if it be carried out, is the death-knell of the Republic.

Mr. GRIMES. I believe the question now before the Senate is on setting aside Wednesday evening next for the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on assigning Wednesday evening next for the consideration of business from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now move that the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock, for the purpose of finishing this bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose that no unfairness is desired; I cannot presume that any Senator would wish to do a thing that is not fair and right. I wish to say something to the Senate on this bill. I would have been perfectly willing to do so this afternoon had I been well enough to do it and had I been prepared. But this bill has been printed only a day, and it was not very long before the House, so as to enable us to become very fully informed about it. Mr. President, if there was but one in this body opposed to it, it would be manly to give that one man an opportunity to express his views. If the measure will not bear argument, then let it be passed in the dark hours of the night. I think it is becoming, when despotism is established in this free land, that the best blood that ever ran in mortal veins was shed to make free, that that despotism shall be established when the sun does not shed its bright light upon the earth. It is a work for darkness and not for light.

I ask, simply as a member of this Senate, that I shall be allowed to address it upon this great question when the opportunity is fair and equal and right. If Senators say we shall come here and speak when Senators have refused to come at night-time because their health is endangered by it, I shall submit and will say what I can. I am not prepared to speak now upon it. I ask another day for the minority. However small that minority may be they ought to be heard. This question thus far has been discussed by the friends of the measure. The Senator from Nevada has occupied much of the time to-day; the Senator from Oregon has been heard; the Senator from Michigan has been heard; the Senator from Missouri has been heard. Not one man belonging to what is known as the minority here has been heard upon the bill at all. Are we, then, to come in the night-time to discuss this measure? I say it is not just; it is not right. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McDougall. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. McDougall. I am aware of that. I only wish to correct a remark I think made inadvertently by the Senator from Indiana, and I ask him to withdraw his motion for a moment to enable me to do so.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly; if the Senator wishes to make a remark I withdraw the motion.

Mr. McDougall. It is the right of every Senator to be heard upon every question that comes in this Hall. There is no previous question here; and it is against all past practice of the Senate to make compacts as to when a bill shall be disposed of, or even an affirmation as to when a debate shall be closed. Every Senator has a right to a proper hearing on this floor, and to a full hearing. So it has always been adjudged; and whatever may be announced by the Senator from Oregon, who is in charge of this bill, whatever may be suggested from other quarters, I think it my duty to discuss this important question. I shall demand it as a right that I shall be heard in the Senate. I came here as a Senator authorized to be heard upon all great pending questions, and that is the case with all other Senators here. I expect that this question will be discussed fully.

Now, as to the meeting to-night, I do not like to come to a night session, but still if it is desirable to urge on the argument to an early conclusion, I do not object to that; but I insist still that the discussion shall be perfectly unembarrassed by any understanding with regard to when the debate shall close.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not see any necessity for all this excitement on the part of the Senator from Indiana. He says he is not well enough to speak to-night. If he expects to speak with more energy to-morrow, he certainly will be in better health than I ever knew him to be. He speaks earnestly and well this afternoon, and no doubt might proceed most elegantly now.

But he talks about establishing a despotism, and gets into a perfect fret about it. Why, sir, the southern States have presented nothing but a despotism for the last six years. During the rebel rule it was a despotism; the veriest despotism ever established upon earth; and since the rebel rule ceased the President of the United States certainly has governed the southern States without ever consulting Congress on the subject. If Congress has ever been consulted I am not aware of it. They have been governed. General Sickles set aside all the legislation of South Carolina; General Terry set aside a large portion of the legislation of Virginia; General Grant, if I am not very much mistaken, issued orders here to control the civil rights of citizens in the several States, and I heard no complaint about it. I believe I made some complaint here about twelve months ago; but I think, so far as the gentlemen of the Democratic party are concerned, they never raised a voice against this despotism. I have heard nothing about it.

Now, so far as this measure is concerned, I for one desire that these Senators should be heard; and inasmuch as we have no previous question, inasmuch as we cannot cut off debate, I can assure the Senator from Indiana that he shall be heard; and if he shall be too sick to-morrow, I for one shall give him an opportunity on Monday, if I can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly, at sixteen minutes to five o'clock, took a recess until seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented a memorial of employers and operatives engaged in the manufacture of hardware, praying the removal of the five per cent. internal revenue tax on manufactures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Louis F.

Whitney, late captain independent company United States volunteers, and W. H. Ortora, first lieutenant and late captain independent company United States volunteers, praying compensation for their services from the date of their commissions to the date of their discharge; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LANE presented the memorial of David D. Porter, rear admiral United States Navy, praying that relief may be granted to the widow and children of the late D. P. Heap, paymaster United States Army, who died from disease contracted in the service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) for the relief of Thomas W. Fry, jr., late captain and acting quartermaster, Alton, Illinois; the bill (H. R. No. 1168) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth F. Chipman, widow of Major Charles Chipman, deceased; the joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of Almonson Eaton, receiver of public money at the land office at Stevens's Point, Wisconsin; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) for the relief of James J. Hudnall, were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 1078) to amend section two, chapter one hundred and twenty-nine of public acts of 1849; and the bill (H. R. No. 1170) for the relief of Colonel L. C. Houck, of Tennessee, were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 607) to arch Tiber creek north of Pennsylvania avenue; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 178) to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. WILSON also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 608) proposing conditions upon which the States lately in rebellion may resume their practical relations to the Government of the United States; which was read twice by its title, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 506) to authorize the trustees of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church to sell square No. 235 in the city of Washington; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 163) to provide in certain cases for the removal of alcohol from bonded warehouse free from internal tax.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 251) to extend the time for codifying the laws relating to customs, authorized by the joint resolution approved July 26, 1866;

A bill (H. R. No. 431) providing for the punishment of certain crimes therein named in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 571) to regulate proceedings before justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 643) to alter the places for holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district;

A bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and to protect national cemeteries.

A bill (H. R. No. 848) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home," approved July 25, 1866;

A bill (H. R. No. 907) to amend the law of the District of Columbia in relation to judicial proceedings therein;

A bill (H. R. No. 1144) for the relief of John Gray, a revolutionary soldier;

A bill (H. R. No. 1053) granting an increased pension to John J. Sohan; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1058) for the relief of the minor children of Solomon Long.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 836) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 99) for the relief of Paul A. Forbes, under his contract with the Navy Department for building and furnishing the steam-screw sloop-of-war Idaho.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the District of Columbia, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MAYNARD, of Tennessee, Mr. J. F. FARNSWORTH, of Illinois, and Mr. F. C. LE BLOND, of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the joint resolution of the Senate No. 90, to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia, except the amendment of the Senate which strikes out the sixth section of the amendment of the House, asked a conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. W. B. ALLISON, of Iowa, Mr. J. A. GARNFIELD, of Ohio, and Mr. JOHN HOGAN, of Missouri, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. No. 146) for the relief of Charles Clark, marshal of the United States for the district of Maine; and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1143.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not believe there is a quorum present.

The question being taken, there were, on a division—ayes 9, noes 5; no quorum voting.

Mr. GRIMES. Is it in order to move a call of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of Senators.

Mr. GRIMES. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 14, noes 2.

The Sergeant-at-Arms (at twelve minutes past seven o'clock) was furnished with a list of absentees, and directed by the President pro tempore to wait upon the absent Senators and request their attendance.

Mr. WILLIAMS, (at twenty minutes past seven.) I now renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1143.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until it is ascertained that a quorum is present the Chair cannot entertain any motion except to adjourn or to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. NESMITH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 3, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, McDougall, and Nesmith—3.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fogg, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, and Yates—21.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This vote discloses the presence of a quorum, and the Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. After the word "be," in line eight, I move to insert the word "impartially," and in the same line to strike out the word "all." The effect of this amendment will be to provide for impartial, instead of universal suffrage. As the original amendment now reads, I suppose it would not allow the States to limit suffrage, and I think that would hardly be the purpose of the mover of the amendment. It requires that by their constitutions the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens. Hardly anybody, I think, is desirous of voting for that. The amendment which I propose will provide for impartial suffrage to male citizens.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I find myself in a somewhat awkward position in reference to this amendment. So utterly am I opposed to this bill, and so confident am I that if it be placed in any shape or form it cannot command my vote or the vote of any person in this country entertaining similar views to myself, that I cannot allow myself to vote for any of the proposed amendments to it. It matters but little to me, and it will matter but little to the people of the South and to the people of this country, if State governments are subverted there, if constitutional liberty is struck down, whether there be impartial suffrage or manhood suffrage. The passage of this bill, if it shall become an act either by the signature of the President or by the vote of Congress over a veto, is in my judgment, as we heard this afternoon, the death-knell, not only of the Republic, but of civil and constitutional liberty in this country. I cannot touch it in any shape, form, or fashion, or have anything to do with trying to amend it; but if it be the determination of those who exercise political power in this country to put a final end forever to constitutional liberty, and all hope of constitutional liberty in this land, let the dose be as poisonous as possible. I would not have the pill coated.

Mr. DAVIS. I am certainly as much opposed to this bill as the honorable Senator from Delaware, but I shall not hesitate one instant in voting for this amendment; and I must admit that it is a matter of surprise to me that my able and true friend cannot get his own consent to vote for such an amendment as this. Certainly if there is a choice between evils at all, that between impartial and universal suffrage, in favor of the former, is to my mind so palpable that I cannot understand upon what principle or reason my honorable friend refuses to vote for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The honorable Senator from Kentucky will excuse me; but he does not look at this in the same light that I do. I cannot touch, taste, or handle the unclean thing.

Mr. DAVIS. I should greatly prefer to touch, taste, or handle a little unclean thing than a great big one. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. Well, Mr. President, I have a hope, perhaps, which the honorable Senator has not. In my judgment there is not a single provision in this bill that is constitutional and will stand the test in any court of justice, unless you may call that a court of justice which is determined to violate the Constitution and to outrage the civil rights of the people; and if the question must come before the courts, let it be presented in as odious a form as possible.

What, sir, are we doing? I shall not now enter into a discussion of this question, though I intend to do so before the bill is finally passed; but what do we hear here? The agent reconstructing the principal! What is the Federal Government? A mere agent created by the States of this Union with no particle of original inherent sovereignty about it. And that Federal Government, established by a written Constitution defining its powers, a Government simply of delegated powers, now assumes in the face of the people of this country, and in the eyes of the world, to undertake to reconstruct its creator! How did the Federal Government have an existence? It was because the people of the thirteen original States, acting separately for themselves, chose to establish this Federal Government with certain specified and limited powers. And I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that, in the lines of the history of the formation of the Constitution, in defiance of all the teachings of the fathers, and in contravention of every principle of adjudicated constitutional law, any court will ever hold this bill to be constitutional or worth the paper that it is written on; and let it not be supposed that outraged rights will not seek the peaceable redress of the courts of law to test the constitutionality of this measure. In my judgment—I know able men for whose judgment I have respect differ from me—this bill is wholly unwarranted by the Constitution of the country, and for that reason I do not feel that awful dread of its passage which under other circumstances I should. But, sir, I do not wish to touch it as I said before; I will have nothing to do with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to know of the Senator from Indiana what the effect of the amendment will be.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The effect of my amendment will be to provide for impartial suffrage instead of the present provision in the original amendment, which is that all male citizens shall be allowed to exercise the elective franchise, taking away from the State the power to disfranchise anybody except for rebellion or felony.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I sincerely hope that amendment will be adopted, and if the bill is to pass I attach very great importance to it, so far as the effect which it is likely to produce in the States of the South is concerned. My opinion is, from all the information which I have been able to obtain, that if the reconstruction of the States of the South could take place upon the basis of what is called impartial suffrage, that is to say, upon such qualifications as should apply alike to all classes and colors, the people of the South would in good faith undertake the work with a view to change their constitutions and laws in such a way as to produce that result. But if it be insisted as a condition precedent that they shall adopt universal suffrage, I believe the people of the South will refuse to do anything under the provision, and would prefer to live under a military government.

Mr. President, it is hardly possible for gentlemen who reside in the free States of the North to conceive the great difference which exists between the mass of the colored people of the South and the colored people of the northern States. We all know it is the more enterprising of the colored men who have gone from the South to the North, generally those who have been educated in hotels, in steamboats, and in families, who have mingled with freemen and have been freemen themselves for a long time, have families, support themselves, provide for themselves, and are educated in the habits and thoughts and feelings and responsibilities of freemen. The colored men of Massachusetts, New York, and Wisconsin are of a class as compared with the mass of the colored men of the South very greatly their superiors. The proposition from any statesman that the mass of the colored people of the South who have just been released from bondage on the plantations should hold the elective franchise and determine the interests of the States and the nation, is to me unaccountable.

I believe that if an amendment is put upon the bill which requires as a condition precedent to getting rid of military governments, that the people of the South shall accept universal suffrage, in the lower States where the majority of the population are negroes, as is the case in some of them, they will refuse it altogether and prefer living under the government of those who carry the sword. Sir, it is a dangerous experiment to undertake to govern any people for any length of time by the sword. You accustom them, in all their habits, to look not to civil law for their rights, but to look to the word of a man who is an absolute despot, who hears and decides without trial, upon impulse, from caprice, from whose decision there is no appeal. To educate a people for years under such a system is absolutely to destroy republican government, and the very foundations of republican government, for they cannot exist where a people is educated to despotism.

Now, Mr. President, I hope the gentlemen who are in the majority in this Senate, who of course control this matter as they please, will seriously weigh this question, because upon it may depend whether the people of the South will accept your constitutional amendment and accept the proposition which is necessary to get rid of military domination.

Mr. WILSON. Make them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My friend says make them accept it. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that is the true language of a statesman, to say to a people who, like ourselves, have been educated in the largest liberty, a people in whose veins the Anglo-Saxon blood is flowing, which for a thousand years has been fighting against despotism in every form, "You must accept this position at the point of the bayonet or forever live with the bayonet at your throats?" Is that the way to make peace? Disfranchise the whites and put the rule in these States into the hands of the blacks and hold the whites in subjection at the point of the bayonet, is that what you call making peace? Is that organizing a civil government which is to educate the people up to a republican form of government?

But, Mr. President, the suggestion made by the honorable Senator has drawn me aside from the argument which I was pursuing, and I was presenting it rather in the nature of an appeal to the gentlemen who control this majority, and who as it would seem are determined to pass this bill in some shape. If it is to be passed, let it come in such a shape that the people of the South will accept it. Why make it impracticable? Why put it in such a position that they cannot and will not accept it, and then make their non-acceptance of it an excuse for holding them under military domination?

But, sir, I do not care to go into the discussion of this bill at the present time. Before it is disposed of, with the leave of the Senate, I will express my views upon the general subject; and in connection with that, in order that I may not trespass more upon the time of the Senate than I ought, it is my purpose also to speak on a matter which concerns myself personally with reference to the resolutions which have been laid on your table from the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. WILSON. That is not in order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On this bill the Senator from Massachusetts remarks that such an address on my part would not be in order. Mr. President, it is precisely in order, as I shall show to the honorable Senator, for it is on the very questions now pending that the war on me began, and therefore these very questions which are culminating in the bills now before the Senate are the questions upon which I have been instructed to resign. They are the same questions, and as I said, for the purpose of not trespassing upon the Senate on more than one occasion in the discussion of the same subject-matter, I will, before the bill passes, take an opportunity to speak upon that matter to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON. I made a side remark which the Senator from Wisconsin has chosen to comment upon before the Senate. He asked if the remark made be statesmanship. I wish to say to the Senator that I think it is statesmanship to settle this question of reconstruction upon the solid basis of the perfect equality of rights and privileges among citizens of the United States. Colored men are citizens, and they have just as much right as this race whose blood has been fighting against oppression for a thousand years, as he says, and any settlement of this civil war upon any other basis than perfect equality of rights and privileges among citizens of the United States is not statesmanship; it is mere trifling; only keeping open questions for future controversy. Nothing is settled unless it is settled upon the basis of justice.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the honorable Senator if this amendment does not put whites and blacks upon the same ground precisely, so that whatever qualification is required of one shall be required of the other. Is there any inequality in that?

Mr. WILSON. We prepared a constitutional amendment, and we have submitted it to the country. I think that amendment is often unvalued. I believe its adoption as a part of the Constitution of the United States would settle all these questions in ninety days. They have refused it. Now, sir, I would require them to adopt it, to adopt manhood suffrage, and to give equality of rights and privileges to all citizens, without distinction of color. We have the power to do it; we have the right to do it on account of their rebellion; and I would exercise the power and the right, and I believe that to be for their interest and for the interest of the whole country. Impartial suffrage means nothing more nor less than the exclusion of nearly all the colored persons from the polls. That is plain and palpable. The only opportunity of these men is to establish universal suffrage on the basis of manhood.

The civil rights bill passed in the spring of 1866. I have a partial list of outrages and murders perpetrated in the rebel States since the passage of that act, officially reported. All admit that the cases officially reported make but a small portion of the outrages or murders committed. From April to December, in Virginia, 18 murders and 105 burglaries in one county alone; in North Carolina, 15 murders of freedmen were committed and 86 outrages; some of the number were assaults with intent to kill; in South Carolina, 29 murders and 64 outrages; in Georgia, 79 murders; in Mississippi, 84 murders; in Kentucky, 19 murders; in Texas, 74 murders, and 10 mortally wounded. Since the passage of the civil rights law 375 murders of freedmen have been committed in the rebel States, and 536 outrages; these outrages and murders were officially reported, and the victims of the Memphis riot and the New Orleans massacre are not included.

This official list of murders and outrages in Texas since the passage of the civil rights act is an illustration of the murders and outrages in the rebel States. Let it be remembered that these are but a small part of the crimes perpetrated:

STATE OF TEXAS.

Date.	Name and Description of Victim.	Locality.	Nature of Outrage.	Remarks.
1866. April.	One freedman, Green Taylor.	Washington county.	Murdered.	By James Hall, who was tried by military commission and acquitted.
	One freedman, Joe Mayfield.	Washington county.	Murdered.	By William Benton, who was tried by military commission and acquitted.
	One freedwoman, Maria Mayfield.	Washington county.	Murdered.	By William Benton, who was tried by military commission and acquitted.
	One freedman, Milton.	De Witt county.	Murdered.	By parties unknown. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, name unknown.	Liberty county.	Murdered.	By parties unknown. No action by the civil authorities reported.
May.	One freedman, Harry Jones.	Fayette county.	Murdered.	By R. A. Jones, for interfering while Jones was whipping the freedman's wife. No action.
	One freedman, Godfrey Robinson.	Fayette county.	Murdered.	By parties unknown, while out herding sheep. Shot through body, and head cut off.
	One freedman, Harvey Milligan.	Austin county.	Murdered.	By A. M. Clay. Murderer tried and convicted by military commission.
	One freedman, name unknown.	Austin county.	Murdered.	By B. B. Lee. Murderer tried and convicted by military commission.
	One freedman, Luke Woodward.	Austin county.	Murdered.	By parties unknown. No action reported as having been taken by civil authorities.
	One freedman, Jerry Roberts.	Harris county.	Murdered.	By Buck Chandler and L. Bates. No action reported as having been taken by the civil authorities.
	One freedman, William Wright.	Victoria county.	Murdered.	By unknown white man. No action reported as having been taken by the civil authorities.
	One freedman, John.	Refugio county.	Murdered.	By Daniel Dougherty. No action reported as having been taken by the civil authorities.
	One freedman, James Jordan.	Refugio county.	Murdered.	By parties unknown. Shot while carrying a letter to the bureau agent at Victoria.
	One freedman, name unknown.	Fort Bend county.	Murdered.	By William S. Collins. Particulars unknown. No action by the civil authorities reported.
June.	One freedman, Leonard Gee.	Washington county.	Murdered.	Found tied and murdered. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Peter Higgins.	Harris county.	Murdered.	Called out of his house at night and shot. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Butler.	Calhoun county.	Murdered.	Wanton and unprovoked murder. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Martin Cromwell.	Victoria county.	Murdered.	By Alexander Cromwell. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, C. W. Brown.	Liberty county.	Shot through the body.	Reported by Captain Frank Holsinger. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	Two freedmen, names not stated.	Liberty.	Murdered.	By a white man. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	Three freedmen, names not stated.	Bastrop county.	Murdered.	Called to his door at night and shot by parties unknown. No action reported.
	One freedman, Jacob Stone.	Grayson county.	Murdered.	By C. J. Bennett, who escaped. No action by the civil authorities reported.
July.	One freedman, name unknown.	Robertson county.	Murdered.	Shot for not "raising his hat." No action by the civil authorities reported.
	Two freedmen, father and son.	Robertson county.	Murdered.	By William Tate, who escaped. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Isaac Hedrick.	Washington county.	Murdered.	By William Fields, who escaped. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, McCovers.	Lamar county.	Murdered.	By Cook Jones, who escaped. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Gabo.	Titus county.	Murdered.	Unknown organized party. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Ben.	Washington county.	Murdered.	By W. James. No cause. No action by the civil authorities reported.
August.	One freedman, L. Holmes.	Brazoria county.	Murdered.	By William Plaugh. No cause. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedwoman, name unknown.	Tarrant county.	Murdered.	Taken from her house with another freedwoman: both raped—this one murdered.
	One freedman, J. Webb.	Grayson county.	Murdered.	By J. B. Hills and others, for "horse-stealing." No action by the civil authorities reported.
September.	One freedman, T. Hargus.	Calhoun county.	Murdered.	By H. Taylor and J. Clark. No action by the civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Seaton.	Barleson county.	Murdered.	Found murdered, by parties unknown. No action by civil authorities.
	One freedman, William.	Fort Bend county.	Murdered.	By an armed party at night, who took him from the custody of the civil authorities.
	One freedman, Jack Sheppard.	Fort Bend county.	Murdered.	By G. C. Harrison, who was arrested and put under $5,000 bonds by J. C. De Gress, provost marshal.
	One freedman, Washington.	Washington county.	Murdered.	By one Murray, in cold blood. No action by civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, M. White.	Grayson county.	Murdered.	Shot while running away from a white man, who wanted to rob him.
	One freedman, Jack Thomas.	Grayson county.	Murdered.	Called up at a late hour and shot by parties unknown. No action reported as having been taken by the State civil authorities for the arrest of the guilty.
	One freedman, J. Douglas.	Grayson county.	Murdered.	By two desperadoes, who said they wanted to thin out the niggers a little.
	Three freedmen, names unknown.	Fannin county.	Murdered.	By two white men, who wanted his horse. No action by civil authorities.
	One freedman, name unknown.	Grayson county.	Murdered.	By a party, who then robbed and burned his house. No action by civil authorities.
	One freedman, Bill.	Fannin county.	Murdered.	Found dead. Had been before threatened for making complaint to the bureau agent.
October.	Two freedmen, names unknown.	Gaudalupe county.	Murdered.	By a gang of armed white men. The grand jury dare not indict the criminals.
November.	One freedman, S. Alexander.	Near Marshall county.	Highway robbery.	For calling a young man "Thomas," instead of "Master Thomas."
December.	One freedman, name unknown.	Prairie Lea.	Publicly whipped.	No action reported as having been taken by the civil authorities.
	One freedman, name unknown.	Prairie Lea.	Shot and severely wounded.	By a white man named Aaron Boyce. No action taken by civil authorities.
	One freedman, E. Parson.	Austin.	Shot and severely wounded.	By a white man, who was held for trial by a justice of the peace at the instance of the bureau.
	One freedman, colored preacher.	Near Houston.	Shot and dangerously wounded.	And robbed by a party of white men. No action by civil authorities reported.
	One freedman, Nat. Henlin.	Near Austin.	Shot and severely wounded.	Found dead, backed, gagged and shot. Employer of freedmen suspected. General Gregory, assistant commissioner, in his report of June 18, 1866, says: "Before the civil authorities of Texas, where a negro is the victim, acquittal follows murder as a matter of course."
	One freedman, name not stated.	Near Houston.	Murdered.

ARKANSAS.

General J. W. Sprague, assistant commissioner, in forwarding this report, says:

"In some parts of the State, (Arkansas,) particularly in the southeast and southwest, freedmen's lives are threatened if they report their wrongs to the agent of the bureau, and in many instances the persons making reports are missed and never heard of after. I believe the murders herein reported do not embrace one half the number that have been committed during the time mentioned. These murders as reported to me, would, in any but a southern State, be regarded and punished as 'murder in the first degree.' I do not know of a single instance where the guilty parties are in prison or have been punished."

General Ord has recently stated that the freedmen and Union men were outraged and murdered, and that the civil authorities yield no protection.

General Sheridan, commanding the department of the Gulf, reports that—

"Homicides are frequent in some localities. The trial of a white man for the killing of a freedman can, in the existing condition of society in this State, be considered nothing more nor less than a mere farce."

I hope Senators will not forget this declaration of this brilliant soldier, whose name is dear to the country.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator from Maryland, who offered this amendment, is not present, or I suppose he would modify it. As it is drawn it has a much more expansive operation, I dare say, than was intended by him. The language appears to me, inadvertently no doubt, drawn so as to comprise every male person above the age of twenty-one years, with the exceptions specifically mentioned in the latter part of the section. There was, doubtless, no intention to exclude qualifications relating to taxability, such as we have in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and more particularly provisions relating to residence, requiring persons to reside within the State and within the election district a certain length of time, as a guarantee against the enormous frauds with which our elections would be deluged without some such provision. I presume it was not intended to exclude provisions of that character, which would undoubtedly, if adopted by any State, exclude large numbers of persons directly and clearly included within the language of this amendment: "The elective franchise shall be enjoyed"—the expression is absolute—"by all male citizens of the United States." And afterward it mentions the discrimination of race or color, and mentions the exceptions from its operation, to wit: rebels who have been engaged in the war against us, or persons who have committed felony at the common law. There are good many electoral provisions which exclude other persons, and very properly. I have mentioned the most striking one—the qualification of residence, which is everywhere indispensable to protect elections against fraud. Sir, before this amendment is voted upon its language ought to undergo some revision. Surely these results were never intended, and I presume if the Senator from Maryland were present, on his attention being called to these points, he would at once modify his proposition.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, I agree with the propriety of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, without, however, agreeing to the original amendment, which, as it stands, includes all citizens of the United States twenty-one years of age and over, with the exceptions named. I would ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he thinks it wise or prudent that we should have sixty thousand Chinese voters in the State of California? Such a provision, in the shape which is now offered, would force upon us sixty thousand Chinese votes, who come here to California, hired by companies, to make no real home here in point of fact, and whose bones are carried home to China, they not being willing to be buried in our land.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are not citizens.

Mr. McDUGALL. They are within the rule of the law. If the railroad is completed across this continent, and ready and rapid communication had with China, we may have as many Chinamen and Malays and East Indians in California as we have of our own race. Now the Chinese race are far less homogeneous with us than the African race. They have not a bit of sentiment, of feeling, in common with us. They come here simply to make what they can, and return to their own homes, and if they die here their bones are carried home.

Carrying out the principle advanced by the Senator from Massachusetts, the law would make them electors, would give them the privilege of the elective franchise throughout this country. A more demoralized people, a people of less moral principle is not known on the face of the globe. Their oath cannot be taken in court without many ceremonies. Falsehood they hold to be their right; and it is their common practice in their own courts, unless held by some strict and very stringent law. What is true of the Chinaman, the Malayan, the East Indian, is true of the field-hands of Mississippi and South Carolina and Alabama, who are as ignorant, as low as when they were taken slaves by the King of Dahomey and sold upon the Guinea coast. And this is to make them a part and parcel of this Government, to take part in the reestablishment of our institutions. Out of the four million negroes I suppose you might possibly get five hundred thousand voters, three or four hundred of whom, in the cotton and sugar-planting States, might have intelligence enough to exercise the elective franchise. The rest of them are but savages; docile savages, because they are held in subjection by the exercise of superior forces.

It is for these reasons that I cannot support this amendment. It seems to me that gentlemen urging this policy must be ignorant of the character of the population in the planting States. I do not speak of the border States, nor of the colored population in the northern States, but I speak of the great body of this population in the planting States, the field-hands. They have no families, they have no education, they have no information. They have not the first idea of liberty except escape from labor, not knowing that labor is one of the first laws. In forcing such a policy on the South we are forcing them again into a local rebellion, for can you suppose that the intelligent population of the South can submit to be ruled and governed by that class of men? It is impossible; it is not in the nature of things.

But, says the Senator from Massachusetts, we will impose these measures upon them and force them to accept them. Sir, there is no such thing as force in the moral law except the force that comes from moral conviction, and that conviction does not exist among the intelligent classes at the South on this point. You may use the force of the bayonet, but I think that has been employed about sufficiently for the next decade. This application of force, as suggested by the Senator, the force of legislation, will be very much like the law whereby we undertook to extinguish the crime of polygamy in Utah Territory several years ago. It passed the Senate with only two dissenting voices, my then colleague's and my own, because we said it was all nonsense; the law had no power and could have no influence. The truth is that if the colored population of the South do not yield a willing subservience, as I think they will, to those who have employed them and who have previously owned them, they will come in direct hostile conflict, and they will go out as have the red men from the forest and the mountain.

Eighteen years ago in a beautiful valley of my own State inhabited three or four tribes of Indians, half Christianized, quiet, and they cultivated the land; not at war with us, not in collision with us; but still, as we advanced upon them, and they came in contact with us, they wasted away like the snow before the sun, and in ten years of all those twenty-five thousand there were not twenty-five left. If the races in the South be antagonized in this manner, by placing them on this level of equality, so that they shall take part in the Government, the inferior as against the white race, will waste away in the same manner.

I have been always in favor of the freedom of the negro; I am in favor of it now; I am in favor of his enjoying all civil rights; but we have already sufficiently demoralized the elective franchise in this country. It would be probably safer and better for us and our institutions would be better founded if there had been a little more care about the distribution of the elective franchise. To extend it now to large masses of those known to be altogether ignorant, altogether unfit for participation in government, seems to me to be an outrage upon our civilization and an outrage upon the very idea of our institutions.

I have not been able to conceive of any reason why such a policy should be advocated, except it be that those who are advocating their right to the elective franchise do not know the people of whom they speak. I know the Senator from Massachusetts may find intelligent colored men in Boston and throughout Massachusetts, who can probably as well exercise the elective franchise as many of the white population, and that may be said truly of many in the States of the North and in some of the border States. I do not question that; but that is not the proposition now pending. It is to introduce the whole of the late slave population of the South, uneducated, uninformed, to force them into the rights of citizenship and the right to exercise the elective franchise. The result will be this: they will be taken by the persons who employ them and on whom they are dependant and carried by the hundred and voted at the will of their employers; or if they fail to do so they will come to grief. That will be the result of the present condition of things; a result that should be avoided. Now, suppose you carry out the same principle in California: you introduce the Chinamen, a population that may accumulate with great rapidity. The people of the Pacific coast will not consent to it, will not submit to it, and it will lead to violence and perhaps what may be called local revolution. The principle of this amendment invites all these things, and it is a dangerous system at the present time. Such a thing may be introduced in the course of years, but at the present time it is not only mischievous but dangerous. Therefore, while I would support the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, I altogether oppose the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LANE. I shall vote for this amendment, believing that it is necessary to make a perfect system for the restoration of the lately rebellious States.

Mr. CONNESS. Let me ask the Senator what amendment he means—the amendment to the amendment now pending?

Mr. LANE. The amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Oregon, from the Pacific slope. I shall vote for that amendment with great pleasure.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand that that is proposed by the Senator from Oregon? I thought it came from the Senator from Maryland on the Democratic side of the House.

Mr. LANE. I see Mr. WILLIAMS's name to it as it is printed on my table.

Mr. SUMNER. He has not moved it, as I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON. He did move it yesterday.

Mr. SUMNER. It is moved by the Senator from Maryland, I understand.

Mr. LANE. Well, Mr. WILLIAMS's name is on the printed amendment in my hand, anyhow.

Mr. SUMNER. I rather think he has thought better of it since.

Mr. LANE. Either indorsement is quite sufficient for my purpose. I shall vote for it no matter who introduced it. The bill which has been passed by the House of Representatives contemplates one object, a very urgent, and a very important object; the amendment contemplates another; both are necessary, in my opinion, to make any perfect system of restoration in the rebel States.

The bill as it passed the House of Representatives contemplates the establishment of five military districts in the insurrectionary States, over each of which an officer not below the rank of a brigadier general shall be appointed to command for the purpose of securing the rights of persons and property to the citizens of those States. So far, I think, it is perfectly right and proper. I believe that the Congress of the United States alone has a right to deal with this question of reconstruction, to fix the condition of the States and the terms upon which they shall be admitted to representation, and I think the provisions of this bill are admirably calculated to secure this purpose. The great object is to secure the loyal people in their rights; but it is essentially and to all intents and purposes a military government, a police regulation, now necessary in order to protect loyal people, black and white. Hence I shall vote for the bill. But the amendment proposes another and entirely different thing, and that is that at some time military government shall cease and civil government shall be established upon terms, as I conceive, perfectly safe and secure to the loyal people there and everywhere, and guaranteeing the universal rights of all men under the amendment.

I shall oppose the amendment of my distinguished colleague from Indiana to substitute impartial suffrage for universal suffrage and for this reason: the term "impartial suffrage" is calculated to mislead and to deceive. Real impartial suffrage would be that no test or no condition should be applied to the exercise of suffrage by the colored man that was not applied to its exercise by the white man. Although the word "impartial" is used, it will be exceedingly oppressive and unjust in its operation practically. Take the test of education; the negro has not been permitted to be educated; you will not permit him to vote, because he cannot read, and you have made it a felony to teach him to read; therefore impartial suffrage would operate in favor of the rebel citizen and against the negro. Take a property qualification and the result would be the same.

Mr. BROWN. I would suggest to the Senator as another illustration of what may be done under impartial suffrage: they might declare that nobody except those who had served in the rebel army should vote, and that would be impartial suffrage.

Mr. LANE. I am opposed to that. I look upon this term "impartial suffrage" as producing nothing but evil and that continually. I stand now for the reconstruction of the southern States upon universal manhood suffrage, the fatherhood of God over us all, and the brotherhood of universal humanity; and no other principle will ever restore the southern States with safety and security to the people of the United States. I am against all such tests as property or education or any aristocratic exclusion of the colored man. We stand now upon the broad platform of universal rights. At the last session of Congress we passed a constitutional amendment. We submitted it to the southern States. It was liberal—liberal beyond all precedent. They have rejected it. There is no hope of their affirmation of that constitutional amendment at present. But if this amendment shall be adopted we are perfectly secure upon any system of reconstruction growing out of this bill.

What then is this amendment, and what does it contemplate? It provides—

That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when any one of the late so-called Confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects, and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion, or for felony at common law, and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection, and when the Constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

When the provisions of this amendment are carried out; when the constitutional amendment of the last session is adopted; when the people of these States shall by their own constitutions give universal manhood suffrage; when those constitutions shall be submitted to the people of those States and ratified; when they shall be republican in their character and receive the sanction of Congress, then these States are to be entitled to representation; and in the name of God should they not be entitled to representation when they shall have performed all these things? When are they to be entitled to representation? Are we to have consuls and pro-consuls and standing armies and a military despotism over the rebel States, or are we at some time to look to the restoration of civil authority and a republican form of government under the Constitution? I apprehend great danger from the rebel rule in the southern States, but if I read aright the history of the world, I apprehend great danger from military rule under the forms of republican government. Every republic that has existed heretofore has felt and appreciated the same danger from military rule. I honestly look to the restoration of the southern States. I look to it under a civil form of government, guarded and protected so that the rights of every loyal man, black and white, shall be secured; and the moment that happens I do not want any military government to exist one single moment longer, not for one single moment longer than we can safely organize civil governments in the rebellious States.

Now, Mr. President, there are two theories of restoration: one is that you shall place these rebel States under military rule. For all purposes of police and the protection of the rights of individual citizens I say give military rule and protection; but not as a permanent system. I presume no member of the Senate will say that a military government is the proper government for the States lately in rebellion one moment longer than civil governments can be restored with perfect safety to the loyal people there and the loyal people in the loyal States. I have endeavored to show you that if this amendment should be adopted the rights of the people are perfectly secure, and a civil government is inaugurated in all the rebel States; they adopt the constitutional amendment; they adopt the civil rights bill, and that provision in it that guarantees perfect equality before the law to all citizens, black and white; they form a constitution republican in form; submit it to their people, then submit it to Congress; then ask the admission of their members. What other conditions are necessary for our security? What other conditions can be necessary for our security? The truth is that this amendment, in my opinion, strikes the key-note of restoration, coupled with the bill presented by the Senator from Oregon. Give a greater police force to enforce laws and protect rights, and then let these people know upon what terms they can reorganize their government, and let the government become as soon as possible a government of civil laws rather than military rule.

Mr. WILLEY. It is with some reluctance that I shall feel constrained to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] to the amendment. I do not think that it perfectly accomplishes in the direction in which it proposes to operate the objects which I suppose he contemplates in the amendment, and which I should like to see incorporated in some other form in the amendment, but perhaps it does so substantially.

I have, I must confess, Mr. President, some reluctance to voting for the amendment at all, but the reasons suggested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LANE] preponderate against the doubts I have in voting for it. I do not think the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] to the amendment is properly subject to the criticism which has been made against it, and especially the criticism suggested by the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BROWN.] It is very true that taking an extreme case, which indeed it seems to me is hardly a supposable one, it may illustrate the idea of the Senator from Missouri; but while it is hardly probable that any of these States would adopt a provision in the constitution of a character so extreme and so extraordinary as that mentioned by the Senator from Missouri, yet any provision of that character or akin to that character, is subject at last to revision by Congress under another provision in this bill, because the constitution, whatever it may be, must be submitted to the approval of Congress, and Congress must judge and be satisfied before it gives its approval that it is republican in form. In short, Congress, as I understand it, must be satisfied, under the provisions of this bill, before it accepts the constitution that any State shall see proper to make under the operation of this amendment, if it should become a law, and therefore there can be no danger in point of fact in the direction indicated by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN. I certainly did not anticipate any danger in that direction, but I simply gave it as an illustration of how the word "impartial" might be perverted. It was simply by way of illustration, and not from any apprehension in that quarter.

Mr. WILLEY. Very well; there being no apprehension in that quarter, I think the point of the Senator's objection is answered by his remarks just now. But then, Mr. President, it seems to me there ought to be some restriction of the character indicated by the amendment of the Senator from Indiana in this provision. There is great force in the suggestions of the Senator from California. Classes of population from abroad, the Chinese and other classes of people, may be introduced into these States, and it may be necessary for the public welfare and for the public peace for the States themselves to have some authority by which they shall so regulate the exercise of the elective franchise as to prevent detriment to the public welfare and peace.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator is aware that the Chinese are foreigners and are not citizens, nor are they admitted to citizenship in California, and consequently they would not be voters under this bill.

Mr. WILLEY. Very well. The children of foreigners, partaking of all their nature, their education, &c., must be incorporated into the body-politic under the operation of such a constitutional amendment as is contemplated by this provision and the civil rights bill. What I mean to say is this: that there may, in the history of a State, be introduced into the population of the State an element of population or a people whom it would be dangerous to be allowed to be introduced into the body-politic, or to have the exercise of the political power in that State. On the other hand, any danger from the introduction of the word "impartial," or some equivalent word, would be obviated by the fact that whatsoever constitution any State may ordain under the provisions of this amendment shall be subject to the approval of Congress, and cannot have any legal validity under this provision until it has the sanction of Congress, who is to judge whether it is republican in form or not. Therefore it seems to me it would be wiser and better to allow some restrictive term to be introduced into this provision so as to allow those States in the future, when a real necessity shall arise for it, to limit the exercise of the right of suffrage.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What constitutes a citizen is defined in the civil rights bill, and now every citizen of twenty-one years and every other person who was here at the time the civil rights bill was passed is a citizen.

Mr. WILLEY. I do not propose to go into the construction of the civil rights bill; but the idea which I intend to convey is that it may well be supposed that in the future of our country, or even at the present time, there may be a class of population now existing in some of the States, or to be hereafter introduced into those States, whom it would be wise and proper for the peace and welfare of the State to exclude from the exercise of the right of suffrage; while any danger growing out of an injudicious or arbitrary exercise of the authority that will be provided by the introduction of this amendment into the provision can be obviated by the fact that whatsoever it shall be is subject to the approval of Congress. Congress, at least, is to be the ultimate judge, and no constitution can have any validity until it receives the sanction of Congress under the provisions of this act.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I shall be constrained to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment; and I desire here to make my confession that I shall vote for the main amendment with extreme reluctance, and one of the principal reasons why I shall do so is, that it does place these States upon a condition of inequality under the Government. By this provision we are imposing arbitrarily upon these States conditions which we are not willing to assume for ourselves; but, sir, I am so exceedingly desirous to see connected with this military bill some provision looking to the civil reorganization of those States that I shall be constrained to vote for it whether the amendment of the Senator from Indiana prevails or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the proposed amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will withdraw the amendment which I proposed and submit it to the Senate when the bill comes into the Senate. I do this at the suggestion of some of the friends of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the amendment is withdrawn; and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the amendment, as the Senate are aware, was not proposed by me in the first instance. It came from the Senator from Oregon, and I supposed had received the assent of the gentlemen of the Senate with whom he is politically associated. I was very much surprised, therefore, this morning when he rose and informed us that it was his purpose to withdraw it, because he believed that it might either in the House cause a defeat of the bill, or that its defeat might be effected by a presidential veto. I was amazed for two reasons: first, because I supposed the honorable member had maturely considered the amendment and had come to the conclusion that without it the bill was objectionable. I was amazed because to me it seems very singular that the Senate of the United States should be controlled in the exercise of its own judgment by the apprehended conduct of the other branch, and, if possible, yet more amazed that it was to be controlled by the possible action of the Executive. Mr. President, in the beginning of the Government either of these references would have been considered out of order. The Senate of the United States is an independent body, and authorized and bound, in my judgment, to exercise its own discretion upon all matters submitted to it, without the slightest regard to what they may suppose to be the opinions of any other department of the Government. I therefore at once, and without consulting the political friends with whom it is my pleasure generally to act, renewed the amendment, and I now rise to assign very briefly the reasons which have induced me to offer it.

The Senate are not to be informed, nor are my own constituents, who have taken any interest in my public course in this body during the rebellion or since its termination, that I differ from the majority of the Senate entirely as to the condition in which the States are placed in consequence of the rebellion. I have held from the first to the last, and maintain the opinion still, that the States are now States of the Union, entitled to all the rights and bound by all the obligations which the Constitution confers and imposes upon States and citizens. I have believed from the first, and still believe, consequently, that the citizens of these States are entitled to all the guarantees of personal liberty which the Constitution secures; that they are entitled to the trial by jury; that they are not under any circumstances to be subjected to any authority which Congress may exercise in the exertion of its war power, except—if that exception exists—during the existence of a war. In my judgment, the whole authority of the United States in carrying on the late civil war was because of its obligation to suppress insurrections, and consequently that the moment the insurrections were suppressed the power terminated, and the States where it prevailed were restored to the condition in which they stood antecedent to such insurrection. I have seen no reason to change that opinion, and I think the opinion stands confirmed by everything which fell from our fathers during the deliberations of the Convention which framed and submitted the Constitution of the United States to the ratification of the people.

But, Mr. President, I have seen with surprise that while the executive department of the Government recognizes the people and the States where the insurrection once existed as the people of States and as States, and while the judicial department give to them the same recognition, this, the legislative department of the Government is the only one which denies to them such rights. We have lately, as well as during the last session, appointed judges, appointed marshals, appointed district attorneys, appointed tax-gatherers, appointed postmasters, for these States, in like manner and in the exercise of the same power, in and under which we have appointed them for the other States, without the slightest distinction. The Supreme Court of the United States now at this moment, as well as at the last session, are entertaining appeals and writs of error taken or prosecuted from the decisions of the superior courts of the States, as I think they are, of the South. Bills are now depending before it, and without the objection from any quarter of the authority of the States to present them, filed by States which were in insurrection against other States that were not in insurrection, although it was perfectly open, on objection by demurrer or by plea, that the State suing was not a State of the United States, and consequently not entitled to sue, not entitled to invoke the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States.

There is now pending, instituted by one of the States you propose to place under military rule, a bill by the State of Virginia against West Virginia to settle a disputed question of boundary, and that disputed question of boundary must be decided as against West Virginia, even if the court should not entertain jurisdiction at the instance of the State of Virginia, if it be true that the State of Virginia is not now a State in the Union, if she was not when she agreed to divide herself and to have created within her original limits the State of West Virginia. And yet no lawyer in that forum, no statesman, if there be any such, and I suppose there are as many there as there are in any of the States of the Union, has ventured to deny the right of the State of Virginia to file that bill upon the ground that she was no State within the meaning of the clause which gives original jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of the United States in cases between State and State. No member of this body now, however it may have been some time ago, denies that West Virginia is a State of the United States; but if the consequence of the insurrection of Virginia was while West Virginia was within her limits that she ceased to be a State of the Union, she had no authority to assent to a division of her own territory; and if the proposition necessarily involved in this bill be true, my friends who so ably represent West Virginia have no place in this Chamber. And yet no member of the body suggests that they shall be removed upon the ground that they were improperly admitted.

Entertaining the view I have held from the first, and having an instinctive repugnance, made the stronger by historical reading, and still stronger, if possible, by what I have seen since this war commenced, to military rule, there is no condition of things which could induce me to vote for a bill which is to place under such military rule any portion of the United States. There have been occasions during the late war when I believed that the safety of the country demanded the exercise of powers more or less doubtful, and when I was willing to see them exercised, being determined to have the country saved from the peril to its existence in which it was then placed; but that peril was from insurrection, culminated into a civil war, which aimed to dismember and destroy our Government. That insurrection is at an end. I am not required to place the truth of that fact upon any assertion of my own; the very amendments before us in relation to the restoration of these States admit that the insurrection is at an end. The Reconstruction Committee, to whom this subject was referred at the last session, and in whose hands it has been since, when they reported an article for an amendment to the Constitution reported a bill to accompany it; first, as conclusive evidence to show that in the opinion of a majority of that body those States were then States, the constitutional amendment was submitted to the States; secondly, because the bill itself in its preamble stated that "it is expedient that the States lately in insurrection" should be restored to their relations to the United States, and the very title of the bill was, "A bill to provide for restoring the States lately in insurrection to their full political rights."

That being the position in which, as I suppose, the States stand, the Senate will not be surprised when I state, or repeat what I stated this morning, that under no circumstances can I vote for the bill as it is, unless it be so amended so as entirely to alter its nature. What is its nature? What is its preamble? The honorable Senators who suppose that the preamble is true—and it is not for me to say that they are not sincere in that opinion—place the right to pass this bill upon the ground that the States are now in a condition of war, in insurrection, in rebellion. What is war as against the Government of the United States? What is insurrection? Must there not be some effort upon the part of those alleged to be at war with the United States, or in insurrection against its authority, to make good by force of arms, or in some other way, their position? Can there be an insurrection where the authority of the Government is submitted to? Whatever may be the occasional acts of violence that are committed from time to time in these southern States they constitute no insurrection. The authority of the Government is just as complete, permit me to say, Mr. President, in these States as it is now in the State which you represent, or in Massachusetts or in New York or any other State; and I believe for myself that I am justified in asserting that there is less crime now in the States of the South than there is either in the State of Massachusetts or in the State of New York. It is not, therefore, the criminal acts which from time to time dishonor the land where they are perpetrated that constitutes an insurrection. It is the resistance by force of arms of the authority of the Government.

Why was the clause inserted in the Constitution to which resort was had in carrying on the late war. Our Government was intended to consist, and does consist, of a Government for the whole and governments for the parts of which the whole consists. The large mass of powers necessary to the existence of any Government was not only conferred upon the Government of the United States, but was expressly reserved to the governments of the States or the people of the States respectively. From the beginning of the Government to the commencement of the late rebellion it was a doctrine which nobody disputed in all the political contests through which the country has passed from the beginning of its existence down to the commencement of that rebellion, but on the contrary, was held to be true beyond all doubt, that upon theory, as well as upon express provision in the Constitution, all the powers not conferred upon the Government of the United States were in the States respectively or in the people of the States; and that whenever the question arose as to what power the United States had in relation to any particular subject it was incumbent upon him who asserted the existence of the power to point it out. Failing in that, he ceased to establish the existence of the power.

Now, what is the power conferred upon Congress? To raise and support armies. What for? To meet a foreign foe. To raise and support a navy, for the same object. But our fathers saw that there were other dangers incident to the existence of a Government, and they provided for that exigency by anticipation; and what was that provision? A sudden invasion of the State, not amounting to war in the ordinary sense; a sudden outbreak upon the territorial limits of some one State of the Union by a foreign Power; and the other was, insubordination in some State which the powers of that State might be unable to quell; and in order to enable the Government to come to the protection of the State invaded, or to the protection of the State against the insurrection within its own limits, the Constitution conferred upon Congress the power to call upon the militia or to use the armies of the United States to repel invasion or suppress insurrection. In this instance there is no invasion. Nobody pretends that there is. Is there any insurrection? We are told a black man is shot down and the murderer cannot be convicted through the civil courts. I do not believe it; but suppose the fact to be so; does that constitute an insurrection? How often has it happened that what in contemplation of law is a clear offense, and a clear offense of murder goes unwhipped of justice? Has nobody been acquitted of that crime whom the honorable member from Oregon would say was innocent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the honorable Senator appeals to me, I will ask him a question. Suppose it to be a fact that the men who were rebels in the South are murdering and killing the loyal men of that section of the country, I will ask the honorable Senator if the Government has not a right to interpose the necessary power for their protection?

Mr. JOHNSON. There is under the Constitution the necessary power. The men who framed the Constitution were as wise and as far seeing as my honorable friend from Oregon or either of us. They provided for all cases in which the constitutional rights of the citizens of the United States should be violated, and the provision that they made they intended to be the only one which should be given. Suppose that in the State of Oregon some of the constituents of the honorable member were killing the Chinese; suppose they denied their rights, trampled upon them, denied the negro the right to come within the limits of the State.

Mr. FESSENDEN, (to Mr. WILLIAMS.) Ask him what provision he refers to.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is in the constitution adopted by a convention of which, if I am not mistaken, the honorable member from Oregon was a leading member, and I suppose, as no dissent was expressed by him, that he approved of it. No negro, by that constitution, is permitted to come into the State of Oregon, is permitted to vote, or to contract or to sue. What a horrible outrage upon the notions of the day! Is the honorable member prepared now to say that we should establish a military government for the State of Oregon? Why not? Have you not done what you ought not to have done? Are you not sinning against the light of the times? Are you not trampling upon the inalienable rights of man—denying manhood suffrage? And yet you do not propose to extend this military rule to Oregon; and so in relation to several other States where manhood suffrage is not allowed. I have the constitution of Oregon by me, adopted in September, 1857, only nine or ten years ago; and, as I said, I believe my friend from Oregon was a member of the body, and I suppose, from the weight to which he is entitled in all bodies of which he is a member, that he supported all the clauses to be found in that constitution, particularly such as I have referred to, or they could not have been adopted.

Maryland has been threatened. It is said that our government is not republican in point of form, and that under the clause which provides that Congress shall guaranty to every State that form of government, Congress may interfere with Maryland and force her to adopt a government which they may think is republican. What have some of our judges done? They have conscientiously, I am satisfied, executed a law of the State which in certain cases authorizes, upon conviction, the sale of black people into a limited slavery, and we are to have a military government thrown over us. I hope that time may not come, Mr. President. Devoted as I am, heart and soul, to the institutions of the land, willing to sustain the Union with the last drop of the blood that is left me, the effort under that clause to interfere with any of the loyal States will, if nothing else will, be the death-knell of the Union.

Now, let me say to my friend from Oregon, and to those who think with him, and I believe a great many are of that opinion—and I certainly do not contravert the sincerity with which they hold it—that I do not believe one word in the truth of the assertion that no man is safe within the southern States. I believe, as firmly as I believe anything, that the honorable member from Oregon, and every other member of the Senate who agrees with him in his opinions, may go from one corner of the southern States to the other corner with perfect impunity, and not only that, but would be received as a brother. There were prejudices before. Thank God they are gone! The war, if nothing else, has convinced them that their own peculiar notions of State sovereignty cannot be maintained. They have abandoned them and now stand, in my judgment, as loyal to the Union as the honorable member from Oregon, or anybody else. I speak of them in the mass. I speak of the educated portion of the southern States. Here and there there may be people of a different description, as here and there in Oregon or anywhere else, who defy law and delight in crime.

I have said thus much merely as preliminary to what I am about to say in relation to this amendment. I want, what the committee who reported the original constitutional amendment and the bill which accompanied it declared that they wanted, and what the honorable chairman of that committee on the part of the Senate has more than once said in debate on this floor, with a sincerity that nobody could doubt, if they could doubt his sincerity at all on any subject, that they and he look to an early restoration of the Union with an anxious solicitude. Now, what do you propose by the bill as it stands without the amendment? To place the whole South under what is neither more nor less than a military despotism. To terminate when? Not when in the judgment of the members of the present Congress, who think that under the particular circumstances of this case such a despotism is necessary to secure the rights of the people, that that necessity shall cease to exist, but to continue until some other Congress may be of opinion that it has ceased. Mr. President, is that our duty? I speak it with perfect respect. If it be in our judgment right to institute the despotism, is it not our duty to say when it shall cease, if we do not intend that it shall cease at all?

Now, what says the amendment? When the constitutional amendment submitted to the people at the last session shall have been adopted as a part of the Constitution is the first provision; when any State lately in insurrection shall itself adopt that amendment is the second provision; when they shall give the right of franchise to all who are over twenty-one years of age, irrespective of color or race, is the third provision; when these things shall be accomplished by a constitution submitted to the people of the particular State, and ratified by that people, is the fourth provision; and when the result of their labors shall be submitted to and approved by Congress is the fifth provision. Then the State is to be represented, and not before. What possible objection can there be to either of these provisions in themselves? My friend from Oregon can make no objection. He virtually told us last night, in offering the amendment, that the bill ought not to pass without them. He withdraws them now. Why? Not because they are not right; he has not ventured to say that; not that there is a single provision of the amendment which should not receive the assent of Congress; but because some new light has broken upon him which was not obvious to him last night. What is that new light? Why, he is afraid the bill may be defeated. A military despotism last night was intolerable which did not in the very act providing for it provide also for its termination. A military despotism to-day is to be established without any provision looking to its termination. He now proposes to leave its termination to some future Congress. How does he know that any future Congress will adopt in any form the provisions of his amendment or any like them?

Mr. President, I can very readily imagine that our hopes, if we have any hopes in that quarter, may be disappointed. The presidential election is near at hand. Two years will soon elapse. Keep the States under military rule, and however true it may be that they would be entitled to representation in the electoral college, they will not be permitted to hold such an election until the next presidential contest is at end. Some military satrap will tell them, "It is my pleasure that you shall remain as you are until that contest is determined." And such things may possibly operate upon politicians. But in the mean time what is the condition of the southern States, and by retroaction the condition of the loyal States? The South, humbled in one sense, subdued and tyrannized over, have no motive for exertion; the North, not knowing certainly what the future may bring forth, is unwilling to step forward to the aid of the South; and everything stands as it now is, in a condition almost as sad and as forlorn as it was at the moment the rebellion ended. What effect is that to have upon us all? What effect upon the public credit? What effect upon our good name abroad? Ten million Americans, whose fathers fought for constitutional liberty and adopted a form of Constitution which they believed would forever secure it, are placed by a portion of their descendants under the exclusive control of the military. It is a confession to the world that our institutions are a failure. I will say with the honorable member from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] that such a proposition as this made anywhere, more particularly in a land where freedom was supposed to be permanently fixed, seems to shock the moral sense of every American or student of history.

The Supreme Court of the United States are now to be told by us, the descendants of the men who declared that the writ of habeas corpus should not be denied except in cases of invasion or rebellion, and even then only when the public safety demanded it, that when there is no invasion, no insurrection, no public safety demanding it, even that they, the judges of the highest court in the land, shall not issue a writ of habeas corpus unless the propriety of so doing is vouched by some military subordinate. If the court know, as I am sure they do, what is due to their dignity, they will refuse to hold their courts at all where such doctrines are enforced. The present Chief Justice of the United States declared it to be his determination, and I applauded him for it, that he would hold no court in a State in which martial law prevailed and the writ of habeas corpus was denied. You are about to declare that in Virginia martial law is to prevail and the writ of habeas corpus is not to exist in Virginia. If he is consistent with himself, as I am sure he will be, he will hold no court there. What then? Nobody is to be tried. One man is indicted in that State for treason. The Chief Justice has declined to go there for the purpose of trying him on that ground heretofore, and he will do so again.

Mr. President, the amendment is objectionable to me only upon the ground that it denies to those States the right of coming into the Union, entitled to representation, until they extend the suffrage, because I believe the right of suffrage is a matter with which the Congress of the United States has no concern. I cannot, therefore, vote for the bill when it shall be amended as I propose to amend it, and I so stated when I offered the amendment; but the bill, in my judgment, will be much less objectionable with the amendment than without it. The South can bear up under it better with the amendment than it can without it; and it will be less obnoxious, though still very obnoxious to censure with than without it. It was for that reason I offered the amendment, and shall give it the support of my vote when the question shall be taken, and then vote against the bill whether it succeeds or fails.

It is for the States to decide for themselves whether they will extend the suffrage as the amendment provides. If they shall, no one will have a right to complain; and if they refuse it, I shall certainly not complain.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I wish to state in as few words as is practicable my reasons for voting against this amendment. I do not intend to occupy unnecessarily the time of the Senate, but there are certain considerations addressing themselves to my mind to which I invite the attention of the friends of this measure and of the Republican members of the Senate.

In the first place, this amendment is a complete departure from the action of the Committee on Reconstruction, so far as the right of suffrage is concerned. That committee, after having considered the subject referred to them for some eight months, made their report to the Senate; indeed, they made several reports, but in not one of their reports did they propose to interfere by the legislation of Congress, or in the form of an amendment of the Constitution, with the right of suffrage within the States. They have carefully abstained from all attempt to interfere with that very sacred right. They thought it not worth while to intermeddle, and I think they acted wisely. The Senate itself, by repeated votes, has sanctioned that course. The whole subject has been discussed with great fullness and clearness before the people during the last congressional elections, and the people have very generally understood that it is not the purpose of Congress to intermeddle with the right of the State to regulate the suffrage of its citizens. The amendment now before us proposes a different policy. It proposes in direct terms that we shall interfere in regulating the suffrage of citizens in the rebel States, a thing from which the committee industriously and cautiously abstained. The amendment proposes as follows:

That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when any one of the late so-called Confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects, and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, twenty-one years old and upward, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion, or for felony at common law, and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection, and when the constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

Now, sir, that provision contemplates a sort of coercion to be exercised through an act of Congress upon the State to constrain it, in order to get into Congress, to admit the black population to vote. I dislike to attempt such an interference, although I admit that in laying down the preliminary rules with a view to the readmission of those States, Congress has plenary power to prescribe those or any other conditions demanded by the public welfare.

Secondly, Mr. President, I object to this amendment because if it shall become a law, and if the rebel States shall proceed under it to amend their constitutions and to extend the elective franchise, it is practicable for each one of them, should this or the next Congress change the present apportionment, to send to the Fortieth Congress a full quota of Representatives according to the numbers of the population of the State, including blacks as well as whites; and this we all know will augment the number of Representatives from the rebel States by at least twenty.

It will go further; it will enable these same rebel States, within the next two years, to appoint an additional number of presidential electors to which they will not otherwise be entitled under the amendment of the Constitution. It will increase their number in the Electoral Colleges in proportion to the number of their Representatives. Is it desirable at this moment, at this critical stage of our affairs, to throw into the hands of a rebellious community this additional political power? For my part I am unwilling to agree to any such thing.

And after they have done this, after they shall have temporarily amended their constitutions and altered the elective franchise in conformity with this plan, thus enjoying an additional power in Congress and in the Electoral Colleges, they have but to turn around the next day, repeal their constitutional provisions admitting negro suffrage, disfranchise all the blacks within their limits, and still be in the Union enjoying all the rights and privileges of the Union, and the subject of suffrage is forever beyond our reach. This may be done, although this provision in the amendment should be fully complied with, although the amendment of the Constitution proposed at the last session should be adopted and become itself a part of the Constitution.

Are gentlemen willing to run this risk for the sake, as they say, of holding out a scheme of conciliation to the rebel States? Sir, I am averse to proposing terms to rebels. I make no proffer. They know their duty well. They knew it five years ago. They are as sensible of their obligations under the Constitution of my country as I am. They have waged a bloody and wasteful war upon my friends, my neighbors, my countrymen, and my Government, and persevered in it until the whole land was covered with mourning and tears and blood. I would be the last man, after having crushed them and trampled them under my feet, to make gratuitous propositions of reconciliation to them. Let them come up and do their duty like men and citizens of the United States. Let them bring forth fruits meet for repentance before they grumble that we do not propose terms to them.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Michigan state what he believes to be their duty?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan give way to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. I ask the question for information.

Mr. HOWARD. I was about to close my remarks; but I will endeavor to answer my friend from Nevada. I take it, however, he does not need the information. He probably puts the question to me more with a view to ascertain my ideas than to enlighten his own understanding. But I think I understand what is the duty of the rebel States. The first duty of every community that has a government is to punish crime and to protect its friends. Is that done in the rebel States? No, sir. A government that is unwilling to protect its people or incapable of doing so is not worthy the name of a government. I do not care whether the government be the Federal Government or the government of a State; it is a mere mockery, against which humanity cries out. The great and paramount duty of the rebel State governments, their first and leading duty, is to punish crime and thereby to protect the peaceful and the innocent. This is not done, and we all know it.

As I said before, I do not wish to spend the time of the Senate in discussing this subject; but I see in this amendment a fatal snare by which we shall be deceived in the end, by which we are to be deluded into a premature readmission of the rebel States in such a manner as to make us ultimately repent of our folly and rashness. I hope, sir, the amendment will be rejected.

I have no fear from the establishment of military governments in the rebel States. It is not in the nature of the American people to tolerate a military government anywhere longer than the actual necessity exists which calls for it; and I think the rebel communities can trust with perfect security, confidence in the honor and the sense of justice of the Congress of the United States in solving the question when it may become expedient and proper to repeal our military enactments. All these phantoms of military tyranny are the merest imaginations of the heat-oppressed brain of anxious partisanship.

We are told that we are imitating the government of Cromwell, when he appointed twelve major generals in England for the purpose of assisting him to carry on his government; and that the conduct of those twelve major generals was very oppressive and very tyrannical. Sir, the historical student will not forget the actual condition of things at the time Cromwell appointed his twelve major generals. The accounts we get of the administration of Cromwell come to us through tainted channels. I undertake to say here that we have not a single impartial history of the administration of that great man in those difficult times. They all come to us tinged and colored with royalist sentiments and royalist prejudices. But what is the fact? Why, sir, England, at that time in a state of boiling, bubbling revolution, was infested from one end to the other with hordes of royalist conspirators, acting in the interests and under the orders of the Pretender, afterwards Charles II. The Pretender, comfortably located at Cologne, on the Continent, and enjoying the alms sent over to him from England to support him and his retinue, was himself at the head of this vast conspiracy, extending in fact all over the Continent, as well as England and Scotland, the object of which was the overthrow of the republican Government of England and the reestablishment of the house of Stuart. It became necessary for Cromwell to be extremely vigilant and to take measures for counteracting this dangerous and mischievous combination; and with that view he appointed his twelve major generals to keep guard over as many districts or departments, into which the realm was divided. The instructions which he gave to them are all reported in the documents of the day; and I aver that there is no part of those instructions which looked at all to the oppression of the people, but only to the preservation of liberty, of order, the due administration of law, and the protection of the rights of the people and the Government. Of course it was the duty of the Government to look after the conspirators; and the thwarting of that conspiracy was the great and almost the sole object of the creation of this board of military generals.

It was a time of war, of civil war, of conspiracy, of public danger, and every consideration of the public interest impelled the chief of state to guard his own authority and to protect his people. Now, sir, we are not living under a monarchy; we are not tied to a particular dynasty or family. The Government of this country rests upon the will of the American people, whose judgment, though it may sometimes temporarily err, is in the end always infallible and righteous. Depend upon it, sir, whenever the loyal people shall be satisfied that the time has come when self-government can be safely remitted to the ex-rebels the thing will be done; but I trust in God it will not be done, or attempted, before that time has fully arrived.

But my great objection to this amendment is that it is a snare by which increased representation from the rebel States may come into Congress and an increased number of presidential electors be chosen, while we have no security at all that the extended elective franchise will be continued in the rebel States to the black population. They can disfranchise them whenever they see fit after having secured increased representation.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, my vote has been solicited for the present amendment by gentlemen in whose judgments I have very much confidence; and in one respect the adoption of the amendment would be quite proper, perhaps beneficial. In so far as it places a limit upon this enormous, novel, and portentous military power the bill intends to establish, it may be vindicated by sound reasoning and considerations of public policy. Any limitation whatever will be better than the absence of all limitations in the proposition as introduced before us.

But, sir, there are two reasons which will induce me to vote against this amendment. In the first place, I am opposed to the proposition which it contains upon a consideration of the merits of the proposition itself. I am averse, from thorough conviction, to the introduction of any State into this Union, or to her rehabilitation with all her former political powers, upon the condition that she shall make suffrage within her limits universal and unlimited among the male inhabitants over twenty-one years of age. I need not go over the argument upon that point. I have stated it upon a former occasion.

In the next place, I know perfectly well that a vote for this amendment, although given under circumstances which do not commit me to the proposition as a final one, will be misunderstood and perverted. It will be said throughout the country of each of those who stand in the position in which I stand, that we have departed to some extent at least from that position which we have hitherto maintained, and maintained against all the influences of the time, against the pressure of circumstances which have swept many from our sides and carried them into the large and swollen camp of the majority. Sir, I for one am ambitious of being known as one among that number of men who have kept their faith; who have followed their convictions; who have obeyed the dictation of duty in the worst of times; who did not bend when the storm beat hardest and strongest against them, but kept their honor unsullied, their faith intact, their self respect unbroken and entire.

I shall not vote to degrade suffrage. I shall not vote to pollute and corrupt the foundations of political power in this country, either in my own State or in any other. I shall resist it everywhere and at all times. If overborne, if contrary and opposing opinions prevail, I shall simply submit to the necessity which I cannot resist, leaving to just men and to future times the vindication of my conduct.

The consideration of this amendment does not involve debate upon the bill itself; it is quite distinct from it, or at least it may be considered distinctly. I am of opinion that the debates of the Senate would be greatly improved if that course were taken ordinarily or uniformly which has been suggested in the discussion of this bill, to wit, that when an amendment is pending debate shall be confined to it according to the strict rules of order, and that debate upon the principal proposition upon the original bill itself shall stand over and be deferred until the amendments are disposed of. But, sir, my experience in the Senate has instructed me. I have upon several occasions delayed speaking upon a measure until amendments offered to it should be disposed of, and found myself at the end of a debate attempting to speak to an exhausted and impatient Senate and when my own freshness of feeling and physical energy had departed.

During this week those of us who are not endowed by nature with vigorous physical constitutions have been subjected to a severe strain by constant sessions day and night, besides other duties very numerous, harassing, and exhaustive outside of the Chamber. And now, sir, nearly at the end of the week, at an additional night session ordered with special reference to this measure, we are called upon to consider it and to consider it finally. We are told that if it be within the power of those who give direction to the action of the Senate to force a final vote upon the bill to-night, that vote shall be obtained, the giving of it shall be coerced.

And when did this bill come to us? Within about twenty-four hours, I believe. I found myself able to give it only a hurried reading before it was called up for debate. Is it not a little remarkable that a bill in which the social and political condition of eight or ten million American people is involved should be driven through one branch of Congress under the previous question without opportunity for any extended debate, and should then be driven through the Senate under the discipline of an organization confined to a portion only of the members of our body, with some twenty-four or forty-eight hours only of consideration, amid the pressure of other duties that crowd upon us, and when our own overtaken physical powers scarcely enable us to give the subject even that attention which is necessary to vote upon it intelligently, much less to examine and discuss it properly? What judgment will be formed of us, who are charged with the legislative powers of this Government, by our countrymen and by the men of other nations, who observe our proceedings, when measures of this gravity, magnitude, importance to millions of people, interesting to our whole population, are to be acted upon in this manner, to be determined under these circumstances, adverse to correct and proper reflection, which I have described?

Now, sir, what is this measure? I shall be anxious in all that I say to be brief and to speak only on points which are material. Sir, this bill is prepared and introduced to confer upon five military officers of the United States the power to fine, to imprison, and to kill American citizens in one third of the territory of the United States without any restraints or limitations such as are written in the most solemn manner in every fundamental law in the United States, both that of the Federal Government and those of all the States; ay, and of every Territory, too, whither our hardy pioneers have gone and established republican governments, fashioned and modeled after the examples of the States from which they went. With no right of trial by jury, no challenge to the tribunal which tries the accused, no compulsory process for witnesses, no right of appeal, the victim stands defenseless before arbitrary power; he must bow to its mandate and submit to its decree. Not a constitutional principle, hitherto regarded sacred in this country, is written down in this bill or covered by its vague and general phraseology, more indefinite, vague, and indeterminate than that of any statute now upon the records of this Government; ay, or of England, abused and traduced England, of whom we complained because her Government was arbitrary, and therefore took up arms to throw off its jurisdiction and vindicate American freedom.

The General of the Army is to assign to the command of each of the military districts created by this bill "an officer of the Army not below the rank of brigadier general," and to detail a sufficient force to give dignity and effect to the jurisdiction conferred upon him; and there is conferred upon each district commander, in the third section, power "to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace and criminals" of every description and grade. He may in his pleasure, by no rule of law, by no regulation of statute, by no principle known to the Constitution or created by Government, but according to his own unregulated pleasure and will, condescend to turn cases over to the courts—

Or when in his judgment—

his supreme and unchallenged judgment—

it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, anything in the constitution and laws of any of the so-called confederate States to the contrary notwithstanding.

And then the Supreme Court of the United States, which your fathers established as the supreme tribunal of justice in this country, with appellate powers from inferior tribunals, with the great power of the writ of habeas corpus in its hands to correct injustice upon the citizen, is to be restrained from meddling in any way whatever with this new, unexampled, and abominable jurisdiction which the bill establishes. I am mistaken, sir; there is an exception. The judges of your Supreme Court may have jurisdiction in particular cases by a clause which I propose to read. Neither the Supreme Court nor any judge of that court or of the district courts can issue a writ of habeas corpus or look into the legality of any proceedings in which this military jurisdiction is concerned—

Unless some commissioned officer—

Some dignified lieutenant of the second degree possibly—

Unless some commissioned officer on duty in the district wherein the person is detained shall indorse upon said petition a statement certifying, upon honor, that he has knowledge or information as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged detention, and that he believes the same to be wrongful; and further, that he believes that the indorsed petition is preferred in good faith and in furtherance of justice, and not to hinder or delay the punishment of crime.

The wealthy criminal, for his fee of $50 or $100 or $500, can get a lieutenant's certificate to his petition, and go to the courts of the United States and be heard under the laws of the United States, and have some little protection from the Constitution of your fathers, from that instrument under which you are assembled here, and which you are sworn to support. This is the manner in which judicial power may take hold of any case, no matter how enormous, of outrage or of iniquity, in one third of the United States, under this bill.

The fifth section provides—

That no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district.

There, sir, shameful as the fact appears, the power over the life of an American citizen is confided to either one of five military commanders, who are to be selected, not by the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States, as the Constitution requires, but by a General selected by your bill; and you might just as well, instead of having selected the General of the Army for this purpose, have selected the hero of Big Bethel or any other general, or even a civilian, if indeed this fearful and unexampled power of creating military rule resides in Congress at all. The commanders of these departments have the power of life and of death, the power to imprison at their pleasure, the power to fine, to confiscate property, and to plunder or kill the citizens, and that without any redress. Why, sir, what are the military commissions that are authorized here? Are not the members selected by this officer in command selected to do his bidding—organized to convict, if he desires conviction, and their proceedings subject to his approval? Nay, sir, even sentence of death by them is to be carried into execution according to his will, because this bill contemplates the capital execution of a citizen tried before these tribunals simply upon the approval of the officer commanding the district.

Such, sir, is the bill introduced here, for the passage of which our votes are solicited, and to pass which we are driven into the hours of the night, hurriedly and unprepared, while some expectant persons outside, perhaps, look with impatience upon the delay which is taking place, this unnecessary delay, this protraction of our proceedings, this waste of time, this foolish appealing to old records and to principles which we have advanced far beyond in our revolutionary career. Yes, sir, a spirit of impatience and intolerance surrounds us and finds voice even upon this floor.

I will state objections to the bill in general terms and conclude. I am not inclined to speak at length, but I should take shame to myself if such a bill as this could be passed or be under consideration here without uttering some few sincere words in opposition to its enactment.

Sir, this bill, in the first place, is an open confession in the face of the world that republican government is a failure. It is an open and shameless confession, made by us in the presence of our own countrymen and in the presence of the world, that our republican institutions are not as they were supposed to be, destined to immortality or to future renown; that their period of life has about closed, that we are to be added to the list of republics of former times and of other countries who ran hurried, but some of them not inglorious careers, to end in what this bill suggests, in the rule of a master, in the establishment of military power, in the chastisement of crime, of violence, and of private wrong, not by civil law, but by military force. You propose to put in command of one third of the United States generals of your armies. You propose to confer on them dictatorial powers. That is the word. This bill establishes a military dictatorship by congressional enactment for one third of the United States, and its grants are in the largest and vaguest terms. Under them any act pertaining to civil government, any act pertaining to the punishment of criminal offenders, may be authorized and may be performed by the military power which you set up. That is a dictatorship. No matter by what name it be designated that is its nature. That you establish by this bill. Whatever you propose, that will be the authority created; it will be known as a dictatorship in all future time.

Mr. President, at what time is it proposed to set up this military dictatorship in the United States? Is it not nearly two years after the conclusion of the late war? Is it not at a time when complete peace reigns throughout the United States, when there is no resistance to the authority of the Government, and when we apprehend no such resistance in future unless that resistance be provoked, possibly, by our conduct and policy? There can be no vindication of this measure upon the ground of its connection with the war. There can be no vindication of it upon the ground that it is necessary in the conduct or management of military operations, in the subduing of a force arrayed against our authority in any portion of the country; nor that it is necessary to guard against renewed revolt and renewed resistance in any place or section subject to our jurisdiction.

The Long Parliament, to which reference has been made, established a military force of its own, independent of the Crown, and it placed over that force military commanders. It armed them and sent them forth upon a mission of resistance to kingly power. That was during a time of civil convulsion, when parties were to be arrayed against each other in deadly conflict, when the great battle between executive, prerogative, and popular freedom was to be fought out upon British soil. There was some reason, some excuse then for a Parliament which claimed omnipotence to confer enormous powers upon military commanders selected by itself. There is no reason now why an American Congress which is not omnipotent, an American Congress whose powers are carefully and grudgingly parceled out to it in the Constitution of the country, a Congress whose powers are subjected to necessary and extensive limitations; it is not now a time for an American Congress to assume to itself those omnipotent powers which will be implied by the passage of this bill. It is not now a time for the American Congress to set up military power and a military dictatorship in any portion of the country.

The duties of the hour of which we hear so much are to heal the wounds of conflict, to restore real peace and genuine concord throughout our country, to return to the pacific debates which in former times characterized the proceedings of the legislative department of the Government, to restore by sound measures that prosperity which was interrupted by the war, and by a careful and provident statesmanship to make provision against those dangers to which the pecuniary interests and the liberties of our country are liable in the future. If I read aright the duties of the hour they may be thus described: they do not consist in prosecuting in a time of peace the projects, enterprises, and measures of a time of war. They do not include the injecting into our councils elements of commotion, of hatred, of antagonism. What is now required, and particularly what is required in the consultations of the legislative department, which is the great branch of Government, is a spirit of Christianity and of justice, which shall put behind us the works of war and the passions of war and incite us to works of restoration and peace. Possessing this spirit, we shall perform our mission nobly and grandly; without it, our labor will be vain and our future inglorious.

Because this bill asserts a congressional omnipotence which we do not possess, and which, if we did possess it, we ought not to exercise; because it announces before the world the failure of republican institutions among us; because it disregards all the constitutional protections of the citizen, and, without necessity or reason, subjects him in his rights of property, liberty, and even life itself to the pleasure of military power, I shall vote against it, as I shall vote against all similar measures which may be introduced hereafter.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I do not propose to offer any suggestions in relation to this general measure, but I desire to say a few words why I think this amendment should be adopted. In the first place, we all recollect that at the last session of Congress we passed through both Houses a constitutional amendment. I suppose that by that we meant something. The amendment now under consideration is practically that constitutional amendment with certain additions, and additions which commend it more particularly to our favor. I cannot see how any man who voted for that amendment can now vote against this amendment, especially as it includes the right or the principle that was then contended for by some, that we should guaranty suffrage to all at the South.

But, sir, I rose more particularly to address myself to an argument which was made by my excellent and learned friend, the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD.] He tells us that if this bill becomes a law, if this amendment is adopted, and the southern States go to work under it and adopt its provisions, they may send into the Fortieth Congress some twenty or more additional Representatives, and also an equal number of electors—

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will allow me, that was a slight oversight on my part. I mean unless this Congress should see fit to legislate on the subject so as to adapt representation to the state of things contemplated by this amendment, providing that the States should be represented according to their numbers, &c. My remark, however, will apply to any future Congress after the Fortieth.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, there is an existing law apportioning the number of Representatives to each State. That law cannot be changed without the action of Congress, and in the ordinary course of things it would not be changed until after the next census, 1870, in 1871. Hence there is no danger upon that point, if there were no objection arising from such a consideration. But, sir, whether this amendment be adopted or not, the Constitution now gives to those States, whenever they are represented, whenever there is a new census and a new apportionment, a right to be represented here on the basis of their entire population. It does not in any way change that question whatever. Therefore—

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him once more, I will say that this amendment contemplates the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution submitted at the last session of Congress. It is not to go into operation at all until that amendment has become a part of the Constitution. When that shall take place, I submit to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire there would be a legal right growing out of the amendment itself to increase the number of their representatives.

Mr. CRAGIN. My point is that if they do not adopt the constitutional amendment at all and come back here they are entitled to that increase of representation, by counting the two fifths who were formerly excluded, who, now that all are free, are to be included in the basis of representation, so that it makes no difference upon that point whatever. For one, sir, I have to say, that whenever the southern people adopt the constitutional amendment and provide for universal suffrage, and are to be received back here, I am willing that they should be represented for their entire people, black and white. But, sir, I say again, that those of us who voted for the constitutional amendment at the last session cannot consistently vote against this amendment unless there be some provisions in that to which we now object; and for one, unless this amendment shall be adopted, I say here, that if called upon to vote for the bill as it comes from the House, I shall do it, if at all, most reluctantly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not propose, sir, to make any remarks on the bill. I rise to suggest an amendment to the amendment. It is in the ninth line, after the word "upward," to insert "who have resided one year in said State;" so that if amended that portion of the amendment will read:

And when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States twenty-one years old and upward, who have resided one year in said State, without regard to race, color, &c.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe it is not in my power to accept the amendment to the amendment; but, upon looking at the amendment which I offered, which was originally drawn by the honorable member from Oregon, I see that the provision is very uncertain. It proposes to secure the right of suffrage to every man over twenty-one years of age who happened to be in the State an actual resident at the time of the election, without any reference to the period of time that he may have been a resident of the State. I should, therefore, be in favor of the amendment suggested by the member from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the power of the Senator from Maryland to accept the amendment as a modification of his own amendment, if he pleases.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I accept it.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made agreeably to the suggestion of the mover.

Mr. CONNESS. If it is in the power of the honorable Senator to accept amendments that may be offered to the amendment, I do not see how the Senate may have any voice in the matter at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They can vote down the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. They can vote down the whole amendment; but suppose we are in favor of the amendment without the amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can strike out any part of it afterward.

Mr. CONNESS. After it is adopted?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very desirous to economize time, and therefore I refrain from saying anything; but I would respectfully suggest to the Senate that the vote be taken upon this amendment, and let it be ascertained whether or not the bill is to be amended. If it is to be amended, if the Senate signifies a determination to add this amendment to the bill, then I suppose it can be perfected and completed, and it can be amended in the Senate after the bill shall be reported from committee to the Senate. I simply make this suggestion, if agreeable to Senators, so as to save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on the amendment moved to the bill by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment before it is acted upon.

Mr. GRIMES. Why not adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon? The Senator from Oregon has proposed that we take a vote on the amendment as it now stands in committee, and then if it is the conviction of the Senate that the general proposition offered by the Senator from Maryland should be adopted, we can modify, change, or amend it as we choose in the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments to the amendment are in order.

Mr. GRIMES. I know they are in order, but it is useless to spend an hour or two at this hour of the night in amending an amendment, that we may afterward discover there is not a majority of the Senate in favor of.

Mr. WILLEY. I desire to say to the honorable Senator from Iowa that perhaps the votes of some of us for the amendment itself may depend upon certain amendments to be made to it. We may vote against it in its present form, and yet if amended in certain particulars we may vote for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment, and it will control my vote for or against this proposition. If the amendment to the amendment is adopted, I shall vote for the amendment if it is not, I feel very little interest in it. I should like very much to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon who has charge of the bill, but I cannot. I will send to the desk the amendment which I propose, and ask that it be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment in line nine by inserting after the words "United States" the words "of whatever color, race, or condition," and after the word "upward" in the same line by striking out the words "who have resided one year in said State, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion, or for felony at common law," and in lieu of these words inserting:

Who may have been residents of the State for twelve months previous to the election, except such as may be disqualified on account of rebellion, felony at the common law, idiocy, or insanity.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the honorable member do me the favor to read the amendment as it will stand if amended?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly. It will read thus:

That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when any of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects, and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, of whatever color, race, or condition, twenty-one years old and upward, who may have been residents of the State for twelve months previous to the election, except such as may be disqualified on account of rebellion, felony at the common law, idiocy, or insanity, and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection, &c.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not keep the words "without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude" where they are?

Mr. HENDERSON. Because in making the change it is better as it is. I will state to the Senate that, according to my construction of the amendment, the States may exclude the colored population upon any other test than that of race or color. They may declare under this amendment, after it is adopted, that no person shall vote in the seceded States unless he has a collegiate education, if you please. I understand that any exclusion may be made under it except an exclusion on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. They may declare that no person shall vote unless he is educated to a certain extent or degree.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will inquire of the Senator, is not that the effect of the constitutional amendment which we require them to adopt? Do we not leave it in their power expressly by the constitutional amendment?

Mr. HENDERSON. But I understand that this is something additional to the constitutional amendment. I understand that this goes on to declare something beyond what the constitutional amendment declared. The constitutional amendment allowed the southern States to exclude the colored population, if they saw fit, altogether, even on account of color or race. They only lost representation by so doing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was argued on that ground expressly, and adopted on that ground.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly; but I understand this proposition now of the Senator from Maryland goes beyond the constitutional amendment, and requires as a condition precedent of admission that they shall not only adopt the constitutional amendment, but shall admit to the franchise all persons, regardless of color or race.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then on that construction we require of them to adopt two things utterly inconsistent with each other; make one law repeal the other.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that to be the case.

Mr. JOHNSON. The law cannot repeal the constitutional amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose we are not bound to admit the States even after they adopt this amendment. I do not hold that that amendment is obligatory upon Congress to admit representatives from the southern States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is an express condition after this.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is an express condition. If we are satisfied, however, that the provisions in their respective State constitutions will protect the negro in the franchise, I apprehend Congress will admit them. If not, and Congress shall have by that time changed their opinions on the subject, they may admit them whether the provision will secure negro suffrage or not. I do not know what the tone or temper of Congress may be at that time. So far as I am concerned, I desire that this amendment shall unmistakably secure to all persons in the southern States the elective franchise; in other words, that whatever excludes the white man from the polls shall exclude the negro; and that no exclusion shall be based upon anything else except participation in the rebellion, felony at the common law, idiocy, or insanity. Then we shall understand each other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How is it with pauperism?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not choose to exclude on account of pauperism at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Many of the States make that a ground of exclusion.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not in my State. I am perfectly willing if Senators desire to amend on that subject to amend it; but my object is to secure the franchise, and after that is secured go forward and establish civil governments in the southern States. That is what I want. I do not fear a representation from the southern States based upon an idea of this sort. I believe that they will be true and proper representatives, devoted to the Union of the States, as patriotic as ourselves. I have no doubt about it, and I would not fear such a representation to-day. I do not desire to put on any other conditions. If it is a loyal representation, there is no danger of repudiation of the public debt, no danger of payment for slaves, no danger of the payment of the confederate debt or of the State debts of the South. I have no idea that it is at all necessary to go on and demand any other pledges than a loyal delegation from the seceded States, and my opinion is that this will give us a loyal delegation.

Now, Mr. President, once for all, I do not say that I shall vote for this bill, even if it is amended in this shape. I prefer the other bill that came from the House. There is a provision in that bill, the ninth section I believe, which provides that military power may be established to a sufficient extent to carry out all the intentions of Congress in regard to the establishment of civil governments. Why not proceed to establish civil governments in the southern States by appointing a Governor, by appointing a council, by appointing some person to go there and take a registry of voters, prescribe the qualifications, if you say so, and let us go to work to reorganize the southern States. We have got to do it at some time. We are unwilling to trust to the President's State governments. I am unwilling to admit representatives upon them. I believe that the majority of this Senate are opposed to the admission of those representatives; and Congress, no matter how long we stay here, will never admit them. Are we determined to keep them out for all time to come, or will we proceed to organize such governments and organize them upon such principles as that we can secure a representation from those States?

Mr. President, it has been truly said that there are ten million people that ought to be represented in Congress. We are afraid to admit the present representatives because we know it would be dangerous to do so. We feel confident that we have not those securities that the Government ought to demand under the circumstances. We have conquered the rebels, and we desire that we shall have a representation in accord with the general feelings of the loyal people of the country. That is all that we require and all that we should require.

To deal in military governments, in my judgment, will do the people of the North no good, and will be a decided injury to the people of the South. They will not prove a protection to the people there, but they will prove an injury to ourselves as sure as we establish them. Unless there be in this bill some declaration of the time when this thing shall cease, or some declaration that when the people do certain things—and I am unwilling to do anything less than the amendment I propose—the military establishments shall cease, I cannot vote for the bill. It is an easy matter for us to proceed and establish civil governments there, and when we have done that to provide that all the orders and decrees of the council in the shape of legislation, approved by the Governor, shall be backed up by the military power of the nation, just as would be the power of the President of the United States to carry out the legislation of the respective States when rebellion raised its head against that legislation. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Missouri would in its operation prove a very efficient mode of excluding from the government of nine or ten States of this Union the white portion of the population and placing it exclusively in the hands of the negro population. It proposes to exclude from the right of voting every person who has been engaged in the rebellion.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Delaware is mistaken. He has not read the amendment I am satisfied. He need not base any remarks on that idea, because it is not correct.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understood from the reading of the amendment of the honorable Senator that every person who was engaged in what is called the rebellion was to be excluded.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not exclude anybody.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not seen the amendment. If I am mistaken in its purport I have nothing to say.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say one word and give notice of an amendment. It seems to me that there is a conflict evidently in the amendment which is proposed between the condition which is contained in the amendment and the constitutional amendment that is now pending before the States. There is another conflict also upon the question as to whether these States shall be admitted simply upon granting suffrage to colored persons, or whether there shall go along with it an exclusion of all who have participated in the rebellion. I think that perhaps at this time it is not necessary for us to settle both of those questions or either of them. I think if we desire to establish, in the first place, a military protectorate there which shall enforce our policies, it may be done under this bill as it stands; but if we desire to initiate their civil governments on the principle of universal suffrage, or on the principle of admitting to the suffrage the colored population, it may perhaps be better done by an amendment in a different place. I have drawn one with that view, and I simply desire to give notice that I shall offer it when the time comes. It is to insert in section three, line six, after the words "and to this end," these words:

He shall require, under proper regulations, to be provided by the Secretary of War, that in all elections hereafter held in any of the military districts aforesaid for municipal or other purposes, there shall be no exclusion of any person from the suffrage on the ground of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I think that will achieve the end at which we seem to be driving without encountering the embarrassments that seem to hang around the present amendment. It will bring down the working of those institutions there to the practical question of negro suffrage, leaving us with military control and the power to impose such conditions in the future as to the admission of those States as we may find essential. If it be found essential, in order to bring them into conformity with our institutions, with our Government, and with our present policies, to make exclusions of the rebel element, we can do so; but that is an open matter that we can adjust in the future. That, I think, would be, as far as I can judge, the best amendment that we could put upon this bill. There would be no danger of advantage being taken of its language, because its administration would be in the hands of those who were in sympathy with its purpose. I simply desire to say that if the pending amendment shall be voted down, I shall then offer that as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am very reluctant,

Mr. President, to address the Senate this evening, because of the condition of my health; but understanding it to be the purpose of the friends of this bill to sit it out, I feel it to be my duty to submit some suggestions before the vote shall be had.

I am not going to discuss the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, or the modifications of that amendment that have been suggested. Any amendment of this nature is substantially a proposition to the people of the South that if they will agree to the constitutional amendment proposed at the last session of Congress and to other propositions, it is very well; but this is submitted to them with the bayonet presented at the same time, and an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which the fathers intended should be entirely at the will and pleasure of the States, is to be secured by the military power of the country. I cannot contemplate such a proposition with any degree of pleasure.

Two bills came from the House almost at the same time. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] was scarcely able to command language in which he could with sufficient earnestness express his admiration of both bills, and he was so much in love with both that he was unable to decide which was dearest to him. I am exactly in the condition of the Senator from Massachusetts, with this difference: I know of no language which I can command that will describe my hostility to both bills. The only difference that I can see in the two measures is, that the one proposing a provisional government for Louisiana is more insidious, and, if it were parliamentary to say so, I would add more cowardly in its attack upon liberty. The bill which is now before us proposes in a bold way, outright and straightforward, by physical power to govern the people of the South: the other bill, by a political machinery, proposes to strip them of free government, and, under the pretence of guarantying a republican form of government, to take away from the people the power to decide upon their own institutions. I intend to speak of the bill that is now before us as briefly as possible.

This bill is prefaced by a preamble reciting the facts which its friends claim justify its enactment. What are they? In the first place, it is stated that the governments which exist in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas are not real State governments, but are "pretended State governments." That is the first proposition in the preamble, that in some way or other these States, some of which helped to form the Federal Union, have ceased to exist, and in their stead there have sprung up "pretended State governments." Now, sir, when did that take place?

There are some things that, in my judgment, are binding on the majority of this body, some propositions of fact to which gentlemen belonging to the majority are committed, and which they cannot turn their backs upon; and one proposition, as a matter of fact, is that these States did not cease to exist because of their ordinances of secession. Congress has too often since those ordinances were adopted recognized them as States to allow the majority now to deny their existence as States. When did they cease to be States and come to be pretended governments? I should like to hear some gentleman of this majority state exactly at what time that took place, when it was, and how it was. State governments were in existence when the rebellion took place. Did the rebellion disrobe them as States? Too often we said that was not the case to allow the contrary to be said now. Did they cease to be States by the act of secession, by the act of rebellion, by the act of war, or was it because the rebellion itself was defeated?

Next it is averred that in these States which I have named there is "no adequate protection for life or property," and that these States "countenance and encourage lawlessness and crime." That is a proposition of fact upon which the majority now claim the right to establish such a government as this bill proposes. Suppose it true that in the States of the Union property and person are not well protected, that lawlessness prevails, does that enlarge the powers of the Government of the United States? Does that confer upon Congress the power to strip the States of their reserved rights and establish a form of government unknown to the Constitution? If I admit this allegation of fact as strongly as it is stated in the preamble, I ask Senators will it clothe Congress with a power which, independent of that fact, Congress does not possess?

But, Mr. President, the fact itself I deny. There is no such state of society in the southern States as is described in this preamble. There is no such condition as that the State governments at the South do not afford adequate protection for life or property. There is no truth in the averment that these States now countenance and encourage lawlessness and crime. I say it is not true, because the information I have upon that subject satisfies me that in fact it is not true. I know we have many reports on the subject; I know there are letters read to the Senate from time to time to that effect; but I have information from friends who went from my own State, neighbors, many of whom were Republicans before they went to the South, opposed to me politically, who tell me that it is not true. Within a week I have been in conversation with a captain who served in an Indiana regiment, served well, and was discharged from the service with honor, and after the war was over took up his residence in one of the southern States. He tells me that there is a state of quiet, of order, and obedience to right and law, equal to that in the State of Indiana. To-day I have read a portion of a letter from New Orleans, written by a person who has recently resided some distance out in the State of Mississippi, in which this language is used:

"The country is quiet and settled, even more than Maryland. You hear no politics talked. It is quite amusing to pick up a northern paper and read the most utter false statements from correspondents, even of this city, when it is now and has been all winter more quiet than I ever knew Baltimore."

I suppose the writer refers to Maryland and to the city of Baltimore, because they are familiar to him.

Here is evidence which I do not question. I do not upon the other hand question that there are cases of murder, cases of larceny, cases coming within almost all the definitions of crime, occurring in the several southern States. Can any Senator say that the same is not true in his own State and in his own neighborhood? Can any Senator say that in the courts in his own State justice is always done and wrong never?

Why, Mr. President, it is not long since I read an account in a newspaper of a little girl being beaten by her father and her step-mother until she died; and what punishment was inflicted upon them? My blood chilled in my veins as I read the account of that horrible torture by a parent upon his own child, and that child a delicate girl, and that in a northern State. Oh! if that had but occurred in Texas, if it had only happened in Louisiana, what a choice thing it would have been in the way of a sensation in the northern papers! A punishment as for manslaughter was the judgment against those culprits, cruel monsters, in a northern court. And what do you think of that other case recently occurring in one of the northern States, where a girl was almost starved that she might be brought to acquiesce in the free-love sentiments of the step-father and mother—not step-father and step-mother according to law by any legal marriage, but according to the sentiments of the free-lovers—and that in a northern State?

Did Senators not read of that horrible massacre at New Ulm, in Minnesota, but recently, when two soldiers arriving from Mankota in that State, at that little town of New Ulm, got into a controversy with some of the people, and in that controversy stabbed a man, inflicting a severe wound? For that the town as a mass took these two persons, strangers in their midst, and not only murdered them, but mutilated their bodies, and after all put them under the ice in the Minnesota river. Their bodies were afterward recovered from beneath the ice by the people of Mankota, who went up for that purpose, and upon the body of one of those men were found fifteen ghastly wounds, and their persons were mutilated to such an extent that it was shocking to their friends to see them. Oh, if that had but occurred in Texas or in Georgia it would have been worth a whole issue of the sensational journals that corrupt the public mind in the North every day.

When the honorable Senator from Wisconsin the other day read a letter addressed to him from Texas to meet the charge so freely made, so badly supported by evidence, that men are not tried and convicted in the southern States for crime—a letter from the center of Texas giving an account of a trial of a white man of influence in that society who had murdered a negro, and who was tried and convicted and sent to the penitentiary for five years; some Senator spoke up and said, "Ah! only five years for a murder, a white man who murders a negro is sent to the penitentiary for only five years." Even that case was attempted to be treated as a fact in condemnation of the justice of the southern courts. While the Senator was reading the letter I thought of a case that recently took place in Chicago. A courtesan of that city had her fury excited against her paramour who had transferred his illicit love to another; she pursued and stabbed him to death. She was put in jail, not with the common convicts, but she had her apartment fitted as for a princess, and so she was kept until the trial, and a Chicago jury, in view of her position in society, convicted her of manslaughter and she was sent to the penitentiary for one year, and when she was taken to the penitentiary no rough clothes were put upon her, no striped garments to mark her disgrace because of the shedding of human blood, but it was as if she were in her own boudoir at home, where she had enjoyed the profits of her profession. And the case did not stop there, but when she had been in the penitentiary one month the Governor of the State pardoned her. Oh! if that had been in Georgia, if that had occurred in Mississippi, how this northern mind would have been lashed to fury against the people of the South! Sir, let him who is without crime throw the first stone. These are cases known to us all, and yet they produce no excitement because they occur in our own section.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the honorable Senator allow me a word in reference to the case of which I read from Texas?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It did not appear that in that case the person was charged with murder, but with manslaughter. I would also call the Senator's attention to another fact that occurred recently in the State of New York, not many days ago, where a clergyman was indicted for manslaughter, and was sentenced to only three years, for whipping a child to death because the latter could not say its prayers.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. I am informed by General Kiddo this morning that in the case referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin the person convicted was immediately pardoned. I hold in my hand three or four columns of instances of murders in Texas, with a statement of the names of the persons murdered, and in the whole number there is not a single instance of punishment. This is an official record for seven months only.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Has anybody been indicted for murdering any of those persons?

Mr. WILSON. Whether that be so or not, there has not been any punishment inflicted. General Kiddo has been at the head of the Freedmen's Bureau in Texas. He arrived here day before yesterday, and I had a long conversation with him this morning, when he called to see me about affairs there. I have in my hand a list of three hundred and seventy-five murders and five hundred and fifty-six outrages against the civil rights bill in Texas. Then there are about one hundred and fifty-one cases of murders reported in about fifty counties in Georgia, at a colored convention recently held there, where a statement was given of the names in these various cases, these counties being about half the State, and there were only three cases of trial and punishment. Even here in Maryland, close by us, have been eighteen cases of murders of freedmen; and who has been punished?

Mr. JOHNSON. And no trials in Maryland? Where does the honorable Senator get that information from?

Mr. WILSON. From the official record.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the official record is not true.

Mr. WILSON. I do not say there has been no punishments there.

Mr. JOHNSON. Ah, sir! There has never been a moment since the beginning of the rebellion till the present time when any man was not tried in Maryland and punished for an offense against a negro, if it was known to the authorities.

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator mean to say that there have been no murders of freedmen in Maryland?

Mr. JOHNSON. What I mean to say is this—

Mr. WILSON. I find I was mistaken. The cases were in Virginia, and not in Maryland.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Who certifies to those facts?

Mr. WILSON. They are certified to by a public officer.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to say now that he was mistaken in referring to Maryland, and meant his reference to be to Virginia.

Mr. WILSON. Yes. In the State of Virginia there had been eighteen cases of murders of freedmen and one hundred and five instances of outrages against the civil rights bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the honorable Senator allow me to look at the list?

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senators are through I will go on with the remarks I was submitting to the Senate. When interrupted I was speaking of some cases that had occurred in the North. A year and a half ago I was called to one of the counties adjoining my own residence on professional business, and while there I listened to the trial of a murder case. There had been a political meeting during the latter part of the war, I think in the year 1864, in that county. There was a drunken person at that meeting who shouted for Jeff. Davis, as it was claimed upon the trial, and the accused took a pistol out of his pocket and shot him dead for nothing in the world but the speaking of the words. It was not claimed by the attorneys for the defense that there was any excuse even, except the speaking of those words by the murdered man when he was drunk. The jury were out about fifteen minutes, and they brought in a verdict of not guilty, and the courthouse rang with the huzzas of the partisans at that result.

I refer to these cases to show that occasionally, even in the pure atmosphere of the North, the law is not executed; that the fascinations of a beautiful woman in one case, and political influence in another will screen from the punishment for crimes.

So much, Mr. President, for this preamble—a preamble upon neither proposition true in matter of fact. Now, what is the bill which is based upon this preamble? The first section proposes to divide the southern country up into military districts. That is already done for some purposes by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army. So that is not very important, except that Congress undertakes thereby to do that which properly belongs to the military department of the Government, if I may so express it.

The second section provides for one of two things: either to take from the President his control of the assignments of the officers of the Army to duty, or it does not do that; whether the one or the other I cannot say. The Senator who is the champion of the bill before us says that its effect is to leave the President clothed with all his powers as Commander-in-Chief. The Senator from Michigan claims that the language disrobes the President of the United States as Commander-in-Chief of the Army so far as the assignment of officers to duty is concerned, and so far as the discharge of duty under this act is concerned. Which is it? If the effect of this section is to take from the President his power which is conferred upon him as the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, then it is in plain and palpable violation of the Constitution. If it does not have that effect it ought not to be here. In either event it ought not to be here. If we cannot confer upon an inferior officer in the Army a power that is vested in the President of the United States, then this section ought to be stricken out. I shall not discuss that section further.

The third section, I suppose, is original with the draftsman, for I think a precedent for it can scarcely be found. I know it cannot be found in any free Government that has ever existed, and I doubt if it can be found in the history of any despotism that has crushed men to the earth in times that are past.

It shall be the duty of each officer, assigned as aforesaid, to protect all persons in their rights of person and property.

How? By what means and through what instrumentalities? We shall come to that perhaps directly; but here is an assignment to the Army of the duty of protecting the citizen in his rights of person and property. Is that under our form of government the province and the business of our Army? What does the Constitution say in regard to our military power, because the military power of this Government, I presume, is to be found in the Constitution as well as the power of any department of the Government? Congress, among other powers, shall have the power "to raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years," and "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces."

"To raise and support armies" is the general power that is conferred upon Congress. What is the business of an army in a free Government? Is it to ascertain, adjust, and control the rights of citizens? The language of the bill is "to protect all persons in their rights of person and property." What are the rights of person and property? The rights of persons and property are to be ascertained by the law. The law defines these rights, not military law, but civil law.

Mr. President, it is the business of the Army of the United States to defend the nation. It is the right arm of the nation for its own defense and protection against a foreign foe and against insurrection and rebellion within. For these purposes I concede that under our form of government the Army may be properly and rightfully used; but when you go beyond that, and in the time of peace assign the Army to the protection of the rights of person and property, you have carried the Army into the courts; you have driven the judge from his seat and the jury from the box; and allowed martial law to take the place of civil law.

This section does not stop here, but it goes further and makes it the duty of the military "to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the peace, and criminals." How is this to be done? By what law? And who are to be regarded as criminals? These are questions that the friends of this bill ought to answer.

And to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders.

First, the Army is to be used to protect individuals in their rights of person and property, and secondly, to punish criminals. And these commanders may allow the local civil tribunal to take jurisdiction and to try offenders; that will be a matter of permission; courts will no longer be held in these ten States as of right, but whether there be courts or no courts will depend altogether upon the pleasure of the commander of the district. If he does not choose to allow the civil tribunals to act "he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose, anything in the constitution and laws of any of the so-called confederate States to the contrary notwithstanding." I wish to suggest to the friends of this measure one amendment which will be proper here. It is that when they provide for the trial of questions as to the rights of person and property and the trial of persons charged with crime before the military courts, "anything in the constitution and laws of any of the so-called confederate States to the contrary notwithstanding," they should add, "anything in the Constitution of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding," and then it will be an honest bill, then the truth will be told, because I undertake to say that no man can vindicate this bill upon the basis of the Constitution, being the supreme law of this land.

How are the rights of person and property ascertained? It is not for a military commander, I presume, to go into a neighborhood and hear a complaint, and to say that the right in this controversy is with A or with B. He must hear it, and for that purpose he must organize a court, or he may allow some civil court, some ordinary tribunal of the State, organized under the laws of the State, to try the case. If he chooses to do so he may appoint a court of private soldiers or of non-commissioned officers, or if the cause is of sufficient importance I presume he may organize a court of commissioned officers.

Does any man say that this is right because there is war in the southern States? No Senator will say that, because in point of fact it is not true; and any man that now casts his vote for a measure upon the ground that war exists, and therefore there is occasion for the use of the Army, legislates upon a proposition in fact not true. We know there is no war there; we know that peace has returned to all the States, that there is not an armed soldier hostile to the Union in the southern States, that the armies have disbanded and the men gone home. As a fact, we know there is no war, there is no condition of war; as a fact, we know that the civil society has returned to its ordinary condition, and that the State and the Federal courts are in the exercise of their ordinary jurisdiction. In other words, Mr. President, we know that this war has accomplished all that was to be accomplished when it commenced, that the rebellion has been suppressed, that the Union has been maintained so far as the supremacy of the laws of the United States and of the Constitution is concerned; I regret to say no further. So far as the Army could restore this Union it has done its work. So far as a political organization could stand in the way of the restoration of the Union, it is today not restored. What more is there for the Army to do? In each locality of the South what more is there for the Army to do? It is the pride of the American soldier to meet the armed foe in the field, and arm to arm and breast to breast to fight it out; but it is not the work of the soldier to prey upon unarmed and defenseless citizens anywhere. The people are at peace. It is the peace of a subjugated people, to use the language of some Senator the other day, a people that have ceased to resist, a people that have been more completely beaten in war than perhaps any people before, because they fought it out to the last extremity; a people overcome with poverty almost perishing for the necessities of life; a people offering no opposition to the execution of the laws of the United States; and upon such a people the Army of the United States is to be used!

Mr. President, this bill in its third section proposes to confer upon the military commander the power to settle disputes between individuals. How can the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN]—I know he is observing my remarks, and therefore I refer to him—how can that gentleman, who is so eminent in the profession of the law, say that under the Constitution of the United States a military court can be organized in a peaceable society to try controverted rights between man and man touching person or property? In his professional life, when his client came to recover a piece of land, he brought his action of ejectment; when he claimed his personal property, he brought his replevin or trover; when he claimed for an assault and battery upon the person, he brought his action of trespass; and it was heard before a judge and jury, and as the questions of law and fact were ascertained by those two departments of the court the judgment went. But in the State of Maine what would he have thought when his client came to him and stated his case well, and he should be satisfied that the right was with him, if he had to cross the street to find some lieutenant or sergeant and state to him the case for him to hear and arbitrarily decide, not only decide where the right was but the extent of the right, and how it should be vindicated, and from that decision no appeal? As well to-day may it be done in the State of Maine as in the State of Georgia. The existence of rebellion does not swell the powers of the Federal Government under the Constitution, and the pretext ceases with the suppression of the rebellion.

But, Mr. President, there are a few provisions in the Constitution of the United States that used to be read with some interest by the people and commanded some degree of respect, to which I will refer, and I think we might now respect these provisions because of the high character of the men who thought it was well that they should be in the supreme law of the land, so high that no Congress could disturb them. One of these provisions is that—

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

Where is the grand jury that is spoken of in the Constitution? Your military commander hears of a murder, one of these murders that the Senators from Massachusetts have seen until their eyes have become red. A shocking thing it is to commit murder! To stain one's hands with human gore is the chiefest of crimes. But who is to try that man? We admit the extent of the criminality; but who is to try him? Under this bill it would be a little difficult to say.

It may be one kind of a court or it may be another; it may be a military commission or tribunal. How many shall compose the court? We know who is to organize this court: it is the military commander. He will designate A, B, C, and D; and who is to challenge that jury? It may be a question between one of the officers of the court or one of the soldiers that are brought to try the man and the man himself, as to which is guilty. No challenge is allowed, but a court is organized arbitrarily without a word from the defendant. He is put upon his trial, for what crime? how described and how defined? I want to know of Senators who support this bill what is a crime under this bill? Is that to be decided by the common law, by the laws of the United States, or by the law of the State, or is it to be decided on the definition made by the commander? Is a man to be tried by the civil law before a military court or by martial law? If he is tried by martial law then I believe that martial law is defined to be the will of the commander. What shall be the crime that may be punished under this third section I cannot see. What system of laws, if any, shall define it I cannot anticipate. By what rules of evidence is a man to be tried? We know what rules prevail in the courts. When a man is being tried for his life we know what are the tests of credibility, how testimony shall be commanded, and how it shall be met; but in this military court all this is dependent upon the pleasure of the court itself.

By what law and rule is the judgment of that court to be determined? Is it to be the pleasure of the court? It seems to be so. The fifth section declares—

That no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district, and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

Then a man is not to be taken by an inferior officer and tried by his court and put to death until the opinion of the commander of the district is had upon the subject. That is a little like an appeal. If a man is condemned before a military court and tried, he has one chance yet for his life; the papers shall be sent to the military commander of the district; he shall look over them, or one of his aids shall, and he shall decide whether the man shall be put to death. That is comfortable! What are the guarantees of the Constitution of the United States? A man shall first be deemed probably guilty by at least twelve men on a grand jury before he shall be put upon his trial, says the Constitution; and when thus put upon his trial on the finding of a grand jury he comes into a court that is to decide whether the charge is one that comes within the definitions known to the law. He is tried upon that before a jury, he has the benefit of seeing the witnesses face to face, he has the benefit of counsel to appear for him, and when the verdict is rendered, there is a court that has heard the evidence, and if the verdict is not right, he has the benefit of the interposition of the court. And after all that, in all of our courts, except the district court of the United States, an appeal lies to some higher court; and in all important cases in the circuit court of the United States, if there is any question of doubt, the judges express that doubt upon the record, that it may come to the Supreme Court of the United States. See the care with which the civil law and the Constitution of the United States have provided for the trial of men accused of crime. But this bill establishes over these southern States a new system of government, such as Russia extends over Poland and Austria over Hungary.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Before the honorable Senator leaves the point he is discussing with regard to the last section of the bill, I wish to call his attention to another consequence to flow from that provision as it stands. There can be no appeal, even in the case of a sentence of death, to the General of the Army or to the President of the United States. The regulations of the Army, as they now stand, being in conflict with that last section so far as giving an appeal to the General of the Army or to the President as Commander-in-Chief is concerned, the effect of that section is to make the decision of the brigadier general in the district supreme, with no appeal whatever beyond him.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In the absence of this statute I believe the case would have to go to the President. In fact the death penalty cannot be executed on the sentence of a military tribunal except with the approval of the President.

Mr. HENDERSON. The case of some few offenses in the field is excepted by the present law.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But that is during war. But, sir, what has become of this language which I find in the seventh article of the amendments to the Constitution:

"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

He shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, with the witnesses brought before him, and all before a jury. What state and condition of our society does this apply to? It does not extend to persons in the Army and Navy. They may be tried by military authority, for the Constitution so allows; but with that exception, and not within the lines of the Army during war, what becomes of this provision?

Across the river within sight of this Capitol we know there is no war, and the civil courts have full jurisdiction; and yet across the river in sight of this Capitol, if this bill becomes a law, a man may be charged with a crime by some malicious person who has a grudge to gratify, may be brought up for trial without that preparation which every Senator knows is necessary for a safe trial, may be brought before a military court or even before a military commander himself, without a court, may be tried and shot within sight of the Capitol of the United States. And yet this Constitution, sworn to by all of us, contains the provision which I have read, and I have taken an oath here that by no act of mine shall a citizen in a criminal case be denied the right of a jury. Am I to vote for a bill which says he may be denied the jury, tried, and shot? Sir, I cannot understand this thing. There is peace in the South, almost the peace of death, a devastated country that we see, a people with scarcely enough to support themselves, the courts holding their regular terms, grand juries meeting; and yet you propose to say that within the sight of the Capitol this military execution may take place.

Mr. President, need I refer to the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Milligan case. That was a very signal case in all its history. I had occasion to observe it in some of its progress, and I never wish to see any friend of mine tried by any such military court. It was a mockery, a shocking mockery of human rights. In the city of Indianapolis, in the center of a State at peace, where there was no pretense that there was war, no pretense that there was an occasion for the exercise of the military power of the Government, this man was brought to trial before a military commission, convicted, and sentenced to death, and the question finally came to the Supreme Court of the United States. The decision of that Court is a plain one, that this Constitution of ours means something, and the learned Justice speaks of the plain English words in which it is written. The Supreme Court have vindicated the right of trial by jury, an important right, as our ancestors thought, a right for which they were ready to fight and to die.

I know, Mr. President, that the Supreme Court has been the object of attack because of that decision. I am very proud that that decision was made by a western man. Has any lawyer of this body stopped to reflect that there is no judge of the English race whose name has come down with honor to us that did not vindicate human rights? Have the lawyers of this body stopped to reflect that every English judge who catered to power and trampled upon the rights of the humblest individual has come down clothed with infamy? Hale represents the one class and Jeffreys the other. The contest of the noble barons for the great charter has to be fought over again it seems. Every judge who has held up that charter, and the rights of Englishmen under it, has come down in history with honor, and every judge who has trampled upon those rights has come down in history with dishonor; and so may it be, Mr. President, and so will it be forever.

I know the appeal that is being made in these times to a great party to break down a judge because he has repeated the lofty sentiments that have been the honor and the pride of the English and American courts for so many centuries; but I fear not these attacks. When dissenting opinions shall be forgotten, this great opinion will stand among the landmarks of human liberty. The name of the judge that stood up and said that a man was not to be killed unless he was tried according to the Constitution and the laws is immortal. Think you that the name of the judge who says that a man can be killed without trial according to the Constitution and the law is to stand above the name of the man who is for the Constitution and the law? Sir, the name of Mr. Justice Davis, now among the learned of the profession, among the men who love liberty, has its place as fixed as the name of Sir Matthew Hale. I have no criticisms to make upon any other judge's opinions. Upon the leading point in the case the court was unanimous. The court said that the trial in the State of Indiana, where there was no war, where there was no right to use the military power, was illegal, and the execution of the man would be murder. Upon the possible power of Congress even in a time of war to confer this power, this jurisdiction, to a military court the court was divided.

Mr. LANE. Will my colleague permit me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. Will my colleague say that there never was any war in the State of Indiana? Will he say that the march of Morgan through that State with ten thousand followers was not war? Will he say that this conspiracy was not a part of the Morgan raid? A war existed there worse than in South Carolina or Georgia.

Mr. HENDRICKS. John Morgan with his command crossed the Ohio river, made a rapid march through the State of Indiana, stole some horses, which have not been paid for, was pursued rapidly, and finally overtaken, I think in the State of Ohio. It was a rapid piece of war through the State of Indiana, and there was not much conspiracy about that. John Morgan took us all by surprise. He took the military authorities in Indiana quite by surprise, for they were not able to catch him. They made the best speed possible, and some of them tried to head him off, but he got clear up in the State of Ohio before he was captured. The principal evidence of his war in the State of Indiana was the larceny of some of our horses.

Mr. JOHNSON. And never returned.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Some of the horses we got back. Morgan never returned into the State of Indiana. So far as the Milligan case is concerned, it had not anything to do with John Morgan's raid. Milligan was in no way connected with John Morgan's raid that I ever heard of. He was charged with conspiring in the North through the Sons of Liberty or Knights of the Golden Circle to overturn the Government, a crime defined, I think, in the act of 1861 or 1862, and the punishment prescribed and the jurisdiction of the court defined. The military court undertook to try a case that Congress had said should be tried in the district or circuit court, and because the military court undertook to do that the Supreme Court say it was an act of usurpation and the whole proceedings were irregular and void.

Mr. LANE. Will my colleague permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. I am not talking about the Bowles and Milligan trial. I understood my colleague to say there was no war in the State of Indiana, but a state of peace. Now he says the Morgan raid resulted in stealing some horses. My colleague knows that there was a fight at Corinth and at Salem in our State; and we have already passed pension bills to pension men killed in the Morgan raid, an actual war in our State. I am not speaking of the trial of Bowles and Milligan; but I say there was a war there which justified military trials, in my opinion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was speaking about the Milligan case. I am not to be called off to a discussion of the question whether Morgan came through the State, or exactly where the fight was. I did not know that that was much of a fight. I knew some persons were shot, but really I did not think it amounted to a battle, as far as I heard. I was not in the pursuing party myself. I happened at that time to be up the river attending the courts, and I was cut off from getting home for a few days by the raid coming unexpectedly into the State. What I say is, that the military force that pursued him in our State did not overtake him in our State.

Mr. LANE. That is very true. I was of that military force, and in less than three days twenty-five thousand volunteers were in that force, and we thought it was a war to protect the people of Indiana.

Mr. HENDRICKS. All right. My opinion is that Morgan was making the best speed he could. That is what our folks thought, and they especially thought it because he changed his horses so often at their expense; and I think my colleague would do well, from the Military Committee, to provide for payment for those horses, if he could. I will go with him most cordially in that endeavor.

Mr. LANE. That is already done.

Mr. HENDRICKS. To pay for those horses?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir; I reported a bill this morning to accomplish that very purpose.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am delighted to hear it. I am much better pleased than I was with the trial of Milligan and the effort to kill him contrary to law. At the time Milligan was tried, John Morgan was not in the State of Indiana at all. None of his forces were in the State of Indiana, and never were there again in the world. There was not a confederate troop in the State of Indiana at the time Milligan was arrested and tried. It was entirely disconnected from that. He was not with the advancing or pursuing party. His case had nothing to do with the Morgan raid; so that, I say, so far as the Milligan trial was concerned, there was a state of peace. He was tried when the State of Indiana was in a state of peace; when the courts were in the exercise of all their jurisdiction conferred by law; when there was no difficulty in securing a full and fair trial before the courts. Mr. President, in my judgment, it is a grand record of the Supreme Court that sets that proceeding aside, and says that when the citizen shall be tried again he must be tried according to the Constitution and the laws. There are no raids down South now; there is no war there. Then why does not the decision of the Supreme Court apply? If a man is entitled to a trial, by jury in this country, and the Supreme Court say that that applies to all citizens not in the land or naval service, how is it that we can pass a bill that men shall be tried and killed without a trial according to law?

But let us look at the other sections of the bill. For hundreds of years, Mr. President, our race has boasted of the writ of habeas corpus, the great writ of liberty, a writ well known to our people. That writ, if this bill becomes a law, can only be issued in one possible case in ten of the States of the Union. It can only be issued by the permission of a military officer. I will read the provision of the bill:

That courts and judicial officers of the United States shall not issue writs of habeas corpus in behalf of persons in military custody, unless some commissioned officer on duty in the district wherein the person is detained shall indorse upon said petition a statement certifying, upon honor, that he has knowledge, or information, as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged detention, and that he believes the same to be wrongful.

In ten of the States of the Union there is to be no issue of the writ of habeas corpus, unless some military officer shall certify upon his honor that he knows the circumstances of the case, and that the detention is wrongful. A court is not to be allowed to hear that question until a military officer shall first decide that the detention is wrongful, and then he may permit the court to issue the writ. But he must certify further—

That he believes that the indorsed petition is preferred in good faith, and in furtherance of justice, and not to hinder or delay the punishment of crime.

The military officer, by giving that certificate, may permit the court to hear the case. If the Chief Justice, when his circuit comes to be assigned, should be called by the duties of his office to Richmond, and there should arise a case in which it would be proper for him to issue the writ of habeas corpus, and a citizen addresses him in a proper petition for the writ, what a spectacle would it be for the Chief Justice of the United States to say to that petitioner in his court, "Go to the lieutenant that holds his office across the street and get his permission, and I will issue the writ; I cannot without the permission." This lieutenant may have never read a law book in his life; he may know nothing about the rights of parties; he may know nothing about the case; and yet the Chief Justice of the United States is not allowed to hear that case. So in all the courts, the judges of the United States courts are subordinated in the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Constitution and the laws to the opinion of a commissioned military officer; and all that, sir, in the name of liberty! Mr. President, I never knew so many principles of the Constitution, of liberty, of right, and of propriety violated in any one bill in my life. It would seem to me that if a man had been drawing a bill with a view to strike the Constitution at every point possible, he could not have succeeded more entirely than in the draft of this bill.

Perhaps I did not do the bill justice in one respect. There is one limitation upon the powers of these military courts or of military officers:

All persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted.

We know pretty well what that is, when it is addressed in the Constitution to our own consciences; but what will a military officer think is "cruel or unusual punishment?" There was a man in military command at Paducah for nearly a year, and he would have a man arrested in the night time and shot at sunrise. He considered that right. They say that when he left that place it took all the military wagons in Kentucky to carry away the booty.

Mr. GRIMES. Who was it?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think his name was General Paine. That is a specimen. There was no war at Paducah at the time. The confederate forces were not perhaps within one hundred miles of Paducah. He was governing a part of the country that had been brought under military rule. He was succeeded by an Indian who reflected credit upon the service in the discharge of the duties at that place. If we could have as just men, as honest men, as intelligent men as the general who succeeded General Paine, I should not have so much fear of this bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to have his authority for the statement he has made in regard to General Paine. I know something in regard to that case, and I think there is no sort of truth in the allegation that the Senator makes against General Paine, neither as a cruel nor as a dishonest man. I should like to know the authority for the statement that he had men arrested in the night and shot at sunrise, and that he took away wagon loads of booty when he left Kentucky.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, there was a very earnest effort made, two or three years ago, by the then Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Powell,] to get a copy of the record in the War Department, and the Senator from Illinois opposed it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The record of the court of inquiry.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then if the Senator did not oppose it I will withdraw that part of my statement. Governor Powell, as a Senator, introduced a resolution calling for the record in the War Department; and I understand the record there shows what I have stated. My recollection was that the Senator from Illinois opposed the passage of that resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I opposed the passage of a partial resolution, not for the whole record, and if the Senator from Indiana does not know, perhaps he had better make inquiry and ascertain that General Paine had a trial and was acquitted of all the accusations, and the only thing upon which he was found guilty was not in reference to any one of these matters.

Mr. HENDRICKS. He passed from Kentucky up into Illinois, and this was an inquiry made pursuant to an order from the War Department, as I understand, and the officers appointed to make that inquiry made their report to the War Department. That report was asked for by the resolution to which I refer. Now does the Senator from Illinois say that he opposed or did not oppose that resolution?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I say I did not oppose the whole renquiry, and that General Paine demanded a court-martial, and had it in reference to these charges, and was triumphantly acquitted of all such accusations as the Senator from Indiana makes here to-night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Has the Senator examined that record himself?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; but I have this upon information which I think is correct. I have it from persons who knew all about it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was very anxious that the resolution offered at that time by Senator Powell should be adopted, and that we should be able to see exactly what was the fact; but it never was passed, and we did not get that record as I recollect.

Mr. TRUMBULL. General Paine had a trial.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is to that record in the War Department that I refer.

When interrupted by the Senator I had commenced to say that I did not know that it was worth while now to say a word in behalf of the people of the South. I am not going to apologize for their conduct. But, sir, they have submitted to the military authority of the Government most reluctantly upon their part. Their arms have been laid down or taken from them; they have in every way in which they could do so addressed themselves to this Government for pardon and for restoration in all their relations to the Government, and for nearly two years they have been refused; they have agreed to the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery; they have modified their own constitution so as to abolish slavery; they have repudiated the southern debt contracted during the war; they have done all that they understood was required of them, except to adopt the last constitutional amendment; they have not adopted that, and I do not know that they ever will. Upon that subject I have no opinion to give. Some Senators on the other side know very well that there was a provision introduced into that constitutional amendment that made it almost impossible for the people of the South to adopt it. I speak of that provision which especially degraded the military officers of the South and cut them off from all positions in the Federal and State governments. Whether they ought or ought not to have adopted that constitutional amendment—whether it was a matter of expediency or of right, I do not choose now to discuss; but they have so far declined to adopt it; and what is to be their condition? The war is over. What are their relations to this Government? They are required to obey the law; they are required to pay their taxes. These they do as cheerfully as possible as far as their means go. They are now making no great demands for representation in Congress. They know that for the present that is hopeless. I have heard no certificates of election read at the Secretary's desk at this session from the southern States. I suppose for the present they have ceased to ask for representation.

But, Mr. President, the condition of those States demands some action upon the part of Congress—not, in my judgment, to subject them to a form of government unknown to our Constitution and institutions, but some policy that will bring them back again in all their proper relations to the Federal Government. Sir, there is no office so high that it would be a compensation to me for an effort on my part to inflame the passions of the people of one section now against the people of another section. I could not be induced to do it. I believe that this Government must eventually rest, if it is to be permanent, upon the love of the people. It is the highest duty of the citizen and of the statesman now, by every effort possible, to restore harmony and peaceful relations. I believe that this Government would be completely restored in every respect to-day if the proper course had been pursued a year or a year and a half ago. I had no anxiety for the abrogation or repeal of the test oath. That required the southern States to be represented by loyal men, as they are called. Let that be if Senators desire it; but let them be represented. Let the wheels of this Government move on according to the Constitution. If Senators expect to restore this Government by establishing over nearly one third of the States a form of government unknown to our people, they are mistaken, in my judgment.

Why, Mr. President, as I read this bill and contemplate its wonderful provisions, it is almost impossible for me to believe that Senators by this policy desire restoration; it is almost impossible for me to believe that they desire harmony. Such a system of government as this finds its parallel perhaps in Poland; to some extent it may find a parallel in Hungary; but, sir, it never found its parallel in the history of Rome. When Rome extended her conquests she extended Roman laws. The proudest day of the life of Cicero was when he attacked the governor of a Roman province for the cruelties that he perpetrated upon the people.

In my judgment no statesman of this day and of our country can win undying laurels by exciting this strife and keeping it up and keeping our country apart; but, sir, that statesman will become immortal in the history of this country who can restore these people to their former relations. Every inducement is in favor of it. Our trade, our commerce, our prosperity invite us to such a policy. There is no reason against it. We have no conflicting interests in this country; at least we should have none. New England has her peculiar interests; but they do not conflict with the interests of the West if we have wise legislation. The West has her grain-growing interest. The South has her producing interest. The prosperity of each is the prosperity of all. I want this Union fully restored, that trade may return to our people and prosperity to every section.

Mr. President, I may be wrong about this. It may be that the safest way to establish liberty is first to establish despotism. They have an easy way in Poland. When any person conducts himself so as not to satisfy the military commander, that night he is on the road with his family to Siberia. That is short work. It is a very efficient government. It settles questions without any trouble and quickly, without unnecessary delay, to use the language of this bill. So in Turkey, when they want a man out of the way they throw him into the sea. So in China, when a man is supposed to be dangerous they flay him. These are examples that we can follow. But, I say that in no republic that has existed on earth, and in no circumstances connected with the history of the United States, do we find a parallel for this proposition. It has no virtue; it has every vice that so short a bill can possess.

Mr. WILSON. It is now midnight, and we have got a great deal of work to do during the next few days. I therefore suggest that we make some arrangement at this time by which we may take a vote at seven or eight o'clock to-morrow evening, so as to give abundant time for the discussion of this question.

Mr. JOHNSON. Say eleven or twelve o'clock to-morrow night.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not agree to that. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILSON. I merely wish to suggest to the gentlemen on the other side that we name some time to take the vote; say ten o'clock to-morrow night. If we can make such an arrangement, I think we had better do so.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I think the measure can be concluded then; but I do not believe in these pre-contracts. They are irregular. If I choose to discuss this question all day to-morrow, it is my privilege, or the privilege of any other Senator to do so.

Mr. POMEROY. Let us go on to-night.

Mr. McDUGALL. Very well. I have not asked for any adjournment or postponement; I am willing to stay with those who stay longest, and stand with those who stand longest. I think, myself, that the bill can be concluded at the time suggested; but at the same time I object to this system of contracting for conclusions of debates where gentlemen may be desirous of debating a question. If I should embark in this debate myself, and I shall undertake to engage in the full debate, I do not know how long I might employ myself in producing my full opinions; and so of others. It is not according to the proper rule of the Senate to make such an arrangement. We have no previous question here. This system of contracting to close debate upon great measures like this is not exactly right. I believe we can get the question to-morrow night. I am willing to sit up this night, all day to-morrow, and to-morrow night for that purpose. I am neither hungry, nor sleepy, nor tired; I am willing to stay with you all the time; but I object to this thing of limiting debate.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that we must all feel that we ought to preserve all the strength we have and all the good temper we have in discussing and dealing with these matters. The Senator from California talks a great deal and very often, but he is always brief, and I have no idea that he will take all day to-morrow. It seems to me that now at midnight we might go home in first rate condition, and come here to-morrow, and to-morrow evening at ten o'clock take a vote on this bill. We shall have several amendments upon it. For myself I will simply say that I hope the bill in regard to Louisiana will be modified so as to apply to all these States, and suffrage be given to everybody, with the exception of those excluded from holding office by the constitutional amendment, and that we shall pass that. I am willing to tack on this bill to it. I think that is of more vital importance, and I should like to see the two measures combined. What I desire now is, that the Senator from California will let us make this arrangement, to take the vote at ten o'clock to-morrow evening, which will give full time for debate. We shall then be able to go home instead of exhausting ourselves to-night. I can say to the Senator from California that I have no doubt that I can keep awake quite as long as he can, and remain in quite as good condition for legislation.

Mr. McDUGALL. We have never tried our mutual endurance. [Laughter.] I will say in reply to the Senator that I have now an amendment here to be offered as an amendment to the amendment when that comes in order and I have the opportunity, and that will take at least an hour or two before I have anything to say on the main question. Nevertheless, I think that we shall be able to have a vote to-morrow night; but I do not make any pre-contract, for myself I claim the right of debating any question here.

Mr. BUCKALEW. From the conversation I have had with gentlemen about me, I have not any doubt that we shall be able to get through with the bill to-morrow night. I have no doubt that we shall be able to conclude it to-morrow without any difficulty as to the question of time. There are very few gentlemen, so far as I understand, that intend to speak. I know that the Senator from California is not very lengthy generally.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before the matter passes from the recollection of the Senate, as the Senator from Indiana has renewed an assault upon a gentleman of my State who served in the Union Army and did his duty, and an unjust assault, as I think, I desire to refer to the record as it occurred two years ago. The Senator from Indiana charged that I opposed a resolution to obtain information from the War Department. I find that the Senator from Kentucky at that time, Mr. Powell, offered a resolution calling for the report of some—

Mr. HENDRICKS. Court of inquiry.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, not a court of inquiry; of some commission that had made a report in reference to General Paine. When the resolution was offered, I inquired if that commission was ex parte and in secret, without General Paine's knowledge, and opposed the resolution at the time, and moved its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, having understood that it was a secret transaction that he knew nothing about, that misrepresented him. The resolution was referred. At a subsequent period of the session, on the 18th of January, the matter was called up again, on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, and I then said:

"At the time the resolution was under consideration, I had not seen General Paine, and had no information from him in regard to the report; but my reason for making the motion was that I thought it unjust to an officer to publish a report affecting his character, which I understood was ex parte and made by a commission before whom he did not appear. Since then I have seen General Paine, and had a conversation with him, and I learn from him that the report is of the character I had supposed. I learned from him further, that he, after hearing that a commission was proceeding to inquire into his conduct, before which he did not appear at all, filed a reply or answer to their report, and also that the report made by this commission was reviewed by the Judge Advocate General, and he informed me that he had no sort of objection to having the report of the commission published, provided his answer to it and the review of the report by the Judge Advocate General should be published also. I, for one, am willing, therefore, that the Senator's resolution should be passed if it should be amended so as to call for all the papers. It will then appear, as I am informed, that so far from General Paine being the bloodthirsty and guilty man that the Senator from Kentucky has pronounced him without a trial, he has but done his duty."

I will state that the Globe does not show that the Senator from Kentucky ever pressed his resolution any further.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I had never heard, until it was suggested by the Senator from Illinois, that there had been any trial on a court-martial of these charges that were so well understood over the country against General Paine. Now, as the Senator from Illinois says that there was a trial, and that that trial had relation to these charges, and that upon a full trial General Paine was acquitted, of course I do not wish to be understood as repeating a charge that a man was tried upon and acquitted, and do not. I had not heard that he had been tried. That is news to me.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He subsequently had a trial.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I acquiesce in the decision, of course.

Mr. TRUMBULL. My understanding is—I have never seen the proceedings—that of all the charges of the character of which the Senator speaks General Paine was acquitted; but he was convicted of some charge—I do not remember what it was now—but it was nothing affecting his integrity as a man. I do not remember the charge of which he was convicted.

Mr. JOHNSON. What was the sentence?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I cannot now state what it was.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Any charges that he has been tried upon of course I do not wish to renew, and would not have it so understood.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the honorable Senator from Illinois the name of the second commissioner that examined the case of General Paine. The first was John Mason Brown. Will the honorable Senator give me the name of the other colonel?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS. I supposed that the resolution of Governor Powell would show.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have the resolution here as it is reported in the Globe.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make one remark while the honorable Senator is looking for the resolution. The two officers who made this inquiry into the conduct of General Paine were then colonels in the service, and both of them extreme Union men. Colonel John Mason Brown is still an extreme Union man and a man of very fine intellect, of superior intelligence and education, and one of the first men of his age in the State of Kentucky. His complaint and the complaint of the other colonel was, that this court of inquiry that was afterward organized and passed upon the case of General Paine sat without their being informed of its sessions or being allowed an opportunity to make good the charges which they preferred against him in their report.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I can give the resolution now if the Senator wishes to hear it.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Here it is:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate the report and evidence taken by a military commission, of which Brigadier General Speed S. Fry was president, appointed to investigate the conduct of Brigadier General Paine, United States Army, in and about Paducah, Kentucky."

Mr. DAVIS. Colonel Brown, since the court of inquiry upon the case of General Paine has delivered its sentence, publicly and openly avers that the charges made in the report against General Paine by himself and the colonel that was associated with him in the commission were true, and that if allowed the opportunity, they could have proved them to be true before any court of inquiry.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to remark, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from California, that I have no doubt myself that a final vote can be taken on this bill to-morrow at some time or other. We have now been in session for more than twelve hours, and this is certainly no time for proceeding with the discussion. I wish to speak briefly on the subject, and I am satisfied that I shall not speak at as great length to-morrow as I should to-night if compelled to go on.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about to say that I have no doubt the vote can be taken to-morrow, and under that belief, and under the impression that that will be satisfactory to the majority of the Senate, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question, and declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it probable, from what I have been told by one or two Senators, that I was not heard on the other side of the Chamber. What I said, and what I repeat is, that the vote can certainly be taken to-morrow, at least as soon as ten o'clock to-morrow evening; and I do not think it is possible to take the vote to-night. If we take the vote to-night we shall be unable to do any business to-morrow of any kind.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is not debatable. The Chair should have interrupted—

Mr. CONNESS. It is as debatable to me as it is to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again repeats that the motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. CONNESS. I am quite aware of that, sir.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator will reverse the motion, I will withdraw it for the purpose of allowing him to speak.

Mr. CONNESS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. I only claim equal rights here, which are not always accorded by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn was made by the Senator from Maryland, as the Chair understood. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn by him?

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw it if the gentleman wishes to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. The Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire simply to say to the Senator from Maryland that his opinion that a vote can be had to-morrow evening at ten o'clock is not an agreement that the vote shall be taken at that time. If the Senate will enter into such an understanding, then for my part I shall vote to adjourn at this time; but if we cannot come to such an understanding I think we had better go on considering the bill. That is all I have to say.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maryland, also, that I do not think any agreement can be made that could bind the Senators present. It would be a convenience to them to conform to the agreement possibly, possibly not. There are several Senators who desire still to discuss this measure. The extent to which they desire to discuss it I am not well informed of; but I am aware that other Senators beyond myself will occupy some seven or eight hours, as near as I am informed.

Mr. GRIMES. How many do you intend to occupy?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Of myself I will say nothing. I shall only speak as long as I think I can say things of some advice or good sense; but I will not limit my discourse, for it is a great question, and if I am possessed of all that should be said of and about this question it might take me—indeed it might deserve taking the discourse of a whole week. [Laughter.] I do not claim to be equal to that effort, because I have not had the opportunity within twenty-four hours to bring together the material necessary to exhibit my views carefully upon this subject. I do not, therefore, expect myself to speak at any very great length; but yet if upon careful consideration I should choose to do so, or if possessing the recollections of past times and memories and reasons and considerations that yet lay in my hidden memories I shall choose to talk for a longer period, I shall claim the right to do so. I do not choose to be chained down to a particular period when I rise in the Senate of the United States to discuss any question. I think myself that we can close the argument to-morrow evening. That is my opinion. I have expressed it before. At the same time I do not believe in these contracts about the limitations of debate. There is no previous question in the Senate, and this thing of introducing one by contract between Senators is a thing to which I am utterly hostile.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 11, noes 21.

Mr. DAVIS. It is my purpose to make a speech upon this important bill, and I desire to make as short a one as I possibly can. I have no disposition to consume unnecessarily any time in the discussion of this measure, or to postpone the action of the Senate upon it. I think myself we might as well adjourn now. I do not believe that there will be any difficulty in reaching the vote some time to-morrow night, at least I shall not speak with a view to produce any such delay. I am anxious to give my views on this subject. I do not feel able to give them at this late hour of the night. Still, I believe I could hang on for three or four hours if I was disposed to do so, [laughter;] but I believe that to-morrow I should not occupy more than at the farthest two hours of the time of the Senate. Without making any contract with anybody but myself, I would be willing to restrict myself to that time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think there has been an impression on the part of the majority side of the Chamber, that there was a purpose to delay the passage of this bill by something beyond such debate as we thought was right and proper. I can assure Senators there is no purpose of the kind. It has not been mentioned to me by any Senator on this side; and so far as I am concerned, I have no such purpose. I never dreamed of such a thing.

Mr. CONNESS. I was under the impression that the Senator tried to adjourn us when we met to-night, and even on his own motion refused to vote.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly I did.

Mr. CONNESS. So that we should have less than a quorum.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly, I should have been glad to adjourn to-night. I stated to the Senate before we met this evening that I did not want to speak to-night, that I was not well. That is the whole of that. There is no purpose, as far as I am concerned, to delay the vote on this bill beyond the consideration that the bill ought to receive.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is now so near morning that it is hardly worth while to adjourn. We might as well proceed with this bill at this time as any other. The mere expression of an opinion that this debate may close some time to-morrow night amounts to very little. It is the expression of the individual who makes it and goes no further and binds nobody. I think we might as well proceed with the bill to-night as at any other time.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. WADE. Well, let us have the question.

Mr. DAVIS, (at half past twelve o'clock.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and on that motion, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 8, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, Johnson, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Trumbull—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Foster, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, Sherman, and Van Winkle—18.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I am against both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment. I am against both, separately and collectively, and I could not be induced to give a vote that would amount or would seem to amount to a concession of either of them. I object to the amendment to the amendment, especially upon this ground: it concedes contingently for an indefinite time all the principles of the amendment. The Senator from Pennsylvania expressed so well and so forcibly the reasons why he could not give sanction to the principles involved in the amendment, and they accord so well with my own ground of opposition to the amendment, that I do not deem it necessary to repeat them. I merely rose to state the point upon which I should vote against the amendment to the amendment, without attempting to make any argument upon it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I guess we had better adjourn, and I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for the reading of the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment to the amendment, which was in line nine, after the words "United States" to insert "of whatever color, race or condition," and in the same line, after the word "upward" to strike out the words "who have resided one year in said State, with regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude, except such as may be disfranchised for participating in the late rebellion, or for felony at common law," and to insert, "who may have been residents of the State for twelve months previous to the election, except such as may be disqualified on account of rebellion, felony at the common law, idiocy, or insanity;" so that the amendment would read:

That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, and conformed its constitution and laws thereto in all respects, and when it shall have provided by its constitution that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, of whatever color, race, or condition, twenty-one years old and upward, who may have been residents of the State for twelve months previous to the election, except such as may be disqualified on account of rebellion, felony at the common law, idiocy, or insanity; and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined for ratification or rejection, and when the constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

The question being put on the amendment to the amendment, there were, on a division—ayes, seven.

Mr. CHANDLER. Give it up.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will not give it up. I desire to state now, before this vote is taken, to Senators that if the amendment is adopted as it now stands, if there is any intention of adopting it—I do not know what the feeling of the Senate may be on that subject—it will not secure the suffrage to the negroes in the South, and the amendment to it that I propose will secure the suffrage unless they be idiots, insane, or shall have been convicted of crime, treason, or rebellion. The proposition as offered by the Senator from Maryland, in my judgment, leaves it in the discretion of a State Legislature in the South to exclude the negroes for any other cause than race or color. For instance, if it be adopted, the State Legislatures may declare that no person unless he can read or write, or unless he has a higher degree of education than that, shall be entitled to vote. If Senators desire that done, I have nothing to say.

Mr. POMEROY. I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment is a decided improvement, and whether the amendment, as amended, shall be adopted or not, it cannot hurt it to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So far as I am concerned, I expect to vote against this amendment in any form. I am quite indifferent as to whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is adopted or not; but my opinion would be that it makes the amendment more explicit, and it is more easily understood with his amendment than in its present shape.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the vote may be again taken on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote has not yet been declared. Only one side has been counted. The Chair will put the question again.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I propose to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "constitution," in the seventh line, the words, "to be framed by a convention of delegates elected by the persons who may vote upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution as herein provided;" so that the clause will read:

And when it shall have provided by its constitution, to be framed by a convention of delegates elected by the persons who may vote upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution as hereinafter provided, that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, &c.

The effect of the amendment as it now stands is, that the people only have the privilege of accepting or negating what is submitted to them. This amendment requires that electors, having the same qualifications as provided in the act, shall elect delegates to a convention to frame the constitution.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment in the fourth line by inserting after the word "when" the words "the people of;" so that it will read:

That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when the people of any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same, &c.

As the amendment now stands it reads, when any of the late confederate States shall do so-and-so. If amended as I propose it will read, when the people of any one of those States do so-and-so.

Mr. JOHNSON. How are they to do it?

Mr. MORRILL. By a convention, and that is provided for in the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. That relieves it from the implication that we authorize these States to do this. I propose to have it done by the people, and not by the States.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rather think the honorable member is mistaken. The provision to which he refers relates to the adoption of the constitutional amendment as it is now pending before the States, that is submitted to the Legislatures of the States. How are the people of the States to act on that subject? There is no provision for calling a convention for that purpose; that relates to the constitution which they are to form for the State itself afterward.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from New Jersey has just provided for it in the amendment he has made.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; he has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that this is right.

Mr. JOHNSON. It cannot be done. It must be submitted to the Legislatures of the several States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine contemplates further to strike out the words "shall have given its assent to the same," and the insertion of the words "when the people shall have formed a constitution and laws."

Mr. POMEROY. I think there is an amendment needed there by inserting after the word "States" the words "when the people of any one of the so-called confederate States in accordance with an act of Congress," or "in accordance with law," shall have given its assent to the same. There is no way in which the people can give their assent unless in harmony with some law. This bill does not provide for it, nor the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that I have made myself understood. The Constitution can be amended only in one of two ways. The proposition may come either from Congress itself or from the States. When it comes from Congress, as in this case, the amendment is to be submitted to and to be passed upon by the Legislatures of the States. You cannot send it to the people except so far as they are represented by the Legislature. If I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, it is that when the constitutional amendment which Congress has submitted, shall have been adopted by the people of the States certain results shall follow. We have no right to submit it to the people of the States.

Mr. MORRILL. Allow me to state my own proposition. It is this: to insert after the word "when," in line four, the words "the people of;" then to strike out after the word "shall," in the fifth line, the words "have given its consent to the same and," so as to read, "and when the people of any one of the late so-called confederate States shall form a constitution," &c.

Mr. POMEROY. Why not insert "in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress," or "in accordance with law?"

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that by words in the thirteenth line, the Constitution is to be submitted to the voters of the State. However it is made, that will make it the act of the people of the State.

Mr. MORRILL. That is not inconsistent with my proposition.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. It renders it unnecessary.

Mr. MORRILL. The people are to form a constitution by the election of delegates, as is provided for by the amendment of the honorable Senator from New Jersey; and my point is to allow the people to form such a constitution by delegates, making the people the agents, instead of employing, the confederate States for agents, thereby recognizing them. That is my objection. I do not think we ought to recognize the confederate States as valid agents. We cannot do it from our ground, and beside I do not think we ought to use them as agents for that purpose, but should address ourselves directly to the people.

Mr. SUMNER. There is another amendment that ought to come in in that same connection, though I feel that this whole proposition is so thoroughly vicious in every line and in every word from the first to the last that in order to make it at all so as to receive, it seems to me, a single vote, it ought to be amended from the first word to the last. But the proposition of the Senator from Maine is obviously correct. No person can hesitate, of course, to carry out the idea of the Senator from Maine. I do not think even the Senator from Nevada, as earnest and eloquent as he was for this very curious proposition, is disposed to recognize the legitimacy and the validity of these governments in these States at this moment; and yet this proposition pivots on that idea. Without that recognition this proposition is nothing. The Senator from Maine, therefore, is perfectly right when he proposes to introduce the words "the people of;" so that it will read:

When the people of any of the late so-called confederate States shall have given its assent to the same.

No one certainly, not even the Senator from Nevada, ardent as he is for this anomaly, this absolutely anomalous proposition, will admit the validity of these sham governments.

Therefore, I say the Senator from Maine is right; but the Senator does not go far enough. You have got to introduce still other words, which I propose at the proper time to move, declaring that they shall give their consent by a valid Legislature. Suppose the present Legislature, so called, of South Carolina gives its consent to the constitutional amendment, will the Senator from Nevada attribute to that the least value? Would it be worth the paper on which it might be written? Suppose the so-called Legislature in Louisiana at this moment—it has been called bogus to-day; I hardly like to use the term, and yet perhaps it expresses the idea as well as anything else—gives its consent to the constitutional amendment, of what value is it? Suppose the assembly called a Legislature in Georgia chooses to give its assent, of what value is it? Does the Senator recognize those bodies as invested with legislative authority capable of representing those States in the adoption of a constitutional amendment and entering in that way into this great copartnership? Certainly he cannot. He must require that any adoption of the constitutional amendment shall be by a valid Legislature, not by a humbug.

This whole proposition from beginning to the end, from the first line to the last, is obnoxious just to that criticism. I propose if it is pressed to go through with it and take it up line by line and move the proper amendments to it.

Mr. STEWART. As I am referred to in such explicit terms and as this proposition is swept away as so ridiculous—

Mr. SUMNER. I did not say it was ridiculous; I said it was anomalous.

Mr. STEWART. So anomalous, so vicious, and bogus—

Mr. SUMNER. No, I did not say this was "bogus;" I said the Legislatures down there were bogus.

Mr. STEWART. Since all these remarks have been made, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the main bill which the Senator from Massachusetts was so eager to eulogize, upon which he could not pass a sufficient eulogy, which he could not wait to have called up in its regular order before he eulogized, recognizes these same local governments in so many words, and recognizes them for a higher purpose than the purpose of sanctioning the constitutional amendment, because we all hold that that may be ratified by the loyally represented States without them, and the only object of having them recognize it is to show their loyalty to this Government. I hold that the States here represented in the Government have the power to adopt constitutional amendments; and calling upon the other States to sanction them is only formal as a mark of loyalty; but in this bill you say your military chieftain that you send there shall allow the local governments to execute the local laws.

Mr. SUMNER. Be good enough to read the preamble to the bill, please.

Mr. STEWART. I propose to read some portion of the bill. It does, I say, for a higher purpose than the sanctioning of the constitutional amendment, for the purpose of life and death, recognize the laws of these very "bogus" States. In this amendment, which I regard as essential, proper, and just, they are called upon to do an incidental thing; and for that reason it is suggested that the Senator from Nevada might recognize them for that purpose, while the Senator from Massachusetts recognizes them for the purpose of executing all the local laws and carrying on the machinery of government by this bill, by the aid of the military. It is said that I would not recognize them for this purpose. I say simply that when they have complied with all the conditions we prescribe—and this is one which we ask of them as a manifestation of loyalty—after they shall have ratified the constitutional amendment, after they shall have framed a loyal constitution, and the proposition as now amended requires it to be framed by delegates elected on the principle of manhood suffrage—after they shall have done all this, after they shall have established manhood suffrage by means of a constitution, and after that constitution shall have been submitted to the people on the principle of manhood suffrage and ratified by them, after their action shall have been submitted to Congress and approved by Congress, we propose to recognize them as valid States. Then, I say, they will be no longer "bogus" governments. The people will have complied with all that any man dare get up and demand. When I propose to recognize them after they have done all that any man on this floor dare demand, I hope I shall not be accused of being desirous of recognizing bogus State governments. I do not propose to recognize them as State governments till they have shown their complete loyalty by complying with all the conditions and giving all the guarantees which can be required; and if there are not enough in this proposition I propose that it shall be amended until it shall satisfy the most fastidious. My objection is to inaugurating military government as an end; I want it as a means.

Mr. SUMNER. You are right on that point; I agree with you.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will call the attention of the Senate to the alterations which should be made in consequence of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maine, and I do this in answer to an objection made, that the proposition is not in accordance with the provision of the Constitution as to the mode in which a constitutional amendment must be adopted. The first provision of this amendment now is: "That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States;" and the next is: "And when the people of any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have," not assented to the constitutional amendment, but shall have "formed a constitution and laws in conformity therewith in all respects," then, making provision for the suffrage, and introducing another clause in the eighteenth line, when the State comes to be admitted and is no longer bogus, and presents its constitution to be approved by Congress, then, on such State assenting to the constitutional amendment it shall be entitled to representation.

Mr. MORRILL. That is the proposition.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "The question is on the proposed amendment to the amendment."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Before that vote is taken I should be glad to hear the proposed amendment read again.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed in line four of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, after the word "when," to insert "the people of;" in lines five and six, to strike out "give its assent to the same and conform its" and to insert "formed a;" and after "laws," in the sixth line, to strike out "there-to," and to insert "in conformity therewith;" so as to make the amendment read:

That whenever the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when the people of any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have formed a constitution and laws in conformity therewith in all respects, and when it shall have provided, &c.

Mr. JOHNSON. The provision that refers to the framing of the constitution by the people is all right. That I suppose would have been the effect before. A State cannot form a constitution except through its people. But the amendment goes further and says, "When the people shall form the laws." You do not propose to constitute the people a legislature to legislate on the subject. That certainly is not the purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very well; strike out the words "and laws;" I do not think them important; and then in the seventh line, instead of the words "by its," insert "in such constitution."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The belief is entertained, I think, by a majority of this Chamber, certainly by myself, that the ratification of the constitutional amendment by the due proportion, three fourths of the States represented here, will make it a part of the Constitution. If our declaration was conclusive, there would be an end of that matter; but our declaration perhaps is not conclusive on that subject. There is another body holding its sessions in this Capitol that may, by possibility, express an opinion on that subject that would be more authoritative than ours, and that body may say that the ratification of the constitutional amendment by three fourths of the States represented here now does not make it a part of the Constitution of the United States. Now, if we strike out this clause of the amendment, what will be the result?

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from New Jersey is going to provide for that, if Senators will only let him get through.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I propose after the word "Congress," in the eighteenth line, to insert "on such State assenting to the said constitutional amendment."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That will obviate the difficulty I was about to suggest. I was about to say that by striking out these words in the first part of the proposition, without providing for the same thing somewhere else, we might get ourselves into the position of not having the constitutional amendment finally ratified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HOWARD. Let the amendment be read as it will stand if thus amended.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON as it would stand if amended as proposed by Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, as follows: Insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, and when the people of any one of the late so-called confederate States shall have formed a constitution in conformity therewith in all respects, and when it shall have provided in such constitution, to be framed by a convention of delegates chosen by the persons who may vote upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution as hereinafter provided, that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all male citizens of the United States, of whatever color, race, or condition, twenty-one years old and upward, who may have been residents of the State for twelve months previous to the election, except such as may be disqualified on account of rebellion, felony at the common law, idiosyncrasy, or insanity, and when said constitution shall have been submitted to the voters of said State, as thus defined, for ratification or rejection, and when the constitution, if ratified by the vote of the people of said State, shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, said State shall, if its constitution be approved by Congress, on such State assenting to the said constitutional amendment, be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oaths prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this bill shall be inoperative in said State.

Mr. HOWARD. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey relieves the original amendment very much in my mind. Indeed, it removes one of the objections which I stated to that amendment at the opening of the discussion, which was that the amendment as it was first submitted to us contained within itself a clear recognition of the legitimacy and validity of the present so-called sham governments of the rebel States. This amendment removes that objection, because it does not purport to recognize any authority whatever on the part of those governments.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland as amended.

Mr. SUMNER. The proposition is still very incomplete. I said you ought to begin at the beginning and work through it. Therefore I will go back before the part as to which I made some observations a moment ago, and where the objection which I presented has been removed by the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. There is an uncertainty which is left in an earlier line, and which I think ought to be removed. It says "that when the constitutional amendment proposed as article fourteen by the Thirty-Ninth Congress shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States;" but it leaves open the question what number of States can make it now a part of the Constitution of the United States. In short, it leaves open the question whether these sham governments may not, by some hocus-pocus or other, be enlisted in the number of States to constitute the three fourths required. Now, I think on this occasion it is important to remove all ambiguity. I propose, therefore, to introduce after the word "United States," in line four, the words "by the ratification of three fourths of the Legislatures of the States now participating in the Government."

Mr. JOHNSON. That does not change it at all, the question will still be open.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, then, I will adopt another form of expression and say "by the ratification of three fourths of the Legislatures of the States now represented in Congress."

Mr. JOHNSON. That leaves it just as it was before.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JOHNSON. What I was about to say, when I rose with the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, is equally applicable to the amendment as he has now framed it. When will the Constitution be amended by the ratification of three fourths of those States that are represented? Who is to decide that? That is an open question, and must be an open question just as much after you have declared that it is to be a part of the Constitution when ratified by three fourths as if you leave it blank. If in point of law the States that are now represented are the States to whom is to be referred and by whom is to be ratified the constitutional amendment proposed by Congress, then the Constitution of the United States will be altered in that respect; but if it is to be submitted to more than the States that are represented in Congress, that is to say, to all the States, the question will be open whether Congress declares it or not, and that is a question of constitutional law which Congress cannot decide by any declaration. It may go for what it is worth, that in the opinion of Congress (if that should be the action of Congress) the Constitution may be amended by the ratification of three fourths of the represented States; but whenever the question arises before the judiciary it will be governed by other considerations. It must be governed by what is the meaning of the Constitution in that particular, and be governed by what the courts shall decide is the condition of the States that are not represented. If the courts shall be of opinion that the States which are not represented in Congress are still States, then they will certainly decide that a ratification by three fourths only of the States that are represented will not make a change in the Constitution. The Senator's amendment leaves the question just where it was before.

Mr. CONNESS. And in the case of such a decision by the Supreme Court these southern States or so-called confederate States will have been accepted and in operation, while this amendment which you now have adopted will be a sham—nothing.

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. Then you have gained nothing, and they are in.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President—

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the understanding is that when the vote is taken on this amendment the Senate will adjourn I shall not occupy time now, but I am disposed to speak on this amendment unless the Senate is inclined to adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. I have several other amendments to propose.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is substantially to declare that only the vote of three fourths of the States now represented in Congress is necessary to the ratification of a constitutional amendment. As that recital, in my opinion, is wrong, radically wrong, I cannot give my assent to the main amendment itself if such a recital should be contained in it.

Mr. CONNESS, and others. Vote it down.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no objection if the Senate will vote it down, and as that seems to be the disposition I shall not consume the time in debating it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The object of the proposed amendment is obvious to every one. It is to declare the sense of the Senate that it is not necessary for this constitutional amendment to receive the assent of more than three fourths of the Legislatures of the States represented in Congress. The consequence of it is simply that a majority of the Representatives of the States in this body may get together and close the door against the representatives of the other States in the Union, and the assent of three fourths of the States so represented, although they may not be a majority of the States in the Union, is all that is necessary to the valid ratification of a proposed amendment to the Constitution.

If, Mr. President, this is the doctrine of the Senate of the United States, in what attitude does the Senate appear before the people of this country and the civilized world? In the commencement of the late civil war Congress by resolutions recognized every southern State as a State of this Union, although those States were not represented in Congress. You have passed more than a hundred bills through this body during the continuance of the civil war, in which and by which you recognized those States as States in the Union; you levied taxes upon them as States; you apportioned their share of the public burdens upon them as States; you appointed officers for the collection of your revenue in those States as States, naming them as States. Even Mr. Lincoln, who was immaculate in your eyes and the eyes of your party, by his proclamations, and by almost every official act having reference to those States, recognized them as States. You have appointed district judges of the courts of the United States in those States as district judges for those States. And when the Senator from Massachusetts, himself of this body since the commencement of the civil war, offered a resolution declaring in substance that the States might commit political suicide and be no longer States in the Union, it received, according to my recollection, no support from your party except the individual vote of that Senator.

Throughout this whole struggle when you marshaled the Union hosts of the entire country to wage a war which experience has proved to be not a war for the preservation of the Union, but a war to result in the destruction of the Federal Union, you spoke of "the loyal men of the southern States," and you invited them to flock to your standard and to join your banners in that conflict. Now, when the people of those States have laid down their arms and submitted to the arbitrament of the sword, you turn around, and, not in solemn, but in ludicrous mockery, undertake to proclaim that all the assertions which you made, all the public acts which you passed through this body, are not true, and that they are no longer States of the Union, and have not been States of the Union since the commencement of the civil war.

Where is the consistency of your action? Had you proclaimed this doctrine in the inception of the war, or at any time during its continuance, the war would not be over now, because you would not have found flocking to your standard the hundreds of thousands and the millions of men that did flock to it. It was only when you became successful in the conflict that you proclaimed this doctrine which the southern States first proclaimed, that they had a right to withdraw from the Union. You now practically admit the very doctrine for which they contended, that they had the right, if they could only vindicate that right by the power of the sword, to withdraw from the Union. You said that they had no power to withdraw from the Union, that no State had the right to take itself out of the Union; and yet after the result of the conflict of arms has been in your favor you turn round and proclaim, not only to them, but to the whole world, that the very doctrine you preached was not true, and that they might take themselves out of the Union, and that you might hold them as subject provinces, and that you might parcel out their domain to military satraps, and subject the people of those States to the mere arbitrary will of a majority of the Federal Congress. Verily, sir, we may say consistency is a jewel.

Mr. JOHNSON (at one o'clock and twenty-five minutes a. m.) If the honorable Senator from Delaware will give way, I will move an adjournment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to suggest before the vote is taken on the adjournment that I have no doubt we can come to a vote at a reasonable hour to-morrow evening. I am not authorized by all to say so, but I have no doubt of it. There is certainly no use of staying here all night. We are merely wearing ourselves out.

Mr. SUMNER. I think if Senators on the other side would agree on an hour there would be no difficulty.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no doubt that at ten o'clock to-morrow evening we could come to a vote, and I should think long before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind Senators that the question of adjournment is not to be discussed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We do not propose to discuss it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In answer to the gentleman's suggestion I will say this: I have become persuaded in my own mind that if the vote on this bill is not taken before ten o'clock to-morrow night the bill will be defeated; and I will not agree therefore to an arrangement that the vote shall not be taken till ten o'clock to-morrow night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. At what time do you want to take it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am willing to agree that the vote be taken at seven o'clock to-morrow evening, so that the bill can go to the House and be considered by the House to-morrow night.

Mr. SUMNER. Say eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON. Nine o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we could probably vote by four or five o'clock to-morrow afternoon if we adjourn now.

Mr. McDUGALL. Suppose you say no o'clock, because for one I will make no agreement.

Mr. JOHNSON. We cannot make one for the Senator from California, but we can so far as regards the other members on this side, and I do not think the Senator from California will be able to talk more than four hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we can certainly take the vote by eight or nine o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. McDUGALL. I protest against this thing of conventions about closing debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will consent so far as I am concerned, and I hope the friends of the measure will refrain from discussing the bill and allow the gentlemen who oppose it to occupy all the time.

Mr. CONNESS. That is too much.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With that understanding I would name seven o'clock to-morrow evening.

Mr. JOHNSON. Say eight o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. Say four.

Mr. LANE. The House will hardly be in session to-morrow night, being Saturday night.

Mr. McDUGALL. I say now the debate cannot close before eight or nine o'clock to-morrow evening, probably not before ten.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call will proceed on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 9, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Doolittle, Foster, Hendricks, Johnson, Patterson, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Van Winkle—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomerooy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Sherman, and Trumbull—18.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. SAULSBURY. For the reasons already briefly stated, of course I shall vote against this proposed amendment; and I will take this occasion to say, that, in my judgment, there has been no amendment to the Constitution that has ever been legally proposed to three fourths of the States. Certainly the amendment abolishing slavery in the United States was not legally submitted to the States of the Union. It was never submitted to three fourths of the States, which is absolutely necessary to the validity and constitutionality of an amendment; and, in my judgment, no amendment which was not so submitted has any binding authority in this country to-day and I hold that any amendment submitted to the Legislature of any State and not ratified by the Legislature of that State, and which amendment was not proposed to all the States of the Union, has no binding force upon that State, and there is no power in this country that can constitutionally and legally enforce such an amendment.

Now, the purpose of this amendment is to get an expression of the Senate that it is only necessary that a constitutional amendment should be proposed to a part of the States, and not to all the States. It is out of place; it has nothing to do with the proposition before the Senate, its only purpose and object being, in this improper mode, to obtain senatorial opinion in reference to the question what number of States a constitutional amendment shall be proposed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator will give way I will make a motion that the Senate adjourn; but before I make the motion I wish to suggest that this is no ordinary legislation in which we are concerned. It is, in my judgment, the gravest legislation that has ever occupied Congress. It is claimed by its friends to be the work of reconstruction of our Government; it is believed by its enemies to be the work of destruction. Now, whether the friends of the measure be right in this opinion, or the enemies be right in their very opposite opinion, this is true, that the subject is worthy of consideration. It is now nearly two o'clock at night. The majority have occupied almost as much time as they say they desire, with the exception of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, as he intends to tear this amendment shred from shred and make it a logical absurdity.

Mr. SUMNER. That it is, right on its face.

Mr. HENDRICKS. He intends to go through that work, and that may require some time.

Mr. STEWART. And probably will.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And probably will, as is suggested by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, who fights for this measure some and fights against it some; and how he is I doubt whether he can say himself. [Laughter.] But, Mr. President, on our side, this good-natured minority that have merely asked the poor privilege of saying a word or two for the Constitution that the fathers made, we have been driven here into midnight for this work. I make no complaint on my own part, although I should have liked to present my argument much more satisfactory to myself and under circumstances more favorable than a late session at night can possibly allow.

Now, we ask daylight for the further discussion of this bill. I do not know how it is, but I am not of opinion that the Senator from Oregon, fresh as he is, coming from the invigorating breezes of the Pacific and the mountains, is able to pass this bill before ten o'clock to-morrow evening. I am not of that opinion, but I may be mistaken. The Senator from California, who has enjoyed the same advantages of the mountains and the ocean with the Senator from Oregon says he cannot. It seems to me fair that the residue of the discussion of the question shall be in daytime. With these views I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg permission to make a single suggestion, as the gentleman has made a very long one; and that is simply this: everybody in the Senate has determined how he will vote upon this bill, and there is no necessity for long speeches to convince anybody here.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw the motion that the Senator may speak in order. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am much obliged to the Senator from Indiana; he is always in order, and I suppose it is necessary that I should be. I simply desire to suggest the speeches that are to be submitted on this question can be made on some other occasion, and in daylight if the gentlemen prefer it; but they are not necessary for that elucidation of the question before the Senate, and there is no man here, I presume, who will be influenced by any of the speeches that are to be made, and for that reason I do not see the necessity for postponing this vote, as suggested by the Senator from Indiana. As to my ability to pass this bill, I do not claim or expect that my ability will secure its passage, but I have lived long enough to learn one thing, and that is that the only way to accomplish anything is to try. If you do not at first succeed, try again.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have not seen this bill yet elucidated, even by the Senator from Oregon, and I should like very much to hear it elucidated. The time has not come when any person has yet undertaken to elucidate it except in the negative.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to make one remark in response to the Senator from Oregon. Although I do not suppose any one of us who propose to discuss this measure to-morrow are presumptuous enough to think that we can change any vote on the other side of the Chamber, yet gentlemen on that side have had full opportunity to express their views upon all the matters pertaining to this bill, and few Senators have occupied the attention of the Senate more often in regard to it than the Senator from Oregon. Now, at this late hour of the night, nearly two o'clock, when it is apparent to everybody that the discussion will close some time to-morrow evening, it is suggested that because we cannot enlighten the Senate or change a vote here, therefore we shall not have the opportunity of letting our views be made known to our people at home or to the country at large. Sir, a graver question was never presented to the consideration of a deliberative body. Certainly, no graver question was ever presented to the American Senate. It is a question whether this Federal Union shall be forever dissolved, whether nine or ten States shall cease to be States of the Union; and certainly upon a question of this importance, in which our people are as much interested as yours, their representatives on this floor should be allowed to be heard.

Mr. WILLEY. Of course I do not rise, sir, to discuss this question; I should like to do so if there were not circumstances suggesting the impropriety of that course; but I rise to make an appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts, and it is respectfully to solicit him to withdraw this amendment. The original proposition itself is a very grave one. The Senator now proposes an amendment which of itself involves a grave constitutional question, and which of itself must necessarily produce as protracted a discussion as the original proposition. If that Senator is as desirous as I suppose he is, and as we all are, that we should come to a speedy decision upon this measure, in view of the contingencies operating on our minds, making it necessary in our opinion to have a speedy decision, it will be necessary for him, I think, to consider whether it is proper to urge this amendment, because it is very likely that the question involved in it will necessarily occupy two or three days' discussion. It is a very grave question, a fundamental question, and must lead, perhaps, to protracted discussion on one side of the House, if not on all sides. Sir, if there be a serious effort to attach it to this bill, humble as I am myself, I should feel it my duty to discuss it at whatever length I may deem necessary and with whatever ability I may possess.

Mr. CONNESS. It is better to vote it down at once.

Mr. WILLEY. That may be all very well if our friends on the other side see proper not to discuss it two or three days; but if we are constantly affording them themes for discussion, and presenting questions which we all acknowledge to be important, I for one shall not object to their discussing them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think that the minority have availed themselves of accidental questions for the purpose of protracting this debate, and I do not think the Senator from West Virginia should make that criticism upon us. Indeed, we have had but very little of the advantages of this debate. I do not feel that we have had hardly a chance. I have made a few remarks, it is true; but our side has said but very little. But, sir, I made a motion that the Senate adjourn, and I now renew that motion.

Mr. SUMNER. With the understanding that a vote shall be had to-morrow night by ten o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no understanding about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 10, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Fogg, Foster, Hendricks, Patterson, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Van Winkle—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Sherman, and Trumbull—18.

So (at five minutes before two o'clock a. m.) the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We have on several occasions, in conversation on this subject of adjournment, said as much as ever can be very well said in the Senate, that we expected that if an adjournment takes place we shall come to a vote to-morrow evening by nine or ten o'clock. There are some Senators, however, upon the floor—one or two—who feel a conscientious scruple against making what they call a positive agreement on that point, and they say they never do it; but about all is expressed that ever has been expressed in the Senate when an occasion of this kind has arisen. We cannot make any agreement that is binding upon any Senator; he must act on his own responsibility; but we have said very frankly to those in favor of this bill that our expectation is that we shall come to a vote by nine or ten o'clock to-morrow evening, and even those Senators who have said that they cannot come to such an agreement have given their opinion that we can close the debate by that time.

That occurred two or three hours since, and yet there has been all the while a disposition to press this bill, as if gentlemen supposed it could come to a vote to-night. Now, I give it as my opinion to gentlemen—I do not say any more—that every hour we are delayed here to-night will be at least an hour delay beyond ten o'clock to-morrow evening. There is no use of attempting to force us to a vote when we have not yet had an opportunity to discuss this question. There has been no disposition manifested to protract the debate, except so far as is necessary to have a reasonable opportunity to discuss the question.

But this proposition introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts is one of the most important propositions ever presented to the Senate of the United States. Whether the votes of the Legislatures of one half or two thirds of the States, without any reference whatever to the other States, can change the fundamental law of the land, not only for the States that are represented, but for the States which are not represented in Congress, is the greatest question ever presented. The very fundamental idea of our institutions rests upon self-government, the idea that the people have a voice in their governments, a voice in making their fundamental laws. The idea of the Senator from Massachusetts strikes at the very foundation of everything like republican government. To say that ten million people, because to-day they happen not to have representatives admitted into Congress—not because they have not sent them here, but because Congress refuses to let them in—are to be bound by a fundamental constitutional law binding upon them, which has been imposed upon them by two thirds or three fourths of the Legislatures of other States who happened to be represented, is a proposition in my judgment which cannot bear discussion. Sir, it is fundamental, vital; it goes to the question of the existence of the union of the States; it assumes that these are not States of the Union, having any right to a voice in the fundamental law of the land.

Sir, I am astonished sometimes to see to what extent the Senator from Massachusetts can go. No longer ago than the 10th day of May last he voted to pass a law transferring from Virginia a portion of its territory to West Virginia. Upon what authority did he do that? Upon the authority of the Constitution of the United States, which says that when the Legislature of a State chooses to part with a portion of its territory and annex it to another State Congress may consent to the transfer. By that act Congress recognized the State of Virginia, and recognized not only the State of Virginia, but the Legislature of Virginia, and the validity of the act of the Legislature of Virginia consenting to this transfer of territory. I have before me the act of Congress for which the Senator voted; it is in a very few words:

"Congress hereby recognizes the transfer of the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson from the State of Virginia to West Virginia, and consents thereto."

This act recognizes Virginia as a State, with a Legislature having power to consent to the transfer. By every act of legislation during this whole war Congress has always recognized these States as States in this Union. There is no act upon the statute-books which declares anything else but that they are States in this Union.

Mr. President, I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate. I wish to discuss the bill which is pending before the Senate, but I do not expect to discuss it to-night, nor in these hours of the night. It is oppressive; it is unheard of; it is what has never occurred in this body before since I have been a member of the Senate. Wherever there is an effort shown by a factious disposition to delay the action of the body it is justifiable and tolerable for the majority to undertake to press the minority to a vote and to prevent even discussion. But, sir, we have borne this; we have manifested no feeling under this systematic determination to force on this vote; but I do not believe that any time will be gained by it. My opinion is that by the wasting of this night to this hour gentlemen will not feel disposed to accommodate others and condense their speeches during the day to-morrow for the purpose of bringing the debate to a close, and it may result in extending the debate longer than gentlemen now anticipate. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I have modified my amendment by using these words: "by the ratification of the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States having valid Legislatures."

Mr. WILSON. It appears to me that modification makes it very indefinite. What is a valid Legislature? There may be some question about it.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suppose the Senator would wish to discuss his proposition, as it is a very important one, somewhat elaborately; and I suggest, therefore, whether we had not better adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. The language of the Constitution is as follows:

"The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths thereof, as one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress."

It will be observed that by the language of the Constitution the ratification is to be not by three fourths of the several States; that is not the text of the Constitution; it is "by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States." Of course where States have no valid Legislatures, as with the rebel States throughout the rebellion and down to this moment, there are no Legislatures that can be counted. The requirement is that the ratification shall be "by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States." Now, in point of fact only the States actually represented in Congress have valid Legislatures; therefore only those States can be competent to act on this constitutional amendment.

Now, sir, why should this be introduced on this occasion? You are laying down provisions for the future, and declaring on what terms and in what way a constitutional amendment may prevail, and what shall ensue on the prevalence of that constitutional amendment. It seems to me that you ought to go forward, and by a legislative interpretation declare what States should be held to ratify the constitutional amendment. The question has been raised in this Chamber and in the other Chamber, and it occupies much of the attention of the public mind.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the Senator is discussing a very important question, and as he has investigated it with great care, I should like to ask him, as a matter of information, at what time one of the southern States ceased to be a valid State, or the Legislature thereof ceased to be a valid Legislature, and by what act?

Mr. SUMNER. The act of secession, followed by war.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I wish to ask the Senator another question. That being the case, and the State of Tennessee having by the most solemn act that she could adopt agreed to secession, and having followed that by acts of war in her own territory, if the doctrine of the Senator in reply to my inquiry be correct, how is it that the Congress of the United States could recognize the act of her Legislature in ratifying the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery as valid, and having the force of the ratification by a State, as is recited in the preamble to the resolution admitting the State of Tennessee to representation in Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. I never voted for that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator speaks for the majority.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not speak for the majority in that matter.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The majority of Congress said upon that subject, as one of the reasons why Tennessee was entitled to representation, that she had ratified constitutional amendments before her right of representation was recognized by Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. I am no party to that act; I voted against it. I do not think the ratification of a constitutional amendment by one of these sham Legislatures amounts to anything, except so far as it may be adopted subsequently by Congress. Senators about me remind me that that was the case of Tennessee. I do not speak of the validity of that act of Tennessee now, because it has passed under the revision of Congress, and Tennessee has been received back into the Union.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But the point is this: in the joint resolution passed at the last session admitting the State of Tennessee to representation, it is recited as one of the reasons why that resolution should pass that she had more than a year before that ratified a constitutional amendment. That was a ratification by a Legislature that had not been recognized by any act of Congress, a Legislature that was in existence after the act of secession, a Legislature that was in existence after the act of war; and the majority in Congress said that was a ratification by the State of Tennessee of the constitutional amendment.

Mr. WADE. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, if it is in order to do so now, and I believe it is—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

Mr. WADE. Does that prevent me from offering an amendment which strikes out the whole bill and substitutes another? I wish to offer as a substitute what is known as the Louisiana bill. It is not a new proposition of mine, but a measure that is familiar to most of the members.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very willing that my amendment should be passed over informally to give the Senator an opportunity to offer his proposition.

Mr. CONNESS. I object to passing it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, it cannot be withdrawn unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. WADE. Very well, then; I am not in order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suppose the greatest hardship of this session is upon the reporters, who are obliged to sit up all night and will have to occupy Sunday in writing out our proceedings. If we are going to multiply the volume of our debates this evening, I think it is a mere act of justice as well as charity to pass a resolution that they can suspend reporting the remainder of the night. I believe there is a concurrence of every member opposed to this bill that the vote can be taken at the time suggested to-morrow evening, with the single exception of the Senator from California, [Mr. McDougall.] If the majority choose to conform themselves to his views and to keep us in session all night, we cannot help it. We are agreed to take the vote at the time indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts, ten o'clock to-morrow night; and by adjourning now we may continue the debate to-morrow, take a recess of two hours for dinner, and be fresh at the end of the debate to-morrow night. It is certainly a great grievance and oppression to the printer as well as our reporters to have a vast mass of matter piled up here in the night that nobody will attach any value to, that will be of no consequence to the public, and which very likely will not facilitate our proceedings when we assemble in the session of to-morrow, or I suppose I may call it to-day. However, sir, I shall make no motion to adjourn. I consider that the control of the business of the Senate is with the majority.

Mr. WILSON. From the expressions made by the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, with the exception of the Senator from California, it is very apparent that we can get a vote to-morrow evening at seven or eight o'clock.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We proposed ten o'clock three hours ago. I do not think you can get the vote by seven or eight o'clock to-morrow evening. If you say ten o'clock, so far as I am concerned I shall be willing to agree to it.

Mr. CONNESS. How long does the honorable Senator desire to speak?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. When I say this I am not considering myself. I do not expect to speak more than an hour and a half or two hours.

Mr. McDougall. Does the Senator from Massachusetts refer to this Senator from California?

Mr. WILSON. I simply referred to the fact that from what I have heard from gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber I suppose we can get through at a reasonable hour to-morrow night; and I must say here that, so far as any manifestations have come from the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, they have been such as we have certainly no right to complain of. In the twelve years I have been here I have never known anything gained by the policy that is now being pursued. I have sat here many a night, and been forced to sit here till sunrise; but I do not believe in it.

Mr. McDougall. I said that I thought the debate could be closed to-morrow some time, but that I would not be a party to any contract that it should be closed at a particular hour. I do not think such a contract legitimate; I do not think it according to the proper rule and order of the Senate, wherein all grave questions should be carefully and well considered. As grave a subject as this might command the attention of not one day but many days. I have not said that I desired to occupy attention by producing my knowledge of history, by exhibiting what I knew about the history of States, and how they could be maintained or how they might be subverted; but I say this, and I will adhere to it as long as I have the honor to be a member of this body, that every Senator on this floor has the right to give a full disclosure of his views, and it is his duty to do so upon all public questions involving the public interests and connected with his public office.

I have said to the Senator from Massachusetts that I had very little doubt the debate could be closed on to-morrow evening; and while I have said that the subject was one which might embrace the discourse of a week if a person could present all its vast considerations, I only spoke of what I believed to be the simple truth, and then I said that I was not so well instructed as to exhibit those considerations for the benefit of the Senate. What I may be able to produce will be only fragments of memory, being deprived of the opportunity of consulting authorities and the lessons of history by the force thrust upon myself, if you please, as one of the minority, so that I have not had the opportunity to look at a single lesson and have to fall back on my school-boy days and the memories of my early teaching. I have had no opportunity to refer to the library to refresh my recollection upon those early lessons and to produce them as lessons for us. Now there may be men who are so wise in their own conceit that they cannot or think they cannot take lessons from any one, men who have forgotten the inscription made on an ancient temple, "Know thyself."

Mr. SAULSBURY. Ἐνδοξον, (gnothhi seauton.)

Mr. McDougall. The Greek of that is outside of my present recollection, but it seems to be in the memory of my friend from Delaware. It has been a practice here, and has been proposed often, to deny to the minority the opportunity for a full discussion of great pending questions, and this is the greatest of all the questions that have been pending in this Republic since I have had the honor to occupy a place in this Senate Chamber.

History furnishes no illustration of so important an occasion as this is in determining to undertake to solve a great and solemn proposition; and why, if we be Senators, consultors, having charged upon us the duty of wisely considering and wisely consulting as to the best interests of the Republic, may we not consult about these great interests? That was the idea of our Republic and the idea of the old republics, and when it is abandoned there will be no republics. When there is no conservative body in a republican Government that can consider carefully and well great questions of State, then it belongs either to the mob or the usurper.

These are simple truths, written down by the pen of history, and known to all men who have read and studied carefully the lessons furnished to us by the past ages. There seems to me something like what may be termed impertinence—not impudence, but impertinence—in this, that we here, Senators, claiming not to be fully informed upon the present condition of things, should on a single day have thrust upon us the gravest considerations that govern States and involve the condition of a great nation, and be denied the opportunity of careful, exact, and full consideration. Under such circumstances this is not a Senate where men meet together to consult for the welfare of the nation, but simply a place where men meet to carry out particular plans and accomplish personal and particular motives regardless of the great interests of Government, which always lie in full consultation with all the elements that belong to Government and that have a right to go into consultation. This precipitate urging of questions of great import has struck me as very strange. It has struck me as more than that, as one of the elements of the decay of true republican institutions in our Republic; for when the conservative body of the Government, which is the Senate, refuses carefully to consult upon great and grave public questions, but refers them to committees and to caucuses, the time is approaching when another Cicero may denounce another Cataline in the Capitol. I have hoped, and I have hoped with sincere earnestness, that all these grave questions would be gravely and carefully considered upon full consultation with contact of mind, for “as iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the countenance of a man his friend.” The contact of opinion brings forth new opinions and develops the truth, and by just and fair antagonisms, if you please, we might develop what was the right. We are none of us right. No man dare say that he is right. That belongs to the Supreme alone. The best man is he who most seeks to understand and comprehend the right, and he does it best who confers with his fellow-men and with the best instruction, and best consultation and best consideration, not relying upon himself alone, comes to a conclusion, after considering all the elements that exist among men, independent of superior force, and is able to comprehend the truth of any given proposition involved in government. Of all the propositions of philosophy and science those involved in government are the most intricate, the most difficult; and when persons undertake absolutely to affirm that this shall be the law and this the rule, and this shall be established, who have never themselves learned the first lesson of philosophy, who have never learned the first lesson of history, who have not understood the first lesson of science, I, at least, would endeavor to inform them upon some few simple things. There is a disposition to assume conclusions about governments without consideration; to understand local governments without any particular knowledge; to understand the conditions of things abroad from themselves without any knowledge of them; to assert policies and to execute policies. And this will be found to be infinitely mischievous.

I know well that what I say now is the full conviction of many gentlemen of the majority; but why hasten grave conclusions till you have somewhat investigated? Look before you leap.

There is a disposition here to take the chance of jumping into the abyss, thinking they may jump over it. It would be well to consider whether your limbs are strong enough, and whether your muscles are well enough to clear the distance.

That is as much as I care to remark on this particular question, but I maintain my reserve.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 7, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Howard, Lane, Pomeroy, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, and Yates—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Doolittle, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Patterson, Poland, Ramsey, Ross, Saulsbury, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Sherman, and Trumbull—20.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is an amendment now in order as a substitute for the entire bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendments are in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to offer a substitute for the entire bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute can be received, but the first question will be on the amendment now pending, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland as amended.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I make the point of order that the Senator cannot offer a substitute for the entire bill when the Senate has already stricken out certain clauses and words and inserted others. It is in effect to strike out what has already been put in.

Mr. HENDERSON. That can be done. I understand that anything which has been already adopted can be stricken out in connection with other words.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Not until we come into the Senate; we are now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON. I think we had better have the amendment of the Senator from Missouri read; I should like to hear it.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us understand precisely how the order of business is. I take it the question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland as amended. The Senator from Missouri moves a substitute for the whole bill by way of amendment.

Mr. McDUGALL. That is not in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is an amendment in the second degree only; a substitute is an amendment. I move to strike out the whole bill, including all amendments adopted, and insert a substitute. It is clearly in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order when the pending amendments shall have been acted on.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But the point I make is this: after the Senate has deliberately inserted words into the bill in different parts of the bill, is it in order then by one sweeping proposition to strike all that out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order to strike it all out.

Mr. SUMNER. Before we proceed to the reading of the substitute, I wish to remark on the pending amendment, which, of course, is still open to further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is open to amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. I mean the amendment introduced by the Senator from Maryland, who is not in his seat. I have already made one or two motions with regard to it. I have several other motions to make with regard to it, but I shall not make them to-night. I shall make them to-morrow, perhaps, if the amendment shall be adopted by the Senate. I shall move them in that event at the next stage of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose we all understand that it is in our power to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland as well as to amend the original bill. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Brown] has an amendment to move to that amendment, and I have no doubt he will have an opportunity to offer it. I want now, however, to hear the amendment proposed as a substitute for the entire bill read.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to have it read.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator has made several changes in the text of the bill which is the basis of his substitute, as I have seen him go through every page of it, and no doubt he has improved it. I want to hear it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let it be read.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to inquire how many pages it covers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] will be read.

The Secretary commenced the reading.

Mr. McDUGALL. I rise to a question of order. This is a measure altogether foreign to the bill pending, not germane to the subject-matter, but a different measure entirely, and not a proper amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that the amendment would be read for the information of the Senate. Does the Senator object to its being read?

Mr. WILSON. Let it be read.

Mr. CONNESS. Before the reading is further proceeded with, I desire to ask the Senator who offered the proposition whether it is what is known as the Louisiana bill with some modification.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, with various modifications.

Mr. STEWART. Applied to all the States?

Mr. HENDERSON. Applied to all the States.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I object to its being read, if an objection will prevent it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When objection is made to the reading of a paper, the rules provide that the question shall be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to continue the reading of this amendment?

The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

The Secretary continued, and concluded the reading of the words proposed to be inserted by Mr. HENDERSON, as follows:

That the President of the United States shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, a provisional governor for the State of Louisiana, who shall hold his office for one year, unless sooner removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or unless sooner superseded by a successor elected under the provisions of this act. Such Governor, so appointed, shall have attained the age of thirty years, shall be a citizen of the United States and of the State of Louisiana. He shall not have held any office whatever under the government of the so-called confederate States, nor of any State which recognized the authority of such pretended government. He shall not have signed, voted for, or by speech or otherwise favored the act of secession of any State, nor shall he be any person who has ever held any office in the Army or Navy of the United States, and who afterward took an oath to support the said pretended government; nor shall he be a person who was a member of either House of the Congress of the United States after the first Monday in December, A. D. 1860, and who afterward took an oath to support the said pretended government; nor shall he be one who has borne arms against the Government of the United States, or who has in any way given aid, counsel, countenance, or encouragement to the late rebellion; but shall be one who has at all times borne true faith and allegiance to the Government of the United States. And before such nomination shall be acted upon by the Senate, such nominee shall make the same oath (which shall be signed and filed with the Secretary of the Senate) prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, and which oath shall also contain a declaration that the nominee has done no act which would work a disqualification for holding such office under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President shall forthwith nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, a provisional council, consisting of nine persons, who shall have the same qualifications as are herein prescribed for the office of Governor, and who, before being confirmed by the Senate, shall on oath make, sign, and file with said secretary, the same oath that is prescribed for the Governor. Such councillors shall continue to hold their office, unless sooner removed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until a Legislature shall be duly elected and qualified under the provisions of this act. Such provisional council shall, with the Governor, have all legislative power in such State. But in no event shall the Governor or any councillor enter upon the duties of their respective offices until after confirmation by the Senate. A majority of such council shall be a quorum, and the same shall continue in permanent session, with power, however, to order such adjournments as may be deemed proper, but no adjournment for more than thirty days at one time. All bills, resolutions or orders adopted by the council shall be submitted to the Governor for his approval. If he approve the same, he shall sign them; if he disapprove any such bill or resolution, he shall return it with his objections to the council, and the proceedings thereon shall be the same as provided by the Constitution of the United States in case of the return of a bill by the President to Congress.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Governor shall forthwith take possession and charge of all archives and other property belonging to the State, and it shall be his duty to see that all laws of the State and of the United States shall be duly executed within such State. Until all officers shall become elective by the people, as herein provided, the Governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the provisional council, shall appoint and commission all the officers now provided for by the existing government of said State, or which may hereafter be created by law. Such officers shall hold their offices, unless sooner removed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the provisional council, until successors shall be elected and qualified as herein provided. And all councillors, legislators, and other members and officers of the provisional government hereby established, and also all the members of the constitutional convention hereinafter provided for, shall be selected from such as can truthfully take the oath aforesaid, prescribed by the act of July 2, A. D. 1862, and, before entering upon the duties of such office, shall take and subscribe such oath, which oath shall be filed with, and preserved by, the chief justice of the State.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, unless otherwise hereafter provided by Congress, the persons duly qualified as electors according to the provisions of this act in the State of Louisiana shall, upon the first Tuesday of June, A. D. 1867, proceed to elect a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Senate and House of Representatives, and all the other officers herein provided to be appointed; which Senate and House of Representatives shall be composed of the same number of members and be elected from the same districts as is provided under the present government of such State; and the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Senators, and Representatives, and all the other officers of such provisional government, shall, respectively, hold their offices for one year, and until their successors are duly qualified, unless such officers are sooner removed or superseded, in pursuance of the other provisions of this act. All such officers so elected shall have the same qualifications, and shall take, subscribe, and file the same oath as is herein required in the case of the appointment of such officers. And the powers, duties, fees, and compensation of all such officers shall be the same as now by law appertain to such offices, respectively, in so far as such laws are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the following persons, and no others, shall be electors and entitled to vote at all elections held under the provisions of this act, namely: every male citizen of the United States, without distinction of race or color, who has attained the age of twenty-one years, and has resided in Louisiana one year, and who has never borne arms against the United States since he was a citizen thereof, and who can truthfully take the oath prescribed by the act aforesaid of July 2, A. D. 1862: Provided, That any person otherwise qualified as an elector, as herein provided, and who never voluntarily gave aid, countenance, encouragement, or support to any rebellion against the United States, nor any such aid, countenance, encouragement, or support to any government inimical to the United States in any other manner, capacity, or rank than as a private soldier in open and civilized warfare, may be admitted to the rights of an elector by an order of the officer or person making the registration of voters, upon establishing, to the satisfaction of such person, by the testimony of persons who have at all times borne true allegiance to the United States, that he is one coming within the description of persons designated in this proviso. Upon such proof being made, and upon taking and subscribing upon the records of the registering officer an oath that all the things are true which bring the applicant within the exceptions of this proviso, and also that such person will at all times bear true allegiance to the United States, and to the perpetual Union of the States thereunder, such person shall receive a certificate which shall entitle him to the rights of an elector.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Governor and council are hereby required to make and publish rules providing for—

1. A just and true registration, prior to each general election, of the names of all persons who, under the provisions of this act, are entitled to vote at any election named in this act; and he shall designate persons, having the qualifications of electors, by whom such registration shall be made, which registration shall be completed and made accessible to all the electors of the State at least one week before each general election.

2. For the time of holding all elections, the time for holding which is not fixed by this act; and also for the places and manner of holding and conducting all the elections contemplated by this act, including rules for receiving, counting, certifying, and returning the votes cast; the granting certificates of election; the appointment and compensation of all judges and other officers of elections; and for every other thing which shall be necessary to the holding of a free election by the people. But all officers and agents appointed to make such registrations, and to conduct, make returns of, certify to, or do any act touching any election, shall be persons entitled to the rights of an elector under the provisions of this act; and all such persons shall, before entering upon such duties, take and subscribe the oath aforesaid, prescribed by the act of July 2, A. D. 1862, and also faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their office.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That upon the first Monday in August, A. D. 1867, unless the Congress of the United States should by law otherwise provide, an election shall be held by all the persons qualified to vote under the provisions of this act for the choice of members to a convention to adopt a permanent constitution and frame of government for the State of Louisiana. No person shall be eligible to a seat in such convention who has not attained the age of twenty-five years, and who has not all the other qualifications prescribed by this act for the Governor; and such convention shall be composed of the same number of members and shall be elected from the same districts as is now provided by law for the House of Representatives. And no person shall take a seat in such convention who has not first taken, and upon the journals of the convention subscribed, the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, A. D. 1862. The constitution framed by such convention shall not permit any distinction in the rights of men on account of race or color, and shall recognize the power and duty of the Government of the United States to protect and enforce the perpetual Union of the States under such Government. Said constitution shall provide that no debt, demand, or liability contracted or incurred in the name of the State or otherwise, in support of the recent rebellion, shall be assumed or paid; and that no pension, compensation, gift, or gratuity, shall be bestowed upon or paid by the State to any person for the loss of the service or labor of any person, or by reason of anything done or suffered in support of the rebellion. And such constitution shall provide that the aforesaid provisions shall be irreversible and incapable of abrogation by amendment thereof. Such constitution shall be submitted for approval by the convention, at such time as it may fix, not less than sixty days after the adjournment of the convention to the electors of the State qualified to vote under the provisions of this act; the election to be held under rules prescribed, as aforesaid, by the Governor and council, and if approved by a majority of such electors, it may be presented to Congress for the admission of the State to representation in Congress thereunder, upon such terms as may be by them prescribed.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to designate forthwith an officer of the Army of the United States, who is of rank not below a brigadier general, and who shall be stationed in the State of Louisiana, and shall be the military commander within the State; it shall, moreover, be the duty of the President to place in such State, under the command of such officer, such military force as shall be requisite to execute the duties herein assigned to such commander. It shall be the duty of such commander to aid the civil authorities in the State whenever they shall be unable to enforce the laws enacted by the Governor and council; and such commander, on the application of the council, or of the Governor when the council is not in session, shall protect the people against domestic violence. And it shall, moreover, be the duty of such commander to render such support to the civil authorities in the preservation of order and in the enforcement of the laws and rules regulating elections, and also all other laws, both of the United States and of the State, as shall insure the full, speedy, and impartial enforcement of all such laws and of equal justice, and this without regard to race or color.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the militia of the State shall consist of all the citizens of the State qualified as electors under this act, who shall be as soon as practicable, duly organized and equipped, under laws adopted by the Governor and council; and during the existence of the provisional government hereby created such militia shall act under the direction of the aforesaid military commander within the State.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That all laws now in force in Louisiana, consistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and with the provisions of this act, shall remain in force until repealed or modified: Provided, That no person shall be competent to act as a juror who is not an elector under the provisions of this act: And provided also, That all the expenses of and incident to the administration of the provisional government herein provided for shall be collected and paid in such manner as may be prescribed by the Governor and council.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the President shall appoint a Governor and council, as herein provided, for each of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas, whose qualifications and duties shall be the same as prescribed for those in the State of Louisiana; and all proceedings herein provided for the organization of a republican government in Louisiana, and the restoration of said State to representation in Congress, shall be had in each of the States named in this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair

will state the question as it now stands before the Senate. The Senator from Missouri proposes to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause, and to insert the substitute which has just been read. The Senator from Maryland had previously moved an amendment to the original bill, which had been considered and amended by the Senate. It is the rule and practice of the Senate first to perfect that which is proposed to be stricken out before taking the question on the substitute. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland is therefore first in order; and after action has been had upon it, if no other amendment be moved, the question will come upon the proposition of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to state that I have examined the rules on this subject since I submitted the amendment, and the Senator from West Virginia has pointed out to me this rule, on page 10 of Barclay's Digest:

"An amendment may be moved to an amendment, but it is not admitted in another degree. (Manual, page 100.) [But it is the well-settled practice of the House that there may be pending at the same time with such amendment to the amendment an amendment in the nature of a substitute for part or the whole of the original text, and an amendment to that amendment. (See Journal 1, 31, pages 1074, 1075.) It was decided many years ago that if the motion to amend the original matter was first submitted it was not then in order to submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute. (Journal 1, 19, page 794.) but it was subsequently decided otherwise. (Journal 1, 28, page 807.) and the practice ever since has been in accordance with the latter decision. So now, notwithstanding the pendency of a motion to amend an amendment to the original matter, a motion to amend, in the nature of a substitute, and a motion to amend that amendment may be received, but cannot be voted upon until the original matter is perfected."]

What I ask is that my proposition shall stand as an amendment. If any gentleman wishes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Maryland before it is voted upon, of course that will be in order. I do not object to perfecting the original bill and the amendment before my amendment is voted upon. I only ask that my proposition shall stand before the Senate as an amendment in the nature of the substitute. I am satisfied that it is in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I must confess that I am very much surprised at this proposition. After the bill has been under discussion during the entire day and all night, there is at this hour an amendment proposed as a substitute for the entire bill. Of course the effect of that will be to open up another discussion, and before any definite action can be taken it will be necessary to discuss this new bill and all its features. It is altogether more complicated than the bill that has been before the Senate and under discussion, and the necessary effect of this movement, as it appears to me, is to defeat both bills. I presume that is not the intention of the Senator who moves this amendment; but under the circumstances, as it is utterly impossible now by the action of those whom I have supposed to be friends of this measure to proceed and arrive at any definite result to-night, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. Let the amendment be printed first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon withdraw his motion, to allow an order to be made to have the amendment printed?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, for that purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire that my proposition shall be printed, as I have made many changes in the Louisiana bill as it came from the House.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire to submit an amendment, which I shall move at the proper time, to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, and I wish to have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be received informally and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and at three o'clock a. m. (Saturday, February 16) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 20, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON. The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BINGHAM. I rise to a privileged motion. I desire to correct the Journal in regard to the telegram received by the House yesterday from New York announcing the death of a revolutionary soldier. It is stated in the Journal that he was the last surviving soldier of the Revolution. It ought to be so corrected as to read that he was the last surviving soldier of the Revolution on the pension-roll until this Congress placed upon the pension-roll the name of John Gray, of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Journal Clerk made up the Journal correctly from the dispatch read at the Clerk's desk. The gentleman moves, however, that the Journal be so amended as to add, after the words "last surviving soldier of the Revolution," the words "on the pension-roll."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Journal, as amended, was then approved.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MYERS asked unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That after the tax bill is acted on, all regular orders, except the morning hour, and all other special orders shall be set aside, and the tariff bill shall be the special order until disposed of.

Mr. BENJAMIN and many other members objected.

SOUTHERN HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill amendatory of the homestead law was recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was entered.

RESOLUTIONS OF TENNESSEE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. CAMPBELL, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of Tennessee in regard to the Pacific railroad; which were referred to the select Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

ARSENAL AT AUGUSTA, GEORGIA.

Mr. SCHENCK submitted the following resolution; which, being a call for executive information, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to this House correspondence in his possession between the commandant of the United States arsenal at Augusta, Georgia, and the president of the Augusta and Somerville Railroad Company, in relation to the extension of said railroad to said arsenal, and any documents relating to the same.

G. E. WINTERS.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were discharged from the further consideration of the claim of G. E. Winters for compensation; and the petitioner was granted leave to withdraw his papers for use before the Court of Claims.

CALIFORNIA IRRIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. McRUER, from the Committee on Public Lands, by unanimous consent, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 577) granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the Sierra Nevada and Contra Costa Irrigation and Canal Company, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN PERRY.

Mr. BAKER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the propriety of granting an additional pension to John Perry, and to report by bill or otherwise.

VALENTINE WEHRHEIM.

Mr. BAKER, by unanimous consent, also submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the propriety of granting an additional pension to Valentine Wehrheim; and to report by bill or otherwise.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 474) for the relief of John C. McFerran, of the United States Army.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Stephen E. Jones.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, of the following titles:

An act (S. No. 592) to provide for a temporary increase of the pay of officers in the Army of the United States, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 563) supplementary to the several acts of Congress abolishing imprisonment for debt; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 175) for the relief of Dyer B. Pettijohn.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 856) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia.

GOVERNMENT OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. BLAINE. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House in relation to the government of the insurrectionary States.

The pending question was upon seconding the call for the previous question, upon the motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, to agree to the amendments of the Senate, with the following amendment added thereto:

Provided, That no person excluded from the privilege of holding office by said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be eligible to election as a member of a convention to frame a constitution for any of said rebel States; nor shall any such person vote for members of such convention.

Mr. BLAINE. I now ask that the vote be taken upon seconding the previous question.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. I wish to inquire what will be the effect of sustaining the call for the previous question in reference to an opportunity to offer any amendment to the substitute of the Senate?

Mr. BLAINE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER], as he always answers inquiries in relation to business before the House. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to agree to the amendments of the Senate with an amendment, upon which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] has called the previous question. Should the previous question be seconded, the main question ordered, and the motion of the gentleman from Iowa agreed to, that would close the whole controversy so far as this House is concerned; at least for the present.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] withdraw his call for the previous question until I can offer an amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. I cannot yield for that purpose, for it would peril the entire bill.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Then I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. BANKS. I have a suggestion to make to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] whose amendment is now pending. I ask him to so far modify his proposition as to extend the disqualification of voters who are not allowed to vote for members of the convention to any election held by order of the convention upon the adoption or rejection of any constitution submitted to the people in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

Mr. BLAINE. I object to any debate.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order pending the call for the previous question.

The question was taken on seconding the call for the previous question; and on a division there were—ayes 69, noes 60.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. LYNCH called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LYNCH and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 72, noes 76.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I now move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That until the people of said rebel States shall be admitted to representation in the Congress of the United States any civil governments which may exist therein shall be deemed provisional only, and in all respects subject to the paramount authority of the United States, at any time to abolish, modify, control, or supersede the same. And in all elections to any office under such provisional governments, all persons shall be entitled to vote, and none others, who are entitled to vote under the provisions of the fifth section of this act; and no person shall be eligible to any office under any such provisional government who shall be disqualified from holding office under the provisions of the third article of said constitutional amendment.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I now call the previous question.

On seconding the call for the previous question; there were—ayes 80, noes 41.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to move to refer this amendment to a committee to have it condensed and simplified?

The SPEAKER. It would not be. The previous question has been seconded.

The question being, "Shall the main question be now ordered?" it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. BOYER. Would it be in order to move to lay this amendment on the table?

The SPEAKER. It would be; but the adoption of that motion would carry the whole bill with it.

Mr. BOYER. I make that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANCONA. I rise to make an inquiry. Is not this an amendment in the third degree, and therefore out of order?

The SPEAKER. It is not; because, as stated in the Digest, "An amendment of the House to a Senate amendment is only in the first degree; for as to the Senate the first amendment with which they passed the bill is a part of its text; it is the only text they have agreed to."

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SHELLABARGER to amend the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 70, not voting 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Culford, Deere, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleson, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, William Lawrence, Leach, Longyear, Lynch, Maynard, McClurg, McFadyen, McCur, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neil, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schoenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—99.

YEA'S—Messrs. Ancona, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Buckland, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Denison, Dodge, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hise, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Kuykendall, Lafin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McKee, McKuer, Miller, Moorhead, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—70.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Conkling, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Eekley, Garfield, Hale, Harris, Hawkins, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jencks, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Marston, Morrill, William H. Randall, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, and Elihu B. Washburne—21.

So Mr. SHELLABARGER's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on concurring in the Senate amendments, with the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] as amended on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. FINCK. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RAYMOND. Is not the question first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as amended?

The SPEAKER. The question is now on concurring in the Senate amendments, with the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAYMOND. Then there is to be no separate vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as amended?

The SPEAKER. No separate vote can be taken on that.

Mr. ROSS. Is not the question susceptible of division?

The SPEAKER. It is not. If this question should be decided in the affirmative, it will end the matter for the present, so far as the House is concerned. If it should be determined in the negative, the Senate amendments will still be before the House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The Senate amendments have not yet been amended. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, as amended, has not yet been adopted.

The SPEAKER. It certainly will be, if the House now votes in the affirmative.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Cannot the House vote separately on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as amended?

The SPEAKER. It cannot. The Chair will explain. The question is now upon concurring in the Senate amendments with the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, as amended on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. If this question should be decided in the negative, the Senate amendments will still be before the House. If it should be determined in the affirmative, the controversy is ended, so far as this House is concerned, until the Senate shall take action upon the amendments proposed by the House to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. RAYMOND. Then the only way to vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is to vote against the proposition now before the House.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. Should this proposition be negatived, the question will recur upon the Senate amendments without amendment.

The question then recurred on concurring in the amendments of the Senate with the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, as amended by Mr. SHELLABARGER; and being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 126, nays 46, not voting 18; as follows:

YEA'S—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Bontwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—126.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Winfield, and Wright—46.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Conkling, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Eekley, Garfield, Hale, Harris, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jencks, Jones, Latham, Marston, Morrill, William H. Randall, Stilwell, and Elihu B. Washburne—18.

So the Senate amendments, as amended, were concurred in.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution to preserve the morning hour for business of committees:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this session the morning hour shall not be interrupted by any other business than that prescribed by the rules of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I am afraid it will be inconvenient to the House, and therefore object.

Mr. BANKS. I move to suspend the rules. We want the morning hour for business.

The SPEAKER. This is one of the last ten days of the session, and the rules can be suspended.

The rules were suspended; and the resolution was received and adopted.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1868; and moved that it be made a special order for Saturday next, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. LE BLOND. I demand that the bill shall be read in full. I propose to keep the promise I made last night, to insist on the reading of all these bills.

The bill was read a first and second time, and then read in extenso; made the special order for Saturday next, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN K. HICKEY.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of John K. Hickey.

MILITIA BILL.

The SPEAKER stated the morning hour had now commenced, and the House resumed the consideration of House bill No. 1145, to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAINE. I find myself unable to resist the touching appeals of my friends on the other side of this House who are opposed to the passage of this bill for reasons which will be obvious to members of the House, and considering the condition of business before the House at this time, I therefore withdraw my demand for the previous question and again offer my amendment, and after its adoption I will move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Militia and remove from my friends this bugbear for this session, although it may show "its horns and cloven foot", in the Fortieth Congress. I suppose the threat of any opposition of that sort, vulgarly called "filibustering," will not be tried against this amendment, but will be allowed to be adopted, when I shall move to recommit.

Mr. LE BLOND. With that understanding I shall let it go.

The amendment offered by the chairman of the committee was read, as follows:

Sec. 37. And be it further enacted, That in each military district into which Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Arkansas, and Texas may be by act of Congress divided, regiments and companies of the national guard herein provided for, composed exclusively of loyal persons, without respect of color, may be organized, armed, equipped, and paid, with the consent of the commander of such military district, not exceeding in number two regiments or twenty companies in each of such geographical sections as constituted congressional districts at the commencement of the late rebellion; and the commander of each military district shall exercise the same authority over the national guard therein which the Governors exercise in the respective States; and all of the provisions of this act shall be extended to the national guard organized in such military districts which shall not be in the nature of the case inapplicable thereto.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. A single suggestion to my friend. I cannot see the propriety or necessity of the House acting upon that amendment at this time, when the gentleman admits that the recommitment of the bill will inevitably defeat its passage during this Congress. I cannot understand either why the gentleman has taken the course he has, apprehending, as he seems to have done, that there was to be some filibustering here. There was no intention of that kind. It seemed to us that the long horns and cloven feet which appeared so plainly in the bill would be enough of themselves to defeat the measure even if the vote were taken. But since my colleague admits the fact of the existence of the horns and cloven feet, but that they are only to be presented before the next Congress, I shall make no further opposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAINE. Before I move to recommit this bill I wish, with the indulgence of the House, to say a single word. Up to this time I have heard but two objections urged against this bill, and those in private conversation rather than in this House. The first is, that it would be a tax upon the national Treasury. On the contrary, we shall be able to show when the time comes that for every dollar expended by this bill five dollars will be saved to the national Treasury.

Another objection is that it establishes a huge standing army in this Republic. On the contrary, it is a militia system which is proposed by this bill, the entire control of which will be in the hands of the local authorities, and none of it in the hands of the Federal Government. If there is any possibility of devising a plan whereby we can reduce the regular Army, it must be done through this very militia system.

My colleague [Mr. ELDRIDGE] has said that they had no purpose on the other side to filibuster against this bill. I am sorry to say that whatever their intention may have been during the two morning hours that have been consumed on this bill, nothing has been in fact done except filibustering, and I have been notified that the same thing would be continued during the session. If I should insist, therefore, upon action upon this bill, the result would be to keep back other gentlemen who desire to bring before the House other business, without being able myself to carry through any practical measure. I now move to recommit the bill with the amendments to the Committee on the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DARIEN SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back without amendment Senate joint resolution No. 149, to extend aid and facilities to citizens of the United States engaged in the survey of a route for a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution authorizes and requests the Secretary of the Navy to furnish such aid and facilities to citizens of the United States who are undertaking an exploration and survey of the isthmus of Darien for the purpose of discovering a favorable line for a ship-canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, as he may be able to furnish without prejudice to the naval service and without additional expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Is this the bill that was referred to the committee some time ago?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. It is.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. All right, I believe.

Mr. HISE. I desire to make some remarks upon that resolution.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I would state to the gentleman from Kentucky that this is a Senate bill which has been considered in the Committee on Naval Affairs and reported after investigation without amendment. It simply provides that the Secretary of the Navy may afford to the persons who are making a survey of the route across the Isthmus such assistance as he may be able to afford them without detriment to the naval service and without additional expense. It involves no interference with the other duties of the Navy, and no additional cost to the Government of the United States. I call the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORT.

On motion of Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of bill of the House No. 671, a bill amendatory of the act of April, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June, 30, 1867;" and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLESTOWN NAVY-YARD.

On motion of Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of bill of the House No. 995, to repeal so much of the act approved April, 17, 1866, chapter forty-five, section one, as appropriates the sum of $25,000 for the purchase of the right of drainage through the navy-yard at Charlestown, Massachusetts; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRADES OF LINE OFFICERS.

On motion of Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of bill of the House No. 917, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grades of line officers of the United States Navy," approved July 16, 1862; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHAPLAINS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, also reported adversely upon sundry resolutions in reference to chaplains in the Navy; which were laid on the table.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOUNTY TO SEAMEN AND MARINES.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to render applicable to the seamen in the United States Navy and to marines the provisions relating to pensions in the act making appropriations for the civil expenditures, approved July 28, 1866; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the provisions of sections twelve, thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen of the act approved July 28, 1866, relating to additional bounty to enlisted soldiers, &c., shall be, and is hereby, made applicable to the seamen of the United States Navy and marines; said bounties to be paid in the same amount and subject to the same conditions as provided in these sections, so far as the same are applicable, and otherwise in accordance with the laws regulating the payment of other bounties to seamen and marines.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICERS IN NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill to establish the offices of civil engineer, master mechanic, and master laborer in the navy-yards of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the offices of civil engineer, master machinist, master carpenter, master joiner, master blacksmith, master boiler-maker, master plumber, master painter, master caulker, and master laborer be, and are hereby, established in connection with the navy-yards at Kittery, Maine, Charlestown, Massachusetts, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Washington, District of Columbia; that the persons appointed to fill said offices shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and that they shall receive each a salary of $1,500 per annum, and shall have immediate supervision and direction of the work to be performed in their several departments, with authority to select and to discharge workmen, subject always to the approval of the commandant of the navy-yard to which they are attached.

Mr. CHANLER. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] wherein this bill conflicts with the established rule of the Department at this time?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I would state in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York that I understand that ever since the establishment of these navy-yards until quite recently, the custom has been to have the positions at the heads of these several mechanical departments filled by civilians.

For example, the head of the machinist's department was a practical machinist; the head of the carpenter's department was a practical ship-carpenter; and so through all the other mechanical departments of the various navy-yards. These master workmen have heretofore been designated by the President, as is provided by this bill. But recently a change has been instituted in some or all of the yards, which dispenses with civilians at the head of these various departments and places the departments under the direction of commissioned officers of the Navy. For example, the machinist's department, which has a representation in nearly all the navy-yards of the country, and the machine-shops and foundries of which had practical machinists to superintend them, are now under the system recently established, and which, so far as I know, has no sanction or authority under specific law, placed under the charge of a naval engineer. The ship-carpenter's department is under charge of an assistant naval constructor, and so on through all these various departments.

Now, this bill provides that henceforth these positions shall be filled as they have been filled heretofore, with the exception of a short period recently, by the appointment of civilians, who shall be practical mechanics, and who shall be designated by the President and confirmed in their positions by the Senate. And I would further state that this bill is reported in accordance with instructions of this House to the Committee on Naval Affairs, which instructions were adopted by this House two or three weeks since.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] why the master joiner has been omitted from this bill?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. He is not omitted; all the mechanical departments, without exception, are embraced in this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Has not the master sail-maker been excepted?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I think I may have inadvertently omitted the master sail-maker. If the gentleman will move an amendment I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I move to amend this bill by inserting in the proper place the words "master sail-maker."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I desire to make another inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I think the compensation fixed by this bill seems to me to be inadequate. Journeymen mechanics are now getting more than is provided here for master mechanics.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I think not.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Journeymen mechanics now receive four dollars per day; this bill provides that master mechanics shall receive $1,500 a year.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. That is five dollars a day.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. For working days.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The practical effect of this bill is simply to take away from the Navy Department the appropriations of the heads of Departments therein named. And it proposes to give a concurrent power to the Senate of the United States, with the President, in appointing these officers; thereby giving the Senate a voice in reference to every laborer employed in each one of these yards.

Now, it is true, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that the committee acted under instructions from this House. But I do not believe the interests of the Government will in any manner be subserved by this change; depriving the Navy Department of a complete and thorough supervision over not only the master workmen, but also the laborers, and transferring that responsibility to the President and the Senate of the United States.

Neither do I believe that the Senate of the United States desire to have in their official capacity any voice or control over the laborers in the navy-yards. Yet this is nothing more nor less, and the country and the people will so understand it, than a plan to accomplish the turning of people out of the navy-yards, and the substitution of others who may perhaps be the more supple tools of this Congress. I hope the bill will not pass, and I shall ask the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is mistaken in his statement that the design of this bill is to take the appointment of those officers from the Navy Department, or to take their appointment away from the authority now empowered to appoint them. These officers are now subject to appointment by the President of the United States, and this bill retains the same provision, with the simple addition that their appointments shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. LYNCH. Will not the gentleman yield for an amendment?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I cannot. I have reported the bill under instructions of the committee, and I cannot accept any amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. With the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I desire to make an inquiry.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CHANLER. I desire to learn before the vote is taken what is to be the practical effect of this bill, if passed; wherein it will change the present organization of the navy-yards of the country. I would like to ask him whether practically it is going to turn out the present occupants of the yards? Is it the intention to open a new door for the distribution of patronage? We all know that practically the patronage of these yards has been used for the benefit of certain persons, not for the benefit of the Navy nor for the benefit of the Government. It has been used for the benefit of persons voting in a particular way. If the gentleman takes the ground that this bill will put an end to the corrupt system of patronage now prevailing to so great an extent in our navy-yards that they are almost worthless for the purposes for which they were established, so that the work which should be done at those yards must be put out in the neighboring yards belonging to private parties, then I ask the gentleman why he does not strike deeper and present some measure for organizing a system whereby the daily labor at those yards will inure to the benefit of the Government, and not to the advantage of a political organization.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. In reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] I will say that that is just the object of this bill. I call the previous question.

Mr. BANKS. I ask my colleague to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will do so.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I regard this as a most important measure and not at all amenable to the objection made to it by the gentlemen on the other side. This is a bill not to change the law, but to prevent an unauthorized departure from the true intent of the law by subordinate officers in these yards. This custom of the Government almost from time immemorial has been that these mechanical departments should be under the administration of civilians learned in the respective occupations or trades which they are called to superintend. Very recently, without any authority of law, but really in contravention of the law, commissioned officers have been charged with the superintendence of the mechanics and laborers in these yards. This bill is to put an end to this practice and reaffirm the law as it has existed from the beginning of the Government. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I now insist on the call for the previous question.

Mr. LYNCH. I hope the previous question will not be seconded. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] yield to me for a single remark?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir. As the gentleman is one of my colleagues on the committee I yield to him.

Mr. LE BLOND. I simply wish to say to the House, as one member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that I have yet to learn why we should pass this bill. I think no information has been given to the House that the mechanics in the navy-yards have been turned out and other persons put in their places. I am aware that a resolution was introduced here instructing the Committee on Naval Affairs to take action on this matter and report a bill of the character of that now pending. But I know no reason for the change. If in some navy-yards the course stated has been pursued, I am free to say that I think it is improper. I think that practical mechanics ought to be had at the head of all these departments. But I know nothing of any facts calling for the passage of this bill. I do not know that any petition has been presented here setting forth the facts stated in debate here.

If the chairman knows of any I would be glad to have him state the fact, where they exist, in what different yards.

Mr. PIKE. I appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts to allow my colleague to move his amendment, so that when he calls the previous question the House can take a vote on it.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to add "naval storekeepers" to the other officers named.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I now renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, nays 33, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brundage, Bromwell, Broomall, Cobb, Darling, Dawes, DeForest, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Starr, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—96.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hise, Humphrey, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Nicholson, Noell, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Winfield, and Wright—33.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Blaine, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Davis, Delano, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Ekeley, Eggleston, Farquhar, Garfield, Hale, Hart, Hogan, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Jones, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Laffin, Latham, Leftwich, Marston, McRuer, Morrill, Niblack, Paine, Phelps, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rousseau, Sloan, Stevens, Stillwell, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Windom, and Woodbridge—61.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Stephen E. Jones.

RIDGWAY'S BATTERY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back Senate bill No. 290, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of guns for the use of Ridgway's battery, with the recommendation it do pass.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to grant the use of two eleven-inch guns for trial of Ridgway's patent revolving battery.

THE KEARSARGE.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill to compensate the officers and crew of the United States steamer Kearsarge, for the destruction of the rebel piratical vessel Alabama; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized and directed to pay to Commodore John A. Winslow and the officers and crew belonging to the United States steamer Kearsarge while engaged in the capture and destruction of the rebel piratical vessel the Alabama, on June 19, 1864, the sum of $190,000, the same being the estimated value thereof; the same to be distributed to the officers and crew attached to the Kearsarge at the date above named, in the same manner as prize money, and to be in lieu of the bounty authorized by the eleventh section of the act of June 30, 1864, to regulate prize proceedings, &c.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Does not that bill make an appropriation, and must it not therefore, under the rule, go to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It does not make an appropriation.

Mr. SPALDING. Have we not voted this down once or twice before?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Not this one.

Mr. SPALDING. Then something similar to it.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it may be proper I should say, in explanation of this bill, a few words. I will not detain the House by any recital of the brilliant exploit of the Navy in the engagement between the Kearsarge and the Alabama, which resulted in the destruction of the latter vessel. It will always stand in American annals as one of the most gallant and heroic achievements of the American Navy.

The necessity for this bill arises from the fact of the magnitude of the service rendered to the commerce of this country and to the general interests of this country in the destruction of the rebel corsair Alabama. Gentlemen will remember that at the time this fight took place our commerce was being rapidly driven from the sea by corsairs fitted out by foreign Powers under the rebel flag, that all the efforts of the Navy up to the time of the engagement between the Kearsarge and Alabama to capture any one of these corsairs had been unavailing, that the Kearsarge fell in with the Alabama in the British channel in the very place of all others where we would have desired that such an action should have taken place, and that after one of the most brilliant and heroic conflicts in the annals of naval warfare the corsair was utterly beaten, captured, and sunk with the entire loss of the vessel and the capture of a large number of prisoners.

Now, sir, under the prize law there is no provision made for an adequate compensation to the officers of an American vessel situated as these officers and crew of the Kearsarge are. In the cases of ordinary captures, where the vessel captured is of inferior force to that of the captors, one half of the proceeds of the sale of the captured vessel goes to the officers and crew of the vessel making the capture. When the captured vessel is of equal or superior force to that of the captors the whole of the proceeds of the prize goes to the officers and crew of the vessel making the capture. So that had the conflict between these two vessels resulted in the capture of and saving of the Alabama the whole value of the vessel and everything on board would have gone as a reward to the captors, namely, to the officers and crew of the Kearsarge. But inasmuch as the Alabama went to the bottom, there were no proceeds of prize in that case, because there was no vessel to sell.

In case a vessel is lost and destroyed in the conflict there is a provision of law that if the captured vessel be inferior to the capturing vessel there shall be distributed among the officers and crew of the latter a sum equal to $100 for every man on board the captured vessel, or $200 if the captured vessel be of equal or superior force to that of the captors. In this case the Alabama was superior to the Kearsarge, but if the officers and crew of the latter were to receive but $200 for each man on board the Alabama, to be distributed in accordance with the law regulating prize money, it is probable that not more than ten dollars apiece would be distributed to the crew of the Kearsarge.

The Secretary of the Navy addressed a letter to Commander Winslow soon after this fight took place, congratulating him and his officers and crew on their splendid achievement, and intimating to him that he, the Secretary, had no doubt that Congress would make a suitable and generous award to them for their brilliant service. As soon thereafter as it was practicable for him to do it he appointed a commission to make an estimate of the actual value of the Alabama at the time she was destroyed. That commission made their investigation and reported the estimated value of the vessel at the time of her destruction at $190,000. The bill which I have reported is in accordance with that estimate and with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask one question? I would like to know if we have a precedent in our history for this—if the captors of the Constitution were paid for sinking the Guerriere the value of the captured vessel?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I think they were. At all events there are several precedents for this proceeding.

Mr. HILL. I understand the gentleman to say that the law authorizes the distribution of $200 to each of the men of the capturing vessel, and yet that these men will receive only ten dollars.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. What I stated was that the law authorized the payment to the men a sum equivalent to $200 for every man on the captured vessel; that is to say, there would be distributed to the officers and crew of the Kearsarge a sum equal to $200 multiplied by the number of men on the Alabama. That amount, I will say further, is to be distributed in accordance with the rule of law regulating the distribution of prize money, which gives a considerable portion of that sum to the officers of the vessel; and the sum remaining to be distributed among the members of the crew would not exceed ten or twenty dollars.

Mr. HILL. I understood the gentleman to make use of the term "capturing vessels" in each instance.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. What was the force of the Kearsarge?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. About one hundred and seventy men, if I recollect aright.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That would give them about a thousand dollars a piece. Are there any precedents for giving to the officers and crews of a capturing vessel bounties to the amount of the value of the vessel destroyed?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. There are such precedents.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I know there are precedents for giving bounties in such cases, but are there precedents for giving such bounties?

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, as is well known to the House, I generally oppose everything of this kind; but I gladly make this case an exception to that rule. Why, sir, there is not an American to-day above ground who does not remember well the dark clouds that hung upon our horizon at that time, when our commerce was driven from beneath our flag, and when no American merchantman dared to carry the stars and stripes. Nor is there one who does not remember also that when we heard that the double-shotted and well-aimed guns of the Kearsarge, under the conduct of her gallant officers and crew, had sunk the pirate Alabama beneath the waves of the ocean, never to rise again, the news lighted up the clouds of war that then hung so thickly and darkly about us, and lifted the gloom from the hearts and countenances of all men who loved their country and her cause. Sir, we ought not now to forget the brave men who then carried our flag to victory, nor fail to remember that if peace has again spread her white wings over us, it is due in no small measure to their heroism on that occasion. Therefore, I say, let us cheerfully give them this poor remuneration for the services then rendered by them to their country and to liberty.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I now demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES TETLOW.

Mr. GRISWOLD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of James Tetlow; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to pay to James Tetlow, for building four steam tug-boats, the sum of $86,400, to be paid out of any money heretofore appropriated for constructing vessels or machinery, and not otherwise expended.

Mr. ROSS. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his motion. I desire simply to state some facts for the consideration of the House, and then I will leave the matter to the House to decide.

The Naval Committee have regarded this case as one of peculiar hardship. The facts, briefly, are these: Mr. Tetlow was a mechanic and builder of machinery, living near Boston. In response to a public solicitation on the part of the Navy Department he made a bid for the construction of two steam tugs. In December, 1868, the Navy Department advertised for proposals for the construction of certain tug-boats, each of three hundred and fifty tons burden. Mr. Tetlow sent his agent to Washington, and the agent put in a bid for the construction of two of those vessels at $84,600 each. The lowest bid made at that time for the construction of any of those vessels except these two (and they were all precisely alike) was $128,000 each. Mr. Tetlow came on here and made an application to the Department to be released from the contract that had been thus made by his agent. That application, as I understand it, was refused; and an intimation was given to Mr. Tetlow that unless he carried out the proposition made by his agent he probably would not be able to get any more work from the Navy Department, and that his reputation would suffer in consequence of the failure. Upon that state of facts he determined to proceed, and he arranged with the Department for the construction of two other vessels at $128,000 each, that being the lowest bid, except his own, that had been made for the construction of any of those vessels. He made this further arrangement with the hope of being able to make up for the loss which he knew would be inevitable in the construction of the first two vessels.

He went on and constructed the four vessels in accordance with his contracts, two of them at $84,600 each, and the other two at $128,000 each; and he absolutely lost money upon the whole of them. Upon the first two his losses amounted, I think, to between $150,000 and $200,000, more or less; I do not remember the exact amount. He asks now that in consideration of these facts—the fact that the first proposition was made through an agent and was made at that rate through an error; the fact that he applied to the Navy Department, before the contract was executed, to release him, but was refused, and that he went on, notwithstanding all these adverse circumstances, and fulfilled his contracts in good faith and built these four ships, and in doing so not only ruined himself, but also subjected his bondsmen to large outlays—he asks, I say, in view of all these facts, that we shall make this appropriation to at least partially reimburse him, and the Naval Committee have unanimously recommended the application as one eminently entitled to the favorable consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the morning hour will expire in two minutes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Then I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROSS. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I now insist upon the demand for the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 45, noes 22; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this bill goes over to the morning hour on next public bill day, when the pending question will be upon the motion to lay the bill on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were delivered to the House by Colonel WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Private Secretary.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MYERS. I move to suspend the rules, in order that the House may consider at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That after the tax bill is acted on, all regular orders, (except the morning hour), and all other special orders shall be set aside, and the tariff bill shall be the special order until disposed of.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will allow that resolution to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MYERS. I prefer to have it acted on now.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of this resolution until Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not yet before the House. The pending question is upon the motion to suspend the rules in order to allow the resolution to be offered. The motion to suspend the rules cannot be postponed.

Mr. MYERS. I will withdraw the motion to suspend the rules for the present.

ELECTION CONTEST—THOMAS VS. ARNELL.

Mr. MAYNARD presented additional evidence in the contested-election case of Thomas vs. Arnell; which was referred to the Committee of Elections, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise for the purpose of moving that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Army appropriation bill. But I will say to gentlemen on the other side that if they are content to take a vote in the House on striking out the second section, I will not move to go into the Committee of the Whole, but will move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent, or a suspension of the rules.

Mr. DAVIS. I feel bound to object to that proposition upon this principle alone: that this second section has no place in an appropriation bill.

Mr. PRICE. We can vote on that question in the House.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I make no objection. There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the special order, being the Army appropriation bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. By general consent, the first question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND], to strike out the second section of this bill. The Clerk will read the section which it is proposed to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the headquarters of the General of the Army of the United States shall be at the city of Washington, and all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the Army, and in case of his inability, by the next in rank. The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters without the previous approval of the Senate; and any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. BINGHAM. Before the question is taken on striking out that section, I move to amend it by striking out the following words:

The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command, or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters without the previous approval of the Senate; and

If that provision is not stricken from this section circumstances might arise in which the operations of our armies might be seriously crippled, if the presence of the General is worth anything, which I suppose it is.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] will not be adopted, for it will render the section almost worthless.

Mr. FINCK. I ask that the section may be read as it will stand if it shall be amended as proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the headquarters of the General of the Army of the United States shall be at the city of Washington, and all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the Army, and in case of his inability, by the next in rank; any orders or instructions relating to military operations issued contrary to the requirements of this section shall be null and void; and any officer who shall issue orders or instructions contrary to the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office; and any officer of the Army who shall transmit, convey, or obey any orders or instructions so issued contrary to the provisions of this section, knowing that such orders were so issued, shall be liable to imprisonment for not less than two nor more than twenty years, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 62, nays 69, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Bingham, Buckland, Campbell, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hise, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Hunter, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McKuer, Moorhead, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—62.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cullom, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Koontz, William Lawrence, Longyear, Maynard, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Price, Rollins, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Upson, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—69.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Boyer, Chandler, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Culver, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hayes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Jencks, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Latham, Lynch, Marston, McIndoe, McKee, Morrill, Morris, Newell, Patterson, Plants, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Sloan, Stilwell, Strouse, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—61.

So the amendment of Mr. BINGHAM was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. LE BLOND, to strike out the second section of the bill.

Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 41, nays 88, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Bingham, Campbell, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Hise, Hogan, Humphrey, Hunter, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Marshall, Marvin, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—41.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Darling, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Koontz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, McIndoe, McKuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, and Windom—88.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Baldwin, Banks, Blow, Boyer, Buckland, Chandler, Cobb, Conkling, Culom, Culver, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jencks, Jones, Kasson, Kerr, Ketcham, Latham, McCullough, McKee, Morrill, Morris, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Stilwell, Strouse, Taber, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—61.

So the amendment of Mr. LE BLOND was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, said: On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. KERR, who has been called away by business.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LE BLOND. I reserved in committee the privilege of calling for a separate vote on the amendment proposing to strike out all that portion of the first section relating to the Freedmen's Bureau. I was not in the House at the time when the bill was reported.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman did not raise that point till we had reached the last section; and I then declined to assent to the proposition.

Mr. LE BLOND. I did not so understand. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we on this side desire to record our votes upon striking out the part I have indicated. It will not consume any more time to take a vote by yeas and nays on striking out this portion than to vote by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. We would much prefer to have the vote on this proposition.

Mr. STEVENS. We had passed all the sections but the last when the gentleman made that request, and I declined it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 82, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Broomall, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Davis, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McKuer, Miller, Moorhead, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Campbell, Cooper, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hise, Humphrey, Hunter, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Winfield, and Wright—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Benjamin, Blaine, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Chandler, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Hawkins, Hayes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jencks, Jones, Kerr, Kuykendall, Leftwich, Marston, McIndoe, McKee, Mercur, Morrill, Morris, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Starr, Stilwell, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and Whaley—68.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, stated he was paired with his colleague, Mr. KERR.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TENNESSEE CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. COOPER presented evidence in the contested-election case of Mr. ARNELL; which was referred to the Committee on Elections.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 549) for the establishment and maintenance of a public park in the District of Columbia; and

An act (S. No. 582) to provide for the payment of past and future use and purchase of the invention and patent upon "post-marking of letters, packets, &c., and cancellation of postage stamps thereon," made by and patented to Marcus P. Norton, of Troy, New York, April 14, 1863, and reissued August 23, 1864, and for other purposes.

It further announced that the Senate had indefinitely postponed House bill No. 901, to regulate the selection of juries for the several courts of the District of Columbia.

CAPTURED COTTON.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, reports from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War in regard to captured and forfeited cotton; which were ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

REMOVAL OF POSTMASTERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster General, in answer to a resolution of the House, giving a list of postmasters removed between July 20, 1866, to December 6, 1866, with the reasons for their removal, and the names of new appointees, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAYNARD moved that five thousand extra copies be printed; which, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

SALARY TAX OF POSTMASTER'S CLERKS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House, in response to a resolution of the House, a letter from the Postmaster General in reference to the salary tax on clerks to postmasters, &c.; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. HILL. I submit the following resolutions, which I believe to involve a question of privilege:

Whereas the integrity of members of this House in the discharge of their official duties is of the utmost importance to the public; and whereas charges affecting that integrity ought not to be preferred upon this floor, except upon the gravest reason; and whereas the following preamble and resolution were introduced by Hon. JOHN WENTWORTH, a member of this House, on the 16th instant, namely:

Whereas the President of the United States has been impeached by a member of this House of high crimes and misdemeanors, and the Committee upon the Judiciary have been instructed to examine into the facts upon which said impeachment was based, with power to send for persons and papers, and report them to this House in order, if thought warrantable, that the President may be arraigned for trial thereon by the Senate; and whereas while the Committee on the Judiciary are examining witnesses with relation to said high crimes and misdemeanors of which the President has been impeached, with a view of making a report to this House for its disinterested action, it has for some time been rumored and has at last been asserted in public newspapers that certain members of this House, who are bound to act impartially upon the report of said committee when presented, are now holding, and have been for some time holding, private meetings with a view to a corrupt bargain, whereby, in violation of their oaths, they have pledged and are pledging themselves in advance to act adversely to said report if unfavorable to the President, and also to act adversely to certain other measures pending before this House to which they have heretofore been favorable, provided the President himself will do certain things to which he has heretofore declared himself hostile, and refrain from doing certain things to which he has heretofore declared himself favorable: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of three be instructed to inquire whether any such meetings have been held for any such corrupt purposes, what members of this House have attended the same, what persons besides members of Congress have attended them, what persons have carried communications from those members to the President, and from the President to them, and what has been the nature of such communications; and also that said committee report at the earliest practicable day the result of their inquiries, and that they also report such resolutions for the action of the House as they may deem necessary for the preservation of its honor and independence; and that said select committee have power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses under oath.

Resolved, That the select committee of three appointed under said resolution be instructed to report, immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, any evidence that may be in possession of said committee, or any member thereof, relating to the corrupt bargain referred to in the preamble to said resolution.

Resolved further, That Hon. JOHN WENTWORTH be requested at the same time to furnish to this House the newspaper assertions and a statement of the rumors in relation to said corrupt bargain referred to in the preamble to said resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that this is not a question of privilege. The instruction of the resolution is that the committee report to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal; that involves a change in the order of business. The resolution, as it does not involve a question of privilege, is not in order at the present time.

TAX BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. MYERS to the paragraph in relation to cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots, to strike out all after the word "therefor" to the end of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute thereof, five dollars per thousand.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw my call for a division on this amendment, and ask a vote upon it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was rejected on a division; tellers were ordered, and no quorum voted. The Chair will again order tellers.

Mr. DEMING. I believe the Chair is mistaken. The amendment was carried on a division—ayes 48, noes 32; but no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed on this paragraph and amendment. The Chair will order tellers.

Messrs. ALLISON and MYERS were appointed tellers.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would inquire if a vote in the House is permitted to be taken on this, whether it will or will not exclude further amendment. A vote in the House is an acquiescence in or disagreement to an amendment as passed in committee. It must be reported as if passed by the committee in order to get a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SCHENCK. That will be inconsistent with further amendment.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out the whole paragraph as just amended and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Also, in the third paragraph relating to cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars, insert between the words "twenty per cent. ad valorem on" and the words "the market value thereof" these words: "the excess over twelve dollars of."

I wish to explain how that will affect the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order on this paragraph. Is there objection?

Mr. DEMING. I object.

The question being put on the amendment, there were—ayes twenty-six.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. SCHENCK and MARSHALL.

Mr. PAINE. Would it not be in order to read the law as it now stands with the amendment incorporated?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if there is any objection.

Mr. PAINE. The House does not understand it.

Mr. SCHENCK. And if we do not adopt the amendment our tobacco is gone. [Laughter.] That is not intended to be heard, however. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Will it be in order for me to say that the committee approve of this? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order. The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 55.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section ninety-four be further amended so that in lieu of the taxes now provided by law upon the goods, wares, and merchandise hereinafter mentioned, which shall be produced and sold, or be manufactured or made and sold, or be consumed or used by the manufacturer or producer thereof, or removed for consumption or use, or for delivery to others than agents of the manufacturer or producer within the United States or Territories thereof, there shall be assessed, collected, and paid the following taxes, to be paid by the producer and manufacturer thereof, that is to say:

On boots and shoes, made wholly or in part of India-rubber, two per cent. ad valorem.

On brandy made of grapes, fifty cents per gallon.

Mr. PRICE. I move to strike out the last item: "On brandy made of grapes fifty cents per gallon." My object is to place brandy made from grapes upon the same footing as brandy made from anything else, and for the additional reason that I am of opinion that if you allow brandy made of grapes to pay only fifty cents a gallon, while brandy made of rye—[laughter.]

A MEMBER. Brandy is not made of rye.

Mr. PRICE. My friend says they do not make brandy of rye.

A MEMBER. They do, though. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. At all events if you tax brandy made of other materials two dollars a gallon, while grape brandy is taxed only fifty cents, they will put in about a pint of grape brandy and then call it all brandy made of grapes, so as to have to pay only fifty cents tax. I propose all brandy shall pay two dollars.

Mr. HIGBY. If it be the only object of putting a tax on an article to drive it entirely out of use I will agree with my friend from Iowa that his amendment is proper. But, sir, I do not understand that that is the object of this bill; its object is to derive revenue to support the Government.

Now, a very few words in regard to making brandy out of grapes and other materials. Vineyards are not cultivated for the sake of manufacturing brandy.

The fact is there is a percentage of the grapes that has to be thrown away unless it be used for some other purpose than making wine. The proportion that is not used for wine is from ten to fifteen per cent., but it can be made into brandy. But vineyards in California are mostly small patches. There are only some three or four very large ones. These small vineyards are scattered over the country. There may be in one county thirty thousand gallons of wine made; ten per cent. of which is in a condition to be converted into brandy. A territory fifty miles square would give three or four thousand gallons of materials suitable for brandy. Now, of course that brandy has to be made in small stills if it is made at all. They cannot concentrate their operations into large establishments, where it could be manufactured at a cheaper rate. Now, you must either leave this tax as it is in the bill, or you will get no revenue from this source. I submit to the committee that if the object is to get a revenue you should keep it at this low rate, or else you will get nothing at all, and the vine-grower loses so much.

Mr. DODGE. I move to strike out the word "gallon" for the sake of saying a word. I would be as loth as any gentleman in this House to do anything that should militate against the prosperity of the State of California, but I am convinced that with all the efforts we are making in this House to guard against frauds with reference to whisky, it will be impossible to guard against them if we open this door so wide as to admit brandy made of grapes at fifty cents, for the simple reason that while frauds are existing we shall have a very large amount of brandy made of grapes, while there will be very little of grape brandy in it.

I hold in my hand a letter from certain parties, proposing to invest $500,000 in the cultivation of beets in the State of Illinois for the purpose of manufacturing beet brandy. They say there is no reason why beet brandy should not be taxed at as low a rate as brandy made from grapes, and that if they can only have the tax at fifty cents they can afford to go into the manufacture. Now, I do not know who the parties are. The letter purports to come from the New York Sugar Beet Company. They propose to manufacture largely brandy from beets.

Now, I know very well that it would be very easy to convert whisky into beet brandy, or white brandy, and I am confident if we admit either of them at a less rate of duty than is put upon whisky, we shall open the flood-gates for fraud, and it will be impossible for us to close them.

Mr. HOGAN. I do not think the members of this House understand properly this matter of brandy made from grapes. I have no doubt the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is made in the interest of temperance. I am a temperance man myself. But I desire to say that the making of brandy from the residuum of the grape, after the wine has been made, is carried on in but two or three places in the United States. The simple question for us to consider is this: whether we shall try to manufacture brandy for ourselves, or whether the brandy which we will necessarily use shall be imported from abroad. The manufacture of brandy in this country is still in its infancy. The tax upon it has heretofore been fifty cents per gallon; and but little revenue has been derived from that tax, because so little of it has been made.

Now, there is no analogy at all between the manufacture of brandy from grapes and the manufacture of whisky from corn and rye. You can put your corn in the still to-day and have the whisky on the market to-morrow. But in the manufacture of brandy from the residuum of the grape it requires four or five years to perfect it and make it ready for sale. There are, perhaps, only one thousand or fifteen hundred gallons of this grape brandy made in the United States, and if there is any object in getting rid of paying immense sums of money to foreigners for brandy, then Congress ought, instead of putting a prohibitory tax upon the manufacture of brandy in this country, to offer a premium for its manufacture. You get but little revenue from it now; and increase the tax upon it and you will get no revenue except in the way of tariff on foreign importations, and I understand it is not proposed to increase the tariff duty.

Mr. PRICE. I will vote to put a tariff duty of ten dollars a gallon on brandy.

Mr. HOGAN. Will that stop the production of it in foreign countries or the importation of it into this country? You may establish as many temperance societies as you please, still these foreign importations will be made. The idea that people will substitute whisky made from corn for brandy made from grapes is simply to declare that there is no honesty or integrity at all in the country.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HOGAN] allow me to ask a question?

Mr. HOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is not the gentleman aware that the probable consumption of brandy in the future will be very much reduced in consequence of the Congressional Temperance Society that has just been formed here? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOGAN. That may be the case; and the revenue of the country may not suffer from that cause.

Mr. PRICE. I would suggest that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HOGAN] is not the proper person of whom to ask or to answer such a question.

Mr. HOGAN. Why not? [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I will ask the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE], who consumes a great deal more than the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PRICE. It will be the case when all the members of Congress sign the pledge.

Mr. HOGAN. That will only operate here. But the point in this case is this: if parties wish to encourage the native production in this country—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DODGE. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew it, for the purpose of saying a few words. When this subject was considered in the Committee of Ways and Means I was disposed to favor the insertion of this provision in this bill. But after a more mature examination of the subject I am satisfied that the adoption of such a provision will lead to frauds innumerable. While my friend from Missouri [Mr. HOGAN] says truly that but a few hundred gallons of brandy from grapes are made in this country, the effect of this provision will be to afford one additional means of fraud, beside the numerous frauds now practiced in this country upon the revenue. I hope, therefore, this entire provision will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HIGBY. Does the gentleman believe there will be any less fraud if not one drop of this brandy is made in this country?

Mr. ALLISON. I only mean to say that the effect of this provision will be to encourage the manufacture to a large extent of an article called brandy from grapes, which may contain possibly a portion of the residuum of the wine from grapes, but which will contain a much greater proportion of alcohol, which will pay no tax whatever. Thus there will be afforded an additional inducement for frauds upon the revenue.

Mr. HOGAN. Will not the same objection apply in the case of brandy made from peaches and brandy made from apples, both of which, by law, pay a tax of only fifty cents?

Mr. ALLISON. I must call the attention of my friend to the fact that brandy made from apples and brandy made from peaches now pay the same tax as distilled spirits.

Mr. HOGAN. They pay only fifty cents.

Mr. ALLISON. It is true there is a provision in the internal revenue law which, I understand, is construed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remit entirely the tax upon brandy made from peaches, brandy made by apples, and also brandy made from grapes. But such was not the intention of the law, and the misconstruction in this particular should be remedied by us; so that distilled spirits from whatever source obtained shall pay a tax of two dollars per gallon unless we make an equal and uniform reduction of the tax. There should be no discrimination, otherwise we afford an inducement for the perpetration of frauds upon the revenue.

Mr. DARLING. In order that I may present to the House some facts bearing on this question, I move pro forma to strike out the last word in the tenth line. I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEAR SIR: Allow me to state a case bearing on the grape-brandy question that I omitted this morning. Early this month (February) one of the signers of the petition presented you this morning received an order for fifty pipespirits from San Francisco—about eight thousand gallons—on which the tax to be paid would be $16,000. On Tuesday last he received a telegram from San Francisco, as follows: "Do not ship the spirits ordered, as we shall try the grape spirits here, as Congress will permit it to be manufactured much less. If you have bought, sell it in New York." This is a case directly in point, and the passage of the clause permitting this spirit to be manufactured at fifty cents per gallon will lose the Government at least $2,000,000 per annum.

Yours very truly,

JOHN F. DALY,
9 Nassau street.

Hon. W. A. DARLING.

Mr. DARLING. Mr. Chairman, I have called for the reading of this letter in order to show what would be the effect of this discrimination in regard to brandy made from grapes.

Mr. BIDWELL. Who is the gentleman who wrote that letter?

Mr. DARLING. He is a respectable merchant in New York city.

A MEMBER. Does he deal in liquor?

Mr. DARLING. I presume he does.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is useless for the House to appoint a select committee to investigate frauds on the revenue and devise means to prevent them if we are going to insert in the tax bill any such provision as this. Why, sir, the amount of spirits transported from the city of New York to California has been for some time past gradually diminishing, the amount during the last year not exceeding eleven thousand five hundred barrels. The telegram referred to in the letter which has been read explains what will be the operation of such legislation as is now proposed. Persons in California will take spirits made from grapes, cover it, mark it "brandy," send it to New York city, and sell it in competition with whisky or rectified spirits, upon which the tax is two dollars.

I have here a petition upon this subject, signed by some of the most respectable merchants in the city of New York. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned, merchants and shippers of spirits to California, respectfully represent that the proposed reduction of the tax on spirits made from grapes to fifty cents per gallon is calculated to do great injury to, if not entirely to ruin, the trade in grain spirits between the Atlantic and Pacific States; that it will open out great opportunities for fraud in the naming of spirits, so as to make them liable to the smaller rate only, and afford other opportunities for fraud which the law has hitherto been powerless to prevent.

NEW YORK, February, 1887.

Mr. McRUER. Are not all the signers of that petition whisky manufacturers?

Mr. DARLING. I presume they are!

A MEMBER. Are they honest?

Mr. DARLING. I do not believe there is an honest distiller in the country; for they cannot be honest when products such as they manufacture can be bought in open market to-day for fifty cents less per gallon than the Government tax on them.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend this paragraph so it will read:

On brandy made of grapes, apples, or peaches, two dollars per gallon.

Mr. Chairman, I see no good reason why there should be any difference in the tax upon these intoxicating drinks. We have imposed a tax of two dollars a gallon upon whisky, and I do not see why we should not have the same tax upon brandy without regard to what it is made from, whether from grapes or anything else. It stands upon the same shelf with whisky as a general thing, and I now insist it shall bear the same tax.

Mr. BIDWELL. I cannot yield to any man upon this floor in a desire to see the cause of temperance prevail in this country. I profess myself, although not having signed "the pledge," to be a temperance man; and wish to promote that cause by every means within my power. I take it for granted, however, in the present state of humanity, that brandy will continue to be an article of consumption. Therefore, unless we make the article ourselves, it will be imported from other countries.

Now, sir, the proposed tax of two dollars a gallon, as it affects a large and growing interest upon the Pacific coast, becomes a question demanding serious consideration. We are on that coast far removed from the markets of the world, and whatever we manufacture must be sent thousands, I may say almost tens of thousands of miles for sale. From what the gentleman from New York has said, it seems they are now growing jealous because they do not send us the large amount of intoxicating liquors that they did formerly. I think one reason for the diminution in that respect is the people on the Pacific coast have much improved in that particular. I have noticed lately there is not so much drinking done there as in previous years. Formerly you could not travel on any steamboat without being compelled to go up to the "bar" four or five times and take a drink if you did not wish to offend any person. Now you may travel throughout the length and breadth of California and see but very few intoxicated men. Such is my experience.

Our exports heretofore have been gold and silver, but our mines may give out. Our production in that regard is liable to change. In some localities they may give out altogether. We wish, therefore, to build up an interest, if need be, to take the place of the mining interest.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the gentleman from California, whether, as a member from that great State, he says that in order to supply his losses from a decline in his mining interest it is necessary that he should be favored with a tax of only fifty cents upon the grape brandy?

Mr. BIDWELL. I believe you will have as much revenue at fifty cents per gallon as at two dollars, for at fifty cents per gallon you will have probably ten times as much manufactured as at two dollars. Then in the manufacture of brandy you will use an article which otherwise would be thrown away; and it will be thrown away if the manufacture of brandy is prohibited in effect by the imposition of too high a tax. When you express wine from the grape, the must which is left is distilled into brandy, and if we make the tax two dollars a gallon that must will be thrown away.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment, for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that the gentleman from Indiana will reach his purpose by striking out the whole line as moved by the gentleman from Iowa, as all distilled spirits are now subject to a tax of two dollars. As has been stated, there is a proviso which allows the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make any change in the law in regard to the manufacture of spirits distilled from grapes; but, sir—

Mr. HILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. THAYER. If the gentleman expects to get this bill passed he is mistaken, unless there is some limit to this debate.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Unless it is the understanding that this debate shall now close, I will move that the committee rise for that purpose.

The amendment of Mr. PRICE was agreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

On hats, caps, bonnets, and hoods of all descriptions, two per cent. ad valorem.
On hoop-skirts, two per cent. ad valorem.
On manufactures of wool, two and a half per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move to insert in lieu of the last paragraph the following:

On woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description, made wholly or in part of wool, two and a half per cent. ad valorem.

I do not suppose the committee will object to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the gentleman offer that amendment as coming from the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. MOORHEAD. No, sir; but I supposed there would be no objection to it. If gentlemen will turn to page 5 of the House tariff bill they will find the description exactly as given here. This amendment was prepared in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. He thinks the language here not explicit enough, and prefers it should be amended as I have suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make a suggestion in relation to this paragraph. The object of the committee was to exempt the manufacturers of wool, because we were led to believe that that interest is now very much depressed; but the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] will be, not only to exempt the manufacturers of wool, but also manufacturers of wool and cotton combined, even where there is but a single thread of wool and the remainder of the fabric is cotton.

Now, while I would have no special objection to exempting cotton manufactures to the extent of two and a half per cent., yet I do not think we ought to vary from the conclusion of the committee. I have therefore prepared this amendment, which I will offer as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MOORHEAD:]

On manufactures of wool, or of which wool is the chief component material and the component material of chief value, two and a half per cent.

That will apply the two and a half per cent. only to fabrics composed chiefly of wool, and of which wool is the chief material of value.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will not be in order until the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been disposed of.

Mr. BROOMALL. Is it in order to move to perfect the original text of the bill before the vote is taken on the amendment of my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MOORHEAD?]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman's colleague is an amendment to the original text, and therefore the gentleman's amendment must be an amendment to the amendment of his colleague.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move then to insert after the word "wool," where it last occurs, the words "and cotton;" so that it will read:

On manufactures of wool and cotton, two and a half per cent. ad valorem.

I see no reason why manufactures of cotton should be put on a different footing from manufactures of wool. I am glad that the Committee of Ways and Means find that the condition of the finances of the country will, in their judgment, admit of a reduction of the tax upon woolen manufactures, and I had hoped that they would have seen occasion to reduce the tax upon cotton manufactures also. I hope they will assent to this amendment. It gets rid of the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] one of the members of the committee, of discriminating between the tax upon cotton and that upon wool, and I hope it will be adopted by the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL,] provided, in the opinion of the committee, the revenue of the country will bear the exemption of both these staple articles. But if the committee should be of the opinion that that is too large an exemption for the revenue of the country, there is a very marked difference between the condition of the woolen and the cotton manufacturing interests of the country; and it would be altogether wrong to both of those interests if in attempting to exempt them both we should fail to exempt either.

I hold in my hand returns from the internal revenue office touching the manufactures both of cotton and of wool, and I have to say that my own district is about equally divided in these two manufactures. The State of Massachusetts produces exactly thirty-six per cent. of all the cotton manufactures of the country, and precisely that amount of all the woolen manufactures of the country, as revealed by the internal revenue office.

Now, sir, while the cotton manufactures of the country are, judging from the taxes paid upon them, more prosperous than they have ever been, are increasing in prosperity, and ask no increase of tariff at all, the woolen manufactures have never been so depressed for very many years. The loss to the internal revenue upon the woolen manufactures of the country for the last three months, as revealed in the internal revenue office, was thirty-three per cent. in the whole country, thirty-six per cent. in the State of Massachusetts, and sixty per cent. in my own district.

Now, my district is very largely interested in cotton manufactures, and I should be very glad to give this relief to the cotton interest. If the committee think that we can exempt both interests, I have not a word to say against it. But it is a serious question whether the woolen interest can survive the burdens now placed upon it or whether it will not be crushed out by their weight. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended the reduction of two and a half per cent. on woolen manufactures, and I beg the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL,] unless his information in reference to the cotton interest differs from mine, that he will not hazard the fate of the whole woolen interest of the country by attaching to this proposition a reduction on cotton manufactures.

The question was taken on Mr. BROOMALL's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred upon Mr. MOORHEAD's amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask my friend from Pennsylvania to withdraw that amendment, so as to enable me to offer one which I have prepared.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I will hear it.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose the following:

On manufactures of wool, or of which wool is the chief component material and the component material of chief value, two and a half per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I will accept that as a substitute for my amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL. I will ask my colleague to insert in his amendment after the word "shawls" the word "carpets."

Mr. MOORHEAD. I have accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, and the word "shawl" is not in it.

The question was taken upon Mr. MOORHEAD's amendment, as modified by Mr. ALLISON, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after line one hundred and fifteen the following:

That section ninety-six be amended by inserting after the words, "and also all goods, wares, and merchandise and articles," and before the words "made or manufactured from materials," the words "not specially named and taxed, and which are."

The object of that amendment is to improve the phraseology of the present law and to remove some obstacles to the administration of it. The amendment comes from the internal revenue department, and is offered by instruction of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELKER. I move to insert after line one hundred and fifteen the following:

On saddles, bridles, and harnesses, two per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why saddlers and harness-makers should not be placed on the same footing as shoemakers and tailors. Under the present law harness-makers are taxed five per cent. We have already exempted by our internal revenue law all the agricultural implements of the country, and this bill proposes to exempt two or three articles not heretofore exempted. I can see no reason why we should not extend the exemption to harness-makers and place them in the same position as shoemakers and tailors.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment. We have exempted leather altogether from tax.

Mr. WELKER. I understand that, but that exemption applies to shoemakers as well as to harness-makers.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. All leather is exempted from taxation, so that the manufacturer works with a raw material that is untaxed.

Mr. WELKER. The law gives the shoemaker an advantage over the harness-maker, and I cannot see any reason for it. The present tax is five per cent. I propose to reduce it to two per cent., the same that the shoemaker pays. He uses leather the same as the harness-maker does, and I do not see the propriety of making any distinction between these classes of manufactures.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Saddles and bridles are not so generally used as the articles which the shoemakers manufacture. We put boots and shoes at a lower rate, because every man, woman, and child, rich or poor, has to use them.

Mr. WELKER. I know that.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. We thought that clothing should pay as small a tax as possible.

Mr. WELKER. I suggest that all agricultural implements are now exempted, and saddles and bridles and harnesses are about as necessary to carry on agricultural operations as almost anything else that could be named. I think they ought not to be overtaxed. I call for tellers on my amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WELKER and HOOPER, of Massachusetts, were appointed. The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and three be amended by striking out the words "until the 30th day of April, 1867."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting after the words "by striking out the" the words "word 'ferry'" where it occurs twice in the second proviso, and by striking out the quotation marks. And I will explain briefly the object of my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That question cannot be put until the paragraph is perfected.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Under the present law steamboats now pay a tax of two and one half per cent. Ferries are included with bridges, under a tax of three per cent. That has made a great deal of confusion in the bureau, as to which head the steamboats used as ferry-boats should come under. The object of this amendment is to put steam ferry-boats upon the same footing with other steamboats.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order that this House may be consistent with itself I think this entire paragraph should be stricken out. We have already decided the same principle in reference to the tax on gas companies, and that, too, by a very decided vote.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The amendment which I propose is distinct from the subject to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WILLIAMS] refers. However, as he desires to submit his motion, I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now move to strike out the entire paragraph. I will merely say to the House that this is the same principle that was involved in the action of the House in reference to the tax on gas companies. The House by a very decisive vote, three or four to one, if my recollection serves me correctly, decided that it was not competent for Congress to shift a burden from one party to another; to remove limitations imposed upon corporations by State legislation; in fact to make contracts for corporations which they never made themselves. Therefore, in order to be consistent in our action, this paragraph should be stricken out.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The House may have struck out the paragraph, as the gentleman says; but it was not upon the ground he has assigned.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. If the Committee of the Whole adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WILLIAMS,]—

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the Speaker resumed the chair, and the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania, announcing the ratification by the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Congress of the United States at its last session; which was laid on the table.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. KUYKENDALL asked and obtained leave, by unanimous consent, to have printed in the Globe the following petition:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, inhabitants of Oberlin, Ohio, respectfully represent to your honorable body that the present "national banking system" of currency is unjust in all its bearings; and especially in that—

1. It leaves the control of the currency, which should belong to the entire people, to the few capitalists;

2. It secures to these capitalists double interest on their bonds, which the people, the laboring classes, have to pay directly or indirectly; and

3. It deprives the Government, and thereby the people, of the benefits which would result from a proper system of national finance.

For these reasons, and for innumerable other collateral reasons, we heartily pray you to abolish the "national banking system," and to substitute for a currency a system to which not an honest laborer ever objected, namely, the issue of demand legal-tender Treasury notes. With such a currency as this, and with only such, are the people, or ever will they be, satisfied; and this is one of the essentials to a sound currency. No currency can be safe in which the people have not the most implicit confidence.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, a bill to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes, and for other purposes.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the House ordered that this evening's session should be devoted to the consideration of fifteen Senate bills, to be reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the consideration of pension business be postponed, and that the House go into the Committee of the Whole on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent; as the consideration of pension business was assigned for this evening by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object to the postponement of the pension business.

PATRICK MEEHAN.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 513, granting a pension to Patrick Meehan.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Patrick Meehan, late a corporal in company I, eighty-ninth regiment Indiana volunteers on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from June 6, 1866.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the words "at the rate of fifteen dollars per month" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions of the pension law."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EZRA B. GORDON.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments a bill (H. R. No. 602) entitled "An act granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon."

The bill, which was read at length, proposes to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ezra B. Gordon, late a private in company F, fourth regiment New Hampshire volunteers on the pension-roll at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, commencing with the passage of the act and continuing during his natural life.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "roll" in the second line and insert the words, "subject to the provisions of the pension law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES APPLETON.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill (S. No. 514) entitled "An act for the relief of Charles Appleton."

The question was on ordering the bill to be read the third time.

The bill, which was read at length, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to increase the pension of Charles Appleton, late a soldier in the United States Army, from eight dollars per month to fifteen dollars per month, and to pay him such increased pension from the passage of this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the committee propose any amendment to this bill?

Mr. PERHAM. No, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. Why is there is a discrimination between this case and the other?

Mr. PERHAM. Because the circumstances are different.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN CARTER.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill (S. No. 554) entitled "An act granting a pension to John Carter."

The question was on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill, which was read at length, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Carter, late a private in company H, fifth regiment United States infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from the passage of this bill, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to know from the chairman of the committee the reason for this discrimination in reference to these different cases. Some of these persons are allowed a pension absolutely at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, while others are simply provided for "subject to the provisions of the pension law."

Mr. PERHAM. The gentleman may not be aware that under the provisions of the general law a person who has lost an arm or a foot in the service is entitled to a pension of fifteen dollars per month, and the same sum is allowed where the disability is equivalent to that. One of these cases is that of a person who lost an arm in the service, and the amount of pension is fixed by the law. In another of these cases the committee did not feel justified in deciding the extent of the injury, and concluded to leave the matter with the Pension Office, where a proper examination may be made and the case settled according to the provisions of the pension law.

Mr. DAVIS. I simply desired information in reference to the matter.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES N. WEISS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a recommendation that it pass a bill (S. No. 580) entitled "An act granting a pension to Charles N. Weiss."

The question was on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill, which was read at length, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Charles N. Weiss, of the District of Columbia, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from the passage of this bill and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KENNEDY O'BRIEN.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 512, for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to increase the pension of Kennedy O'Brien, late a private in company K, fifth regiment Indiana volunteers, from eight dollars per month to twenty-five dollars per month, and to pay him such increased pension from the passage of this bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. JERUSA PAGE.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the benefit of Mrs. Jerusha Page, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Jerusha Page, of the State of Missouri, the widow of the late Thomas C. Page, deceased, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the passage of this bill and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ADELINE M. GOULD.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 497, granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline M. Gould, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Adeline M. Gould, mother of Eugene E. Gould, late a private in company F, third regiment Rhode Island cavalry volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from December 22, 1864, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to ask the chairman upon what principle he reports the pension given to the mother of the child shall only continue during her widowhood? It seems to me she should be entitled during her natural life. I see no reason why it should be confined to her widowhood.

Mr. PERHAM. That is the law.

Mr. DAVIS. We are making the law. This House is a law to itself if the Senate concurs.

Mr. PERHAM demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATHERINE MOCK.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported back the following amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 219, for the relief of Catherine Mock, with the recommendation that it be concurred in:

Strike out "and after the passage of this act" and insert "from the 1st day of May, 1865," so that it will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, required to place upon the pension-roll the name of Catherine Mock, of the city of Baltimore, widow of William H. Mock, who was ordnance sergeant and died at or near Fort Mifflin, in 1837; and that she be paid a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 1st day of May, 1865, and continue during her natural life.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. SALLIE ALLEN.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Mrs. Sallie Allen; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be paid to Mrs. Sallie Allen, widow of Isaac Allen, of Maine, $25 33 due to her husband by special act at the time of his death.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY FITZPATRICK.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Fitzpatrick; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Mary Fitzpatrick, widow of James W. Fitzpatrick, late an acting assistant surgeon United States Army, who died at Harewood Hospital about May 6, 1864, upon the pension-roll, at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, to commence at the date of her husband's death, subject to the provisions of the pension law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY A. CROSS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 1068, for the relief of Mary A. Cross, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill directs the payment to Mary A. Cross, of Frémont, Ohio, widow of Hubbard H. Cross, late private in the seventy-second regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, a pension from the 12th of June, 1862, the date of the death of her husband, to the date at which the pension heretofore granted to her commenced at the same rate.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

ISABELLA FOGG.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, reported a bill increasing the pension of Isabella Fogg; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs an increased pension to Isabella Fogg, who was granted a pension of eight dollars per month by act of Congress, approved April 17, 1866, from eight to twenty dollars per month.

Mr. ANCONA. Is there any report in this case?

Mr. PERHAM. There are reports in all these cases.

Mr. ANCONA. I do not call for the reading of it if the chairman will state some reason for this increase of pension.

Mr. PERHAM. Mrs. Isabella Fogg was a nurse in the Army, went all through the war with the soldiers, and contributed efficiently to their aid and assistance in the hospitals, on the field, and everywhere. Near the close of the war she fell through a hatchway of a vessel by which she was entirely disabled. She is now unable to move and is supported by some charitable institution in the city of Cincinnati. A pension was given at the last session of eight dollars per month, and since we have increased other pensions the committee thought proper to increase this.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOUISE DANIEL.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Louise Daniel; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the petitioner, widow of Joseph Daniel, late of the first Tennessee volunteers, a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 9th of May, 1862, to the 11th of September, 1865.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY J. DEXTER.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee reported a bill for the relief of Mary B. Fowler; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary B. Fowler, of Cleveland, Ohio, on the pension-roll, at eight dollars per month, subject to the provisions of the law relative to dependent mothers of deceased soldiers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, made adverse reports upon the following memorial and petitions, and the same were laid on the table: memorial of John Hicks; petition of citizens of Bradford county, Pennsylvania; petition of H. J. Whitman; petition of Lydia L. Perham.

On motion of Mr. PERHAM, the Committee on Invalid Petitions was discharged from the further consideration of bill of the House No. 813, to grant pensions to certain persons in East Tennessee; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. PERHAM. I wish to say that I have one other Senate bill, but as it may possibly lead to debate, I prefer to yield to other members of the committee who have reports to make.

PETER FISHER.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to Peter Fisher; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Peter Fisher, late a member of company G, thirty-seventh regiment Iowa infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, commencing on the 24th day June, 1864, the date of his discharge.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Charles Valence, late a private in company E, forty-second regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, upon the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 8th of September, 1862, the date of his discharge, up to the 27th of January, 1864, the date of the commencement of his pension, as allowed by the pension law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know whether the order of the House by which this committee were allowed to report fifteen Senate bills is being executed by making these reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that several of the bills just passed are not Senate bills, as they were evidently House bills reported by the committee; but the Chair will further state that this committee has not been called for one month past, and may not be called again this session.

Mr. DAVIS. I feel great reluctance to interfere with this kind of business—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York raises the point of order, the Chair must decide that these reports are not in order.

Mr. DAVIS. The House is well aware that the tax bill is pressing upon us and that we ought to act upon it.

Mr. PERHAM. This will not take more than twenty minutes or half an hour; and I hope the gentleman will not press his objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not wish to be discourteous, and I withdraw the objection.

OBADIAH ADERTON.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution granting a pension to Obadiah Aderton; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Obadiah Aderton, of the State of Maine, on the pension-list, at the rate of eight dollars per month; payment to commence from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. RADFORD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the House will indulge me I will say a word in reference to this case, although I dislike to consume the time of the House at this period of the session with cases of this kind.

This gentleman was formerly a constituent of mine. His papers were made out and submitted to the last Congress before the war, and the report which has been read is, I presume, the report that was made by my colleague, Colonel Stokes, who was then on the Pension Committee. It was made at the session immediately before the war, when we were so much engrossed in trying to break up the Government and destroy it that we had little time left to look after the old defenders.

I propose to the House that this old man, who is now on the very brink of the grave, and to whom a pension beginning now and running forward would be little else than a mockery, shall have his pension date back to the time when it ought to have been granted, six years ago. I move that the pension shall date from the 4th of March, 1861.

Mr. RADFORD. At what rate per month is he to be paid?

The SPEAKER. Eight dollars per month.

Mr. PERHAM. This is a subject which has been before the Committee on Pensions a great many times, and the committee were unanimous, I think, in their conclusion in reference to this case. If we should adopt the course proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, I feel that we should do injustice to others, and I therefore trust that the committee will be sustained.

Mr. HILL. I believe the other rule was established in the early part of the last Congress. I recollect that I endeavored in my feeble way to have the rule fixed that the pensions should date from the time when they ought to have been granted, instead of at the arbitrary time when the bills may pass; and the Committee on Pensions were instructed by two or three votes of the House to adopt this principle.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would not interfere with the general ruling of the committee, but this case, I can assure gentlemen, is a peculiar case. This old man made out his case six years ago. A bill for his relief passed the House, with the approval of the Committee on Pensions, and if the Senate had not been so much engaged in the work of treason the old man would then have been placed on the roll of pensioners.

The only additional proof now adduced is to show that this old man during all the terrible years of the war maintained his loyalty, bright and burning, and has done so up to this time. I trust an exception will be made in favor of this old man, who stands, as I have said, upon the very brink of the other world, and to whom a pension dating from this time would be a mere mockery.

Mr. RADFORD. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It would establish a precedent which would lead to the introduction of innumerable bills of this character and involve a large expenditure of time and money. I think it is sufficient for us to pension this old man from this time. One so old and feeble cannot require a large amount of money. I think there must be something behind this, that there must be some heirs who expect to reap the advantage when the old man is gone. It would be a very dangerous precedent for us to establish, and I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SPALDING. It is very difficult to resist such appeals as that made by my friend from Tennessee. He appeals to the sympathies of the House, and we would all be glad to have this old man receive this sum which the gentleman asks, but we all know that we have a Pension Committee liberal to the last degree in this matter of giving pensions, and they with one accord, unanimously have reported against extending the pension back as the gentleman asks us to do. I object to it. It would be cited as a precedent for other cases, and if we do it in this case we must do it in hundreds of others.

Mr. MAYNARD. Did the gentleman hear my statement, that this case was before the Thirty-Sixth Congress and that the bill ought to have passed at that time? The old man made out his case then just as he has made it out now. It was our fault and not his that the bill did not pass.

Mr. SPALDING. Oh, we all understand that.

Mr. SAWYER. I demand the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. MAYNARD's amendment; and it was agreed to—ayes 55, noes 42.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the petition of John A. Milligan and thirteen others, and the petition of William Dunham; and the same were laid on the table.

VIRGINIA G. WILSON.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) for the relief of Virginia G. Wilson, widow of the late Captain George W. Wilson, with an amendment in the form of a substitute.

The substitute proposed by the committee directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be paid to Virginia G. Wilson, widow of George W. Wilson, deceased, late captain of company G, second Eastern Shore regiment Maryland volunteers, $272, the amount of pension accruing to Captain Wilson between January 3, 1865, the date of his muster-out from the United States service, to February 21, 1866, the date of his original application for a pension, which he failed to obtain in his lifetime by reason of his application not being filed within one year from the date of his disability.

The substitute reported by the committee was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tax bill.

Mr. PERHAM. I hope that motion will not be adopted until the Committee on Invalid Pensions have concluded their reports. There are very few cases remaining. In these bills the hopes of widows and maimed soldiers and orphan children are bound up.

The motion of Mr. MOORHEAD was not agreed to.

MARY HOSEA.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill granting a pension to Mary Hosea, widow of James Hosea, late of Carbondale, Luzerne county, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the roll of invalid pensioners the name of Mary Hosea, widow of James Hosea, late of Carbondale, Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, at the rate allowed by existing laws to provost marshals, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAVID B. CHAMPION.

Mr. LEFTWICH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill granting a pension to David B. Champion; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the reading of this bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. And if there be no objection, the reporting of the bill at length will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEFTWICH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. RACHEL MCLELLAND.

Mr. LEFTWICH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill (H. R. No. 1153) for the relief of Mrs. Rachel McClelland.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay or cause to be paid to Rachel McClelland, widow of private John F. McClelland, late of company E, sixteenth regiment Ohio volunteers, a pension of eight dollars per month from September 19, 1862, to December 6, 1866, the latter being the date at which her name was placed upon the pension-rolls.

Mr. RADFORD. I call for the reading of the report in this case.

The Clerk read the report.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEFTWICH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES RIDDLE.

Mr. LEFTWICH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill for the relief of James Riddle; which was read a first and second time.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read at length, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James Riddle, a resident of the city of New York, late of company G, eighth United States infantry, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from July 29, 1863.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEFTWICH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 760) for the relief of James C. Cook; and

An act (H. R. No. 589) for the relief of Delia A. Jacobs, late Delia A. Fitzgerald.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) for the relief of Joseph R. Morris, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

OLIVIA W. CANNON.

Mr. LEFTWICH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, a bill (S. No. 581) entitled "An act granting a pension to Olivia W. Cannon."

The question was on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill, which was read at length, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Olivia W. Cannon, widow of Joseph S. Cannon, late a midshipman in the United States Navy, upon the pension-rolls, at the rate of ten dollars per month, to commence upon the presentation of satisfactory proof of identity and widowhood, and to continue during her widowhood, the pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. RADFORD. I do not perceive from the reading of the bill that there is anything in the circumstances of this case to entitle this lady to a pension. I see no reason for the passage of the bill. I call for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. RADFORD. It strikes me very forcibly that we shall not be warranted in passing this bill. The report presents no sufficient ground for its passage. The committee do not claim to have acted on any testimony. Still they recommend that the name of this lady be placed on the pension-rolls. I wish that the gentleman reporting the bill would explain it more fully than the report does.

Mr. LEFTWICH. This lady will be required to make out her case according to the requirements of the law.

Mr. RADFORD. I do not see why the committee should not satisfy themselves concerning the facts before reporting these bills. We are voting away hundreds of thousands of dollars, and nobody knows anything about the facts upon which the claims are supposed to rest.

Mr. LEFTWICH. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEFTWICH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILTON VELZY.

Mr. LEFTWICH, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 1092, for the relief of Milton Velzy, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall pay, out of any funds appropriated for payment of pensions, to Milton Velzy, of Machias, Cattaugus county, New York, of company C, one hundred and fourth New York volunteers, $349 80, which is at the rate of eight dollars per month from 24th of December, 1862, to 13th of June, 1866.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEFTWICH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLEMENT HURTT.

Mr. LEFTWICH, from the same committee, also reported adversely on the petition of Clement Hurtt; and the same was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO PENSION LAW.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, from the same committee, also reported back adversely House bill No. 398, to amend an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1864; and the same was laid on the table.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, from the same committee, also reported adversely upon the petition of Samuel Chambers, a soldier of the war of 1812; and also upon the petition of Weymouth Bean; and the same was laid on the table.

WARD B. BURNETT.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported back adversely Senate bill No. 418, for the relief of Ward B. Burnett; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. PERHAM. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish in behalf of wounded soldiers, of widows and orphans, to thank this House which has so kindly given us this opportunity to make so many reports.

TAX BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Before moving to go into committee on the special order, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph of the tax bill be closed in ten minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, (Mr. BOWWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the tax bill as the special order.

The Chairman stated the pending amendment was as follows, on which Mr. WOODBRIDGE was entitled to the floor:

Strike out the following:

That section one hundred and three be amended by striking out the words "until the 30th day of April, 1867."

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the motion to strike out will not prevail, for I think it would be unjust to the railroads of the country if it should prevail. It is well known, in the first place, that the railroads of this country, as a general thing, do not pay the persons who have invested in their stock. Of all the railroads in Vermont there is but one, from the time it was put into running condition to the present day, that has paid one single dividend on the money which went to construct them; and all the railroad stock in Vermont, at any rate of the two great trunk lines leading to Boston, and the two trunk lines leading to New York, as investments are worthless. So far as railroad stock is concerned as an investment, not only in Vermont, but as the statistics show, in the country at large, it has not been, and probably will not be, a paying one. Look at some of the great lines; take the lines in New York, take some of the northern lines which are not trunk lines, running from East to West, and their stock pays no dividends while they are restricted to a fare of two or three cents a mile.

But, sir, take the great East and West roads. One of the greatest roads of this country is the New York Central. It is restricted to a fare of two cents a mile, and I undertake to say, from my knowledge of railroads, which is very considerable, that two cents a mile does not in the present state of things pay expenses of transportation.

I know it is said that these city roads are monopolies; but what is the fact? Take, for instance, the Sixth Avenue horse railroad in New York city, a road that has been managed with as much care and economy as any road in the city, as I am informed by a credible gentleman who knows whereof he speaks. In 1864 they lost over forty thousand dollars which they were obliged to make up in order to relieve themselves of the burden they incurred for running expenses that year. Their fare is limited to five cents, and we have it under oath by the president of the road, a gentleman whose standing is as high as that of any man in the city of New York, that from January 1, 1866, to January 1, 1867, the actual cost of running the road was five and six hundredths cents per passenger. The company paid no dividends for several years until the past year, when they managed to pay a dividend out of the profit, between the fraction of a cent they are required to pay as Government tax on each passenger and the whole cent additional that the passenger had to pay.

Now, these railroads pay a tax to the Government on everything they use, from the nail that is put into the horse's shoe to the last stroke of the painter's pencil upon the car. And they pay these taxes without any expense to the Government. They pay them without the interposition of collector or assessor or any officer of the Government. The New York Central railroad pays now and has paid $200,000 per annum into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. UPSON. Will the gentleman tell us whether the company pays it or charge it over to their customers?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. The company itself pays the tax which the Government imposes upon it of three per cent. upon its gross receipts. Now, gas companies are upon a different foundation from railroad companies. I am not going to quarrel with gentlemen here in relation to gas companies, but they are more of the nature of individual or private enterprises for investment, while railroads are got up for the development of the country. In very many cases they run through regions where they cannot pay, and are never expected to pay.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The argument of my friend from Vermont [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] is entirely aside from the question—allow me to say it—not to the purpose at all.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I am obliged to you. Mr. WILLIAMS. It is suggested that railroads are not paying investments. Grant it. We are not quarreling about that. But what does he find in that fact to authorize us to do a thing that is not within our constitutional competency?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I ask the gentleman if he did not vote to relieve the gas companies?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I voted upon that question as I shall on this. Now, I say to the gentleman that if the railroads are valuable enterprises to the people at large, and if they cannot pay interest upon their cost under the limitations imposed upon them by existing legal contracts, and after paying the Government tax, then relieve them. Let the gentleman introduce an amendment declaring them entitled to exemption and that they shall not be charged. But what does he find in that circumstance to authorize him to transfer the burden imposed upon them upon the shoulders of other persons? Where does he find the power to make contracts for third persons? Is it in the Constitution? Does he suppose we can take off limitations imposed by the charter of a State corporation or make a new contract? I said the other evening that that was simply impossible as well as unconstitutional, because it is undertaking to make it our contract, and not that of the parties.

Mr. ALLISON. I entirely concur with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his motion, but I should like to add a provision to apply peculiarly to horse railroads: that horse railroads may be permitted to add the fraction of a cent which the tax imposes, but they shall only add that fraction when the party pays for his passage on the cars, and that they shall keep for sale at convenient points and in each and every car tickets at the rate of fare only, without adding the tax. I shall offer an amendment to that effect when this amendment shall have been disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. I am somewhat surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the position assumed by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAMS] upon this question, in regard to the railways. He declares that we have no right as a sovereign Government to interfere at all with any contract made between a State and an individual or a corporation. Now, sir, I submit that his whole action during his membership in Congress has been in direct violation of that principle, and that he has been one of those who have not hesitated to affirm the power of the Government to interfere with every State right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Can you name one case?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; I could name a dozen.

Now, in respect to this question, I affirm that the power of taxation is a sovereign power that belongs to a sovereign Government. Sir, I have always held that this Government was sovereign in everything that related to its nationality, and the power of taxation is necessary for the purpose of preserving its national character; and therefore when it imposes taxes it may impose conditions; it may prescribe that the party or corporation upon whom a tax is imposed may impose it upon its own patrons and customers.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon this clause of the bill is now closed by order of the House.

The question being on Mr. WILLIAMS'S amendment,

Mr. POMEROY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WILLIAMS and DAVIS were appointed.

The committee divided; but the tellers were unable to agree upon a report.

The Chairman thereupon appointed Messrs. NICHOLSON and ALLISON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 51.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the word "until," in line one hundred and seventeen, the words

"ferries, where they occur twice in the second proviso, and by striking out the word."

Mr. HILL. I should like some information as to what that amendment means; it is impossible to understand it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will state the object of the amendment if there be no objection.

No objection was made.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will state that ferry-boats are now taxed three per cent., whereas steamboats are taxed two and a half per cent. A great many ferry-boats, indeed most of them, are steamboats, and a good deal of difficulty has occurred in the department to ascertain under which tax a steam ferry-boat should be taxed: whether it should pay three per cent. as a ferry-boat or two and a half per cent. as a steamboat. I propose to solve the difficulty by placing ferry-boats on the same footing as steamboats. That is the sole object of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert after line one hundred and eighteen the following:

Amend section one hundred and three by striking out the following: "And whenever the addition to any fare shall amount only to the fraction of one cent, any person, or company, liable to the tax of two and a half per cent., may add to such fare one cent, in lieu of such fraction, and such person or company shall keep for sale, at convenient points, tickets in packages of twenty and multiples of twenty, to the price of which only an amount equal to the revenue tax shall be added." And insert in lieu thereof the following:

And provided further. That whenever the addition to any fare shall amount only to a fraction of one cent, any person or company liable to the tax of two and a half per cent. may add to such fare one cent in lieu of such fraction; but such person or company shall keep for sale, without adding the tax, at convenient points, and on each and every car, tickets in packages of five and multiples of five.

Mr. PAINE. I would ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] if his amendment applies to tax on railway lines other than street railways?

Mr. ALLISON. It is intended to apply only to street railways.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I would inquire of the Chair if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is not in direct conflict with the vote just had by the Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not for the Chair to determine.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. ALLISON, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I offered an amendment the other night to come in on page 8 of this bill after line forty-five, to which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WARD] objected. I have prepared an amendment to which I think he can have no objection, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to return to that portion of the bill, for the purpose of moving an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend by inserting after line one hundred and eighteen, on page 10 of this bill, the following paragraph:

That section ninety-seven be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

I ask that the Clerk read the section of the present law, which I propose by my amendment to have repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. Reading the section would be in the nature of debate; and under the order of the House debate is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The order of the House, as I understood it, applied to the paragraph which we have just passed upon. I do not propose to amend that paragraph, but to insert a new paragraph to succeed that one.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House, according to the construction heretofore given to such orders there can be no debate until the next paragraph is read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would inquire if, after a clause has been passed upon, it is not competent to introduce another to immediately follow it?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is precisely what I have done; and I propose to have read the section of the old law, in order that the House may be informed of the effect of my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate will be in order until another paragraph of the text of the bill has been read.

Mr. ROSS. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the reading of the section would be in the nature of debate?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I cannot now explain the effect of my amendment I will withdraw it. No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That schedule B, in relation to stamp duties named in section one hundred and fifty-one, be amended by inserting after the paragraph relating to conveyance, and before that relating to entry, the following words: "Where any deed, instrument, or writing executed to convey property which is incumbered, the amount of such incumbrance shall not be included as a part of the sum upon which the value of the stamp is to be estimated. No conveyance merely quieting title, or discharging any incumbrance, or merely confirmatory of preexisting title given without actual consideration, whether given before or after the passage of this act, shall be treated as invalid for want of a revenue stamp."

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding to it the following:

Nor shall revenue stamps be required in any matter pertaining to administration or guardianship, where the trust fund does not exceed $2,000.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] that this is not the precise place for his amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes; it comes in well enough here, because the text of the bill is to insert in the statute what is there recited.

Mr. ALLISON. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that what he desires is already provided for in the present law.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will withdraw my amendment until I can examine the law in the respect to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] refers.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I propose to amend the paragraph proposed to be inserted in the present law by striking out the words "of such incumbrance shall not be included as a part of the sum upon which the value of the stamp is to be estimated," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "paid for stamps upon such incumbrances shall be deducted from the stamps required;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

Where any deed, instrument, or writing is executed to convey property which is incumbered, the amount paid for stamps upon such incumbrances shall be deducted from the stamps required. No conveyance merely quieting title, or discharging any incumbrance, or merely confirmatory of preexisting title given without actual consideration, whether given before or after the passage of this act, shall be treated as invalid for want of a revenue stamp.

I think that will better effect the object intended to be accomplished by the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means than the text which they have reported. There are many incumbrances upon real estate which have not paid any stamp duty. Incumbrances for mortgages I believe are stamped in the same ratio as deeds are. But large incumbrances by judgments and by other means will be found in practice to be liens upon real estate. And if these sums are taken from the value of the real estate the Government will derive very little revenue from this provision. Old incumbrances which were imposed upon property before the passage of any revenue law requiring stamps, and judgments recovered do not, I believe, pay any stamp duties under the present law. I therefore propose that we shall allow the deduction of such sums as have been paid for stamps upon incumbrances only, leaving the parties to pay the residue which the value of the property would require.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARDING,] and I will say in this connection that I propose, when it shall be in order, to move to amend by striking out the following clause:

Where any deed, instrument, or writing executed to convey property which is incumbered, the amount of such incumbrance shall not be included as a part of the sum upon which the value of the stamp is to be estimated.

The effect of this amendment will be to strike out all relating to deeds where the property has been incumbered. I will state my reasons for favoring such a proposition.

It is not often, as we all know, that property is sold to the party holding the incumbrance. An individual owns, we will suppose, a piece of property worth $20,000, upon which there is a mortgage of $10,000. The property is sold to a third person for its full value, $20,000; the money is paid, and with a part of this the incumbrance is discharged. In that case why should not the full amount of tax be paid? I can conceive no reason why the tax should not be paid in such a case just as if the property were not incumbered at all, because with the purchase money received the incumbrance is discharged. Where the property is sold to the party having the equitable title, or the legal title if it is a mortgage, only the balance, perhaps, over the incumbrance should pay the revenue tax.

In my judgment, a large amount of money would be lost by the adoption of the clause which I propose to strike out. We know that a great deal of the property of the country is incumbered in various ways. Nothing is more common than for an individual to sell his property and with the purchase money pay off the incumbrances upon it. If these incumbrances are equal to the value of the property, then no revenue stamp should be required. But I take it the Committee of Ways and Means intended by the provisions of this bill to cover something more than this; and it seems to me that in such a case as I have supposed this exemption would not be proper.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] that he modify his amendment before offering it so as to strike out the whole paragraph instead of simply the clause he has read. I think the gentleman from Missouri will agree with me that the most unfortunate thing about these amendments is that every additional one adds to the complication of the law. Now, Mr. Chairman, look at the last portion of this paragraph:

No conveyance merely quieting title, or discharging any incumbrance, or merely confirmatory of preexisting title given without actual consideration, whether given before or after the passage of this act, shall be treated as invalid for want of a revenue stamp.

Who shall decide that? There never was a paragraph framed for litigation more successfully than this, that is in my judgment.

The best way is to have this as simple as possible, with as few exceptions as may be. Such a conveyance under the present law would pay fifty cents, and there is no litigation and no question about it. Any title worth quieting or confirming is worth fifty cents.

I trust the House will not multiply these exceptions. Let stamps upon written instruments be as plain and simple and with as few exceptions as possible. I do not see any wisdom in these two exceptions. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] in reference to the first one, and I think he will agree with me in reference to the last. I understand the gentleman accepts my modification to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. DELANO. That is the motion I was about to make.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. COOK. I move the following amendment:

At the end of line one hundred and twenty-eight insert "or conveyance of real estate which is donated without valuable consideration for any public or charitable use."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LONGYEAR. I move in line one hundred and twenty-four, after the word "incumbered," to insert "at the same time to secure a portion of the purchase money."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ROSS. I move in line one hundred and twenty-eight, after the word "title," to insert "or a title by gift or donation."

As it is now in conveying a lot for a school-house or for a church or for a grave-yard, you will have to put on a stamp according to the value of the real estate, and I do not think there is any propriety in that.

Mr. ROLLINS. If they get the land for nothing they can afford to pay for a stamp. [Laughter.]

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to strike out the entire paragraph; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting the following at the end of the paragraph relating to probate of wills:

Provided, No stamp, either for probate or for guardian's bond, shall be required when the value of the estate and effects does not exceed $500; and all papers relating to deceased soldiers shall be exempt from stamp duties.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to make it $1,000.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to that, and accept it as a modification.

Mr. DAWES. It should read when the amount of the bond does not exceed, &c.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is the same thing.

Mr. DAWES. I know, but the other language is more definite.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will read a portion of a letter I received from a register of wills:

"The stamp duty on administrators' bonds and letters of administration, one dollar each, is very oppressive in many cases. Many letters of administration are granted to obtain twenty to one hundred dollars from a savings bank, the net result of a long life, and laid away to defray funeral expenses. The stamp duties on such cases amount to $2 05. Estates not exceeding $2,000 pay about $2 20 for stamps. Many of these small administrations relate to deceased soldiers. Their widows and orphan children, in order to obtain a part of their well-deserved bounty, and which was placed in bank, are compelled to administer to withdraw the money from bank, and must pay the Government $2 05 for the privilege of obtaining it."

"The same oppression exists in the appointment of guardians, where the sum involved is very small. The case of the orphans of soldiers often excites my sympathy. In many cases duplicate papers are required, and the stamp duties are one dollar for the bond and six five-cent stamps for the certificates, making $1 30."

I respectfully suggest for your consideration:

"1. Exempt all estates under $500 from all stamp duties, including guardian's bonds."

"2. Exempt all papers relating to deceased soldiers from stamp duties."

"3. Large estates may well afford to pay higher stamp duties."

"I have prepared bonds on the same day for $100, and for $300,000, and the stamp on each was one dollar! Is that just and equal?"

I confess my sympathies were excited by that letter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My sympathies also are excited by that letter. He is a humane register of wills. But the gentleman's amendment will not reach the subject. "Papers relating to deceased soldiers" is not certain. It leaves the whole matter open instead of making it certain.

I suggest to the gentleman that his amendment had better be withdrawn for the present and redrafted. And I will suggest further that if the estate of a deceased soldier should be worth $100,000 under the construction the gentleman has given, it would be relieved from stamp duty. There is no reason for exempting estates of that kind from the stamp duties which are imposed upon them by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of suggesting to my colleague to strike out that portion relative to deceased soldiers, because already all estates up to the value of $1,000 are exempt.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will withdraw the latter portion of the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I suggest a modification of the proposition by inserting after the word "probate," the words "of wills, letters-testamentary, or of administration, or of administration or guardian bonds."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will modify it so as to read as follows:

Also, by inserting at the end of the last paragraph relating to probate of will the following words: "Provided, That no stamp either for probate of wills, or letters-testamentary or letters of administration, or on guardian or administrator bonds, shall be required when the value of the estate and effects does not exceed $1,000."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] a difficulty that may grow out of this amendment. If before the value of the estate has been finally determined any question should arise in court where it is necessary to use the will or the bond, it would be necessary to try and determine the question as to whether the value of the estate was greater than $1,000 before the bond or will could be used in evidence.

Mr. BINGHAM. I apprehend in all estates where they grant letters of administration the amount of the estate is certified upon the record, and the question is not raised under the law.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. By no means.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman thinks it is necessary to guard that part of it I have no objection at all. But one thing I am very certain of, that it is an enormous burden imposed upon small estates to subject the administrator, executor, or guardian at every step to these taxes, and the people are clamorous to have the imposition removed.

Mr. ALLISON. The difficulty suggested is found in the language of the law "where the estate shall be sworn and declared not to exceed $1,000." If it is so sworn and declared that is conclusive upon the court.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well; that will make it all right.

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, there were—ayes 28, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, by striking out of said schedule all after the words "legal documents," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That the stamp duties imposed by the foregoing schedule (B) on manifests, bills of lading, and passage tickets shall not apply to steamboats or vessels plying between ports of the United States and ports of British North America: And provided further, That all affidavits shall be exempt from stamp duty."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the word "further" where it first occurs, and to strike out the word "also" at the beginning of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the words to be found at the commencement of the preceding paragraph, namely:

That schedule B, in relation to stamp duties, named in section one hundred and fifty-one, be amended.

This is rendered necessary in consequence of the amendment just made to the preceding paragraph.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if all after the words "legal documents" be stricken out there is no sense in retaining the words "legal documents."

Mr. ALLISON. None whatever; it should be including "legal documents."

Mr. THAYER. I propose to strike out in the first line the words "all after," and to insert after the words "legal documents" the words "and all thereafter in schedule B," and then add the proviso as reported by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. While the gentleman is preparing his amendment, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] desires to offer an amendment to the same paragraph.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend line one hundred and thirty-eight by inserting after the word "affidavits" the words "and receipts for the payment of money." I think there is no single tax that operates as much to embarrass common people in the transaction of business as this one of being required to put stamps upon simple receipts given upon payment of money; and therefore I move this amendment, to make such receipts exempt from that tax. I suppose there is no man within the sound of my voice who has not at some time experienced inconvenience from that requirement of the law.

Mr. WRIGHT. The concluding words of this paragraph are, "provided further, that all affidavits shall be exempt from duty." The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] suggests that that will operate to require a stamp on an ordinary receipt. I do not see it.

Mr. SPALDING. Neither do I see that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I have now prepared my amendment. I move to strike out in line one hundred and thirty-one the words "all after," and to insert after the word "documents" the words "and all thereafter;" so that it will read, "by striking out of said schedule the words 'legal documents,' and all thereafter." The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I send an amendment to the Chair which I think will meet the views of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. SPALDING. Before that is offered I wish to understand what we are doing. I am told that my friend here [Mr. THAYER] has knocked my amendment which has just been adopted by the House into a cocked hat. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all.

Mr. THAYER. I believe that my amendment will accomplish at least a portion of what the gentleman desires to accomplish by his.

The Clerk then read the amendment offered by Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, as follows:

Insert at the end of the last paragraph, relating to the probate of wills, the following words: "Provided, That no stamp, either for probate of wills, letters-testamentary or of administration, or on administrator or guardian bonds, shall be required when the value of the estate and effects, real and personal, does not exceed $1,000."

Mr. GRINNELL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to amend by adding to line one hundred and thirty-eight the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That no stamp tax shall be required upon any papers necessary to be used for the collection from the Government of claims by soldiers of the United States, for pensions, back pay, bounty, or for property lost in the service.

Mr. HILL. I desire to move an amendment to that by inserting the words "or application for prize money."

Mr. GRINNELL. No, no; that is another thing. Prize money is clear gain.

Mr. HILL. Whether clear gain or not, it is given as a reward of merit, and as something due from the Government to the men who get it.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a question of order. I suggest to the Chair and to the House that when an amendment is offered the member offering it has a right to advocate it, and other members have a right to discuss it and oppose it if they choose; but it cannot be discussed unless they can be permitted to hear each other, and they cannot hear each other while sixteen other gentlemen talk loudly between them, and between each of them and the Chair, causing such noise and confusion that no white man, unless he has more ears than two, can hear or understand what is going on in the House. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will be in order.

Mr. HILL. I move this amendment because I think it will merely do justice in this respect to the class entitled to prize money. It is said here that the prize money is clear gain. I do not so understand it. I believe we have to-day passed a bill appropriating a very large sum of prize money because it was understood to be due from the Government to the men on account of certain vessels having been sunk instead of captured. Now, it is quite as unjust to tax sailors as to tax soldiers. Our sailors, who have hazarded their lives as much, and indeed more, than the soldiers have hazarded theirs, apply to us for this money to which they are fully entitled by law as the soldiers are to their claims, and I see no reason why there should be any special obstacle or special facility created by us in the one case more than in the other.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest that the gentleman limit his amendment to the cases of ordinary seamen.

Mr. HILL. I am willing to limit it to seamen and marines, and if the gentleman from Tennessee will present that form of amendment I will be happy to adopt it; as it is, I offer the amendment in these words: "on application for prize money by sailors or marines."

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. McCULLOM.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend further by striking out in schedule B, in section one hundred and fifty-one, in the paragraph commencing "bank check," the words "at sight or on demand," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on demand or at one day's sight."

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope not; we will never get through this bill if we do not work more on it than we have done heretofore.

Mr. PRICE. It is now after ten o'clock; and I think it is time we should go home and get some rest. I insist upon my motion.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were ayes 44, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOURWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, amending the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

AMERICAN COLONIZATION SOCIETY.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of an appropriation to aid the American Colonization Society in furnishing conveyance and support to such persons as may desire to emigrate to the republic of Liberia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles: when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 497) granting a pension to Mrs. Adeline M. Gould;

An act (S. No. 512) for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien;

An act (S. No. 514) for the relief Charles Appleton;

An act (S. No. 535) for the benefit of Mrs. Jerusha Page;

An act (S. No. 554) granting a pension to John Carter; and

An act (S. No. 580) granting a pension to Charles N. Weiss.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN DRAFTED MEN.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the House took from the Speaker's table and proceeded, by unanimous consent, to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in; and that the House ask the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF VOLUNTEERS.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the House took from the Speaker's table and proceeded, by unanimous consent, to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1134, declaring and fixing the right of volunteers as a part of the Army.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in; and that the House ask the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, (at ten o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas: Resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, requesting Congress to submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that the Senators from each State shall be chosen directly by the qualified electors thereof.

By Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts: The petition of John Lewis and others, clerks in the Boston post office, that rent of homestead shall be deducted in estimating the amount of their incomes subject to taxation.

By Mr. LAFLIN: The petition of William Lamey and 28 others, citizens of Herkimer county, New York, praying for a reduction of tax on leather.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of the Maine Historical Society, asking for the purchase of library of Peter Force.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition and claim of the widow of Frederick A. Whitfield, late acting third assistant engineer in the Navy, for pension.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The petition of Lot S. Bayless, administrator of Lieutenant Marcus Bayless, deceased, praying compensation for the military services of said officer.

Also, the petition of soldiers of the war of 1812, for the passage of a law granting them pensions.

By Mr. SLOAN: The petition of H. S. Conger and 49 others, stockholders in national bank and citizens of Wisconsin, protesting against interference with the rights of said bank and the petitioners.

By Mr. UPSON: The petition of Daniel Severy, Isaac Ayres and 48 others; also, of Nicholas Hill and 80 others, all citizens of St. Joseph county, Michigan, asking that the five per cent. tax on manufactures be removed.

Also, the petition of Mervin Pennel and 22 others, citizens of Berrien county, Michigan, praying Congress to take measures for the impeachment of the President.

By Mr. VAN HORN, of New York: The petition of cigar manufacturers of Lockport, New York, asking a specific tax of five dollars per thousand on cigars.

By Mr. WILSON, of Iowa: The remonstrance of John W. Ellis and others, of Bloomfield, Iowa, against legislation depreciating or unsettling the established national currency.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 21, 1867.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

On motion of Mr. ALLEY, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with by unanimous consent.

MAJOR A. S. BLOOM.

Mr. McKEE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Major A. S. Bloom, late major of the seventh Kentucky cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 589) for the relief of Delia A. Jacobs, late Delia A. Fitzgerald;

An act (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of Catharine McKee;

An act (H. R. No. 760) for the relief of James C. Cook; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 293) authorizing the employment of a public vessel for the transportation of provisions to the people of the southern States.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1143, to provide for the more efficient government of the late insurrectionary States.

It further announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan; and

A bill (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon.

It further announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 607, to amend an act granting the right of way over the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, Michigan, without amendment; and that it had passed House joint resolution No. 266, granting certain public property to the State of Ohio, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

HOOR OF MEETING.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That from and after to-morrow, the 22d instant, the House shall meet daily at eleven o'clock a. m.

MISSISSIPPI TUBULAR BRIDGE.

On motion of Mr. ALLEY, Senate bill No. 421, to authorize the construction of a submerged tubular bridge across the Mississippi river, at the city of St. Louis, was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read at length. The first section empowers the Mississippi Submerged Tubular Bridge Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct, maintain, and operate a submerged iron tubular bridge across the Mississippi river, between the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and the city of East St. Louis, in the State of Illinois, subject to all the conditions contained in said act of incorporation and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act. And in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction, or alleged obstruction, to the free navigation of said waters the cause may be tried before the District Court of the United States of any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches.

The second section provides that any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be tubular in construction, and sunk below the bed of said river, so that the top of said structure shall be below the bed of the channel of the Mississippi river, and so that the same shall in no wise interfere with or obstruct navigation when completed, or prevent a safe and expeditious transit for all classes of vessels upon said river during construction.

The third section provides that any bridge erected under the provisions of this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, the munitions of war of the United States, than the rate per mile which the railroad companies terminating at either end receive for such services.

The fourth section provides that no exclusive right or privilege shall ever be granted to any of the steam railroads now concentrating at St. Louis or East St. Louis by the said bridge company to use the same, but it shall be equally open to all, under such regulations and at such charges as may be fixed, not to exceed those now charged by the Wiggins Ferry Company.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In accordance with the instructions of the House, I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report a bill to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes.

Mr. PRICE. I ask that the bill be read before I raise a point of order upon its reception.

The bill was read at length. The first section directs the Secretary of the Treasury to receive on deposit compound-interest notes, with the accrued interest, as a temporary loan, and to issue therefor certificates as provided by section four of the act approved June 30, 1864, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. per annum, principal and interest payable in lawful money on demand. And said certificates may constitute and be held by any national bank holding or owning the same as a part of the reserve provided for in sections thirty-one and thirty-two of the act to provide a national currency, approved June 3, 1864; provided, that not less than two fifths of the entire reserve of such banks shall consist of lawful money of the United States; and provided further, that the amount of such temporary certificates at any time outstanding shall not exceed $100,000,000.

The second section provides that the first proviso of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government,' approved March 3, 1865," approved April 12, 1866, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby prohibited from retiring and canceling any of the United States notes commonly called "greenbacks" during the current year.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a question of order. The point of order is that this bill not only covers the instructions given to the Committee of Ways and Means under the resolution of my colleague, [Mr. GRINNELL,] but it goes beyond and introduces a measure that has been twice checked by the action of this House within the last two days.

Now, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] that I will not object to the introduction of this bill, if he will allow an amendment to be offered to it and considered by the House. I only want a fair consideration of this question; and then if the House is in favor of burdening the country with $3,000,000 a year more in the way of interest, they can do so.

The SPEAKER. It is for the House to determine whether this bill is in accordance with its instructions. The Clerk will read from page 74 of the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

"When any motion or proposition is made, the question, 'Will the House now consider it?' shall not be put, unless it is demanded by some member, or is deemed necessary by the Speaker." [Rule 41.] "And it is competent for a member to raise the question of consideration upon a report, even though a question of privilege is involved in the report." [Journal 1, 34, pp. 1083, 1085.]

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] was general in its character; if the recollection of the Chair is correct, it did not specify any particular bill. The Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to report some measure to stop the curtailment of the currency. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] insists that his bill is not in accordance with those instructions of the House. But even if it involved a question of privilege the House would have the right to determine that question for itself. The question is, Will the House consider and receive this bill as in accordance with the instructions of the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. BROOMALL. Is this bill open to objection?

The SPEAKER. It is, upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PIKE. The resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] expressly named the "currency called greenbacks," and the action of the committee was limited to that.

Mr. HILL. I desire to make a motion to recommit this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana it is not before the House, and cannot be recommitted.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the Clerk will read the second section I think the House will perceive it is precisely in accordance with our instructions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the bill be reported.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question having been made, the House will determine whether it will accept this bill as the report of the committee under the instructions of the House or not.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The second section covers the resolution of the House of the 4th instant. It was then resolved that the public interest demands there shall not during the coming year be any reduction in the amount of outstanding United States notes, commonly called "greenbacks;" and further, that the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report such bill as may be necessary on this subject. The committee have reported that second section to cover the whole ground. I do not propose to call the previous question on the bill; and if the House should prefer to see the bill in print, I do not object to it going over till to-morrow to be printed and made the special order.

The SPEAKER. If the committee had reported back the second section and then moved the remaining portion as an amendment it would have been in order.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The committee of Ways and Means reports this bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman reports this bill for reference, then it is in order.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order. Is it in order when the committee has been instructed to report a certain bill to report an entirely different one?

The SPEAKER. It is for the House to determine whether they have done so or not. The committee report that under the order to report a bill for the curtailment of the currency this bill is necessary. It is for the House to decide.

Mr. HILL. If it be in order, I move that this report be not received as a response to our resolution; and that they now be instructed to report a bill with the first second stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The point will be submitted to the House whether it will or not receive this report in response to its order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest the committee modify the bill by striking out the second section. Then if it is desired they can move the other portion as an amendment.

Mr. THAYER. I rise to a point of order. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has not the right to report at any time except for reference. If this is for reference it is in order; if not it is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated the Committee of Ways and Means have been instructed to report a certain bill. They have reported this bill, and it is for the House to determine whether it is in accordance with their instructions or not.

Mr. THAYER. Have they the right to report at the present time?

The SPEAKER. They have, under the instructions of the House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to a point of order. Either the Speaker's chair should be removed to the center of the Hall, or members should be prevented from crowding into the area. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will resume their seats.

Mr. PRICE. I made the objection to the bill because there are some things in it not according to the instructions of the House. And in my judgment the majority of this House are not prepared to put this upon the country at this time without consideration, without debate, and without opportunity to amend it. I will, however, withdraw my objection and let it be considered now, for it might as well be considered now as at any other time.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I wish to say the committee considered two things coming together. The instructions of the House had reference to the withdrawal of compound-interest notes, and we thought their withdrawal would be a sufficient reduction. We believed, and I think properly, the two subjects came together and ought to be reported in the same bill. The second resolution is in entire conformity to the resolution of the House, and the first truly belongs to and is connected with it. Both carry out fully the instructions of the House.

Mr. PIKE. The House will recollect a proposition of this sort came from the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will permit me to correct him I will say it is different.

Mr. PIKE. It is in relation to six per cent. compound-interest notes.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. There was a bill from the Senate having relation to these notes.

The SPEAKER. The question of the priority of business is not debatable. The Chair has allowed this conversation to progress so that the House might vote intelligibly.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to accept an amendment to the first section.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. HILL. I wish to understand the exact position in which the bill now stands, with a view to bringing it before the House for action.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state that the objection being made that this is not in conformity to the instructions of the House, the question is, Will the House receive it as such?

Mr. PRICE. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is it now in order to move to strike out the first section of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is; the objection being withdrawn.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to make that motion.

Mr. BROOMALL. I renew the objection.

The SPEAKER. The question then is whether the bill will be received as in accordance with the instruction of the House.

The motion to receive the bill was agreed to—ayes 61, noes 39.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think the House is not really acquainted with the provisions of this bill, but that when gentlemen come to understand it entirely there will be no opposition to it. In my opinion it meets the views of the gentlemen who most object to it. I therefore propose that the bill be printed and made the special order after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, so that members can have time to understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if that is agreed to it will come up after the final disposition of the indemnity bill, which, by unanimous consent, has been made the special order from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. KELLEY. I object to its being a special order.

The SPEAKER. The House can make it the special order.

Mr. LYNCH. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone till to-morrow can be adopted by a majority, but the motion to make it the special order requires a two-thirds vote.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If that motion is carried, I understand it will not probably be reached at all this session.

The SPEAKER. Probably not.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In that case I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before the House, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to provide the means for taking up the compound-interest notes which fall due during the present year. There are various ways in which they may be met. The Secretary of the Treasury has power under existing law to exchange one form of indebtedness for another; that is, he may provide the means for taking up these notes by the issue of five-twenty bonds or of seven-thirty Treasury notes; or he may increase the issue of United States notes, known as greenbacks, to the extent of $50,000,000. He has express authority for doing either of these; but if he chooses the latter we would still have to provide other means to take up the excess of these notes beyond $50,000,000.

The whole amount of compound-interest notes outstanding is $140,000,000, making, with the addition of the interest, about one hundred and seventy millions, all of which comes due in the course of the fiscal year. This bill, therefore, proposes to facilitate the taking up of these notes by allowing them to be exchanged for temporary loan, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding three and sixty-five hundredths per cent.

The committee were of opinion that the banks that held these compound-interest Treasury notes would be very glad to exchange them for these certificates, as provision is made in this section for their making the same use of them that they now make of the compound-interest notes, that is, holding them as part of their reserve.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman to explain what reason has induced the Committee of Ways and Means to recommend a departure from the principle of the banking law, by which the banks are required to hold in reserve "lawful money." Why is it that that committee now recommend that certificates bearing interest and not being a legal tender may be held by the banks in reserve for the redemption of their circulation?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will state in reply that under the law, the banks in cities where there is an Assistant Treasurer of the United States can hold these certificates as part of their reserve now; and certificates of this character have been used for this purpose, bearing, however, a higher rate of interest than what is now proposed. They were used by the banks for the purposes of the clearing-house.

The banks held such certificates as a part of their reserve. I will call the attention of the gentleman to another fact, that these certificates are payable on demand; so that the banks can at any time call upon the United States Treasury to exchange them for lawful money.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That may be very well in cities where there are Assistant Treasurers of the United States, but how will it be with the country banks? The holders of the bills of a bank present them for redemption, and the bank is holding these certificates, which are not legal tender and which cannot be used for the redemption of its notes. The holders of its bills, therefore, cannot receive from the bank the amount of their bills until the bank can send to some office of the Government and have these certificates exchanged for legal tender, and in the mean time the credit of the bank is destroyed, and it goes into liquidation merely because it has not in its hands the legal tender required by the banking act to be held in reserve.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will state briefly to the gentleman from Iowa that this bill makes no change in the law in that respect. The banks are now allowed to hold deposits in other banks as a part of their reserve. This merely allows them to hold certificates of the Treasury Department instead of deposits in other banks. It does not diminish the amount of lawful money which a bank is bound under the law to hold, and it leaves it exactly where it now is; because the banks are still required to keep two fifths of their reserve in lawful money.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would ask the gentleman why we should not strike out this first section of the bill, and provide for the redemption of the compound-interest notes by non-interest-bearing legal tenders? Let the banks hold these non-interest-bearing legal tenders as a reserve, and it will save $3,000,000 of interest a year to the Government.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That will involve the issue of $100,000,000 of legal tenders.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Eighty millions are now held by the banks.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Not as currency; they are held as an investment. This bill does not change the position of the banks at all, as the gentleman supposes it does. They will still have a right to hold legal tenders. This merely proposes to allow these certificates of the Treasury Department to be held in the country banks in the place of bank deposits. The idea is that the banks will hold these certificates in place of the balances which they now hold in other banks.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The difference, then, seems to be this: that if we issue these certificates the banks can receive $3,000,000 a year in the way of interest from the Government for holding their reserve, and at the same time will be holding that which they cannot use for the immediate redemption of their bills, but which they must convert into legal tender.

Now, on the other hand, it is proposed to permit the issue of legal-tender notes not bearing interest for the purpose of taking up the compound-interest notes, and requiring the banks to hold them. The banks will not receive interest on them from the Government, and thus we will save some $3,000,000 a year.

Mr. ORTH. And have a currency.

Mr. PIKE. This bill provides, as I understand it, for the issue of $100,000,000 of these certificates.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Not exceeding that amount.

Mr. PIKE. I understand that there are about $80,000,000 of these compound-interest notes in the hands of the banks. I ask, therefore, what is the necessity of issuing so large an amount of these certificates?

If I understand the position of the currency, it is this: there are $142,000,000 of six per cent. compound-interest notes now out besides interest. Of that amount a little more than $100,000,000 will mature before we meet in December; and some eighty million dollars are now held by the banks as a portion of their reserve, their whole reserve being, I believe, according to the last report, $205,000,000. Now, the point which I wish to make is that there is no necessity for any legislation providing for that portion of the compound-interest notes now held in the country by way of investment, because the persons holding them in this way may as well take our long bonds when these compound-interest notes mature and they wish to change their investments.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman will permit me to suggest that if they were paid in anticipation it would reduce the interest from six per cent. to three and sixty-five hundredths; so that the Government would not suffer; and if the holders of compound-interest notes do not choose to exchange them in anticipation, they can continue to hold them till maturity.

Mr. PIKE. I submit to the gentleman that under that arrangement the Treasury would be embarrassed, for the present effort of the Secretary of the Treasury is to relieve himself from temporary claims—immediate and demand claims—and put everything, so far as possible, into long bonds. This proposition leaves these as an immediate charge upon the Treasury constantly; and the consequence will be that the Secretary will have to present constantly his monthly report with a large amount of currency on hand, giving as a reason for it these immediate liabilities and the necessity of holding a large amount of currency on hand to meet such charges.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In reply to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] I would say that the law now provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue $50,000,000 of greenbacks whenever it may be necessary to meet such demands.

Mr. PIKE. One word more and I shall be done. The issue of greenbacks would not swell the volume of the currency, because they would serve as a part of the banking reserve. They would not be a charge upon the Treasury, because until we resume specie payments the Secretary of the Treasury is not bound to provide for their payment. Besides that, the issue of greenbacks would save the interest, as the gentleman from Iowa says. So there are three reasons, which seem to me to be controlling reasons, why we should take up these compound-interest notes, so far as we take them up at all, by legal-tender notes rather than by this new mode of temporary loans.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to offer an amendment, upon which the gentleman from Massachusetts agrees to test the sense of the House. My amendment is to strike out in the first section the words "receive on deposit," and insert in lieu thereof the words "redeem the," and to strike out all after the words "accrued interest," and insert in lieu thereof the word, "and to issue therefor United States legal-tender notes;" so that the section will read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to redeem the compound-interest notes, with the accrued interest, and to issue therefor United States legal-tender notes.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Not bearing interest?

Mr. STEVENS. Of course they bear no interest.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to allow the amendment to be offered?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; I am willing that the sense of the House shall be taken upon it. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if he proposes to issue greenbacks in lieu of the compound-interest notes, he should say "at or after the maturity thereof."

Mr. STEVENS. What difference does it make? They bear interest till maturity, and if the holders choose to exchange them before maturity for legal-tender notes bearing no interest it is so much advantage to the Government.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, I can see no reason why the banks should not be allowed to take care of their own interests. So far as concerns their reserve on hand, I see no more impropriety in allowing them to hold it in five-twenty bonds than in allowing individuals to purchase those bonds. Why should not the banks here at home hold those bonds rather than have them purchased by foreign capitalists?

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman says he sees no reason why the reserve fund of the banks should not be held in five-twenty bonds. Now, suppose that the gentleman has deposited in bank $100,000, and presents a check for that amount; suppose that the bank pays him in five-twenty bonds, would the gentleman consider himself as paid in currency which could be used by him in ordinary business?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. If I have a deposit in bank and I draw my check for that deposit, it is a matter between me and the bank whether I am paid or how I am paid. It is for me to make complaint if I consider myself aggrieved. If a bank does not so conduct its business that it can redeem its pledges, take care of its deposits, provide for meeting its obligations, the bank will fail. But if we must constantly watch over these banks to protect the public against them, and if in order to accomplish this we must constantly make war upon them, we had better let the banking business alone and allow it to be conducted under the management of the States. A bank that is sound will take care of its depositors and its bill-holders. If any bank does not do this it will be wound up.

The proposition now is that the banks shall not be allowed to hold in five-twenties what they have heretofore held in compound-interest notes. We are to compel them to hold as their reserve a portion of the currency of the country; and in order to enable them to do this we must issue additional currency.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order. I think that the gentleman is not speaking upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the right to resume the floor whenever he pleases.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I must resume the floor. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. LYNCH.]

Mr. LYNCH. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to accept as a substitute for his amendment the following:

In the first section, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue, in addition to the amount now authorized by law, $100,000,000 of such United States notes as are authorized by section one of an act to authorize the issue of United States notes, &c., approved February 25, 1862; which notes shall be issued in payment of compound-interest notes, and for no other purpose, until all of such notes shall have been redeemed; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so redeem the same as they shall be presented at the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot accept that.

Mr. LYNCH. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for that purpose?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I do not. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a few moments.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask the Clerk to read for information the following, which I shall move as an amendment if I get an opportunity:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue, on the credit of the United States, such sums as may be necessary for the purposes set forth in this act, not exceeding in the aggregate amount $100,000,000 of Treasury notes, not bearing interest, of such denominations as he may deem expedient, which said notes shall be lawful money and a legal tender for debts in like manner as provided in the first section of an act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes, and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," passed February 25, 1862. And the provisions of the sixth and seventh sections of said act are hereby reenacted and applied to the notes herein authorized; and the same to be used for the payment of the compound-interest notes as they mature.

Mr. Speaker, I will, with the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, say a few words in explanation of my proposition. It will be observed it provides for the payment of compound-interest notes to the extent of $100,000,000, an amount sufficient for the coming year, by the issue of legal-tender notes. I prefer the mode of issuing these legal-tender notes; and further it places these legal tenders under the operation of the law in reference to counterfeiting.

Now, sir, it is manifest to my mind, this House is not prepared to issue for the benefit of these banks three per cent. loan. Under the provisions of the bill as it came from the Senate the expense to the Government and to the taxpayers during the coming year would be $5,400,000. I apprehend in the present condition of the Government this would not only be improper but culpable expenditure.

In reference to the contraction or anti-contraction question, it is my opinion this issue of $100,000,000 of legal tenders in place of the present reserves will not produce inflation in the monetary markets of the country. If my proposition be adopted, I think the Senate and House will agree to leave the law as it is for retiring $4,000,000 per month.

Mr. LYNCH. I wish to ask the gentleman a single question before he sits down. Wherein does his amendment differ from mine?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL.]

Mr. BROOMALL. It ought to be distinctly understood that the proposition of my colleague is for the direct expansion of the currency. It may be it is impossible for us to contract, but at least we ought to hesitate before we agree to expand the currency. I know that it is desirable to get rid of the interest upon the interest-bearing legal tenders; but to get rid of that interest by a further expansion of the currency would create much more evil than the burden of the amount of interest would be detrimental to the Government.

I have said it was for the direct expansion of the currency, and any gentleman who will follow me for a moment in the argument will see that I am right. A part of this interest-bearing currency is held by the banks in their reserve, and that for the substitution of legal tenders would not increase the currency of the country, because that far the interest-bearing legal tenders operate as currency. But nearly one half of the entire interest-bearing legal tenders are held by individuals as investments.

A MEMBER. You are not stating it exactly.

Mr. BROOMALL. I do not know the exact proposition, but to substitute non-interest-bearing legal tenders for interest-bearing legal tenders would be putting them out into the country in the way of currency, and to that extent would inflate the currency. I trust the House is not prepared to do that.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that it seems to me all the discussion that has been had on this subject is entirely foreign to the real issue before the House. The measure introduced is not one from the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is not a question in which the banks or the banking interest of the country is directly concerned. It is a question presented by the Committee of Ways and Means, involving the funding of the debt of the United States.

Now, I wish to ask members of this House whether they are ready to-day, after the passage of a reconstruction bill, more radical in its nature than was ever dreamed of even by the veteran Radical on my left, [Mr. STEVENS]—whether they are determined now, a year and a half after the last weapons of the rebellion have been grounded, to persist in burdening the industries of the country by a further issue of interest-bearing legal-tender notes. Sir, I say, let us come up to the work. If the Republican party goes down, it goes down not because the moral sentiment of the people does not stand by it, but because it is wanting in the financial ability to protect the pockets and supply the bellies of the people. It is time to begin to pay off the public debt, not by sending out a year and a half after the conclusion of the war, $100,000,000 of continental paper to pay the war debt. If we cannot pay off the debt, say so; but do not let us indirectly in this way stab the credit and undermine the industry of the country. As a member of this Congress I am ashamed to have a proposition made at the close of the Thirty-Ninth Congress to pay off the debt of the United States or any portion of it otherwise than by bonds payable, principal and interest, in gold, or else by gold itself.

Mr. GRINNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRINNELL. I ask him if he is in favor of paying off more than $200,000,000 a year; if he is not very well satisfied not to break us down at once, but to let up a little on taxation.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, at the time these $150,000,000 of compound-interest notes were issued it was right in the heat of the contest with the rebels. The Secretary of the Treasury was ashamed to come to Congress and ask even then, in that desperate condition of public affairs, the issue of another dollar of greenback currency.

Mr. LYNCH. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask him whether this proposition is not precisely this, and not as stated by him: whether it is not to give to the banks of the country, having the monopoly of $300,000,000 of currency granted to them by the Government, these three per cent. notes to hold as part of their legal reserve. Instead of six per cent. notes we propose to give them three per cent. notes. Because it is in part payment for the privilege of issuing these $300,000,000. Now, what we propose to do is, instead of giving three per cent. notes, is to give them nothing but legal-tender notes and let them issue currency upon them. It is not an inflation of the currency by a single dollar.

Mr. POMEROY. I am trespassing upon the courtesy of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but in reply to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] I have but this to say, that when the question of the existence of the national banks comes to be agitated, as I see it must, before the Congress of the United States, I stand ready to defend the banking institutions of the country as against this irredeemable greenback circulation. But that is not the question now. It is a question of the funding of the public debt, and when the gentleman asks me if it is in the interest of the banks I tell him I do not care in whose interest it is. I see in this a proposition to convert $150,000,000 of compound-interest notes into a debt bearing three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. interest. Whoever wants it let them take it. I do not care who takes it; it will be better than it is now. We shall have floating, instead of compound-interest notes, the same amount, at three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. interest; and I would rather, if it can be done without injury to the business interests of the country, that it should be invested in five-twenty per cent. bonds. But I insist that the Committee of Ways and Means have done well in introducing this bill; simply looking to the existing condition of affairs, they have sought neither to inflate nor to contract the currency, but seeing these compound-interest notes lying in the way, and treating that as a debt, as they are a debt, they propose, for a temporary purpose, to fund it into a loan bearing three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. interest. If they can do that they deserve well of the country.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States; when the Speaker signed the same.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES—AGAIN.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PRICE. As the basis of the few remarks which I design to make I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I shall propose and get a vote on if I can.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I cannot yield to allow the amendment to be offered, but I will hear it read.

The Clerk read Mr. PRICE's proposed amendment, as follows:

Amend section one, as follows:
Strike out all after the enacting clause in the first section and insert: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the holders of compound-interest notes, when presented for redemption, legal-tender non-interest-paying notes; but no such legal tenders shall be issued except for the purpose of taking up said compound-interest notes as they shall be presented for payment."

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, the proposition contained in that proposed amendment is simply this: the Government has at this day over one hundred million dollars of compound-interest notes out. They were issued at a time when the pressure on the financial interests of the country made them a matter of necessity. Those notes become due in a very short time, and the Government will be compelled to take them up in some way. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POMEROY] says that he proposes to take them up with five-twenty bonds. It requires no argument to show that if you take them up with five-twenty bonds you are burdening the Government—and when I say the Government I mean the tax-payers of the country—with just that much interest, which would be something between six and seven million dollars. For that reason I am opposed and shall be opposed to funding these compound-interest notes in five-twenty bonds.

Mr. HOTCHKISS made a remark, which was entirely inaudible at the reporter's desk.

Mr. PRICE. My proposition is that when these notes come in for payment, as they are presented the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized and directed to take them up with legal-tender notes bearing no interest.

In that way I accomplish two things. In the first place, I take up notes that the Government issued in its day of trial, and I pay for them, dollar for dollar, principal and interest, the amount that the holder can demand, so that he loses nothing.

I also save the country, that is, the tax-payers, from the burden of interest, a burden which is now between eight and nine millions, and which, under the proposition of this bill of the Committee of Ways and Means now under consideration, would be increased between three and four millions. I save that to the country by my proposition. This amendment would operate hardly upon no class in the community, and upon no interest, save the banking interest; and I think I may say, without fear of successful contradiction on this floor or elsewhere, that the interest that is advocating the issue of these three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. notes is the banking interest of the country.

Now, I have no objection to the banks making money. I hope they will all make money and get rich, and that every man connected with them will do so; but I do not propose in my place here as a legislator to take money from the tax-payers of the country to make rich the men who stand behind the counters of the banks of the country. This is simply a proposition of that kind.

Let me now answer the proposition made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] a moment ago. He proposed that the banks should hold five-twenty bonds as a reserve fund. Sir, that proposition is only paralleled by another that I have heard of—and I am told that the person who perpetrated the grim joke is now on the Supreme bench of the nation. When a young man he was elected to the Legislature of his own State.

Mr. PIKE. Do not name the State.

Mr. PRICE. I will not tell what State it was. He took up a bank report and discovered that there were a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars on deposit in the different banks of the State. Being a young man, and desiring to signalize in some way his entrance into public life, and at the same time to benefit his constituents, he introduced a resolution directing that the deposits in the different banks in the country should be divided among the people pro rata. That would have been a nice thing for those people who would have received any of the money; but so far as my information goes the resolution did not pass.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] proposes that the banks shall keep their reserve fund in five-twenty bonds. Sir, what is the reserve fund for? Every man who has ever seen even the outside of a bank knows that this reserved fund is to pay the claims of depositors and bill-holders. A depositor comes into the bank and says that he wants to draw his deposits. He draws his check, stamps it properly, and lays it down on the counter. Now, will he be satisfied if the cashier hands him a five-twenty bond? Certainly not; he wants something he can circulate as money. The next man who comes in holds in his hand $1,000 of the circulation of that bank, which he wants to have redeemed. Now, will the bill-holder be satisfied with a five-twenty bond?

Now, I am willing to concede that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] is a first-rate lawyer; but I say he does not know everything about banking or he would not make such a proposition.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to that provision of the bill which looks to the repeal of the law which authorizes the retirement of $4,000,000 of the currency per month. As I have already said, I propose that these compound-interest notes shall be redeemed with legal-tender notes, which, for the sake of argument only, I will admit would put that much more in circulation upon the country. I say I admit that only for the sake of argument, for there is not even a moderate business man who does not know that when these compound-interest notes are replaced by legal tenders the amount of circulation is very little, if any, increased; nothing worth talking about. The banks are compelled to put in their reserve fund the legal tenders which are issued in place of these compound-interest notes; so that that really works no inflation of the currency.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I must now resume the floor.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman is a banker, and certainly he will keep his contract with me.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I yielded to the gentleman for ten minutes.

Mr. PRICE. I certainly have not spoken for ten minutes.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman has used up his time.

Mr. PRICE. If I have, a portion of it has been taken up by gentlemen who interrupted me.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. PRICE. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. Sir, this country must look forward to an ultimate resumption of specie payment. And where the receipts of the Government exceed the expenditures, as they have done during the last year, we can very safely prepare to return to specie payment at some future day, I grant you we cannot contract the currency very much at this time; and I do not propose by any action to contract the currency so as to create any disturbance in the commercial or other values of the country.

But with the tax list before us, showing an excess of receipts of $200,000,000 over the expenditures, we can relieve the tax-payers of the country at least $150,000,000 a year by a reduction of the taxes. That will leave us $50,000,000 with which to retire the currency, and in that way we will in time bring down the $900,000,000 of currency which we now have to some point where we may look for an ultimate resumption of specie payment. Now, this can be done in this way without any check upon or interference with the business of the country, and in no other way. Now, if we retire those compound-interest notes and replace them with five-twenty bonds, and also retire $48,000,000 of the currency per year, there will be a contraction this year of $148,000,000.

I know the country is not prepared for that, and will not agree to it. If we will in this bill strike out the clause requiring the repeal of the law which now authorizes a contraction of $4,000,000 per month, and will authorize the issue of legal-tender notes for for this purpose and no other, to take the place of the compound-interest notes as they fall due and no faster, the country will move on in that tide of prosperity which has characterized it for the last few years.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EGGLESTON.]

Mr. EGGLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I have been somewhat surprised at the views which have been expressed by several gentlemen on this important subject. It strikes me that this is a very simple proposition; and if every gentleman here would divest himself of all biasing influences outside and inside of this House, and of his own private feelings on the subject, he could come to a correct conclusion without any trouble.

What is this question? In the first place, the national banks of the country are required by your banking law to keep a certain amount upon deposit to protect the depositors and other creditors of the banks. It requires about one hundred million dollars to supply the national banks with the amount which they are thus by law required to keep on hand. Of these hundred millions now proposed to be redeemed nearly ninety millions are locked up in the vaults of the banks, drawing six per cent. interest. Those notes become due during this year, and we are bound to provide for their redemption. The object of this bill is to provide the ways and means of meeting those notes.

It is urged that if we redeem those notes with legal-tender notes we shall increase the volume of the currency. But, sir, this is impossible, because as soon as these notes become due and the interest upon them ceases the banks must put something else in their places. If they cannot obtain interest-bearing notes in their places they must accept legal tenders and put them in their vaults in place of these compound-interest notes. Now, sir, the object of the proposition of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] is to give these banks in return for their compound-interest notes certificates bearing three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. interest. But I say let us give the people the legal-tender notes. Let us authorize the issue of $100,000,000 of legal-tender notes, and as fast as the compound-interest notes mature let the Secretary of the Treasury redeem them with legal tenders. These will go into the vaults of the banks in place of the others, and there will be no increase of the volume of the currency.

But it is said that these compound-interest notes are held as an investment. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have only to say that if any persons are holding these notes as an investment they are very "green," for they can do much better with other kinds of securities.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will prevail, so that the people will be saved the payment of interest upon the certificates which the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes shall be issued.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, I might have claimed the floor, I suppose, upon a question of privilege to answer that portion of the language of the gentleman from Iowa which was addressed to me. He says that I am a good lawyer; but a poor banker. Now, sir, I do not profess to be a banker; the gentleman does. I want to ask him how these moneys are to be applied for the benefit of the depositor, when the law requires that they shall lie in the vaults of the bank perfectly idle. The language of the law is that they shall be there "at all times." In the second place, these banks of $100,000 capital generally have on deposit one, two, or three hundred thousand dollars.*

Now, if this twenty-five per cent. is there as security for the depositors, the depositor is not entitled to more security than the bill holder. When this banking law was enacted and amended in the Thirty-Eighth Congress I stood almost alone in the Republican party, there being with me only a few friends like my colleague from New York, defending the privileges of the community to tax these banks and to make them carry a portion of the burdens of the Government. I would like to know where my friend from Iowa was then; whether he voted as a friend of the people or of those banks on that occasion. There can be no earthly objection to the banks holding these five-twenty bonds to the extent of twenty-five per cent. They do not pay them out. They may as well have interest upon them as foreign bond-holders. It is better for the country they should remain there in so far as they save our bonds from going abroad, and the annual export of gold to pay the interest on those bonds. It is a suicidal policy, and if the defendants in this case could be heard as well as the plaintiffs, I have no doubt this House could be convinced to allow these banks to hold these bonds. Let them go into the market, if they choose, and buy bonds. They take them and hold them in reserve instead of holding "greenbacks" in reserve.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GRINNELL. I only wish to say that I am satisfied with the report of the committee as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS;] and I think it will be satisfactory to the country, and is as good as anything we can expect to get.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope it will not be seconded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 55.

Mr. THAYER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, were appointed.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes seventy-two, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise under the rules to close the debate. I will not presume to occupy the time of the House in further discussion of this bill, except simply to say I look upon the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. STEVENS) as one producing inflation of the currency. The certificates as proposed in this section I think would not have that effect. So far as these banks hold these compound-interest notes as part of their reserves, they would be merely substituted for the certificates which are authorized. It would be exchanging the compound-interest notes bearing six per cent. interest for certificates at a rate of interest not exceeding three and sixty-five hundredths. My own impression is, the Secretary would not issue them over three per cent. I now yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two in defense of the first section of this bill so far as it is regarded as a bill in favor of national banks. The proposition is simply to exchange certificates of indebtedness for compound-interest notes; and we are told it is a mere device for the purpose of enabling the banks to receive interest. On the contrary, I regard it to a certain extent as a measure of contraction in the direction where we should have contraction. It is known by this House, under existing laws, the country banks so called, that is, the banks outside of the city of New York or nearly all of them.

now keep three fifths of their reserves in that city for redemption of outstanding notes, and it is well known that the banks of New York to-day pay four per cent. on those balances, which are used for speculative purposes; and, sir, this causes expansions and an unsettled state of business more than anything else in the country. The proposition is simply to authorize these banks to use the Government as a depository instead of the New York banks, and allow an interest at the rate of three and sixty-five hundredths as an inducement to the country banks to deposit with the Government.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I desire to ask whether the redemption fund in the clearing-houses in the large cities is not usually invested in compound-interest notes, and whether the interest on them is credited to the country banks?

Mr. ALLISON. I know country banks keep deposits in New York city and receive four per cent. interest, while these balances are loaned out to brokers at seven and eight per cent., or they may and doubtless have invested largely in compound-interest notes. In this way when money is scarce in New York this scarcity reaches to remote parts of the country, and when money is easy in New York a carnival of speculation follows.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. My question is whether the banks get any credit for that?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course they get no credit. Now, it is proposed to authorize the country banks, instead of keeping deposits in New York at four per cent., as the law now authorizes them to do, to keep Government deposits at three and sixty-five hundredths. Now, gentlemen say, why not issue greenbacks? I have no objection to the proposition, but I am in favor of the proposition reported by the committee as the best proposition offered, unless it be one to issue greenbacks instead of compound-interest notes; because if we do not issue these certificates of indebtedness or greenbacks in lieu of these maturing compound notes, the Secretary of the Treasury will be compelled to redeem these compound-interest notes, and issue in lieu thereof United States five-twenty bonds, bearing six per cent. in gold, as he cannot redeem them with the accruing revenues of the Government; and for one I am opposed to any further extension of the issue of the gold-bearing bonds of this country, if it is the policy of the Government, as I understand it to be, to pay off gradually the national debt. Therefore, unless we issue the plain greenbacks in lieu of compound-interest notes, it is a measure of economy on the part of the Government to issue certificates of indebtedness for the time being, and, as we collect taxes and raise money, pay off these short maturing obligations drawing a low rate of interest, instead of converting them into long bonds, drawing interest at six per cent. in gold.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask how far this will probably enable the country banks to keep in reserve these certificates?

Mr. ALLISON. My friend knows that the demand certificates of this Government are just as good for purposes of redemption as the certificates of the New York banks; and therefore it is, if they exhaust their two fifths reserve of lawful money, they can at any time convert these certificates into lawful money as easily and readily as they could their funds deposited in the New York banks.

Now, I desire to say further, that for myself I am prepared to vote for the issue of United States notes in lieu of these compound-interest notes to the extent proposed by the amendment, and I deny that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] to issue greenbacks in lieu of compound-interest notes, is an expansion of the currency. These banks to-day hold $90,000,000 of compound-interest notes. They are a part of their reserve as currency, and when they are withdrawn this reserve must be made up by legal-tender notes, which legal-tender notes to that extent are withdrawn from circulation. Therefore, if we take from the banks $90,000,000 of compound-interest notes and substitute for them the United States notes, we do not increase the circulation of the country to any great extent. Hence, I am in favor of adopting either one or the other of these propositions, and I shall first vote to issue greenbacks to the extent of $90,000,000. If that fails, I shall ask gentlemen who are in favor of withdrawing $143,000,000 of currency this year to support the proposition of the committee, so that we will substitute bonds or a class of indebtedness bearing a low rate of interest instead of converting these compound-interest notes into six per cent. gold-bearing bonds payable twenty years hence, principal and interest, in gold. It must be apparent to all that we must change this form of indebtedness before August, 1868. And I shall vote for that proposition which imposes the least burden upon the Government and the people.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DODGE. I am prepared to vote for the report of the committee. I think it will give more satisfaction to the entire community than to pass an amendment to issue $140,000,000 more of greenbacks. There is very great anxiety in the country now lest in some way this Congress will adopt some resolution for the increase and further inflation of the currency. Now, the currency cannot be disturbed at all if this bill shall become a law, for the notes now to be redeemed bearing six per cent. interest will be substituted by interest-bearing notes of three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. On the other hand, if you issue the greenbacks, I believe the Government, let alone the country, in the purchases to be made during the coming year, will lose more than the $3,000,000 of interest which it would allow the banks. No plan can be devised which will give such ease to the anxious and provide for the $140,000,000 of compound-interest notes as to pass this bill. They will be substituted immediately and there will be no inflation of the currency. On the other hand, if some provision is not made, the banks will be obliged to substitute greenbacks, and there will be a contraction of over $100,000,000. I trust the bill as reported by the committee will be passed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE.]

Mr. PIKE. I want to make a suggestion in relation to the proposed amendment. It seems to me a very valuable amendment with just one change in it. It now provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue legal-tender notes in place of the compound-interest notes. I think it ought to be changed so that the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue as many legal-tender notes as he deems necessary. The difference, which is very marked, is this: the Secretary of the Treasury holds on hand now $40,000,000 of legal-tender notes, or their equivalent at currency value. Now, if he can dispose of a portion of that $40,000,000 and take up six per cent. notes, why not do it? If he hereafter chooses to keep $20,000,000 on hand instead of $40,000,000, and uses the balance to take up six per cent. notes, what is the objection to his doing it? Why oblige him to increase the volume of the currency, no matter what the circumstances in which the Treasury is placed? It does seem to me that the House is taking upon itself the management of the currency in a particular that it would not do if it realized the condition in which the Secretary of the Treasury finds himself placed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, section thirty-one of the national currency act provides:

"That every association in the cities hereinafter named shall, at all times, have on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least twenty-five per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and its deposits, and every other association shall have fifteen per cent."

That twenty-five per cent. and fifteen per cent. of lawful money which the national banks are required to keep as a reserve amounts at the present time to something over two hundred million dollars, $100,000,000 of which is held in compound-interest notes. Sir, I am told by the Comptroller of the currency that about ninety million dollars are returned, but there is mixed in the returns, according to the estimate, about ten million dollars more.

Now, within the present fiscal year the compound-interest notes mature and are to be paid, and they amount, with the interest added, to $170,000,000. I suppose that with the exception of the $100,000,000 held by the banks the others are out of circulation, but are held as investments. So that retiring the $70,000,000 held as investments by individuals would not contract the currency, but the $100,000,000 which are held by the banks as a reserve must be replaced by $100,000,000 of legal tenders withdrawn from circulation.

As has been stated to-day, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to withdraw $4,000,000 per month, or $48,000,000 in the course of a year, and in addition to that the banks will have to supply the place of these compound-interest notes now held as a reserve, which will withdraw $100,000,000 more, making $148,000,000 in a single year. Now, I take it any business man knows we could not stand any such contraction as that, and hence this bill is reported by the Committee of Ways and Means for the substitution of $100,000,000 for that amount of compound-interest notes to be taken from the banks as a reserve of lawful money.

Now, look at the effect of it. Here are $100,000,000 of three per cent. notes made, for what? As the gentleman from Iowa well said; to take the place of lawful money and redeem the obligations of the banks. Every gentleman knows that without a reserve of lawful money they cannot redeem their obligations when presented. But gentlemen say these bonds are on demand, and they can be carried back to the Treasury and receive their $100,000,000. True, but the Government in the mean time is not only paying three per cent. on this $100,000,000 but holding $100,000,000 of currency in the Treasury with which to redeem these demand bonds.

Now, what is the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? It is to issue legal-tender notes to the full amount of these compound-interest notes. It goes very much further than any other proposition which has been made here. It proposes that we shall not only provide for these $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes, which would be no inflation of the currency, but simply a substitution by the banks of legal-tender notes for the compound-interest notes now held in reserve by them; but that the other $70,000,000 of compound-interest notes not held by the banks, but by private individuals, shall be replaced by legal-tender notes which are to go immediately into circulation. We therefore, by the provisions of this bill, if amended as the gentleman proposes, not only forbid the contraction of $4,000,000 of the currency per month, now authorized by law, but we increase the present circulation by $70,000,000. I am not prepared to support any such proposition.

Now, the plan I proposed would replace the $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes by legal tenders, instead of by these interest-bearing demand bonds, provided for in the first section of this bill, thus saving the Government not only the interest on the bonds, but also upon whatever amount the Secretary of the Treasury would be obliged to hold with which to redeem them when presented. This would be neither inflating nor contracting, but would leave the amount in circulation precisely the same as at present. It is said by gentlemen that the banks would use their reserve if all in United States notes, but they have $100,000,000 of such notes under this bill and $100,000,000 of these proposed bonds payable on demand, for which they can at any time obtain United States notes at the Treasury. There is no protection whatever against banks using their reserve by issuing bonds payable on demand instead of United States notes.

Mr. STEVENS. I will modify my amendment by limiting the amount to $100,000,000, and providing that the notes so issued shall bear no interest.

Mr. LYNCH. As that is exactly my own proposition of course I shall not object to it.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House, by Colonel WILLIAM G. MOORE, his Secretary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 607) to amend an act granting the right of way over the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, Michigan.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments to the bill of the House No. 598, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and asked a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. POLAND, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. McDUGALL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the House No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. COWAN, and Mr. NESMITH the conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES—AGAIN.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, the business men all along our eastern coast and in the great cities of the West are looking with intense anxiety to the action of Congress in relation to the financial affairs of the country. And the apprehension is broad-spread that we will do something during this session toward a further expansion of the currency. I hope that we will show that such an anticipation is not well founded.

If I am right in my judgment of the proposition before the House, the Committee of Ways and Means do not propose to expand the currency, but they propose rather a moderate and reasonable contraction. I think their plan of allowing interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness to be substituted for these compound-interest notes is only an act of justice toward the banking institutions from whose reserves they will be taken. It has been stated here that we shall be giving a great gratuity to the banks by allowing them to keep on hand these interest-bearing certificates instead of these compound-interest notes. Now, I say it would be unjust to do otherwise. This Government received a full consideration for these compound-interest notes when they were issued. And are these institutions to receive nothing by way of interest upon the capital which they advanced to the Government at the time of its sorest need?

We are in this matter but following the example set by many of the States. In the State of New York, years ago, a banking system was established by which the banks of the State were permitted to lock up the stocks of the State as security for their issues. And the banks received interest upon every dollar of that stock from the State. And so it has been in other States. I believe the principle is a correct one, and that we ought to apply it here.

And by the issue of these three per cent. certificates we will satisfy the just expectations of the country, and not injure its interests.

Mr. HOOPER. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] for five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen seem to misapprehend my proposition, and I desire to explain it.

There is at present outstanding a certain amount of six per cent. compound-interest notes. One hundred million dollars of these will in a short time fall due; and I propose to substitute for them as they mature greenbacks bearing no interest. The proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means is to issue in lieu of the compound-interest notes certificates bearing interest not exceeding three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. Now, why should we not redeem these compound-interest notes with legal tenders? Why should we pay an interest of three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. when we can as well pay legal tenders bearing no interest?

Gentlemen talk about "inflating the currency." How shall we "inflate the currency" by redeeming these compound-interest notes with greenbacks? We simply pay dollar for dollar. I cannot understand why gentlemen should call this "inflating the currency." By the adoption of the proposition which I submit, the Government will save $6,000,000 a year, which it now annually pays in the form of interest.

I admit that if we exchange these compound-interest notes for certificates bearing three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. interest it will be a good thing for the banks. I have no animosity against those institutions; but we are legislating here for the good of the country and for the interests of the national Treasury. My proposition if adopted will save over that of the committee the yearly interest on $100,000,000 at three and sixty-five hundredths per cent.; while it will save $6,000,000 now annually paid in the shape of interest. It appears to me that I could not make this plainer if I were to talk a thousand years; so I will sit down.

Mr. DODGE. I wish to put a single question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] The banks are holding $90,000,000 of these compound-interest notes. There are in circulation $140,000,000. There are $50,000,000 unaccounted for. If $140,000,000 of greenbacks are now issued, the banks will receive $90,000,000, while $50,000,000 will go to redeem the compound-interest notes held by individuals. Thus you will have added $50,000,000 to the greenback circulation.

Mr. STEVENS. I restrict the amount to be issued to $100,000,000.

Mr. DODGE. Still the proportion will be the same. Now, the gentleman will remember, I am sure, how this country was agitated years ago when it was proposed to withdraw the—

Mr. STEVENS. I merely wish to say to the gentleman that it is impossible for any arithmetic to make one dollar count more than one. We redeem an interest-bearing debt and its accrued interest by paying dollar for dollar. Certainly this does not increase the amount of the circulation; but it diminishes the burdens of the nation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING.]

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that we all know enough of the sense of this House to know that one or the other of these two propositions will be adopted. It is conceded that for the $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes which are to be paid off during the ensuing twelve months we shall put in the vacancy either certificates bearing three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. interest or Treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be a specious argument to say: "We had better redeem these compound-interest notes with greenbacks, because these bear no interest. If you redeem these notes with certificates bearing interest at the rate of three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. it is so much money needlessly taken from the Treasury." Sir, there is another consideration. We do not wish, we all say, to expand the currency; neither do we wish to contract the currency to the injuring of business men. Will these three per cent. certificates enter into the currency? Can they do so? If the banks hold them, can they issue them as a circulating medium to pass in the community from hand to hand? No sir. But if we pay over to the banks $100,000,000 of Treasury notes, then, when they find themselves, as they often do, short of currency, out will go these greenbacks, and the currency will be to that extent expanded.

It may be in violation of the law, but the temptation will be so great the law will be violated, and in spite of us the currency will be thus extended. That is the objection in my mind.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. SPALDING. I cannot; the gentleman has had his time, and I have only five minutes. That is the objection in my mind. I think it better for the Government to pay three per cent. interest on these certificates and let the banks hold them in lieu of Treasury notes, than to issue Treasury notes to the same extent, which may enter into circulation and thus expand it to the injury of the credit of the country and the increase of the present enormous high price of living. That is my objection.

I will vote first for the proposition as it comes from the committee, for I think it is best for the country; and then, if that fails, I will take the $100,000,000 in "greenbacks."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state in the short time allotted to me the reason why I shall support the proposition of my colleague, [Mr. STEVENS,] and it is this: at that point I consider $100,000,000 of issue is neither a contraction nor an expansion of the currency. The banks of the country hold $90,000,000 in reserve of these compound-interest notes, and this provides for the issue of $100,000,000 of legal-tender notes to take their place. Now, these legal-tender notes do not go into circulation, but go into the reserve funds to supply the place of the compound-interest notes, which the banks are now holding, I think, without authority of law. This is a plain business matter; and there are not ten individuals on this floor, if it were a business transaction of their own, who would not be in favor of following the plan as suggested by my colleague.

I hope that amendment will be adopted, and I shall vote for it, because it is at the point where the Senate now stands, leaving the contraction of the currency, as it is under existing law, at $4,000,000 per month. I vote for it as an economical transaction on the part of the Government, for, mark you, if the proposition of the committee is adopted it will cost the Government next year $5,000,000, which the Government is in no manner called upon to pay, and which I think the House should, by the adoption of the amendment of my colleague, save to the tax-payers of the country. I am opposed to giving this gratuity to stockholders of banks, to the pecuniary loss of the people. As one Representative of the people I am unwilling to do any such thing.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think the debate on this bill has gone far enough, and I propose to close it with the remark that the certificates as proposed by the committee would be held by the banks in the place of compound-interest notes, and would not form part of the circulation; whereas the hundred millions of "greenbacks" would be so much expansion of the currency. There would be saved, as gentlemen say, about three million five hundred thousand dollars by issuing these notes which bear no interest.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield to allow a question?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. When the national banking system was adopted the banks were required to purchase the Government bonds and to deposit them in the banking and currency department as a security for the redemption of their own notes.

The banks paid for these bonds to the Government, and they received the interest as a return upon the capital thus advanced to the Government.

Now, I desire to ask the gentleman whether, if the interest-bearing notes had been issued to the banks originally instead of bonds, and if the banks were required to receive for such interest-bearing notes the demand notes of the Government, of course bearing no interest, and were further required to retain these demand notes in their vaults for the sole purpose of redemption, would these banks receive a dollar of interest for the money advanced to the Government on the original purchase?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Certainly not.

Mr. DAVIS. Then the proposition to substitute greenbacks for the interest-bearing notes is manifestly unjust.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I merely mean to state in my opinion that while the Government saves $3,500,000 the people would lose ten times that much by the effect of this large addition to the currency of the country. I now ask for the vote.

The question recurred on Mr. STEVENS's amendment as modified.

Mr. BENJAMIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 58, not voting 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, DeFrees, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Grinnell, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hise, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelley, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Leftwich, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, McClurg, McIndoe, Moulton, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Starr, Stevens, Stokes, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—99.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Banks, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Campbell, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dodge, Eliot, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Hart, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hunter, Jenckes, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, Marvin, Maynard, McKee, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Taber, Burt Van Horn, Hamilton Ward, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Winfield, and Woodbridge—58.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Chanler, Conkling, Delano, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Garfield, Hale, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hubbard, Jones, Julian, Kelso, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, Marston, McCullough, Morrill, Newell, Rogers, Stilwell, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Williams, and Wright—33.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. THAYER. I hope my colleague will not make the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. I understand that no amendments are now in order.

The SPEAKER. The House is operating under the previous question, which does not exhaust itself until the third reading of the bill.

Mr. THAYER. I wish the House to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done, because the order has been partially executed.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to strike out that part of the bill which prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury from retiring $4,000,000 a month.

The SPEAKER. That is not now in order.

The question was taken on Mr. STEVENS's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. THAYER. Cannot I now move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. The previous question cannot be reconsidered after it has been partially executed; but when it has been executed and the previous question is called on the passage of the bill then the engrossment can be reconsidered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. THAYER. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. State your reasons.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. THAYER. I should like to state my reasons.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

"It is in order, pending the demand for the previous question on the passage of a bill, to move a reconsideration of the vote on its engrossment; but such motion is not debatable under the practice which has prevailed for many years."

Mr. THAYER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to explain my reasons for making this motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. SPALDING. I suppose the gentleman's object is to move to strike out the second section of the bill, and that is all.

Mr. THAYER. That is it. The House understands it.

The question was taken on Mr. THAYER's motion; and there were—ayes 45, noes 70.

So the motion to reconsider was disagreed to.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 74, nays 84, not voting 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, DeFrees, Donnelly, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hise, Chester D. Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Williams, and Wright—32.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed; and I believe that question is debatable.

The SPEAKER. The first motion would be to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected. Then a motion to reconsider the vote on engrossment would be in order, and if it prevailed the bill would be open for amendment.

Mr. HILL. I voted in the negative for the purpose of moving to reconsider myself.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

I desire to say a word or two, so that the House may understand the object I have in view.

The SPEAKER. As the previous question is exhausted by the rejection of the bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who voted with the majority, moves to reconsider; which is a debatable motion, and he is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to say to the House, so that they may understand what I intend to accomplish by this motion, that the motion to reconsider the vote on the engrossment of the bill will enable the House to strike out the second section, which has been the cause of the defeat of the entire bill; the first section of the bill being acceptable to the House, as shown by the vote on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] 99 to 58.

I now call the previous question on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The effect of that motion will be to leave the bill finally rejected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 93, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Baldwin, Banks, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Dodge, Eliot, Finck, Griswold, Hart, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

During the roll call, Mr. MARVIN said: I desire to state that Mr. NEWELL, of New Jersey, is paired with Mr. ROGERS, of the same State.

The question recurred upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I now move that this bill be committed to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to immediately report the same back to the House with the second section stricken out.

Mr. STEVENS. Cannot the same thing be accomplished by moving to strike out this section by way of amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order without a reconsideration of the engrossment of the bill, and the engrossment of this bill cannot now be moved, because one motion to that effect has already been made and laid on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] yield to me for a question?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will yield for a question simply.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise for the purpose of obtaining some information in regard to the effect of the vote we are about to take. In the event that we vote to commit this bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report the same back with only the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] contained in it, and the bill is passed in that shape, will it not have the effect of adding the sum of $100,000,000 to the amount of currency now in circulation?

I understand the facts to be these: these compound-interest notes mature this year, and of course they must be retired. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is to issue $100,000,000 of currency in the place of these compound-interest notes. Now, it is said the Government will save the interest by doing that. But instead of getting rid of the amount of circulating medium which these compound-interest notes constitute you merely substitute $100,000,000 of other notes in their stead. Now, I would like to know if that is not the practical effect of the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND.] There are now, principal and interest, $170,000,000 of compound-interest notes issued. If this bill is adopted, as I propose to have it modified by the Committee on Banking and Currency, $100,000,000 of compound-interest notes will be retired by the issue of legal-tender notes. The banks now hold $90,000,000 of these compound-interest notes; and of course that amount of the new issue of notes will go into the bank reserves where the compound-interest notes now are. And I take it the Treasury of the United States can dispose of the other $70,000,000 of compound-interest notes out of the current revenues of the Government. Therefore this issue of $100,000,000 of legal-tender notes will be neither an inflation nor a contraction of the amount of currency in circulation.

And further: if you do not provide in this manner for the liquidation of these compound-interest notes, you will force the Secretary of the Treasury to throw upon the market five-twenty bonds to the extent of $100,000,000, which can but prove disastrous to the financial interests of the Government. Now, the Government does not desire to have these five-twenty bonds forced upon the market, but that they shall be used in the liquidation of the seventhirties as they fall due.

And the striking out the second section of this bill will allow the contraction of the currency at the rate of $4,000,000 per month to continue as now provided by law; which will be in accordance with the action of the Senate, and I believe in accordance with the best interests of the country.

Mr. DAWSON. Is it not proposed to make a new issue of greenbacks to the extent of $100,000,000?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is proposed to retire these compound-interest notes now held by the banks to the extent of $100,000,000 by the issue of non-interest-bearing evidences of indebtedness, thereby saving to the Government the interest on the sum of $100,000,000.

Mr. DAWSON. That $100,000,000 is to be in addition to the present circulation?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is.

Mr. DAWSON. And is it not to that extent an increase of the amount of currency in circulation?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir.

Mr. DAWSON. I think it must be, for the reason that the compound-interest notes are not in circulation while this new issue will be in circulation.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will only say now that the gentleman is incorrect in his conclusions. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] for five minutes.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to affirm that this is a mere substitution of $100,000,000 of non-interest-bearing notes for compound-interest notes which are now in existence. I wish to know from him whether the compound-interest notes will not be retired by lapse of time, by the expiration of the term for which they were issued, no matter whether the $100,000,000 now proposed to be issued be issued or not.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. These compound-interest notes mature in a short time and must be retired in some manner. I think that the only common-sense manner in which this can be done is the manner in which the House has determined it shall be done.

I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] and after that I shall demand the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a single word in support of the position which has been taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

There will mature this year $111,000,000 of compound-interest notes, which, with the interest, will amount to nearly one hundred and forty million dollars. The Secretary of the Treasury must retire these notes in some way. If he does not retire them by issuing $100,000,000 of greenbacks, he must do it by the issue of $100,000,000 of five-twenty bonds; because we cannot expect to raise revenue enough during the present year to pay off these $140,000,000 of compound-interest notes. The question, therefore, is simply whether the Government will issue $100,000,000 of non-interest-bearing indebtedness, which shall run for a year or two until the revenues of the Government shall suffice for its redemption, or whether the Government shall issue six per cent. bonds payable in twenty years, the principal and the interest to be paid in gold. The proposition advocated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not involve any expansion of the currency in the true meaning of that phrase.

Mr. BOYER. I desire to put a question to my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] There is one point which I desire shall be made clear, and that is whether there is anything in this bill, or in any existing law, which would prevent the banks from immediately putting into circulation the $100,000,000 of greenbacks proposed to be issued. Is there any provision which would secure the country from an inflation of the currency to that extent?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I thought I had made myself understood on that point. The present law provides for a certain reserve to be held by the banks. We now propose a mere substitution in the character of that reserve. I think it a doubtful question whether, under the present law, the banks are authorized in holding these compound-interest notes as a reserve; but they do it. We now propose to substitute for this reserve of compound-interest notes an indebtedness without interest in the form of $100,000,000 of legal tenders.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 178) in relation to national banking associations; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 965) declaring Clinton bridge across the Mississippi river at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route, with an amendment; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

COMPOUND-INTEREST NOTES—AGAIN.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that the banks are authorized to hold three fifths of their reserve in balances due from other banks. They would, therefore, if the pending proposition should become a law, increase the amount of those balances and use as a circulating medium a considerable portion of these $100,000,000 of legal-tender notes. I see nothing to prevent them from doing it.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. That would do them no good. In addition to that the contraction now authorized by law at the rate of $4,000,000 per month is to continue, and this in two years would counterbalance this issue of $100,000,000.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The banks now hold these compound-interest notes as their reserve, because they bear six per cent. interest. If these compound-interest notes be withdrawn and $100,000,000 of greenbacks be issued in their place, the banks will then hold as their reserve balances due from other banks, on which they get four or five per cent. interest, and these greenbacks will go into circulation.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. They cannot put the reserves in anything but legal tenders.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the law says they may hold the balance of three fifths in dues from other banks and count it in their reserves. I wish the House to understand it clearly.

One word more. The gentleman says it repeals the law which obliges the Secretary to contract the legal tenders at the rate of $4,000,000 per month or $48,000,000 a year. I should like to know where that law is. The only law is that which prohibits him from contracting more than $4,000,000 per month, and there is no law requiring him to contract it to that extent.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. If he does not carry out the law it is not my fault. But I believe he is in favor of contraction. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PRICE. The only effect of this bill is to leave the law precisely where it is, in favor of contraction. There is no outside tinkering with the currency. It provides that the compound-interest notes shall be retired in the next twelve months, and these non-interest-bearing legal tenders are to be held by the banks in their place as reserves. If the bill passes we will go on contracting as we have done for the last nine months, while we substitute for notes that bear interest notes that bear no interest. There is no other change, no interference with the currency whatever, and in my opinion there ought not to be any unless as under existing law. The country wants to know how this matter is to be settled, and as long as we talk about inflation and contraction this turmoil will continue. Let the contraction go on at the rate of $4,000,000 per month, and these legal tenders without interest take the place of the compound-interest notes.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was referred with instructions to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported, under instruction of the House, the bill back, with the second section stricken out.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The Committee on Banking and Currency have never had charge of this bill; it has never got into their hands, and I make the point of order the gentleman cannot report it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The committee are under the orders of the House, and in previous Congresses when the House has been in the same dilemma as now by reconsidering and laying on the table the vote by which the bill was engrossed, and they could not again reconsider, they have committed with instructions to report back immediately.

Mr. DAWES. What authority has the gentleman from Pennsylvania to speak for the committee? They have not authorized him.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Great emergencies require some assumption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is a member of the committee.

Mr. WARD, of New York. The gentleman does not constitute a quorum of the committee. He is not the chairman.

The SPEAKER. Neither would the chairman. The chairman of the committee is the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POMEROY,] and if he insists he has the right to report the bill back. Following the practice of previous Congresses, the member of the committee who moved to commit the bill has been recognized to report it back.

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to say nothing but the order of the House could induce me to make such a report.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved to lay the bill on the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 59, nays 95, not voting 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Baldwin, Banks, Blaine, Boyer, Broomall, Chapler, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Dodge, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Goodyear, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Jenckes, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Elihu B. Washburn, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Wright—36.

So the motion was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. LAFLIN stated that he had paired with Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, who would have voted in the negative, while he [Mr. LAFLIN] would have voted in the affirmative.

The result having been announced as above recorded, the question recurred on seconding the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RADFORD. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. It is too late.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 95, nays 65, not voting 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brownell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Ward, Elihu B. Washburn, and Wright—30.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Would it be in order to move to amend the title, so as to read, "A bill to provide for the further expansion of the currency?"

The SPEAKER. It will if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] yields.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not yield. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES TETLOW.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the House resumes the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was pending at the close of the morning hour yesterday, for the relief of James Tetlow, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, to lay the bill on the table, on which no quorum voted.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to pay to James Tetlow, for building four steam tug-boats, the sum of $86,400, to be paid out of any money heretofore appropriated for constructing vessels or machinery, and not otherwise appropriated.

The question being taken on laying the bill on the table, it was disagreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I withdraw the demand temporarily for the previous question, in order to allow my colleague on the committee to make some reports.

CHANGE OF REFERENCES.

On motion of Mr. DARLING, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the petition of W. A. Wheeler, of New York, for relief upon his contract with the Navy Department; also from the consideration of the petition of A. D. Bishop; and the same were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear any motion to lay aside the other bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on its going on in order?

Mr. DARLING. Will not the gentlemen permit me to make these brief reports?

Mr. ROSS. I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Then the House will resume the consideration of the bill which was temporarily laid aside.

JAMES TETLOW—AGAIN.

Mr. GRISWOLD. On the taking up of this bill yesterday I endeavored to convey to the House so much of the facts in the case as would enable it to act understandingly upon its merits. I will very briefly repeat the circumstances under which this petition comes before the House.

In 1863 the Navy Department advertised for the construction of four gunboats. Among others who applied was James Tetlow. He sent his agent to investigate the character of the boats required, with an estimate as far as practicable of their cost, and authorized him to make an application in his name to the Department for the construction of two of these boats. This agent using the discretion with which he was thus clothed made a proposition to construct the two vessels for $84,600 each. The lowest of the other offers was $128,000. Immediately on becoming advised of the fact, Mr. Tetlow came to Washington and applied to the Department to be released from his obligation to abide by the proposal his agent had made, the contract not having yet been signed by him. This the Department refused to do, and from certain considerations presented at the Department he was induced to undertake the contract at the low price offered, while others were awarded contracts for precisely the same work at $128,000. The Department it seems, as a means of relieving him partially from the difficulty, proffered him a contract for two other of these boats at $128,000, which was the lowest bid of any but his own; and in the hope of retrieving his inevitable losses he accepted the contracts for building four boats in all. He went on in good faith, and in doing so not only exhausted his own resources, but fell back upon his bondsmen, who went on and completed the contract in a manner entirely acceptable to the Department. The result was that Mr. Tetlow was a loser to the amount of $86,000.

He now comes to the Congress of the United States praying them to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make up to him that loss on the construction of the two boats which he undertook to build at a little more than one half what was paid to the other contractors. The Naval Committee were unanimous in their recommendation to grant this relief. The applicant is an entire stranger to me. I never saw him except when he appeared before the committee; but, sir, he extorted from me, as he did from every member of the committee, the concession that his claim was not only just and fair, but that the Congress of the United States would be doing injustice to itself and an outrage to one of its citizens not to grant this very reasonable relief. The man is utterly ruined, pecuniarily and in a business point of view, by reason of the Government of the United States insisting upon his carrying out his contract from which he begged to be relieved, and he now throws himself, not upon his legal rights, but upon the justice and magnanimity of the American Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, I am aware with what impatience this House listens, if it listens at all, to a statement of the claim of a mere private party who asks for justice from the Government of the United States. We are so in the habit in this Hall of having our thoughts drawn toward millions—a most conspicuous illustration of which has occurred this morning, where we have decided to issue another one hundred millions or so of legal-tender notes, as the ordinary business of a forenoon—we are so accustomed to vote our lands by the square mile, and our money by the million, that the plaintive cry for private relief, no matter how meritorious, rarely makes its voice heard above the war of contending parties, or the clash of contending interests in this stormy forum. And if by chance some case more meritorious than usual, or some cry from the depth of a more than ordinary distress, draws for a moment aside the eye engaged in the momentous business of reading the morning newspaper, or arrests the pen in the all-important task of franking the latest speech to one's constituent, the eye and the ear are at once closed if it be ascertained that that claim is presented in the hated name of a Government contractor.

A Government contractor! Why Mr. Speaker, it is a proscribed name within these walls. A publican was not as odious to the Jews. To name him is to name that son of Ishmael whose hand was not only against every man, but every man's hand from that day to this was in duty bound to be against him.

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding all this I stand here to-day to advocate the claim of James Tetlow, a contractor; a naval contractor; an honest mechanic who asks of the Government, whom he has served, simply justice. And I have faith to believe, if I can get the ear of the House, that he will not go from this Hall without that justice which will prove a blessing both to those who give and to him upon whom it is bestowed.

I implore the House to listen before it shall decide. There is a tribunal—the classical gentleman from New York, who honors me with his attention, [Mr. RAYMOND,] knows where it is located, and who presides—which is said to first decide and afterward to hear the argument, "Rhadamanthus castigat audit que." But I am sure this House will at least listen before by its decision it invites bankruptcy and beggary to sit down at the hearthstone of this honest claimant.

Mr. James Tetlow, of Massachusetts, was, before the Navy Department called upon him for assistance, a plain, simple, honest, ship-builder in East Boston. He had not, perhaps, a national or trans-Atlantic reputation; he built but few ships, but he built them well, and he had a good name for the quality, if not for the quantity of his work. During the early part of the war he had done some work for the Navy Department, and had won their confidence for the skill and fidelity with which he had performed all his contracts.

When at last that Department was obliged to appeal to the patriotic ship-builders of the country for assistance to put afloat that matchless navy which was to bear upon every ocean the thunders of your cannon, they applied to Mr. Tetlow at once, as one of the parties in whom they had confidence, and from whom they desired to receive proposals for contract. Mr. Tetlow sent on his agent to make a bid for two of the vessels. There were no terms stated in the proposition which he furnished to his agent; he furnished the agent a blank writing in the nature of a bid, with the names of the securities attached, leaving to his agent, upon consultation with the bureau at Washington, to put in the appropriate price. The agent, by the grossest of blunders, by the most inexcusable negligence, not by any latent ambiguity, but by leaving out an estimate of one of the most important particulars of the construction of the vessel, failed to estimate for one third of its entire cost. So that he put in a bid upon this blank, offering to construct for two of these vessels at a cost of $84,600 each, and that, too, when they could not then be built for less than $128,000 each. Indeed, the Department contracted that very day with other parties for the construction of vessels of a similar class in every respect for the sum of $128,000 each.

This agent telegraphed to his principal the bid he had made and which was accepted. At once Mr. Tetlow telegraphed back that there must be some mistake; that it could not be possible that the agent could have entered a bid at such a price. Mr. Tetlow immediately came on in person to protest against the bid being accepted. When he arrived here he found, as many others have found, that his hand was in the mouth of the lion. The Navy Department had his bid with sureties, and proposed to hold on to it. The Department then had its grasp upon every naval contractor, every public navy-yard, and every private shipyard in the country; as the War Department had also its grasp upon all the shops in the country where materials of war and even locomotives were manufactured. And the heavy hand of the Department could be laid upon any manufacturer in the country, and his shop, his tools, his business, and even his operatives could be taken away from him if they thought proper to do so.

When Mr. Tetlow protested against the execution of this contract, he was informed by the Department that he must fulfill his contract; and if he did fulfill it honestly and to the satisfaction of the Department and he sustained a loss they would recommend to Congress to grant him relief.

Mr. SPALDING. Did he enter into a written contract after he had this knowledge?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is just what I am stating; a bid was made which was accepted. Mr. Tetlow protested against signing a contract predicated upon that bid. But the Department stated to him that he must sign the contract, else the Department would compel the execution of the bid he had made under surety. At the time he also had other Government work which he was doing for the Navy Department, which put it in the power of the Department to compel him to sign that contract.

Now, there is nothing clearer in the case than that Mr. Tetlow protested against the execution of the contract, and it was only upon the Department holding out the contract with one hand and saying they would compel him to execute it, and saying, on the other hand, that if he executed the contract satisfactorily and sustained a loss they would recommend that a bill be passed for his relief, that he was finally prevailed upon to sign it and enter upon its execution.

Mr. Tetlow then signed the contract. He went on and built two ships for the Government, the Fortune and the Speedwell, I believe; and he built them so well, so successfully, so thoroughly, that, according to the testimony of the Department adduced before the committee, they were, if not the very best, among the best vessels of their class in the Navy. They were felicitous names for the Navy, the Speedwell and the Fortune; but they were unfortunate names for this contractor. They would more appropriately have been named Beggary and Bankruptcy so far as he is concerned, unless he can obtain from this Congress the relief which the Department authorized him to expect; for he incurred a loss of more than fifty thousand dollars upon each of those vessels. Those who put in bids at the same time for the same class of vessels fixed the price at $128,000 apiece; yet the men who took contracts at this price are here to-day asking relief. This man Tetlow took a contract at $84,600, $43,400 less than these other contractors, and he merely asks to be allowed the amount which he would have received if he had contracted on the same terms as they did.

Now, sir, the construction of these for him, ill-starred vessels has brought upon him not only bankruptcy, but imprisonment; for, while the committee were considering this very meritorious case, this man was arrested for debt in the State of Massachusetts and lodged in a debtor's cell, under a law (the relic of a barbarous and abominable system) by which when a creditor swears that he suspects his debtor is going to leave the State or flee from the execution of process for the collection of debt the debtor may be thrown into jail.

Mr. SPALDING. Do they imprison for debt in Massachusetts unless there be an allegation of fraud? I do not so understand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From his prison cell that man wrote to the committee asking that the decision in his case might be deferred until he could appear and present his case before the committee. Subsequently he appeared before the committee in person. We found him a plain, simple, honest mechanic, with no array of legal learning, with no famous lawyers to present his case, backed up by no lobby, supported by none of the vermin that swarm around this Capitol and choke up these aisles, seeking all sorts of legislation. He came alone before the committee and stated his case; and when he had stated it there was not a member of the committee who was not ready to recommend the granting of the relief which the Department had promised him. I shall vote for this bill with all my heart, for I believe that it is a just and equitable measure.

Mr. HIGBY. Was it on Tetlow's statement of his case that the committee acted?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No, sir; the facts presented in evidence from the Navy Department recommended this case most strongly and urgently to our consideration; and the testimony of the naval constructor of the Department also recommended it.

Mr. SPALDING. If the gentleman from Connecticut will allow me a word, I desire to say that I may have done this claimant injustice by a question which I asked a short time ago. I desire now to say that I am informed by the gentleman from Massachusetts who sits beside me [Mr. AMES] that this contract, so material in the case, was not signed after the discovery that there was an error in the calculations; but it was signed and sent on in advance, a blank being left for the amount of the bid, and the agent filled up the blank with the amount that he bid. This fact alters the case very much. I beg pardon for having done injustice to the case of this claimant.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have stated the facts as they were in testimony before the committee, and I have no authority from any gentleman from Massachusetts or any gentleman from any other quarter beyond the facts as they appear.

Mr. SPALDING. I trust I have not injured the case by stating that fact.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course you have. On the statement of the facts I have made, it seems to me, it is not only an equitable, but a just claim, just in every strict sense of justice. I heard a gentleman state yesterday this man could not recover this in a court of justice. Good God, are we sitting here as a court of justice governed by the arbitrary rules of law? I supposed we were the grand inquest of the nation. I supposed we represented the nation's magnanimity, its equitable side as well as its just side; but if it were not so I claim the state of facts I present here if presented in a court of equity would reform that contract. Under these circumstances, with the promise of the party of the first part in case of loss and the good faith on part of the loser, I believe any court of equity would interpolate for reformation in the contract and afford relief such as is here granted.

Mr. BROMWELL. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is certain a mistake was made—whether, in fact, it was not a mere business blunder?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was a mistake in leaving out one of the elements of the calculation, in leaving out an estimate for iron or wood out of which the ship was to be built, the very grossest error on the part of the agent, discovered at once by the principal and by the Navy Department. It would not have been insisted upon by the Navy Department but for the fact they wanted to hold out a lesson to the other contractors. They are willing this relief should be granted.

I have but one word more to say. Gentlemen having finished their newspapers and written their letters to their own wives and children now make objection to a claim like this, that it is opening the door to other claims. I think it is an exceptional case. It depends upon the year or nay of certain members whether penury and want shall sit down at the hearthstone of James Tetlow. I say he is an honest, honorable contractor. He has done his work well. He is suffering from no fault of his own. He has the promise of the Government for his relief. They advocate him here. It is for you to say whether he will go from here a crushed man while the earnings of his life enter into the Navy which has been volleying out its thunders for your flag. For one, my vote and voice shall be against writing bankruptcy over the door-post of James Tetlow.

Mr. ROSS. I hope the other side will be heard.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will yield to a question, but not to a speech. I think the House understands the matter perfectly, and I call for the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DELANO demanded the yeas and nays on the passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 39, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Chandler, Sidney Clarke, Cooper, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dodge, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Hart, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, Le Blond, Longyear, Lyngh, Marvin, McKee, McKuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroi, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Sawyer, Spalding, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—91.

NAYS—Messrs. Baker, Benjamin, Broomall, Buckland, Cook, Cullom, Dawson, DeFrees, Delano, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hawkins, Hill, Hise, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, Leftwich, Maynard, Miller, Niblack, Orth, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stokes, Francis Thomas, Trimble, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, and Williams—39.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Blow, Bundy, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culver, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Hayes, Henderson, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Hulburd, Jones, Kerr, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, Marshall, Marston, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, Paine, Patterson, Price, John H. Rice, Rogers, Schenck, Sloan, Stevens, Stilwell, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William D. Washburn, Welker, Woodbridge, and Wright—60.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask leave of absence until next Monday.

No objection was made, and the leave of absence was granted.

Mr. STROUSE. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the gentleman cannot interrupt the morning hour.

Mr. STROUSE. Is it still the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will last until the time for taking a recess, and for nine minutes of the evening session.

ABOLITION OF THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. DARLING, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, made an adverse report on a resolution in reference to abolishing the Marine corps and substituting soldiers of the Army therefor.

The report was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DARLING, from the same committee, reported the following resolution; which was referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House one thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs in reference to abolishing the Marine corps and substituting therefor soldiers of the Army.

RICHARD M. BOUTON AND HARRIET M. FISHER.

Mr. PHELPS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, a copy of the communication addressed by Richard M. Bouton and Harriet M. Fisher to the Secretary of the Navy in the month of February, 1863, with the indorsement thereon of Admiral Dahlgren, then chief of ordnance.

EDWARD ST. CLAIR CLARKE.

Mr. PHELPS, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the Senate No. 238, for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke.

The bill was read. It directs that in the settlement of the accounts of Edward St. Clair Clarke, as assistant paymaster United States Navy, there shall be allowed him the sum of $4,022, on account of the loss of that amount of public funds in his hands by theft on the night of the 9th of May, 1863, said loss being without neglect or fault on the part of said Clarke.

Mr. PHELPS. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read. The committee arrive at the conclusion from the testimony and the findings of a naval court of inquiry that the loss for which the bill provides relief was the result of most gross and culpable neglect of duty on the part of the captain and watch officers of the United States steamer Sumter while lying at the Brooklyn navy-yard for repairs, and of the robbery and desertion of the mate and quartermaster of that vessel on the 9th of May, 1863.

They hold that the claimant was blameless in the affair. They report further that the discipline of the service has been vindicated by the dismissal of five of the officers of the Sumter for neglect of duty in connection with this transaction; and they consider that great injustice would be inflicted upon the claimant by holding him responsible for a loss which was occasioned by the crime of two petty officers.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SCOFIELD. What committee does this bill come from?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SCOFIELD. What have they to do with a claim of this kind?

The SPEAKER. It was referred to them.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I hope the bill will be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PHELPS] yield for that motion to be made?

Mr. PHELPS. No, sir.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The Committee on Naval

Affairs has nothing to do with claims of this kind.

Mr. PHELPS. The bill was originally reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate. It passed the Senate, and was referred by the House to its Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SCOFIELD. There are a great many paymasters claiming relief under similar circumstances, and there ought to be some uniform rule upon the subject.

Mr. PHELPS. As the morning hour has nearly expired, I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STROUSE. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to yield to me for a single moment.

Mr. PHELPS. For what purpose?

Mr. STROUSE. To-morrow is the 22d of February, and I desire to move that the House adjourn over.

Mr. PHELPS. I cannot yield for that purpose. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being upon the passage of the bill, it was put; and there were—ayes 46, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. PHELPS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 55, nays 25, not voting 110; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Campbell, Sidney Clarke, Cooper, Davis, Eggleston, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jenckes, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Ladin, Le Blond, Leftwich, McKee, McKuer, Niblack, Noell, O'Neill, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Schenck, Spalding, Strouse, Taber, Thayer, Upson, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, and Williams—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Baker, Broomall, Cobb, Finck, Abner C. Harding, Hawkins, Hill, John H. Hubbard, Hunter, Julian, George V. Lawrence, Lynch, Maynard, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Paine, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Hamilton Ward, William B. Washburn, and James F. Wilson—25.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blow, Boutwell, Bromwell, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Dawson, DeFrees, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hise, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Koontz, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Orth, Patterson, Plants, Pomeroi, Radford, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—110.

No quorum voted.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived during the roll call, at the termination of the call, the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, giving information of States which have ratified the amendment to the Constitution proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, in addition to those named in his report, which was communicated in my message of the 16th instant, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 15th instant.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, February 20, 1867.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the message and accompanying report be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Governor of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, announcing the ratification by that State of the constitutional amendment; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SHIP-BUILDING INTEREST OF MAINE.

Mr. PIKE, by unanimous consent, presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine relative to the ship-building interests of that State; which were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the law:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House two thousand copies of the tariff bill, as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

ABANDONED PROPERTY IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to this House all information in the War Department, and particularly such as may be in possession of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, relative to property seized or taken possession of by the Government or its agents in the State of Louisiana; and that there be embraced in said report the kind of property, whether abandoned or confiscable, names of the reputed owners, date of seizure, assessment value, amount of profits received from rents or otherwise; what amount of such property has been restored to said reputed owners, when the same was restored, by whom and upon whose order; and also all the papers in the cases of Duncan F. Kenner and J. W. Zachary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution providing for surveys and estimates for a bridge across the Potomac, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause a survey to be made by a competent engineer of the ground and river at and near the Aqueduct bridge, in this District, and to report upon the practicability of constructing there a bridge across the Potomac without obstructing the navigation of the river, and the probable cost thereof, separately estimating for a common bridge and a bridge both for railway and common travel; also to examine and report touching like bridges at or near the Long bridge, and whether the same can be there built so as to avoid obstruction to navigation thereby, and the probable cost thereof; said report to be made at the earliest day practicable.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CLINTON BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. There is upon the Speaker's table an amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 965, declaring Clinton bridge, across the Mississippi river at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route. It is merely an amendment to correct a clerical error; and I ask consent to take it from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time.

No objection was made.

The amendment was to strike out in line five, page 2, the word "legislation" and insert the word "litigation."

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOSSSES BY LOYAL INDIANS.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, in favor of providing for the payment of certain awards for losses sustained by loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, urging Congress to pass the bill admitting Colorado as a State, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding; which were referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL SETH EASTMAN.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs a joint resolution, which I think the House will see the propriety of passing at once, if it is to be passed at all. The joint resolution is one authorizing the employment of Brevet Brigadier General Seth Eastman in the decoration of the Capitol. I will ask that the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that, if the President shall deem it proper to assign Brevet Brigadier General Seth Eastman, of the United States Army, now on the retired list, to duty so as to entitle him to the full pay, emoluments, and allowances of his lineal rank, it shall be competent to have such duty consist in the employment of said officer in the execution, under the supervision of the architect of the Capitol, of painting after his own design for the decoration of the rooms of the Committees on Indian Affairs, and the Committees on Military Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives, and other parts of the Capitol; and no additional compensation for such services is to be paid to said Eastman beyond his full pay, emoluments, and allowances as an officer as aforesaid.

Mr. CULLOM. I object to the introduction of the joint resolution.

R. W. JONES.

On motion of Mr. DELANO, the Committee of Claims were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of R. W. Jones; and leave was granted the petitioner to withdraw his papers.

RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. STOKES. I ask unanimous consent to present the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, asking Congress to grant land to aid in the construction of a railroad; which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inform the gentleman that copies of the same joint resolutions have been already twice presented, referred, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOKES. Then I withdraw it.

TAX BILL.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I desire to propound an inquiry to the Chair. I am extremely desirous that the House shall determine to sit out the tax bill to-night. If this should not be done, I desire to know whether it would be in order in the morning to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, so that it may be considered in the House, members offering their amendments and moving the previous question upon them, thus bringing the House to a direct vote. If we proceed hereafter at the rate we have been going on heretofore I fear that we shall not get through the bill at this session.

The SPEAKER. It will be in order to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the tax bill, and either put it on its passage immediately or consider it in the House, under such restrictions as the House may see fit to impose. This could be done under a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I do not propose to make that motion to-night; but, I hope that members will determine to sit the bill out to-night. The tariff bill has not yet been touched by this House; and unless that bill can be passed as well as this at the present session, it is scarcely worth while to pass either, as they are connected with and dependent upon each other.

EMPLOYÉS IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the act of August 26, 1842, a list of clerks, messengers, &c., in that Department, with their compensation, &c.; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD ST. CLAIR CLARKE.

Mr. THAYER. I call for the regular order. The SPEAKER. Nine minutes of the morning hour remain; and the first business in order is the consideration of the bill (S. No. 283) for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. On the arrival of the hour for the recess this afternoon the House had voted by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill; but that vote showed no quorum present.

Mr. PHELPS. I move a reconsideration of the vote ordering the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. If the reconsideration be agreed to, I propose to withdraw the call for yeas and nays.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. PHELPS. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays; and I ask that the bill be again read for the information of members who were not present when it was last reported.

The bill was read.

Mr. PHELPS. I wish to state in a few words the facts of this case, which are very simple. Mr. Clarke was a paymaster of the United States on board the steamer Sumter, which in 1863 was undergoing repairs at the Brooklyn navy-yard. One night a burglary was committed by two of the petty officers of that ship. The safe with its contents was abstracted. No suspicion of any connection with that crime has ever rested upon this paymaster. The Senate committee and the committee of this House concur in absolving him from any blame whatever in regard to the transaction. The occurrence resulted from the culpable neglect of the captain and the watch officers of that steamer. The discipline of the service has been vindicated by the dismissal of those officers; and there is no justice in holding this gentleman responsible for the misconduct of parties who have been already punished.

The bill was passed.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALBERT GREENLEAF.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Albert Greenleaf; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported adversely upon the following, which were laid upon the table: memorial of Norman Wiard; memorial of Robert L. May; joint resolution (H. R. No. 177) for the relief of Benjamin Moore Dove.

NEW SITE FOR NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, in response to a resolution of the House I submit the following joint resolution:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a board of not less than three competent officers, whose duty it shall be to examine into all the facts connected with the location of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, with a view to the expediency of removing the same to a locality more advantageous to the Government of the United States; and also to make careful examination and survey of the harbor of New London, Connecticut, and of Newport, Rhode Island, with a view to the advantages presented by each for the location of said Naval Academy, and to report all the facts to the Fortieth Congress, together with such recommendation in the premises as they shall deem will best promote the public interest.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROSS. Is it in order in this way to authorize a report to be made to the Fortieth Congress?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Retaining my right to the floor, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, the author of the original resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I offer the following substitute:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House be authorized and directed to appoint a committee, consisting of three members, whose duty it shall be to make careful examination at New London, Connecticut, and Newport, Rhode Island, with a view to the advantages presented by each of said sites for the permanent location of the United States Naval Academy, and with a view to the removal of that institution from Annapolis. That the said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to call upon the Secretary of the Navy for the detail of any one or more officers of the Navy to assist in the investigation, and for such information as the files of his Department may afford; and that the said committee report all the facts, with their conclusions, to the House of Representatives of the Fortieth Congress, together with such recommendations in the premises as may best subserve the public interests.

Mr. GRINNELL. I hope the commission will be instructed to examine some point upon our western lakes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not yield to the gentleman. There is no wool in this question.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an explanation of the amendment I offer. In the first place I have followed the resolution reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs in indicating only two points. My impression is other points ought to be named, or there should be some general provision that they may examine any sites at the discretion of the committee. Probably some general language of that kind would be better unless it is thought advisable to name certain other points. Wiscasset in Maine has been mentioned as a place that ought to be examined. Some point on the North river, or the Hudson river, is suggested. Neversink in New Jersey also has been named. Other places may be indicated. There is no difficulty in my agreeing to any suggestion of that kind which is to give greater breadth to the inquiry.

Now, as to the form of the resolution as a substitute for that presented by the Committee on Naval Affairs. They propose the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint three naval officers to examine the facts about Annapolis and these other points indicated, and report. What will that report be? The Navy Department is well understood to be in favor of keeping this institution at Annapolis, and if any commission consisting of three officers of the Navy be selected by the Secretary of the Navy and charged with this duty, it will be simply to make a report which will whitewash Annapolis. I object to any such inquiry if that is to be the scope of it, and these are to be the instrumentalities alone by which the inquiry is to be made. I think that the examination would be better made by a committee of Congress or a commission of citizens.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; and the joint resolution goes over till Tuesday morning next.

REDEMPTION OF SEVEN-THIRTIES.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue United States notes not bearing interest, and not exceeding $500,000,000 in amount, to redeem the seven-thirty notes as they become due; and that the committee be authorized to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER stated that in consequence of the absence to-night of all the members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills he would ask unanimous consent to appoint temporarily on that committee Mr. WELKER, as there were a number of bills to be examined.

No objection being made, the appointment was accordingly made.

TAX BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. When we have left off, the Clerk had commenced reading section ten, I believe.

Mr. MILLER. I believe not. Amendments were in order to the preceding paragraph in relation to stamp duties. I move to amend that paragraph by adding the following:

And also all single bills, due bills, promissory notes, and receipts, where the sum is under $100, shall be exempt from stamp duty.

I will state that notes on demand for a less amount than $100 require no stamp, and I wish to put receipts on the same footing. I will add that it is a great inconvenience to be obliged to put stamps on these receipts, and I hope the amendment will not be objected to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment. In the first place, receipts have already been stricken out by a vote which the record shows was adopted last evening, though nobody knew it. Another objection is that if receipts for $100 and less do not require a stamp, a man can pay a $1,000 in ten payments of $100 each. We might as well strike out the whole.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the act amendatory to the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, approved July 13, 1866, be amended as follows, namely:

Mr. HAWKINS. I move the following amendment:

At the end of line six insert:

That section one be amended by adding thereto the following: Provided, That there shall be exempt from tax, in the hands of actual producers of cotton in the United States, five bales of cotton; and it shall be the duty of the revenue assessor of the district where such cotton is produced, to designate the same by appropriate marks and brands, and to give the producer a permit to remove the same, stating in the permit the marks and brands.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment. In the first place, I do not exactly understand what section that applies to.

The CLERK. At the end of line six, section one.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. What tax bill? Section ten of this bill amends the act of the 30th of June, 1864.

Mr. HAWKINS. It reads, "the act amendatory thereto."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. This is simply in the act of 1866, not 1864.

Mr. HAWKINS. It speaks of the act amendatory to the act of 1864. The object I have in introducing this amendment is simply to call the attention of the House to a few facts connected with the production of cotton at this time. Prior to the war we had almost a monopoly in the production of this article in this country; but now, instead of four million bales of cotton per annum, the country has produced during the past year a very little over one million and a half. The question is whether it is good policy on the part of this Government to impose such a tax on that article at a time when Great Britain has been making such a prodigious struggle to supply her own and other countries with the article and to impede the growth of the cultivation of it in this country. Now, I am aware of the fact that it was not for the purpose of inflicting any wrong or injury upon the cotton interest that the present tax was imposed, but it was with the hope of realizing a revenue to the Government.

May I venture to call the attention of the House to a very important fact in connection with this subject. We have dependent upon this single, solitary production of the earth nearly four million people, perhaps now the poorest on the face of the earth, and who must depend to a very great extent, if not almost entirely, upon the growth of this article for their support in the future. When I say this, I refer to the colored population of the South, to say nothing of the impoverished condition of thousands and hundreds of thousands of white people who produce a small quantity of cotton. I have lived all my life in a district which produces this article to a limited extent, and I profess to know something in regard to the profits derived from its production, and I say here without fear of successful contradiction that there is not a crop raised anywhere in the United States that does not yield as much profit as a crop of cotton. I have lived in the midst of it all my life, and I never yet saw the day when I could have been induced to engage in the production of this article. I say to the House that if this tax is continued, the production of this article will be actually suppressed, and you will find that instead of enhancing the revenue of the Government you will actually diminish it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. As I understand it, it simply proposes to take off the tax of three cents a pound on cotton which was imposed at the last session after a great deal of discussion. If this tax is to be taken off on the production of five bales, it should be taken off entirely, because a great amount of the cotton is produced on plantations where but a small quantity is raised. I was opposed at the last session of Congress to the tax upon cotton, but the House by a very decided vote imposed it, and it is simply a question now whether we shall take off the tax of three cents a pound on cotton, which I think we cannot afford to do at this time.

The question was taken on Mr. HAWKINS's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I offer the following amendment:

Amend section seventy-nine, paragraph sixteen, by inserting after the words "one hundred dollars," the following:

For distillers whose annual product is less than one hundred barrels; and the sum of $500 for distillers whose annual product exceeds one hundred barrels and is less than five hundred barrels; and the sum of $1,000 for distillers whose annual product exceeds five hundred barrels; said license tax to be assessed quarterly, and to be effective only for three months.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order. I think that amendment is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out lines ten, eleven, and twelve, which are as follows:

By adding to the paragraph relating to "iron bridges and casting for iron bridges" the words "thimble-skins and pipe-boxes made of iron."

I offer that amendment by the instruction of the committee. We propose to put those articles on the free list.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, for information, to what law does this amendment refer? In the law of 1864 I find no section number ten that refers to any such subject as this; neither do I find any such section in the act of 1866.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. What subject?

Mr. DAVIS. The subject of distilled spirits.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a question of order. We cannot hear anything that the honorable gentleman is saying. If the honorable gentleman from New York and the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts desire to hold a private conversation, they ought to retire to the cloak-room. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I am only seeking information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order, as there is no question before the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I rose for the purpose of getting some information in regard to the subject now before the committee.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I refer the gentleman to page 49, on which he will find inserted on the free list, "iron bridges and castings for iron bridges," in the ninety-first section, which is the tenth section of the law of July 13, 1866, amending the law of June 30, 1864.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I propose to amend section eleven, in lines one and two, by striking out the words "from and after the passage of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof "on and after the 1st of March, 1867;" so that it will read:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That on and after the 1st of March, 1867, the articles and products hereinafter enumerated shall be exempt from internal tax, namely:

Mr. MOORHEAD. Do you not mean the 1st of April?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. No; the 1st of March. The object is to have the bill go into operation on the first of the month, so as not to divide a month; the returns being made for the even month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move further to amend that clause by inserting after "1867" the words "in addition to the articles now exempt by law."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I see no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered, The Clerk read as follows:

Alcoholic and ethereal vegetable extracts used solely for medicinal purposes.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to move to amend this clause by inserting after the word "extracts" the words "when solid and." Whisky, which is a vegetable extract, is a fluid; and the committee propose to limit the operation of this provision to solid extracts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to insert after the clause just read "carbolic acids, and carbolate of lime used solely for disinfectants."

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope the Committee of the Whole will not indulge in amendments, but stick to the bill as reported. We will never get through the bill if we keep making amendments to it all the time. And besides I consider this an improper amendment. The Committee of Ways and Means endeavored to exempt everything they possibly could to relieve manufactures and encourage the industry of the country. We do not think there is room for any more exemption and do justice to the needs of the Government. It is exceedingly important that this bill should pass, and I hope the committee will sit to-night until the bill is passed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I only hope my colleague on the committee [Mr. MOORHEAD] has not already consumed too much time. [Laughter.] In regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] I will say the articles embraced in it yield very little revenue, and I think there can be no sort of objection to introducing them into the free list.

The amendment of Mr. PIKE was agreed to.

Mr. DEMING. I had prepared an amendment to section one hundred and five of the original law, which I wanted to have inserted in this bill just after the provision relating to section ninety. I did not offer the amendment at the proper time because I was informed, and incorrectly as I now understand, that that provision had been transferred to another portion of the bill; I now ask permission to return to that portion of the bill for the purpose of offering the amendment I have prepared.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I object to going back; I want to go on.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Bale rope, seines, twine, and lines of all kinds.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend this clause by inserting after the word "seines" the words "and netting for seines."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to insert after the clause just read "cords, tassels, braids, fringes, gimps, laces, ladies' dress trimmings, and ribbons."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after the clause of the bill last read "brush blocks."

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Canned and preserved fruits, not including shell-fish;

Carpet-bag and caba frames.

Mr. DODGE. I move to insert in the clause relating to canned and preserved meats, after the word "preserved," the words "vegetables and fruits."

Mr. MOORHEAD. As the clause relating to carpet-bags and caba frames has now been read, I object to going back.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to insert after the last clause read "canned and preserved vegetables and fruits."

Mr. PAINE. I do not know but what I shall vote for this amendment; but I would like the gentleman from New York [Mr. DODGE] to assure me that it is not a plan of his to evade the duty on brandy by attempting to import it in the form of brandy peaches. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Casks, barrels, tanks, and kitts made of wood, including cooperage of all kinds, and packing-boxes, and match-boxes, whether made of wood or other materials, and on match-boxes heretofore made on which a tax has not been paid.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend this clause by inserting after the words "cooperage of all kinds" the words "bungs and plugs." [Laughter.]

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman means barrel bungs and plugs, I suppose?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir. And I will state that, although gentlemen laugh, it is a very important interest.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I would inquire of the acting chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] if he moves these amendments on his own motion or by direction of the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. By direction of the committee.

Mr. MOORHEAD. All I have to say is that I have attended the meetings of the committee pretty regularly, and I never heard of them before.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to further amend the clause by inserting after the words "packing boxes" the words "nest boxes."

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Not "nesteggs?" [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. No, sir. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend by inserting after the words "made of wood or" the word "any;" so that it will read "made of wood or any other materials."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose that amendment; I do not think it necessary.

Mr. DODGE. Very well; I withdraw it.

Mr. ROSS. I move to strike out this entire claim as amended. I do not see why these articles should be exempted from taxation any more than many other articles which are taxed. It only produces complication in the law, and I think it better be stricken out.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. McKEE. I move to amend the clause by inserting after the word "casks" the word "churns." That is a very important article in our country.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I move still further to amend this clause by inserting after the words "packing boxes" the words "cigar boxes." I presume they are probably included in the term "packing boxes;" but to remove all doubt I suggest that the words "cigar boxes" should be inserted.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TAYLOR] will not be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move to amend by inserting after the words "packing boxes" the words "cheese boxes."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting after the words "made of wood or other materials" the words "wooden hames, plow-beams, split-bottomed chairs, and turned materials for the same unmanufactured, and saddle-trees made of wood."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to amend by inserting after the word "barrels" the word "baskets." Baskets are largely used by farmers.

Mr. SPALDING. I would ask the gentleman if he means wooden baskets?

Mr. BERGEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPALDING. Then the amendment should be modified.

Mr. BERGEN. I modify it so as to read "wooden baskets."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Castings of iron, copper, or brass used for machinery, cars, or scales, and castings used for any other article upon which a tax is assessed and paid on the article of which the casting is a part.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend this clause, so that it shall read as follows:

Castings of iron, copper, or brass made for machinery, cars, or scales, and castings made to form a part of any article upon which in the finished state a tax is assessed and paid.

This is merely a change of the phraseology to render the meaning of the clause more clear.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise to oppose the amendment. This clause was considered in the Committee of Ways and Means when the chairman of the committee [Mr. MORRILL] was present, and after a great deal of discussion it was agreed upon and directed to be reported in the language used in the bill. I am opposed to amendments made upon the motion of one member of the Committee of Ways and Means; and I hope the Committee of the Whole will vote them down.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to say—

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order upon this amendment, it having already been debated for and against.

Mr. DAWES. Then I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of my colleague [Mr. Hooper] to this fact: I find in this clause castings to be used for scales put down in the free list, and on the very next page of this bill I find scales put down in the free list also.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The one refers to castings before they are put in scales; the other to scales after they are completed.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cast-iron hollow-ware, and cast-iron hollow-ware tinned, enameled, japanned, or galvanized.

Mr. MYERS. I move after line eighteen to insert "stoves."

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in the present law stoves and hollow-ware are taxed alike. So they have been in all our tax laws hitherto. Hollow-ware is exempted, while stoves are not. If we make this discrimination against stoves they will be increased in price all over the country.

Mr. DARLING. The gentleman will observe we have already taken the tax off the castings that go into the stoves, so if we now take the tax off the stoves there will be no tax at all.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The revenue tax from stoves and hollow-ware last year was $279,631, the largest portion being from stoves. I wish the committee to understand this.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to say that was the revenue from stoves and hollow-ware, and the largest part came from hollow-ware. If it was thought proper in former bills that they should go together, I do not see why, when the tax is taken off one, it should not be taken off the other. The man who makes hollow-ware and stoves will have advantage of the man who only makes stoves. Everybody will admit that cheap stoves will be a general blessing.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EGGLESTON. To accommodate my friend from Pennsylvania, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clock trimmings, namely: clock work, clock pillars, snash fastenings for clocks, winding keys, verges, and pendulum rods.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to strike that out, and I should like to hear some good reason why clock trimmings should be exempted.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I oppose that amendment, and I will state as a reason why these parts of a clock should be exempted, that the clock itself is taxed.

Mr. THAYER. Is the committee willing to carry that out to its logical consequences?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. As far as it is proper.

Mr. DEMING. I move to strike out the last word. I am somewhat familiar with the articles enumerated in this paragraph. The principal part of these articles are made in my district. Each separate patentee of a clock requires different articles of this kind. They never enter into the market. They are made for different patentees. They go into the clock and the clock is taxed, and the Commissioner has repeatedly held that these articles should be exempted from taxation because they do not go into the market, but are made for the patentees.

Mr. DODGE. These articles compose those clocks which go ticking all over the West.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I am satisfied with the explanation, and withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing made from materials that have been assessed and paid a tax, not including articles woven on frames or knitted.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike that out and insert the following:

Clothing or articles of dress not specially enumerated, made by sewing for use of men, women, or children, from cloths or fabrics on which a duty has been paid.

It makes it more definite.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to insert "home-made clothing, and articles woven or knitted for the use of the maker."

Mr. ALLISON. They are exempted now. All manufacturers are exempted except over $1,000 a year.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coffee-mills and coffee-grinders and roasters.

Mr. PRICE. I move to insert:

Grinders of coffee, with hand-mills, only by retail dealers for their own use where the amount so ground does not reach the value of $500 in any one year.

Mr. FARQUHAR. For their own use and retail.

Mr. PRICE. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN. I move to strike out the word "and," and after the word "mills" to insert "apple-paring machines." I believe this amendment has the consent of the committee. It seems to me to be a very important article, one necessary to every family of farmers, and every one who has an apple orchard. Moreover, many of the articles entering into its manufacture are already taxed.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Copper bottoms for articles used for domestic and culinary purposes;

Doors, window sash, blinds, frames, and sills of whatever material;

Drain, gas, and water pipe made of wood, iron, cement, or any other material.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert at the end of the last line "sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot."

Mr. DODGE. Add "bar lead."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The reason for this is, the cost of changing lead into sheet pipe, or shot is so trifling that there is a doubt about the tax. In some instances it is claimed as free by not adding five per cent. to the value, while in other cases, where the work is a little more expensive, it exceeds five per cent. This was recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the committee to a further amendment of the last paragraph by adding the words "metals excepted;" so that it will read "drain, gas, and water pipe made of wood, cement, or any other material, metals excepted."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to insert after the word "gas" the word "sewer;" so as to read "drain, gas, sewer, and water pipe made of wood," &c.

Mr. ALLISON. That is already exempted by the law of last year.

Mr. SPALDING. It can do no hurt at all events.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that fire-brick, drain tile, cement, drain and sewer pipes are now on the free list.

Mr. SPALDING. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DODGE. I move to insert after the word "lead," in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the words "bar lead." They always go together.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I would like to hear the paragraph read as amended.

The Clerk read the amended paragraph as follows:

Drain, gas, and water pipe, made of wood, iron, cement, or any other material, metals excepted, sheet lead, lead pipe, and shot.

Mr. DEMING. I move to add as a new paragraph: "Envelopes used for inclosing letters and newspapers."

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend the amendment by adding "and bank checks."

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be adopted.

Mr. SPALDING. I will withdraw mine, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his.

Mr. DEMING. Envelopes enter into universal use, and it is public policy to increase their consumption.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Frames and handles for saws and buck-saws.

Mr. MYERS. I move to insert after the last item, as a separate paragraph, "glass hollow-ware." This ware is not made by machinery, but, if I may so describe it, by hand and mouth. And, sir, if this Congress does not hurry along a little faster, so that we may pass the tariff bill, our constituents may have to live from hand to mouth. I hope the amendment will pass.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I oppose the amendment, and I hope we may get along faster.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glue and gelatine, of all descriptions, in the solid state;

Glue and cement made wholly or in part of glue in the liquid state;

Horse-rakes and tedders.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the word "and" after "horse-rakes" and to insert the words "horse-powers;" also to add after the word "tedders" the words "hames, scythe snaths and hay-forks."

Mr. LONGYEAR. I move to add the word "hoes."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I accept that.

Mr. DELANO. I move to add "portable grinding-mills."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I accept that.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to insert after line thirty-six the words "hard-wood moldings." I will simply explain the effect of the present law on these molders. They are principally Germans, who are obliged to pay a tax on their manufactures, while the large cabinet-makers are exempt from tax on the moldings they make themselves, and only pay a tax on the manufactured article. I have a petition in reference to this subject from a member of German molders of New York asking this exemption, as the effect of the present law is to exempt this article in the hands of the large manufacturers and entirely destroy their business. It seems to be entirely just and proper that they should be exempt.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out lines thirty-seven and thirty-eight, as follows:

"Horse-blankets, on which a tax has been once assessed and paid, when lined, trimmed, or made up and fitted for use;" and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Horse blankets made from cloth, on which a tax or duty has been paid.

I will state that the amendment is merely verbal, to make the phraseology more concise.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move now to strike out the whole paragraph. If there be a class of people in the United States who can pay taxes, those who have these fine blankets for their horses can afford to do it. I am willing to do it for one.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment. The blanket itself has paid a tax. This refers to the mere trimming of the blanket. The material itself has paid a tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Leather of all descriptions, and goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, tanned or partially tanned, curried, finished or in the rough.

Mr. HOOVER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend that paragraph by inserting after the word "goat," in the first line, the word "deer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move now to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I apprehend from the manner in which we are making appropriations of money almost every day that the Government, when it comes to pay, will want to have some funds coming into the Treasury wherewith to make payments. I am very anxious at the same time to relieve the industry of the country as much as possible, but when I see a branch of manufacturing from which we collected last year a revenue of $4,000,000 placed on the free list, it strikes me with amazement that the committee should have proposed this exemption. There is no other branch of manufacturing from which so large an amount of revenue can be collected at so small an expense to the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that we collected from these articles last year $5,384,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Very well; so much the better. The number of tanners and curriers is comparatively small in view of the immense amount of business that is done, and hence there is very little expense to the Government in collecting this money. This yields an immense revenue, and it not only does that, but that revenue is derived from an article that goes into universal consumption, so that the whole community, without any oppression or any invidious distinction between any classes or interests, pays something toward this $5,000,000.

I hope that we shall not put this immense source of revenue into the free list. There are thousands of other articles of manufacture that much better deserve encouragement, and much better deserve to be put on the free list than this, which not only affords an immense revenue to the Government, but which, I undertake to say, for the last four years has afforded a larger profit to the men who are engaged in it than any other pursuit except it may be, perhaps, the manufacturing of cotton and woolens in some of the New England factories. I believe this would be most unjust to the articles not exempted, and most unwise so far as the great object is concerned of obtaining revenue in the cheapest possible manner to the Government, and of obtaining it in such a way as shall work no injustice to any particular class of the community, or any particular interest in the community.

I hope the committee will examine this matter and will strike out this paragraph. It seems to me that we ought to do it, and I hope it will be done.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to oppose the amendment. I think if anything is to be exempted it should be leather. Nothing enters into the consumption of the people so generally and nothing is so important to their welfare. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word of the paragraph proposed to be stricken out. I hope, on the other hand, that the amendment will be adopted. I confess I have found great difficulty in ascertaining or determining how it is that an interest of this sort, so prosperous, and which I believe has never been complaining, and which yields so largely to the revenue of the country, should be singled out as a special object of favor while others equally important, as iron, for instance, in some of its coarser forms, should be still subject to taxation.

Now, sir, the proceeds of the tax on this article are, as has been stated by the gentleman from Iowa, nearly five and a half million dollars, and, as he very well suggests, may amount to $7,000,000 this year. I believe the idea of the Committee of Ways and Means was that we could spare some thirty or forty millions of the revenue heretofore raised by internal taxation. A reduction to that amount is, as I understand, proposed in this bill. But, why should one favored article alone receive the benefit of one fifth, one sixth, or one seventh of this reduction? It seems to me that the relief ought to be distributed. At any rate we should be furnished with some reason why this article is to be so specially favored.

Mr. LAFLIN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "tanned or partially tanned." Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by my colleague, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] If I correctly understand the matter, all these tax bills proceed upon the principle that the tax imposed upon each article comes eventually out of the consumer. Hence, the argument of my colleague with reference to the prosperity of this branch of business falls to the ground. The question which we have to consider is, who actually pays this tax?

This is an article the taxation upon which comes home directly to every person in the community, whether rich or poor. The man who is worth millions wears out no more leather than the poor laboring man whose daily wages are a dollar or a dollar and a half. If the principle which I have enunciated is correct, Congress owes it to the toiling men of the country to relieve them as far as possible of every species of taxation. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman's proposition is correct that this tax comes out of the consumer, why are the manufacturers here clamoring to be relieved from it?

Mr. LAFLIN. I said that that was the principle on which the bill was based. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. I wish to say that the Committee of Ways and Means thoroughly examined this question in all its bearings. It is true that the diminution of revenue resulting from the exemption of this article will be large; but we contemplated a reduction of taxation to a certain extent, and we knew no single article in which the masses of the community were so much interested as in the article of leather. Every man, every woman, every child in the country wears boots or shoes. Leather is used also in harness and in saddles of all kinds. It is used in every portion of the country and by everybody. If we are to enact an exemption of taxation for the benefit of the masses how can we perform so good a service as by taking off this tax on leather?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I can answer the gentleman. By taking the tax from cotton cloth, which everybody wears.

Mr. HOGAN. Everybody does not dress horses in cotton cloth. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. Everybody does not own a horse to wear harness.

Mr. HOGAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, you can accomplish nothing in the world without leather. [Laughter.] The committee, deeming this article one of the most important with regard to the universality of its use, have deemed it wise that it should be exempted entirely. The committee were of opinion that the sooner we could reduce taxation to the smallest possible number of articles the better it will be. Several of the large classes of manufactures will still pay large amounts of taxes. But as to the article of leather, which is used by everybody, the committee thought this exemption should be made. I hope that the Committee of the Whole will coincide in this particular with the Committee of Ways and Means. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. Like the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HOGAN,] I believe also in leather. But, sir, I did not intend to say a single word on this matter, and I should not do so now, but that I have been appealed to by several members around me to state what I know in reference to this question.

Now, sir, I have been a manufacturer of leather almost all my life; and I think that I know about the business sufficiently to talk understandingly upon it. But I would not claim exemption for that article, so far as I am concerned, upon any other ground than that which the committee place it upon; for I do not believe that the exemption would promote the interests of the manufacturer any more than it would the interests of the public. The committee will bear me witness that I have never said a single word to them upon this subject, and asked for a reduction because it was a hardship to the manufacturer. I have never asked for any reduction upon any other ground than as a relief to the consumer. If the committee are right in saying that it is the duty of the Government to relieve the people of the burdens of taxation first upon all articles of general consumption, then surely they are justified in putting leather upon the free list; for you cannot name any article in more general use with all parties, the poor and the rich, men, women, and children.

Mr. ALLISON. I would like my friend from Massachusetts, as a manufacturer of leather, to inform us whether the effect of taking off this tax would be to reduce the price of leather.

Mr. ALLEY. Yes, sir; the effect would be to reduce the price of leather just to the amount of the tax and no more.

I have always contended, as the committee well understand, that this tax comes out of the consumer. I have always told all the manufacturers who have appealed to me—and most of them believe that this tax comes out of them—that they have never paid a dollar of it; that it comes out of the consumer. For this reason, if the Government can spare the amount of revenue which has been derived from this article, I am rather in favor of the tax being taken off; not that I believe this will promote in the slightest degree the interests of the tanners. I believe that those with whom I have conversed will all bear me witness that I have uniformly expressed my belief that these taxes come out of the consumer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] is mistaken in saying that there has been no complaint on this subject. There has been great complaint from the manufacturers. They have sent to this House numerous petitions, some of which I have myself presented. From me the manufacturers have invariably received the reply that, while I did not believe the tax affected their interests, I was in favor of its being taken off because it affected the consumer; and this article of leather enters into the consumption of everybody in the country.

So far as regards the manufacturers, there is only one reason in favor of the removal or abatement of the tax, and that I think the committee will agree is a forcible one. It is that under the present tax the manufacturers are prevented from importing any leather whatever. They pay a duty of ten per cent. on hides, and then manufacture them into leather and pay a tax of five per cent. on the manufactured article, thus precluding the possibility of any export of leather to foreign countries. Previously to the imposition of this tax, and prior to the increase of duty on hides, which was formerly five per cent., the leather manufacturers made considerable exports. But now I believe not a single dollar's worth of leather is exported; if any is exported the amount is very small.

In regard to the remark of the gentleman that this interest is exceedingly prosperous, let me say—

Mr. SPALDING. I was just going to ask whether it was a living business? [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEY. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that during the last year no interest has suffered more than the leather interest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLEY. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. I desire to make one remark in regard to the proposed abolition of the duty on leather by putting it upon the free list.

It seems to me that the true way to reach the object which gentlemen around me seem to desire, namely, to reduce the cost of shoes and other articles made of leather, and used by the poorer portion of the community, is to abolish the duty upon the manufactured article and not upon this, which is really the raw material. Leather undoubtedly enters into a great many articles consumed by poor and rich alike; but I do not see how we are to reach the point indicated as particularly desirable by the gentleman from Massachusetts on my right [Mr. BANKS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HOGAN] by simply putting leather on the free list.

The way is to put boots, shoes, and articles consumed by the great mass of humanity, especially boots and shoes of the cheaper kind, on the free list, and then the manufacturers of these articles will be encouraged.

It may be true no leather is exported under the present duty; but the Government has no direct interest in exporting leather. It gets no duty on it.

I am touched by the disinterestedness of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ALLEY], who has just addressed the committee, and his willingness to pay this duty, although he states all the other manufacturers of the country besiege him with applications to have it removed. I do not think it is desirable to have this duty removed.

I wish to say one word more. It seems to me it is important this committee should know something more definitely than it does of the extent to which the putting of these articles upon the free list will affect the aggregate amount of revenue to be collected. It seems to me one of the duties of the Committee of Ways and Means is to report the aggregate amount expected to be received from each particular article on which tax is imposed, and then we will know how much we will lose by putting an article on the free list. We have no estimate of that sort, none but vague individual estimates. If the committee has made any such estimates they have not brought them before the House.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Chairman, what more direct way can we take to exempt these cheap articles of general consumption than by exempting the article from which they are manufactured? The man who manufactures the articles has to buy these materials and has to pay a price enhanced by the tax imposed upon the leather man. It may be reached as directly as by taking the tax off of these various articles of boots and shoes and saddles and all the others that have been mentioned. I am therefore for sustaining the committee in this matter. It goes more directly to the interest of the men who are burdened by taxation than almost any other measure which has been proposed. I hope those who are really the friends of the people, who have been oppressed by taxation and who have borne the burden of the war we have prosecuted, will show that friendship in voting for this measure. Let us at least try the experiment for one year. If we do not raise revenue enough next year we can put the tax on again.

Mr. ALLISON. The gentleman from New York desires some information in respect to the amount collected on this article, and I propose to give it to him. During the year 1866 there was collected on this article of leather alone $5,384,000. During the same year there was collected on boots and shoes manufactured of leather, which reach all these poor people, over six million dollars. For the purpose of relieving that class of people we reduced last year the tax from five per cent. to two per cent. on boots and shoes. It occurs to me it would be better to put boots and shoes in the list of exemptions. We will save to the revenue some $3,000,000, as compared with the proposition to exempt leather, as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, and in addition relieve the consumers of boots and shoes from this burden; that is, assuming the gentleman from New York to be correct, that the consumer pays this tax and not the manufacturer. I suggest that this paragraph be stricken out and boots and shoes inserted. By this amendment the reduction in the amount of revenue would be less than three million dollars, instead of $6,000,000, as will result from the exemption of leather.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I would be glad to hear what the gentleman proposes if we do not get sufficient money to pay our debts. It is without any question we will have to get a large amount of money. There is no doubt the revenue from every source will be less than it was during the past year, while our expenses do not diminish, and will probably be larger during the coming year than in the one that is past. It seems to me when we have a resource from which we can derive as large an amount of revenue as from these leather manufacturers, who are very few comparatively, and who are very rich, for I undertake to say the men who have capital invested in this business have derived more than fifty per cent. upon that capital yearly for the last three years—my friend from Massachusetts will agree with me in this—I say when we have such a resource we ought not to throw it away.

And there is another fact stated in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in reference to the experiment made last year of putting on the free list and reducing the revenue on various articles which entered into general use. He states that instead of reducing the price of the article, if it had any effect at all it increased it. The men who had control of the business kept the price up and put the money into their own pockets instead of contributing to the relief of the poor people.

This article of leather stands precisely in the same position as cotton and wool, and I want the gentlemen who are against imposing this tax upon the manufacture of leather to remember when the tariff bill comes into the House, and those who oppose it shall ask to have the tariff on cotton and woolen goods taken off—because the people who consume them are so numerous, and because we want to help everybody—I hope they will concur with us upon that proposition.

Now, I believe that the interests of the revenue require that this tax should be continued upon manufactured leather, and I am in favor of its being so continued; and I am in favor at the same time of putting boots and shoes and all articles manufactured out of leather upon the free list. All the additional cost of the leather is in the labor, and we ought certainly to protect labor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the gentleman from New York to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move it as an amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I think we had better take a vote on the first proposition, and then the gentleman can make his amendment. It seems to me we had better preserve the sources of revenue which the manufacture of leather furnishes, and I would like to take the sense of the committee on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question then is to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I move in lieu of that to strike out the paragraph and insert as follows:

Boots and shoes, shoestrings and shoe binding of leather or skin, and gloves of skin or leather.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out and insert takes precedence.

The question being put, no quorum voted. The Chair ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. ALLISON and THAYER.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 65.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes in the negative to make a quorum, and the amendment is agreed to. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HUMPHREY,] to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. SCHENCK. I raise the point of order that after striking out and inserting an entire paragraph it is not competent to strike out the inserted paragraph. It is only where a part has been stricken out that you can move to strike out the whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point. Striking out and inserting precludes the striking out again of the whole paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Legs of pianofortes, melodeons, and billiard tables.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to add the words "and spiral springs used for the manufacture of furniture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the words "legs of pianofortes, melodeons, and billiard-tables." These articles go with the manufacture of such things as are used only by the wealthy, articles of taste certainly, possibly of luxury, if not of dissipation. If there is anything in the principle of which we have heard so much, of increasing the revenue, it seems to me we should let these things pay taxes, so that those who buy pianofortes or melodeons or billiard-tables shall pay for their own legs. I do not know but this may be right, but it certainly has a very ugly, disagreeable look, and will make a very bad impression upon the eye of the tax-payers to find themselves taxed for their shirts, coats, and other articles of woolen and cotton manufacture, the necessities of life, while they see billiard-table legs and pianoforte legs exempt from taxation.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I wish to say to the gentleman that he probably does not understand the question as now presented.

Mr. MAYNARD. I concede I do not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. These pianoforte legs are manufactured as articles by themselves, and the makers of pianofortes buy them and place them on their instruments. Now the manufacturer of legs first pays a tax of five per cent., and then the maker of pianofortes pays an additional tax of five per cent. The only object of this exemption is that they shall not be twice taxed. The whole value of these articles when completed is taxed; the pianoforte maker pays a tax on the entire cost of the pianoforte, including these legs; and that being so, the object of the amendment is to avoid a double tax upon the legs, and to exempt from the tax the poor men who make them for the large manufacturers, leaving it to be paid by the latter class in the general tax upon the completed article.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out the last word, merely to get an opportunity to state that this amendment does not refer, as the gentleman from Tennessee seems to suppose, to the legs of the players, but to the legs of the instruments. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I lost the joke.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. And the object of the proposed exemption is merely to prevent the duplication of the tax upon the same articles. Billiard-tables pay a tax upon their whole cost; and the purpose of the amendment is to provide that where a poor workman makes billiard-table legs in his own house or shop for a large manufacturer he also shall not be required to pay a tax upon the legs.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to strike out "piano legs," for the purpose of saying a word. It seems to me that it is immaterial how many taxes are piled on to these articles; for they are all articles of luxury. My friend says that the poor people who make these legs for the large manufacturers have to pay the tax. Now, sir, that is not so. The consumers, the man who purchases the piano and the billiard-table and the man who plays upon them, pay the tax.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I do not say the workman pays the tax upon the piano or the billiard-table itself; but I say that where the legs are made separately the poor workmen who make them are required to pay a separate tax upon them.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Every cent of the tax that is put upon these articles is added to the prices of them when they are sold. There is no doubt about that. Pianoforte legs and billiard-table legs that are taxed sell for more than those that are not taxed, if there are any such. The articles named in this amendment are articles of luxury, and no matter if the taxes upon them are duplicated let him who plays pay; let him who dances play the fiddler. [Laughter.] I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] to strike out these articles. There are other things that had much better be put upon the free list than these; things that enter largely into the general consumption by the poor men of the country who cannot afford to buy pianos or to play billiards. Let us put those things upon the free list and tax these articles of luxury.

Mr. DAWES. I do not object to enlarging the free list as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois to any extent that the revenue will bear; but I hardly think it is worth while to pile up a double or treble tax upon any individual article for the sake of enlarging the free list by placing upon it these other articles. This is the first time that I have heard that doctrine advocated, and I hope that the amendment will not be adopted; that these articles may not be required to pay the tax twice over.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "sewing-machines." I think it altogether more appropriate to exempt those machines than to give a place upon the free list to pianos, billiard-tables, and other articles of luxury.

Mr. DAWES. Nobody asks to put pianos or melodeons or billiard-tables on the free list; but you might just as well tax the screws separately that enter into the piano, and then tax them again in the piano, as to tax these legs first as a separate manufacture and again as a part of the whole instrument. I go with the gentleman to place sewing-machines on the free list, but—

Mr. BAKER. That is the extent of my desire in the matter.

Mr. DAWES. When the gentleman makes that proposition he will find me helping him.

Mr. BAKER. If there is any hazard of the success of placing sewing-machines on the free list in this way I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman had better do so, and let the House first decide whether they want to tax these other articles.

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw it.

Mr. LYNCH. I renew the amendment. I think, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen who have opposed striking out these articles do not understand the effect of it. As I understand it, if these articles (the legs of pianos and billiard-tables) are placed on the free list, they will be made separately by small manufacturers and sold to the manufacturers of pianos and billiard-tables. But if you leave them to bear a double tax, the effect will be that the large manufacturers will make the legs themselves, paying only one tax of five per cent. upon the completed pianos or billiard-tables; while the men whose business it is to make the legs separately will be thrown entirely out of employment.

Here the committee rose informally; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the House No. 910, granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Dalles City, on the Columbia river, to Fort Boisé, on the Snake river; and bill of the House No. 1130, to amend section twelve, chapter two hundred and twenty-nine of the laws of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 620) for the relief of Joshua H. Butterworth, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. WELKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 421) to authorize the construction of a submerged tubular bridge across the Mississippi river, at the city of St. Louis;

An act (S. No. 581) granting a pension to Olivia W. Cannon;

An act (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Slocum;

An act (S. No. 558) for the relief of Mary A. Smith, of Johnson county, Tennessee, widow of Alexander D. Smith, deceased;

An act (S. No. 515) granting a pension to Mrs. Ernestine Becker;

An act (S. No. 556) for the relief of Caroline McGee, of Greene county, Tennessee, widow of Lemuel McGee, deceased; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 171) for the relief of Martha McCook.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole again resumed the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the words "billiard-tables." I suppose the facts are substantially as stated by the two gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES and Mr. HOOPER] who seem to take such an interest in this matter, that the manufacture of these legs was formerly the business of one class of craftsmen, while the manufacture of the completed table was the business of another class. Now, I can see no reason why the manufacture of the legs should not be taxed.

There are a great many manufactures which are composite in their character, and which must necessarily include to a greater or less extent the use of articles which have previously paid taxes on their manufacture. But these particular articles will, in the language of legislation, bear "a double tax" very well. As I have already remarked, billiard-tables are articles of taste, of luxury, of amusement, if not of dissipation, and those who use them can well afford to pay the tax upon them. These are the very articles that should be taxed, upon the very theory upon which our system of internal taxation is said to be based. You tax heavily the manufacture of whisky, because the man who wants to drink it will do so whether he has to pay ten cents or twenty-five cents per glass; and so you tax cigars heavily, because the man who smokes will buy them, whatever the tax may be upon them; and persons of wealth and leisure who spend their evenings in billiard-saloons can pay and will pay the tax. The tax falls upon the billiard-players at last, and it would be well if we could impose even a higher tax.

It is very objectionable to me to have these articles stand in the free list. Their appearance there will be odious in the eyes of the tax-payers. It will be one of those little things which will render them dissatisfied; not amounting to much in itself, but like many of the little ills, vexations, and nuisances of life, which cause more dissatisfaction than even more important things.

I withdraw the amendment to the amendment, and hope the whole clause will be stricken out.

The question recurred upon the motion to strike from the free list "legs of pianofortes, melodeons, and billiard-tables."

The motion was agreed to.

The clerk read as follows:

Licorice and licorice paste.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after the clause just read "Magnesium lamps." This is a new lamp used for signal lights, made with clock work, and constructed to burn magnesium wire. I hope they will be put upon the free list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Manufactures of jute.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to strike out the words "manufactures of jute." There is an old interest, but always a struggling one, in the West, particularly in the States of Missouri and Kentucky; the growth of hemp for manufacture. As a friend near me suggests, there might lately have been a great deal of it used and very properly. And there is a new and growing interest connected with the flax fiber in my own State and in all the western States, with which this jute manufacture comes directly in competition.

Now I have remarked that there has been a systematic effort from the very beginning to bring a pressure to bear upon Congress by manufacturers of jute and others connected with the jute interest, which, if it succeeds, must necessarily cripple and crush out this interest in the interior of our country. For instance, when they came upon the tariff question in the Senate, they succeeded in getting the tariff on Russian hemp reduced I believe from forty dollars to twenty-five dollars per ton; the tariff on Russian tow reduced from twenty-five dollars to ten dollars per ton, I think; and the tariff on jute from fifteen dollars to five dollars per ton. I do not know what the Committee of Ways and Means of this House have determined to do in relation to the tariff on these articles, whether to restore the rates or not.

Now, not satisfied with these reductions in the tariff, it is proposed in this bill that all the manufactures of jute shall be placed upon the free list, thus striking another blow at the production and manufacture of hemp and flax textiles in this country.

Now, let me state a fact in regard to the production of flax fiber alone in this country of which gentlemen may not be aware. The production has increased from 1860, when it was only two thousand tons, until 1866, when, according to the report, I think, the production in this country was forty-eight thousand tons. And it is estimated that there are about thirty thousand tons of flax straw which is capable of being manufactured into flax fiber if it had any protection, and used for manufactures at home, but which is now thrown away because of the competition with it of the manufactures of jute. And there seems to be a disposition here to encourage whatever is made by eastern manufacturers at the expense utterly of western interests.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to several of the amendments which the Committee of Ways and Means have made to the tariff bill as passed by the Senate. On the class of articles embracing that now under discussion the Committee of Ways and Means propose the following increase of the duties as fixed in the Senate bill:

On flax unmanufactured, twenty dollars per ton, instead of fifteen dollars.

On flax hackled, known as dressed line, forty dollars per ton, instead of thirty dollars.

On Russia hemp, unmanufactured, forty dollars per ton, instead of twenty-five dollars.

On Manila, Italian, and all other humps, unmanufactured, thirty dollars per ton, instead of twenty-five dollars.

On flax straw, three dollars per ton, instead of one dollar.

On the tow of flax or hemp, ten dollars per ton, instead of five dollars.

On jute, unmanufactured, and Sisal grass, and other vegetable fibers, not otherwise provided for, fifteen dollars per ton, instead of five dollars.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am very glad to learn what the gentleman has just stated. By taking from the free list the manufactures of jute we shall afford some further protection to the hemp and flax interests of the West. I am very glad to hear that the Committee of Ways and Means have done so well on the tariff.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Mr. Chairman, once already this evening I have called the attention of the House to the fact that, in order to do justice to the interests of the country, the tariff bill must be passed as well as this bill. But for the hope I still entertain that we shall pass the tariff bill, I could not vote for the proposition of this bill with reference to jute. If the tariff bill is not to be passed, then the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] should prevail. Those gentlemen who do not intend to vote for the tariff bill ought to vote against the exemption proposed in this bill. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not yet despair of the passage of the tariff bill.

The duties placed upon jute, as well as upon all our agricultural products, have not been properly regulated in the Senate bill. The bill as amended by the House committee places agriculture where it ought to be. The Committee of Ways and Means have proceeded upon the assumption that a prosperous agriculture furnishes the best home market for manufactures; that there is no way to build up a home market except by fostering the agricultural interests of the country. Relying upon this House to do us justice in the tariff bill I shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, though I should vote in favor of it if this bill were before us as an independent measure, unconnected with the tariff.

Mr. ALLISON. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of retaining this item in the exemption list for the reason that manufactures of jute are assimilated to the manufactures of flax, though the flax fabric costs about three times as much as the jute. But, in addition to this, the manufacture of jute, as I understand, enters largely into carpets, and when thus manufactured into carpeting pays a tax. Thus there is a duplication of taxes. I hope, therefore, that this manufacture will be exempt. It certainly should be, inasmuch as we exempted the flax fabric last year.

Mr. GRISWOLD. If I understand the matter correctly, the rate upon jute was fixed with reference to the tariff bill as now proposed, and if I am not misinformed the difference in the duties on unmanufactured jute and that on the manufactured article, as proposed in the tariff bill, is five per cent.; the duty on the raw material being twenty-five per cent., and on the manufactured article thirty per cent. I submit to the gentleman from Ohio that this is a difference so little that no one should object to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I propose to have read, with the permission of the House, some statistics upon this subject, which will show that this manufacture at home is not so insignificant as some gentlemen seem to think. I shall be content with reading this criticism of a western paper upon the internal revenue report:

The Clerk read as follows:

"In the report of Commissioner Wells on flax, hemp, and jute, and his tariff recommendations, he has ignored the needs of both western manufacturers and producers of this class of fibers. He has not only ignored their interests, but he has positively misstated or suppressed facts which might materially affect the projects of eastern manufacturers, the profits of importers, and the ocean-carrying trade with India. The relation of the producers and manufacturers of these fibers in the West to the eastern manufacturers and foreign producers is similar to that of the seed producers and consumers stated above.

"Illustrating Mr. Wells's fairness and accuracy, he states, in substance, that Indian hemp, or jute, is not analogous to, nor does not compete with, any of the products of the United States. It is a coarser, weaker, and far less flexible fiber than that of either flax or hemp. And yet he asserts that it can be worked on either hemp, flax, or tow machinery, and is especially adapted to the manufacture of coarse, heavy goods, such as gunny-cloth, gunny-bags, burlaps, canvas paddings, carpets, yarns, and other similar fabrics.

"Mr. Wells must have been very ignorant indeed, considering his opportunities for acquiring information, if he did not know that jute goods are extensively manufactured in the East and in Europe and sold as flax fabrics in our markets. He must have known that there is no imported fiber that comes so directly and extensively in competition with our flax and hemp products as jute.

"During the war, the importation of jute, gunny-bags, and gunny-cloth were interrupted, and an eastern demand for flax-tow sprung up, which was supplied, to a considerable extent, by the establishment of mills in the West for the preparation of tow from the tangled flax straw, hitherto permitted to rot, or burned on the farms, after threshing the seed from it. With this product jute and imported jute goods come directly in competition in the American market. And the production and manufacture of hemp is similarly affected by these importations. Jute, as Mr. Wells says, can be and is manufactured upon the same machinery as flax and hemp. To such an extent is it substituted for these fibers in eastern manufactures as to entirely destroy the market there for western prepared flax-tow. The annual waste of flax fiber in the West, resulting from this want of a paying market for the same, is estimated at thirty thousand tons.

"No one can doubt the ability of the West to supply all the flax and hemp fiber needed to meet the demand for the class of goods manufactured from jute. In 1865, the importations of jute and jute fabrics amounted to forty-five thousand seven hundred and seventy-four tons. Before the war, the State of Missouri alone produced nineteen thousand tons of hemp fiber. Kentucky is also a hemp-producing State. And there is no limit to the amount which may be produced in Illinois and other western States, both of hemp and flax, with adequate encouragement. Already Illinois is laying broad foundations for its culture; and it only requires a home market for the straw or prepared fiber to develop this branch of husbandry amazingly, and thus diversify and add to our resources for wealth.

"But with the thirty thousand tons of flax fiber now wasted in the West, because its consumption is supplanted by jute—and that is an under rather than an over estimate—together with the capacity for increased flax and hemp production which would develop on call, no existing manufacturing interest need suffer, no mill need stop, no hand need lie idle, in consequence of the exclusion of jute from the country. And since Mr. Wells seems so solicitous for the development of the manufacturing industry of the country, we may assure him and Congress that such protection of the western producer will result in the development of the western manufacture of home-grown fibrous material in precisely the same proportion to the demand for public consumption in this country of these coarse manufactures that the admission of jute, duty free, will develop the manufacture of that fiber.

"It is simply a question of whether we shall grow on our uncultivated cheap lands what we manufacture or not. Mr. Wells and the Senate Finance Committee seem to have an ear for the manufacturer, but not for the western producer. Shall more than one class of industry be developed here by the protection of the Government? Shall the money we send abroad be kept in the country to develop its industries and enrich its people? Shall we compel skilled labor, now supported abroad, to remove hither and consume and make a home market for our fibers and cereals?

"The western manufacturer of fibers is interested in securing protection for the producer against the importation of foreign fibers, because with the difference in transportation from the sea-board West against him he cannot compete with the eastern manufacturer in their use. He must therefore depend upon that grown at home; and the home grower must be protected from competition with cheap foreign fibers, if he produces a supply.

"The report of the Senate committee which, we understand, embraces substantially the recommendation of Mr. Wells in this respect, protects the manufacturers of the foreign fiber in this country from competition with foreign manufactures, but it does not adequately protect the domestic producers. Indeed in some cases existing tariffs are diminished. The tax proposed on Russia hemp is twenty-five dollars per ton; it is now forty dollars. On the tow of hemp, five dollars per ton; it is now ten dollars. On jute, Sisal grass, and other vegetable fibers, five dollars per ton; it is now fifteen dollars per ton. Thus it will be seen that what was bad for the home producer it is proposed to make worse.

"Contrast this proposed protection with what the experience of western manufacturers has proved necessary. We quote from a letter written by a prominent western manufacturer to our Senators in Congress: 'To give the West a fair chance in the adjustment of this question, in addition to the duties on manufactures there are needed duties on imported flax and flax-tow of at least fifty dollars per ton; the same, or nearly the same, on hemp and hemp-tow; and most of all, sixty dollars per ton on jute, and eighty dollars per ton on jute-buts, when the latter are imported separated from the finer portions of the fiber of the jute plant.'

"It is proper to say in this connection, that these 'jute-buts' are imported at a cost of two and a half cents per pound, and largely used in the manufacture of gunny-bags and other coarse material coming most directly in competition with western flax-tow, as prepared here for manufacture.

"Such is a fair presentation of the manner in which Mr. Wells, in his recommendations, regards or comprehends the best interests of the country, and the manner in which he labors for the general good. We regard it desirable that if a man is to be employed to collect and present facts and recommendations to Congress having so grave a bearing upon industrial interests, he should be both competent to comprehend and honest enough to give all the facts relating to the matter he attempts to investigate and discuss."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 39; no quorum voting.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask that by unanimous consent my amendment shall be considered as adopted, so that we may have a vote on it in the House.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Molasses, concentrated molasses or melado, sirup of molasses or sugar-cane juice, and cistern bottoms.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Oil naphtha, benzine, benzole, or gasoline, marking more than fifty-nine degrees Baumé's hydrometer, the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the following amendment, agreed to by the committee and which was withdrawn the other day to be inserted at this place:

But if any person shall mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oil, or shall sell or keep for sale or offer for sale such mixture, or shall sell or offer for sale oil made from petroleum for illuminating purposes, inflammable, at less temperature or fire-test than one hundred and ten degrees Fahrenheit, such persons shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, by indictment or presentment in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than three years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Palm-leaf and straw, bleached, split, prepared, or advanced by being braided or woven, but not made up into hats, bonnets, or hoods.

Mr. LONGYEAR. I move to insert between lines fifty-four and fifty-five "potato hooks, pitchforks, manure and spading forks."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pottery ware of all descriptions, including stone, earthen, brown-earthen, and common gray-stone ware.

Mr. THAYER. I move in line fifty-six, after the word "brown," to insert "yellow."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to insert after the word "common" the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rock and root-diggers or excavators.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert "root-beer and other small beer."

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the gentleman will insert "mead."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That was put in last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to insert "brown soap in bars costing less than seven cents per pound." Common soap has got to be an article of universal use. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Soft soap is already in the free list. [Renewed laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salt.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to strike out "salt," and in relation to this question let me say I would be very willing to see this article on the free list provided it were not for the fact that the tariff bill as it passed the Senate has increased the present duty on salt nearly one half. Now, it is proposed to take off the internal revenue tax, which last year gave to the Government $450,000. The article of salt upon which this whole tax is paid into the Government is manufactured mainly at two places, Syracuse, New York, and Saginaw, Michigan. There are but comparatively a small number of men engaged in its manufacture; so that anything that is done, either by increasing the tariff on salt or by taking off the burden by putting it in the free list, instead of inuring to the benefit of a large number of persons, is simply putting $450,000 into the pockets of those two immense monopolies.

Now, as I have already said upon another occasion, this amount of money is all collected at two points. The consequence is it costs the Government but a mere trifle to collect it. By taking off the tax on salt, and increasing the tariff on it, instead of aiding the people and relieving those who use the article, the effect is to add to the cost of the article, because the increase of the tariff is more than what is taken off here; and the result will be that this sum of money which these two corporations can well afford to pay is given to them. Their stock to-day is worth more than one hundred and fifty per cent., if not two hundred; and with these facts before us, I submit whether we ought to put these articles on the free list. If the question was open, so that we could have the tariff bill and this bill alongside of one another under consideration, then we might with some propriety take off the tax, because we would have the control of the foreign article, and we could so fix the tariff as to result in benefiting the consumer. But the tariff bill, which passed the Senate practically, settles the question, the committee of this House having concurred in reporting in favor of the action of the Senate in that particular. It is not, therefore, to be supposed that there will be any reduction of the tariff on salt; and that being so, I submit that we should not relieve these companies from the payment of this internal revenue.

Mr. PIKE. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I hope not. Let us get through the free list this evening; there is very little more of it.

The question being put, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PIKE and PRICE were appointed.

The committee divided; but the tellers made no report, and the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say a word in opposition to the amendment, and in doing so, if my remarks have a local application, I hope I shall be pardoned. It was part of the old democratic doctrine that foreign salt should be admitted into this country duty free. A citizen of Tennessee, who afterward attained a very high position in this country, now deceased, made use of the expression: "The poor man's cow consumes more salt than the broker of Wall street." That policy prevailed, and the result was nearly all the salt in the southern country was imported. The salines of that country were very imperfectly developed, and during the recent struggle, when the southern country was beleaguered by the blockade and the importation of foreign salt was thereby cut off, the supply of domestic salt was wholly inadequate, and the people suffered beyond all measure.

I need not remind gentlemen here that salt is one of those prime necessities of life that ought to be placed within our reach beyond all possible contingency, and it is one of those articles that we can manufacture at home. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] is mistaken in saying there are only two places in this country where it is manufactured. I appeal to my friend from West Virginia [Mr. WHALEY] if there is not enough salt that can be manufactured in his district to supply the wants of the whole country, to say nothing of the salines of the State of Louisiana. Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUMPHREY] states that the tariff bill that has come from the Senate proposes an increase of a double tariff on salt. The gentleman ought to be aware that it only proposes an increase of six cents per hundred. Here is the bill before me. That, sir, is a long way for a double duty. And the gentleman is not probably aware of another fact, and that is that we consume in the United States, according to the census report, thirty-six million bushels, while we manufacture less than eight million bushels. In one county in my district they manufactured, seven years prior to the war, more than three million bushels; but since the internal revenue tax has been imposed, not only on their salt, but upon their coal and other articles used in the manufacture, they now make less than one million bushels. The gentleman argues that we should legislate for the poor. He is certainly aware that throughout the length and breadth of the land there is not a single article named in this tariff bill that is consumed to a greater extent by the poor than salt, and none that more needs to be exempt. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to insert "saws when used by the maker in the manufacture of cotton-gins."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to strike out the word "scales."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to insert between lines fifty-nine and sixty, as a separate line, the words "sewing-machine." I will briefly state my reasons for offering this amendment. This invention of sewing-machines is one which has largely increased the employment of female labor, especially among the lower classes, and has afforded a means of livelihood to hundreds and hundreds. It has also decreased the price of clothing of all descriptions, and this extension of labor and this extension of the manufacture of clothing has added very much to the revenue of the country. Let me turn to some statistics upon this subject.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, never mind the statistics; let us vote.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, sir, I do not wish to detain the committee, but I think that these articles ought to go into the free list.

Mr. ALLEY. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and I will detain the committee with but a single remark in regard to it. I should be in favor of taking the tax off sewing-machines if it would benefit these poor people of whom the gentleman has been talking. But, sir, there is no business in this country that is in the hands of monopolists to a greater extent than this interest, and there is no class of business men who are making so much money as those who own the patents and who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of sewing-machines. At any rate, this is true of those manufacturers who own the patents. They are all patented articles, and it seems to me that they are the last articles of manufacture that should be exempt from taxation.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word; and I do it simply for the purpose of saying a word in reply to my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. ALLEY.] The sewing-machine is the only article manufactured in the whole country the price of which has not largely gone up since 1861. I have the figures here showing the prices in 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1866 respectively. I find that the price of a family sewing-machine was sixty dollars in 1863 and sixty dollars in 1866, and so of the second-class machines, and so of the third-class machines.

Mr. ALLEY. Several of the patentees of sewing-machines are worth millions of dollars.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] by substituting therefor the words

"shirt fronts or bosoms and wristbands or cuffs for shirts." I understand the gentleman from New York to propose this amendment for the purpose of aiding the sewing girls, and inasmuch as the articles named in my amendment now pay a tax when they are made into shirts I think they should be exempt. I hope that will be satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the gentleman from Iowa, who is a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, tell us how this will benefit the sewing-girls?

Mr. ALLISON. Because these articles are made by sewing-girls.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] It appears to me that sewing-machines ought to be on the free list. I suppose it must be conceded upon general principles that if sewing-machines are released from taxation on their manufacture, that circumstance will affect the price which they bear in the market. We were informed by a gentleman from Massachusetts a while ago, and in regard to like matter, that if taxation was taken off leather it would tend to diminish the price of articles made of leather. This is undoubtedly a sound principle, and the principle being sound it appears to me that we should apply it in this case. When we consider that these sewing-machines are very largely used by the poor laboring women of this country, and when we reflect, in addition to that, that many, nay, most of the avenues to lucrative employment are closed to women and open to men, it devolves upon the men of this country to favor as much as they can the labor of women.

I did hope that sewing-machines would have been placed upon the free list by a unanimous vote of this committee.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the gentleman from Illinois think that if we reduce the tax on sewing-machines the labor of these poor women will be increased?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to a privileged motion. We have now been in almost continuous session since twelve o'clock this noon, and by the order of the House we are to meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow; there is scarcely a quorum present, and I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 1161, to amend the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. DEFREES, (at ten o'clock and forty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio: The petition from B. Tuller and others, citizens of Wood county, Ohio, protesting against the passage of a law curtailing the national currency, and against a sudden resumption of specie payments.

Also, the petition from journeymen cigar-makers and manufacturers of cigars, in Toledo, Ohio, praying for an equal tax on all cigars manufactured.

Also, the memorial of Chusman Miller, Esq., and 110 citizens of Brecksville, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, praying for the impeachment of the President.

Also, the memorial of John W. Pease and others, citizens of Sylvania, Ohio, praying for the impeachment of the President or acting President of the United States.

Also, the petition from F. J. King and others, citizens of Toledo, Ohio, praying for an appropriation for a breakwater and light-house at the mouth of Saginaw river, in the harbor of Port Huron, in the State of Michigan.

By Mr. DARLING: The petition of manufacturers and dealers in envelopes, printers and stationers, against Government competition.

By Mr. ELDRIDGE: The petition of sundry citizens of Ripon, in the State of Wisconsin, for the removal of the five per cent. on manufactures.

By Mr. FARNSWORTH: The petition of Bigsby E. Dodson, for back pension.
 By Mr. KUYKENDALL: The petition of citizens of Elizabethtown, Illinois, against the curtailment of the currency.
 By Mr. ROLLINS: The petition of S. D. Baldwin and others, of Bennington, New Hampshire, praying that the five per cent. tax on manufactures be removed.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 16, 1867.

Prayer by Rev. W. C. VAN METER, of New York.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Green Bay and Lake Pepin railway; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that the Senators from each State shall be chosen by the qualified electors thereof instead of by the Legislature; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of an increase of the salaries of the members and officers of the Legislative Assembly, and an increase of the salaries of the territorial officers of that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of an appropriation of money in lieu of the lands set apart in that Territory for school purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, in favor of an appropriation to indemnify the citizens of that Territory who suffered loss by the revolution in 1847, and the Indian depredation since that period; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. POMEROY presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying that the late treaty with the Osage Indians in that State be so amended as to give them the benefits of the homestead and preemption law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York, approving the action of Congress in passing the bill to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia; which were ordered to lie on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 886) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. POLAND. The House of Representatives have non-concurred in our amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, Messrs. POLAND, MORGAN, and McDUGALL were appointed.

BAILEFFS, ETC., OF COURTS IN DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL. The House has disagreed to our amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 356) fixing the compensation for the bailiffs and criers of the courts of the District of Columbia, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the conferees, Mr. MORRILL, Mr. CONNESS, and Mr. PATTERSON were appointed.

DIRECT TAX OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia has been returned from the House of Representatives, with a message concurring in our amendments, except that one which strikes out the sixth section of the House amendment, and asking a conference. I move that the Senate insist on its action, and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. VAN WINKLE, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. DAVIS were appointed the committee on the part of the Senate by the President pro tempore.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of John Kirkwood, of Arkansas, have directed me to report it back, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Public Lands are impressed with the reasonableness and justice of this claim, but think the relief asked for cannot be appropriately reported upon by them, and it would establish a precedent that has never been set by this Government. While the claim may be very just, it is proper for the consideration of the Committee on Claims.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges, to the State of Tennessee, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 571) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway, and the telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas," approved July 26, 1866, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 473) making agricultural and mechanical college scrip receivable in payment for preemption claims, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 818) for the relief of Norman Ward, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon:

A bill (H. R. No. 483) for the relief of Norman J. Hall;

A bill (H. R. No. 531) for the relief of the legal representatives of Major John A. Whitall, late paymaster in the United States Army, deceased, on account of lost or stolen vouchers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 824) for the relief of Edward Blanchard.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to state that these are all bills to relieve disbursing officers on account of money expended for which the vouchers were lost; and upon consultation with the Second Comptroller of the Treasury we are advised that there is no necessity for these acts of relief, that all these cases are covered by a law, passed in May last I think, which authorizes all such disbursing officers to appeal to the Court of Claims, and upon showing the loss of their vouchers and the amount of their payments, the court enters a judgment which the officers of the Treasury carry into execution. I send with these papers to the desk a letter from the Second Comptroller on that point.

Mr. MORRILL. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a petition of Louis Schade and others, who sign themselves naturalized citizens and immigrants in the District of Columbia, and also a petition of Henry Kellogg and numerous other persons of Pennsylvania, have had the same under consideration, and instructed me to make a report. The petitioners ask that the right of the elective franchise may be conferred upon that portion of the petitioners who style themselves immigrants. Therefore, the prayer of these naturalized citizens and immigrants, whom the committee can regard in no other light than as aliens, strangers to our jurisdiction, subjects of foreign jurisdictions, and, I suppose, all of them subjects of the monarchies of Europe, is that such persons should share in the making and administration of the laws which, according to our theory of government, the committee supposed to be devolved exclusively upon the American people. There does not appear to be anything in the circumstances of these people which should lead the committee to make them an exception to the general principle applicable to foreigners. They do not claim to have performed any service for the country in its recent struggle; they do not profess any particular sympathy with republican institutions or with popular rights, and, therefore, there is nothing, so far as these facts might tend, to make their case at all peculiar. They seem to have conceived the idea that the right of citizenship was personal in this country, and they lay their claim to the exercise of the elective franchise, in this particular instance, upon the general assumption that they are of the Caucasian race, that they are all white, and that their associates from foreign countries are at least as favorably known for their wealth and refinement and influence as a certain other class of persons upon whom they suppose Congress has recently conferred the elective franchise. It seems to have been based upon that idea, on the idea that Congress had regarded the question of the elective franchise as one of personal merit. The committee instruct me to report adversely to the prayer of the petitions, and I move that the committee be discharged from their further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. LANE. I take pleasure in presenting the credentials of Hon. Oliver P. Morton, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Indiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1867.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 609) allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into the port of Albany to be secured and paid at that place; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 610) in relation to a certain tract of land in Burlington, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ALEXANDER F. PRATT.

On motion by Mr. WILLIAMS, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 435) for the relief of Alexander F. Pratt. The amendment was to strike out "$530" and insert "$300."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

GOLD MINES EAST OF ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

Mr. RAMSEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of February 13, 1867, transmitting to the House of Representatives a report by James W. Taylor, upon gold and silver mines and mining east of the Rocky mountains, be printed for the use of the Senate; and that one thousand of said extra copies be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury.

BLOCK ISLAND.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I present resolutions of the Legislature of Rhode Island in favor of the building of a breakwater at Block Island; and I wish at the same time to introduce a joint resolution and ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments to this important subject.

Since I have received the resolutions of the Legislature, I have examined the record in relation to the situation of this island. The island is ten miles and a half from the southernmost coast of the State of Rhode Island. The State of Rhode Island holds jurisdiction over this island, which is eight miles long and from two to five miles wide. It has a pond or lake, which in early times, in a petition presented to the Legislature of Rhode Island, was said to have a capacity sufficient to float the entire British navy. Between it and the waters of the sea is but a slight obstruction. The agitation since it became a part of the State of Rhode Island has been with a view to cut into that lake, and thus in mid-ocean find a safe harbor of refuge both for the coastwise commerce of the country and for foreign commerce. It stands at the eastern outlet of Long Island sound. The commerce going to New York passes within easy distance of Block Island. It is quite apparent to those familiar with our coast that vessels many times approach that vicinity and are by unfavorable winds driven out into the ocean, and loss is frequently occasioned thereby. The inhabitants of this island will number in 1870 two thousand people. They have at present no accommodations, no harbor.

Mr. President, this is one of the most interesting subjects I have been called upon to examine. This island was in 1622 occupied by the Narragansett tribe of Indians, and in the wars which they waged with the Pequods the island changed hands many times, and was the battle-ground of many of the most severe and sanguinary contests known in Indian warfare. In 1664 the island became a part of the jurisdiction of Rhode Island. It was a bone of contest between Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, but from that period it was held as a part of Rhode Island, and has ever since sent its Representatives to the Legislature of Rhode Island.

It may not be known to every member of this body that Rhode Island sent into the Navy of the United States its first commander-in-chief. It may not be known that of the eighteen officers who performed the first naval exploit in the Revolution, eight were from that State. It may not be known that the first naval contest waged with Great Britain was fought mainly by the men and the officers who manned the vessels from Providence that brought to you arms and supplies of ammunition to wage your war of the Revolution. It may not be known that the first naval contest of the Revolution was fought in the vicinity of the island that I am now here to speak for.

Sir, the men who performed these exploits were of this population, and they have from that day to this, whether as officers or as men, occupied positions in your Navy. And why should it not be so? They are in the midst of the sea, and must be sailors. It is their education. Brought up amid the dangers of ocean, they are taught to look upon them without concern, and when their country calls them into its service, they know no danger to deter them. They are materials for your Navy; they are materials for your commercial marine. The island stands in the midst of the sea, where your Navy and your commercial marine may find refuge in times of danger.

I look with great concern at the condition of the commerce of the country, and I desire that whatever can be done for its improvement may be done by my vote or by any influence that I may bring to bear; and I know of no better way to facilitate commerce than to furnish safe and commodious harbors for the refuge, not only of your war vessels, but of your commercial marine.

From 1664 till 1773 Rhode Island appropriated means and money to facilitate the commerce between this island and the main land, inadequate of course during the storms of ocean as of the inclement season for any fixed purpose. She now requires attention to the subject to-day, and in times gone by she has required that attention. In 1838 the two Houses of Congress passed resolutions directing the attention of the Departments to this subject, and authorizing a favorable report in regard to this island. But, sir, those who were actors at that time have passed away. The State soon afterward entered upon her revolutionary contest, and from that time till the present day that contest has absorbed the attention of that people. I refer to the contest for the establishment of a permanent republican form of government, commencing in 1842 with the convulsions growing out of charter privileges. That people have only now, through trials and difficulties, been able to stand firmly upon what is deemed a republican form of government. Rhode Island gave to the service in the revolutionary war its first negro regiment. She in 1842 gave the first votes to the negro population in that State. She in the last war for the Union gave to the country the example of calling into service the first negro regiments. She has, therefore, been far in advance of her times.

Then, sir, on account of the record this people have made, on account of the fitness of these men, in the midst of the ocean, to perform active, efficient parts in your Navy, in consequence of the appropriations heretofore made by that State for the purpose of furnishing adequate accommodations for the advantage of commerce—and there is no interest in which I have more concern, no interest to the prosperity of which I would devote myself with more earnestness—on all of these accounts I ask that the Committee on Commerce may receive this proposition with that favor which it is entitled to; and when it comes before this body I ask that they may give it the favorable consideration which, from my contemplation of it, I know it is entitled to. I present my joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, leave was given to introduce the joint resolution (S. R. No. 174) for the erection of a breakwater on Block Island; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ALLOTMENT OF SUPREME JUDGES.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the bill (S. No. 534) to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of marshals for the Supreme Court and for the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that the Chief Justice of the United States and the associate justices of the Supreme Court shall be allotted among the circuits now existing by order of the court; and whenever a new allotment shall be required or found expedient by reason of alteration of one or more circuits, or of the new appointment of a Chief Justice or associate justice, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the court to make it; and if a new allotment shall become necessary at any other time than during the term, the allotment shall be made by the Chief Justice, and shall be binding until the next term, and until a new allotment by the court.

The second section authorizes the Supreme Court, upon the nomination of the Chief Justice, to appoint a marshal for the said court, whose compensation shall be $3,500 per annum. The marshal is to take charge of all property of the United States used by the court or its members, and to serve and execute all process and orders issuing out of the court, or made by the Chief Justice or an associate justice, in pursuance of law; and he is to pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees and compensation allowed by law, and render a true account thereof, at the close of each term, to the Secretary of the Interior. The marshal, with the approval of the Chief Justice, may appoint assistants and messengers in place of the crier and messengers now employed, with such compensation as is or may be allowed to officers of the House of Representatives of similar grade; and all acts and parts of acts now in force relating to the marshal of the District of Columbia are to apply to the marshal of the Supreme Court, except in so far as the act otherwise provides.

Section three authorizes the supreme court of the District of Columbia to appoint a marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia, whose powers and duties shall be the same as the powers and duties of the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia under existing laws; and he is to receive the same compensation for his services as the marshal now receives for like services; and from and after such appointment the office of the marshal now held under appointment by the President is to cease and determine.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed two amendments to the bill: in section two after "courts" in line two to strike out "upon the nomination of the Chief Justice," and to strike out the third section.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. JOHNSON. When this bill was before the Judiciary Committee an amendment was suggested which met the approbation of all the committee, to strike out the clause requiring the appointment of a marshal by the court to be on the nomination of one of the judges.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That has been stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is right.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the title to conform to the bill as amended, so as to read: "A bill to provide for the allotment of the members of the Supreme Court among the circuits, and for the appointment of a marshal for the Supreme Court."

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 903) making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1867.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 431) providing for the punishment of certain crimes therein named in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 571) to regulate proceedings before justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and protect national cemeteries;

A bill (H. R. No. 848) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home," approved July 25, 1866;

A bill (H. R. No. 903) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1868;

A bill (H. R. No. 907) to amend the law of the District of Columbia in relation to judicial proceedings therein;

A bill (H. R. No. 1044) for the relief of John Gray, a revolutionary soldier;

A bill (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of Daniel Frederick Bakeman, a revolutionary soldier;

A bill (H. R. No. 1053) granting an increased pension to John J. Sohan;

A bill (H. R. No. 1058) for the relief of the children of Solomon Long, under sixteen years of age;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 163) to provide in certain cases for the removal of alcohol from bonded warehouse free from internal revenue tax;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 251) to extend the time for codifying the laws relating to customs, authorized by the joint resolution approved July 26, 1866;

A bill (H. R. No. 643) to alter the places of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district;

A bill (S. No. 435) for the relief of Alexander F. Pratt;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) for the relief of Paul S. Forbes, under his contract with the Navy Department for building and furnishing the steam screw sloop-of-war Idaho; and

A bill (S. No. 506) to authorize the trustees of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal church to sell and convey square No. 235 in the city of Washington.

HENRY S. DAVIS.

On motion of Mr. POLAND, the bill (H. R. No. 820) for the relief of Henry S. Davis, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $5,725 04 for the relief of Henry S. Davis, which shall be in full of his claim against the United States for work done by him on the west wing of the Patent Office building, under his contract of November 6, 1857.

Mr. FESSENDEN. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BROWN. This is a claim that has produced a good deal of controversy. It has been reported back to the Senate with a majority report and also a minority report. I should like to have the reports read.

The Secretary commenced the reading of the views of the minority.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I perceive that that is a very lengthy document. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is unnecessary, as the morning hour has expired; and it is the duty of the Chair now to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator from Oregon will allow me to get up the bill I have been trying to obtain the floor all the morning to call up; but, like the unfortunate man in Scripture, some one always stepped before me. I allude to the bill for the election of a Congressional Printer. I do not think it will occupy much time, and it is very desirable it should be passed early.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should be very happy to accommodate my friend from Rhode Island, but under the circumstances I must be excused. I suppose some of the Senators will desire to attend church to-morrow, and it will be necessary to have a final vote on this bill before eleven o'clock to-morrow. I think it is necessary we should proceed with it; the Senator from Wisconsin is ready to go on.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] as amended.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I rise to plead for what I believe to be the life of the Republic, and for that spirit which gives it life. I stand here also to answer for myself; because, foreseeing and resisting from the beginning what I knew must follow as the logical consequences of the adoption of certain fundamental heresies originating in Massachusetts, and of which the honorable Senator upon my right [Mr. SUMNER] is the advocate and champion, I have been for more than eighteen months denounced in my State by many of my former political associates and friends. For foreseeing these logical results which have now come, which are now pending before this Senate in the bills which have come from the House of Representatives, for denouncing them in advance, for asserting to the people of Wisconsin over and over again that yielding to these fatal heresies would of necessity dissolve the Union and establish concentrated military despotism, I have, I repeat, been most severely denounced throughout the State of Wisconsin and elsewhere. That denunciation has been carried to such an extent as to culminate at last in resolutions of the Radical Legislature of Wisconsin instructing me to resign my seat in this body.

I say, therefore, Mr. President, first, that I stand here to-day to plead for the life of the Republic, and to plead for that spirit in which it lives and moves and has its being, and without which it is dead already; and second, to answer for myself because I have been pleading for it with all the power that God has given me for the last two years in my own State, in this Senate, and elsewhere. If I shall on this occasion give utterance to deep and earnest convictions in strong and earnest language Senators will understand it is with no disrespect to them. It is because my soul is filled with sentiments which language can hardly utter. Never, sir, in my life, though I have stood in many trying situations and have often risen here to discuss grave questions, have I felt the weight of responsibility which rests upon me now. Never was there a time in my life when my heart could go up and ask Almighty God to grant me the power to give utterance to the truth as it goes up now.

Sir, let us look into the measures now pending. No such measures were ever before presented in the American Congress. What are they? Call them by what name you will, they are, in substance, a declaration of war against ten States of this Union. They are nothing more; they are nothing less. We know that the rebellion has been suppressed. We know that every armed soldier of the rebellion from the Potomac to the Rio Grande has surrendered his arms and pledged anew his allegiance to the Constitution, the Union, and the flag. We know that there is not one armed soldier against this Republic throughout the whole of our vast domain. We know that in these ten States civil governments in form, and in fact, have been reestablished by the voice of their people, and that, with all the machinery of civil governments, they are in full operation. We know that peace has been proclaimed by the authorities of this Republic, pursuant to the acts of Congress conferring that power. In all the States of this Union peace has come.

But, sir, what do these bills propose? They propose open, direct war on every form of civil government within these States. They propose to supersede and annul them all, and take from the people, and all the people, in these States, all voice in the power which is to govern them. The bayonet, and the bayonet alone, in the hands of the soldier is to be the law of these ten States. All resistance is to be overcome; the States are to be taken into military possession; and all civil authority subjected to the bayonet. That is war. Suppose we should propose to do that to the neighboring territories of Canada; that, by act of Congress, we should send our troops there, take the judge from the bench, the jury from the box, remove all civil officers, disrobe them of all authority, and subject them to martial law—in one word, should we make the bayonet in Canada the only law upon which life, liberty, and property depend, would not that be war? No man can doubt that would be war; nothing more nor less than war. These propositions now pending, by whatever specious name they may be called, are declarations of war and subjugation against ten States and eight million people.

Now, Mr. President, upon what ground is war thus to be declared on these ten States and on these eight million people? The first ground is because they have not accepted the constitutional amendment which was submitted for their acceptance or rejection by Congress at the last session. Let us look for one moment at the logic of this proposition. You have submitted to them for their ratification an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which you say—and that is probably true, at least of several of these States that have taken action—they have rejected it; and therefore you have a right to make war. What is implied in submitting a constitutional amendment to those States for ratification or rejection? It implies that they have the power to ratify it or reject it. How can that power be exercised? By their Legislatures. It cannot be exercised in any other way under the act of Congress which submitted the amendment, because in so many words it submits this proposition to the Legislatures of the several States. And yet gentlemen now say they have no Legislatures, they are not States at all, they are merely disorganized provinces, conquered territory, subjugated, overthrown. And yet the very constitutional amendment which you submit to them, and for rejecting which you propose to declare war against them, implies of necessity that they are States, and that they have the power either to accept it or reject it. If they have no power to reject, why go to war with them because they have rejected it? What logic is there in that? If you admit that they have the power to accept, they of necessity have the power to reject. And if they have Legislatures capable of accepting or rejecting they have valid State governments, and Congress has no more power to impose or force a constitutional amendment upon them than upon the State of New York.

Look at it, Mr. President, in any point of view. We have heard of the coup d'état of Napoleon, and when the question was submitted whether Napoleon should be Emperor of France word was given out to the French people, "You are free to vote as you please, but you must vote for Napoleon as Emperor of France or you will feel the power of the bayonet." This proposition now made by Congress to the States of the South is substantially that if you vote for this amendment you have the liberty to do so, but you have no liberty to vote against it; if you do we shall put the bayonet to your throat, and hold it there until you do accept it. That is guaranteeing to them a republican form of government with a vengeance! That is a mode of ratifying an amendment by the people under a republican form of government in the States from which even Louis Napoleon could take a new lesson. What, sir, compel them at the point of the bayonet to vote for the constitutional amendment, when by submitting that amendment to their vote you recognize them as free States with power as freemen to accept it or reject it! If they are States with power to vote on a constitutional amendment at all they are States under the Constitution for all purposes, and Congress has no right to impose any condition upon them. Congress has no right to say that these States shall not have their rights in this Union under this Constitution.

And yet this is precisely what you say. You say these States shall never have any representation under the Constitution as it is. You say to these States there must be a new Constitution before you can have any right of representation. If you ever have any rights in this Union it must be under some other Constitution—some new Constitution—some amended Constitution; but under the Constitution which our fathers made, you shall never have any representation whatever. That is what Congress says. It is a most flagrant usurpation in this Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I beg that the Senator will not interrupt me, for it will draw me from the line of my argument. I prefer to finish, and then I shall be glad to hear whatever the Senator may have to say.

Mr. President, I have stated one of the grounds upon which this declaration of war is proposed to be made upon these States. I will now call attention for a moment to the other ground upon which this war is said to be justified, to wit, that within all the States of the South there is now no such thing as civil government, that there is no safety for Union men or for freedmen. I shall not deny that disorders exist in some of the States of the South. Undoubtedly they do exist, and for various reasons. We all know these States were greatly impoverished by war. Thousands and tens of thousands of persons were reduced to the most abject poverty, and I undertake to say that there is no people upon the face of the earth who can be reduced to abject poverty, whether from war or from any other cause, where the result will not be to produce a good many disorders. Crimes of every kind necessarily follow abject impoverishment. But as to the charges so often repeated, so industriously circulated, so often published in the newspapers of the North for the purpose of exciting and inflaming the passions of the people of the North against the people of the South, to goad them on to the point of sustaining the military subjugation of the people of the South, I undertake to say that they are most grossly exaggerated, and in very many instances absolutely, unqualifiedly, and wickedly false. Upon that subject I have some facts within my personal knowledge, as well as facts which have come to me through sources which cannot be questioned.

It was my fortune not many months ago to pass through several of the States of the South; I was in Louisiana and in Texas, and I undertake to say that gentlemen there who are well informed and cannot be otherwise, and whose names I will mention, informed me that these stories of outrages against Union men and the freedmen were, as I have stated, grossly exaggerated and many of them willfully and wickedly false. I refer to General Herron, formerly of Iowa, who was for a long time commandant in the department of New Orleans. He told me in November last that single and alone he could drive with a horse and buggy all over the State of Louisiana with as much safety as in the State of Iowa. Colonel Mann, who is the collector of the port of New Orleans, confirms the statement. General Benton, who is also at the city of New Orleans, and who was engaged in our service, states these facts. I do not deny that outrages occasionally exist there as they do elsewhere; but that there is any such persistent purpose to destroy Union men because they are Union men, to drive away northern men because they are from the North, or to destroy or to injure the freedmen, is not true.

Mr. President, gentlemen say that they have reports from the agents of the Freedmen's Bureau, and reports from persons whose names they dare not read, and other authorities which they dare not mention. They talk of outrages by the hundred and by the thousand. I do not deny that some outrages exist. But these things are grossly exaggerated.

Gentlemen tell us that military men in command of these departments give their opinion that the best mode of dealing with the States of the South is to subject them to military rule. Sir, I do not question the patriotism of these military men; I do not question their personal or professional capacity; but I never yet saw a military man who, if he wore the uniform of a lieutenant, did not desire to be a captain; if he wore the uniform of a captain, did not desire to become a field officer; if he were in command of a regiment, who did not desire a brigade, and if the command of a brigade, did not desire the command of a division or the command of a department. Sir, it is in human nature. It belongs to human nature, and military men are as ambitious as other men. Every tribunal that ever existed upon earth desires to enlarge its powers and extend its jurisdiction. There is no man who if he has $100,000 does not desire $100,000 more. There is not a railroad company with a line of road one hundred miles in length that does not desire to obtain possession of and control all the branches that can be built or be connected with it. There is no judge upon the bench—to use the old maxim, there is no good judge who does not amplify his jurisdiction. All who know anything of human nature know that power in human hands, in any form or shape, always seeks to enlarge itself; and when you call upon the commander of a military department and ask him whether it is advisable to put that department under his absolute control, and give him the complete civil and military administration of all affairs in the department, there is not one man out of a thousand, nor one in ten thousand, who will not answer: "Yes; it is in the line of my profession; it gives power and dignity to my profession."

Sir, there is no man who has greater confidence in the integrity, the patriotism, or the capacity of the high officers of our Army than I have; but I have read all history in vain, the warnings of our forefathers are to be taken as of no account, if I do not look with jealousy and well-founded distrust upon the opinions of men in the Army when given upon the question whether martial law or civil law shall be supreme in their several departments. From the very profession of the soldier the civil law is to him a thing unknown. Martial law, the law of forces, the government of men by power and force, is of the very essence of the profession of the soldier. Therefore, when men press upon me the consideration that officers of the Army advise that these various States be placed as military departments under their absolute military jurisdiction, I look upon it with extreme jealousy.

The insidious plea under which military despotism is usually established is threefold: First, it is necessary; second, it is temporary; third, it will be very mild in its operations.

Sir, the last is perhaps the most insidious and dangerous of the three. It should never be forgotten that, in the establishment of a military despotism, the milder that despotism when it begins the more dangerous it becomes. The milder its form, the juster the hand that wields the sword, the more dangerous is the despotism which flows from it; for it accustoms the people to it; the yoke is made so easy upon their necks, the burden is placed so lightly upon their shoulders, that before they are aware they find themselves held with an iron hand in a silken glove, and that it is easier to wear their chains than break them.

On this point, Mr. President, namely, as to the condition of the South, I desire to read some extracts from letters of gentlemen whose truth I cannot question. I refer to the letter of General Tarbell; and to show who he is I will read a few words from a letter of the Governor of New York, Hon. Reuben E. Fenton, indorsing General Tarbell:

STATE OF NEW YORK, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.
ALBANY, October 23, 1865.

Brevet Brigadier General Jonathan Tarbell, late colonel of the ninety-first New York volunteers, is known to me as a highly intelligent, patriotic, and reliable gentleman. As an officer he was gallant and distinguished. His command was thoroughly organized and disciplined, and served with credit. I take pleasure in commending General Tarbell to the confidence and kind consideration of all with whom he may connect himself in future business relations.

R. E. FENTON.

I received from General Tarbell in May last a letter referring to the condition of the South, from which letter I propose to read certain extracts to the Senate:

"DEAR SIR: Allow me to say that I have been in the States of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi since December last; that I was a Whig and am a Republican, and hence looked closely at southern society. I have no hesitation in denouncing the reports in northern newspapers of outrages upon the blacks and upon northern settlers as utter fabrications or malicious exaggerations. I traveled by rail, by water, on horseback, on foot, in company and alone, by day and by night, totally unarmed except a pocket knife, purposely, openly and frankly declaring to every one I was a 'Yankee and Black Republican.' I met others who had traveled on horseback from Florida to Mississippi, who, like me, were Republicans, and I do assure you I would sooner travel throughout the South than the North, so far as personal safety is concerned." * * * "To say that the South is 'caricatured' in the North does not express it; she is slandered, vilified, wickedly, infamously belied. Were the South to come North she would not recognize herself; if she did she would disown herself. Were the North to go South she would be astounded at the misrepresentations and falsehoods and with the cruelly unjust and erroneous sentiments prevailing there. The North is all wrong, not in its consistent anti-slavery sentiments, but in its impressions of southern character. The negroes are neither hated nor ill-treated; northern settlers are not molested; the South accepts the situation in good faith." * * * "There are just grounds of complaint against the Freedmen's Bureau officers. Most of them are interested in plantations, and so many are corrupt and incompetent that the service, the Government, and the North are scandalized by their conduct."

And such, you remember, sir, were the reports of the generals sent to investigate those affairs. But to return to the letter:

"But not to be too lengthy, I assure you, sir, that this terrific public opinion that is driving the North to the support of the startling and dangerous centralization of power in Congress is based upon falsehood and misrepresentation."

As I expect to be judged by my Maker at the great day of final judgment, I state to you solemnly that from extensive travels in these States, from conversations with all classes and colors, and after listening to hundreds, I believe, before high Heaven, that all these newspaper reports of hatred to and outrages upon blacks by whites and of the molestations of northern settlers are baseless, wicked fabrications, concocted and reported expressly to create this fearful public opinion which should sustain the change of the fundamental principles of the Constitution, devised by our forefathers with a wisdom and foresight they themselves scarcely comprehend."

That letter was addressed to me last year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is dated in April last. I have also another letter from him which I received in November last, in which, referring to this former letter, he uses these words:

"So far from having seen reason to retract my letter to you I am more than confirmed in the truth of the assertions then made."

That was written in November last, from the State of Mississippi, where he now resides; and I undertake to say upon my personal responsibility and my personal honor that in going into the States of Louisiana and Mississippi and conversing with men of all classes, Union men and men who had been rebels, the statement was universal that these newspaper reports now filling the journals of the northern States, were to a very great extent base, malicious, and wicked fabrications, made for the purpose of inflaming the passions of the people of the northern States and influencing the popular elections.

I have also before me a letter of Mr. Walker, Governor of Florida, dated the 15th of this month, in which he says:

"It is utterly untrue that Union men in the State of Florida are subjected to violence or insult of any kind. Their position in society is exactly that of other citizens. No questions are asked concerning their antecedents or birthplace. We are delighted and manifest our joy when good and worthy persons from the North come to visit or live among us. This is the general disposition of the people. I have never seen or heard of a Union man who, since the war, has been persecuted on account of his politics. Every man stands upon his own merits, and justice in the courts is administered equally to all."

Why, in God's name, should they not be glad to have northern men come there? A poor, impoverished, desolated people, why should they not welcome every man to the community that would help to restore their prosperity and build up the waste places that war has laid in desolation and in ruins? Sir, it is to suppose that human nature does not seek its own interest. Why should they bear hatred toward the freedmen whose labor is at this time so necessary to the regeneration of the South? From what I heard, and it was stated universally all along through these States, the high inducements which were held out for the labor of the freedmen in the valley of the Mississippi were withdrawing them from the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, and the people of these States, instead of desiring to destroy the freedmen or to injure them, desired to keep them for the cultivation of those staples absolutely necessary to the prosperity of those States. The Governor of Florida further says:

"The freedmen are protected by the laws in life, liberty, and property the same as the whites. The educational system provided for them by the laws is in full operation, and the general disposition of the people is to render them as happy and enlightened as possible."

And why should they not? If that people are there, as they are, and to live there as they must, why, I ask, in Heaven's name, should not the people of the southern States desire them to be as loyal and law-abiding and intelligent and respectable a people as they are capable of being? Is it possible that a people desire to destroy themselves? It seems to me men are beside themselves who think so or can say so here or elsewhere.

Mr. President, I have dwelt longer upon this point than under other circumstances it would be either proper or necessary, simply because this is made the basis upon which Congress is now urged, in hot haste, to make this declaration of war against all civil government in these States and against the people of these States.

I said a little time since that because I foresaw the logical results and the necessary conclusions to which the heresies of Massachusetts, advocated here by the honorable Senator on my right, would inevitably lead, and because I opposed and denounced them from the beginning, I have been assailed by my political associates and friends in the State of Wisconsin. It is substantially for that, that I have been instructed to resign. While I stand here, then, pleading the cause of my country, I am here to answer also for myself; and as this, the grave charges brought against me by the Radical Legislature of Wisconsin, involve not only my public conduct but also my private character, the Senate will indulge me if on this occasion I refer to some facts in connection with these charges personal to myself.

The Legislature of Wisconsin has instructed me to resign my office as Senator. Where do they find authority to do that? Neither in the constitution of Wisconsin nor in the Constitution of the United States. It is an attempt at usurpation upon both. A State Legislature has power to fill vacancies in the office of Senator; it has no power to create them. It has no power to make or to dictate removals. By the true theory of Union, Senators elected under the Constitution are officers of the United States. They are not officers of the State where they are chosen. Secessionists at the South have always maintained the contrary. Indeed, the ideas upon which the doctrine of State secession and the doctrine of State instruction to Senators rest are nearly related to each other. They are born of the same spirit and at the bottom they are one and the same idea, namely, in case of conflict of opinion or of jurisdiction between State and Federal authority, paramount allegiance is first due to the State; and therefore, the State being sovereign, it can break when it pleases the lien which binds the State to the Union or which binds a Senator residing in the State to his allegiance and his duty to the whole United States. All the Senators from the secession States obeyed instructions and resigned their seats excepting only one, Andrew Johnson. Grant the theory of secession, that these States are only bound together in a league or confederation under the Constitution, and it follows, of course, that Senators are merely ambassadors, subject to be instructed or withdrawn at the pleasure of their State.

But grant the theory of Union that a government is established by the Constitution for the whole United States, and it follows of necessity that a Senator, during his term of office, must legislate for the whole country and not for that State alone which elects him. He should know no North, no South, no East, no West, but discharge his duty to the country and to the whole country. Without a violation of his oath, therefore, he cannot in times of great public danger acquiesce in this doctrine of instructions, surrender his convictions of duty, or abandon the post of high responsibility.

I admit as a question of fair and honorable dealing, as a question of political ethics, that if a Senator after his election should materially change his opinions upon some great question upon which he was understood to have formed and expressed his deliberate opinion before his election, and in view of which it had taken place, it would be both honorable and manly in him to tender his resignation. But when he feels and knows that his opinions upon those great questions have undergone no change, and that the allegations brought against him of the desertion of his principles and of the great cause in which he is engaged are utterly false and without the shadow of foundation, he would be unworthy of the respect of honorable men, and more than all cease to be worthy of his own, if for one moment he should entertain the thought of acquiescing in the degrading imputation sought to be cast upon him.

This doctrine of State instruction is against both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution. By its express terms a Senator is chosen for the term of six years. The assertion by a Legislature of the right to shorten that term or to make it depend upon the will or the caprice of a Legislature is as clear a violation of the Constitution as the doctrine of secession itself. If by instructions they can make it the duty of a Senator to resign four years after his election, they can within two years or one year or six months even. Ay, sir, at the same session, the Legislature which elects him may instruct him to resign. And it is a singular fact in connection with my relations to the Legislature and Governor of Wisconsin, that the very Legislature and Governor, who were elected in Wisconsin upon a platform of principles which I drew and submitted to the convention at Madison in 1865, did instruct me to resign substantially because I would not abandon the platform upon which they were elected and follow the lead of the bolting convention at Janesville of the same year, whose creed is the creed of the Radicals to-day, and which is embodied in the two bills pending before the Senate, namely, negro suffrage as a condition precedent to representation from the southern States, and the assertion of the doctrine that those States are out of the Union, mere subjugated Territories. That is a famous example of political gratitude and political consistency displayed in times of political excitement.

Sir, the very ground upon which Senators are chosen for six years is to make them independent in their action as Senators for that period of time, to enable them to withstand the current of the changing opinions of popular assemblies until the people shall have sufficient time for that "sober second thought" which is sure to come when the hour of excitement and passion is over. When that time comes, and come it will, there will be found very few men of any political party at the North who will not regard this assumed right to instruct a Senator to resign as a violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and the Legislature asserting it gives strong evidence that sober judgment, for a time at least, has been put aside from their deliberations.

Besides, sir, what would be the effect of this doctrine upon the character of this body? What independence of judgment, what manliness of character, what statesmanship worthy of the name could be expected in the Senate of the United States should such a doctrine be acquiesced in? Who would accept the position of Senator to become a mere tenant at will? Who could keep his oath to support the Constitution if, at the very moment he believes it most in danger, he must, cowardlike, abandon his post of duty, danger, and responsibility?

Such is not the teaching of the great men who made it, nor of those who have defended

it. It is a heresy born of secession, to which the judgment cannot yield. Let us inquire for a moment, what do the great men of the Republic say of this doctrine borrowed by the Legislature of Wisconsin from the secessionists and nullifiers of the South? I will refer to only two. I first read from the works of Madison, who perhaps more than any other helped to form and to expound the Constitution:

"Nothing is more certain, [says Mr. Madison, (vol. iv, p. 429)] while discussing this doctrine of instructions, than that the tenure of the Senate was meant as an obstacle to the instability which not only history, but the experience of our country, had shown to be the besetting infirmity of popular Governments. Innovations therefore impairing the stability afforded by that tenure, without some compensating remedifications of the powers of the Government, must affect the balance contemplated by the Constitution."

Again, Chancellor Kent declares that this doctrine of instructions is repugnant to the theory of our Government—

"Which supposes that the representatives are to meet and consult together for the common welfare, and to have a regard in making the laws to the greatest general good, and to make the local views and interests of a part of the community subordinate to the general interest of the whole."

He shows clearly that the true doctrine on this subject is derived from the common law applicable to members of Parliament; and that, as an important and undoubted constitutional principle, it was asserted in Parliament as long ago as 1571, and for three hundred years it has remained unshaken.

I call special attention to the no less powerful argument of Edmund Burke against the doctrine of instruction. In his speech to his constituents at Bristol, he maintained, with his usual force, that the representative ought not to sacrifice his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, to his constituents; to any man or set of men living. These he does not derive from the pleasure of his constituents; no, nor from the law and the Constitution. They are a trust from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Said he:

"Your representative owes you not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion."

Government and legislation are matters of reason and judgment, and not of inclination. What sort of reason is that in which the determination precedes the discussion; in which one set of men deliberate and another decide; and where those who form the conclusion are perhaps three hundred miles distant from those who hear the arguments?

Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests, which interests each must maintain as an agent and advocate against other agents and advocates; but Parliament is a deliberative assembly of one nation, with one interest, that of the whole; where not local purposes, not local prejudices ought to guide, but the general good resulting from the general reason of the whole. You choose a member indeed, but when you have chosen him he is not a member of Bristol, but he is a member of Parliament."

In the Chamber of Deputies in France, also, this doctrine of instruction finds no toleration even. So important is it regarded there that the representative should remain free to discuss, deliberate, and judge upon all questions that the election of M. Droult was annulled by a vote of the Chamber on the ground that he had engaged with his constituents to vote for a certain measure. That vote of the Chambers was supported by M. Guizot, one of the greatest statesmen of France, or of any age or country, in a most powerful and convincing argument. These arguments and these authorities are conclusive against this assumed right of instructions.

And, Mr. President, if ever, in the history of a great country, a statesman was called upon to exercise unbiased judgment, unflinching fidelity to his convictions of duty, and unmoved by local passions and prejudices, by the denunciations of demagogues, by lawless mobs, excited and infuriated by an unscrupulous press, to stand fast to his integrity in the discharge of that high trust which he owes to the Constitution, and to every State under it, to the country, and to the whole country, it is now and here. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order!

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Humble though I may be, during my official term, God helping me, I shall stand here, sir, to speak and to vote in this great crisis; not for Wisconsin alone, but for the whole United States; not for one State and one million people, but for thirty-six States and more than thirty million people.

Mr. President, in my character as a Senator of the United States, I am called upon to speak, to act, and to legislate for the States of the South as a part of the United States; for the eight or ten millions of our fellow-citizens of the South, but who are now, in my judgment, in violation of express law, in violation of the Constitution, and the spirit which gives it life, denied all right to choose representatives under this Constitution for themselves by this majority in Congress; my oath to support the Constitution makes it my duty to speak and to legislate for them, within the powers granted by the Constitution, as well as for the people of Wisconsin and the twenty millions of my fellow-citizens of the North, the East, and the West.

Mr. President, I proceed to inquire, in the second place, if any such power existed in the Legislature as the power claimed to instruct me to resign and to make it my duty to withdraw from this Chamber, upon what grounds do they claim to exercise that power, and thus to sever me from my duty and from my allegiance to the United States?

First, they say because of disobedience to the instructions of a former Legislature. Sir, at the last session of Congress I gave my reasons for not obeying those instructions. They are just, and, in my opinion, unanswerably true. I leave them upon the record where they now stand, and where they will stand forever, as the full vindication of my course in this body.

Second, because they allege I have renounced my former professions and principles, and have placed myself in active antagonism to them, and have united my political fortunes to the enemies of the Republic. In short, sir, they charge that I am a traitor to my principles and a traitor to my country.

Mr. President, this charge so gravely made, involving, as it does, not only my public, but my private life, I cannot suffer to pass unnoticed. It might move me to the deepest indignation against the men who make it did I not know, as sure as the sun shines in Heaven, it to be utterly false and without the shadow of foundation. As it has been placed, however, upon the public journals of Wisconsin, and has been forwarded here to be placed among the archives of this body to remain forever, I deem it due to the truth of history, due to the Senate, due to myself, and due to my children, to whom the only legacy I expect to leave is the fair fame of an honorable man, that I should briefly state my relations to great political questions and my relations to political parties.

It will be observed—and I desire all the world to take notice, by gentlemen here as well as elsewhere—that in my whole political life my allegiance to certain great principles has always been paramount to my allegiance to any party.

It is known to all that I was reared from my youth up in the great Democratic-Republican school of Jefferson and Madison. In 1847, when the party in power under Mr. Polk sought to extend slavery into the Territories just acquired from Mexico, I left a powerful and dominant majority in the State of New York to unite my fortunes with a minority against it. In fact, sir, I drew and offered in the Democratic convention of that great State the "corner-stone resolution" upon which the Free Soil party was organized in 1848. Hon. David Dudley Field, from the city of New York, seconded that resolution in a powerful speech. It was called familiarly "Field's resolution," for he was then known to fame, and I an humble youth. You all remember the result which followed that organization. General Cass was defeated; General Taylor was elected. In 1849 the discovery of gold deposits in California filled that Territory with a large free population. That cut the gordian knot which the statesmen in Congress could not untie. In 1850 California was organized and admitted into the Union as a free State. That admission settled forever the question of slavery in the Mexican Territories.

In 1852, upon the basis of that settlement, the division in the Democratic party was healed. General Pierce was accepted as the candidate of both wings of that party, and was elected President. In the canvass no question in relation to slavery was made between him and his great competitor, General Scott. Their platform upon that subject was the same. In 1851, the year before that canvass came on, I removed to the State of Wisconsin, and acting once more with the Democratic party upon the basis of that settlement I gave my support to General Pierce.

In 1854, however, in violation, as I understood them, of the pledges of 1850 and 1852, the Missouri compromise was repealed. That repeal reopened the slavery question. It again divided the Democratic party. It brought on the troubles and the civil war in Kansas, which became the forerunner if it was not the cause of that terrible civil war from which we have just emerged. In 1853, the year after General Pierce's election, I was chosen as judge of the first judicial circuit of Wisconsin. Of course while acting as a judge upon the bench I made no public speeches upon any political question; but in conversation with the men of all parties I denounced that repeal from the moment it was proposed. With Benton and Houston and Truman Smith, and hosts of others, I saw, or thought I saw, nothing of good but everything of evil in that fatal measure.

By that repeal Kansas and Nebraska were opened as a battle-field to the introduction of slave labor or free labor just as their first settlers each for himself should determine. It was the beginning of strife. It was in fact a challenge passed and accepted between the two systems and the two sections to the dreadful wager of battle. Each rallied its forces. The struggle came. It began in fraud. It ended in blood. It brought on civil war. The slavery propagandists by force and fraud first subjugated the Territory of Kansas, and as the triumph of their victory enacted the slave code.

In March, 1856, I resigned my position as judge and returned to my profession. During all that year the fearful strife went on, Congress remained in session until late in autumn. There was a long and earnest struggle between the House and the Senate. By an amendment to an appropriation bill the House insisted upon a substantial repeal of that slave code. The Senate opposed it. At the same time a presidential election was pending: upon the one side Buchanan, sustained by the Democratic party and backed by a powerful majority in the Senate; upon the other, Fremont, sustained by the Republican party recently organized and a feeble majority of the House. The Senate remained inexorable and determined to sustain that slave code with the whole power of this Government. The House at length yielded. The Senate triumphed. That triumph sanctioned and assumed the responsibility of the border-ruffian invasion, the subjugation, and its victorious fruits, the slave code of Kansas.

From that moment I determined to do all in my power to undo that great and inexcusable wrong. I once more withdrew from a dominant majority in the wrong to give my support to a minority in the right. I espoused the cause of that minority with the frankness and earnestness inseparable from my nature, without which I should cease to be myself. I was not then insensible any more than I am now to the appeals nor to the denunciations of political associates and friends; and yet I could not be moved by them to smother my inmost convictions. My heart was filled with indignation at the folly and the wrong done by the repeal of the Missouri compromise, the war which followed, and perhaps even more by the indorsement by a dominant and overbearing majority in the Senate of the United States of the slave code of Kansas. Sir, I could no more restrain the utterance of my sentiments than then hold coals of fire in my bosom. They demanded they would have, and they did have free utterance. I would not restrain them if I could; I could not if I would. It came as the outpouring of the spirit comes. It came with an abiding faith in man and truth and God, which denunciations cannot shake nor dangers appall. It came with an assurance of that faith which the soul feels when it leans on the Almighty for its strength. Sir, it does not become me to say more. I could not say less under the degrading imputations which are sought to be cast upon me, that I have betrayed the principles which have guided my life and for which I would lay down that life.

Much to my personal regret there was no Murphy to report those utterances. Except as they are imperfectly stored in the memory of my countrymen they are lost to me forever.

But, sir, the doctrines which I then avowed in 1856 everywhere in Wisconsin and through the whole North I still believe with all the fervor and all the earnestness with which I believe in my religious creed.

In the winter following 1857 I was first elected to the Senate, and took my seat here in March. From that time my course here is known to all the members of this body. Mistakes I have sometimes made; errors from insufficient examination, from want of proper judgment, and sometimes from acting, as we are all compelled to do, upon opinions of committees where we have not opportunities to examine for ourselves; but, Senators, you will bear me witness that upon every important question I have brought to its discussion, if not great ability, an earnest desire to find the right and the courage to be true to my convictions.

My course here was well known and approved by the people of Wisconsin and the Legislature of Wisconsin, which re-elected me in 1863.

I come now to speak more particularly upon those questions upon which my course has been denounced.

First, as to my course upon the civil rights bill. From the time my attention was first seriously called to that bill by the able speech of Mr. BINGHAM in the House of Representatives, after the bill had passed this body, I became satisfied that some of its provisions were clearly unconstitutional. I have never doubted it; I do not doubt it now. His masterly speech on that bill was conclusive. Indeed, sir, because the civil rights bill was unconstitutional, with him originated in the House of Representatives the first clause of the pending amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which is for the purpose of making the civil rights bill constitutional.

So far as that bill takes from the State judiciary and transfers to the Federal judiciary the protection of the private rights of the citizens of the several States who were not emancipated by the constitutional amendment—I mean the free white citizens in those States—it is clearly a usurpation on the part of Congress of the reserved rights of the States. So far as it subjected State judges and State Legislatures to be punished as culprits and criminals in the courts of the Federal judiciary for acts done in their official capacity, that civil rights bill is a degradation unbearable upon the States of this Union. Whenever it comes to be discussed, when times of passion and excitement are over, in the tribunals of great judges or before the tribunals of a dispassionate people, it will meet with universal execration and condemnation as a usurpation upon all the rights reserved in the States, and a consolidation of unlimited power in this Government over the private rights of the citizens. What, I ask, should be thought of a law of Congress, and what will be thought of this law of Congress, when considered by the people of Wisconsin, when it assumes to arraign before the Federal judge the district judge at Milwaukee, the judges of the supreme court of Wisconsin, and the members of the Legislature for their official acts?

But, sir, I do not propose to go into that question any further. I pass on at once to the great question of reconstruction, which involves Freedmen Bureau bills, civil rights bills, and military bills. All bills are concentrated and brought together in these two propositions now pending, which abolish all the laws of those States except the absolute will of the brigadier generals, who are to be put in command over the districts into which they are divided.

Mr. President, in 1862-63 Mr. Lincoln, with the unanimous approbation of his Cabinet, all of them earnest Republicans, brought forward this much-abused policy of reconstruction, called the presidential policy. It was based upon two fundamental ideas: first, the existence of the States and of the rights of the States under the Constitution in this Union; secondly, that the governments of those States should be left in the hands of the citizens of those States who, by the constitutions of those States, were entitled to hold it; that is, the white male citizens of those States, embracing all who had remained loyal to the Union during the struggle, and all who having once joined in the rebellion against the Union had in good faith returned to their allegiance and thereby once more become loyal to the Union, with a few, a very few specified classes excepted.

These fundamental ideas controlled and guided that policy. Neither Mr. Lincoln nor any member of his Cabinet, nor more than two Senators I believe in this body, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] and the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BROWN,] at that time advocated reconstruction upon a basis including negro suffrage. The bill of Henry Winter Davis, which passed the House of Representatives under his lead, and passed the Senate under the able lead of the able Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] expressly confined suffrage in those States to white male citizens twenty-one years of age and upward.

I do not doubt, I never had the slightest occasion to doubt, the sincerity of the honorable gentleman from Ohio in advocating and in urging now what he repudiated then. I doubt not the sincerity of more than twenty other Republican Senators on this floor who stood with me then advocating reconstruction upon the white basis, because they now go with him over to the side of the Senator from Massachusetts, and advocate his theory of reconstruction upon the basis of negro suffrage and white disfranchisement. He has a right to do so if his convictions lead him there, and others, as a matter of course, have a right to go with him. I honor any man who is true to his convictions, however much he may differ from me. But what I do claim, and what I have a right to claim, is this: if I have not also changed my opinions, if I do not now go over with the Senator from Ohio to join the Senator from Massachusetts, if I still continue to advocate reconstruction upon the fundamental ideas of Mr. Lincoln's policy, no man or set of men in this Senate or in the Legislature of Wisconsin or anywhere else have the right to charge me with being a traitor to my principles or a traitor to my country.

Mr. President, I go further. I maintain that I stand to-day upon the very ground occupied by the National Union party in 1864 in renominating and reelecting Mr. Lincoln. I stand upon the very platform of the Union convention of Wisconsin which nominated the present Governor, and upon which he and the Legislature of 1866, which instructed me to resign, were elected to power.

Nor have I abandoned those principles by sustaining what I regard as substantially the same policy under the administration of Mr. Johnson. Not to rely upon my own authority alone, I read a masterly statement of the policy of Mr. Lincoln and of Mr. Johnson, when compared, by that able statesman, Governor Morton, of Indiana:

"JOHNSON AND LINCOLN COMPARED.—I propose for a few moments to contrast the plan of reconstruction adopted by Mr. Johnson with that proposed by Mr. Lincoln in 1863, and we shall find several very important consequences, at least so far as the public mind is concerned, to flow from this comparison. Mr. Lincoln, in his policy of reconstruction presented to Congress in his message of December 8, 1863, prescribed an oath of allegiance to be taken by those who were entitled to take it under the proclamation. I propose to read that oath and contrast it with the one which Mr. Johnson's proclamation requires. It is in the following language:

"I do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, that I will henceforth faithfully support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Union of the States thereunder; and that I will in like manner abide by and faithfully support all acts of Congress passed during the existing rebellion with reference to slaves, so long and so far as not repealed, modified, or held void by Congress or by decision of the Supreme Court; and that I will in like manner abide by and faithfully support all proclamations of the President made during the existing rebellion, so long and so far as not modified or declared void by the decision of the Supreme Court: so help me God."

"That is Mr. Lincoln's oath as prescribed in his proclamation. I will now read Mr. Johnson's oath, and you will find it is more stringent than Mr. Lincoln's, inasmuch as he leaves out this clause: 'So long and so far as not modified or declared void by the decision of the Supreme Court.' Mr. Lincoln's oath was objected to because it was said it might perhaps leave room for mental reservations. Referring to the action of Congress and the Supreme Court, Mr. Johnson's oath says:

"I do solemnly swear, (or affirm,) in the presence of Almighty God, that I will henceforth faithfully defend the Constitution of the United States and the Union of the States thereunder; and that I will in like manner abide by and faithfully support all the laws and proclamations which have been made during the existing rebellion with reference to the emancipation of slaves: so help me God."

"Mr. Johnson required that oath to be taken, leaving out the provision Mr. Lincoln made, which was said by many to weaken it. Mr. Lincoln excluded certain classes of persons from the benefit of his amnesty. I shall read in your hearing the classes of persons whom Mr. Lincoln would not permit to take the oath, nor have the benefit of amnesty, except as they might first receive special pardon from him. They were:

"1. All who are, or shall have been, pretended civil or diplomatic officers or otherwise, or domestic or foreign agents of the pretended confederate government.

"2. All who left judicial stations under the United States to aid the rebellion.

"3. All who shall have been military or naval officers of said pretended confederate government above the rank of colonel in the army, or lieutenant in the navy.

"4. All who left seats in the Congress of the United States to aid the rebellion.

"5. All who resigned or tendered resignations of their commissions in the Army and Navy of the United States to evade their duty in resisting the rebellion.

"6. All who have engaged in any way in treating otherwise than lawfully as prisoners of war persons found in the United States service as officers, soldiers, seamen, or in any other capacity."

"Mr. Johnson, in his amnesty proclamation, first makes the same exceptions that Mr. Lincoln does, and in the same language; and he afterward goes on to specify eight other classes whom he excludes from the benefit of the amnesty, which I will read. I will commence in Mr. Johnson's proclamations where he leaves off quoting from Mr. Lincoln:

"7. All persons who have been or are absentees from the United States for the purpose of aiding the rebellion.

"8. All military or naval officers in the rebel service who were educated by the Government in the Military Academy at West Point, or at the United States Naval Academy.

"9. All persons who hold the pretended offices of Governors of States in insurrection against the United States.

"10. All persons who left their homes within the jurisdiction and protection of the United States and passed beyond the Federal military lines into the so-called confederate States for the purpose of aiding the rebellion.

"11. All persons who have engaged in the destruction of the commerce of the United States upon the high seas, and all persons who have made raids into the United States from Canada or been engaged in destroying the commerce of the United States upon the lakes and rivers that separate the British Provinces from the United States.

"12. All persons who, at the time when they seek to obtain the benefit thereof, by taking the oath herein prescribed, are in military or civil confinement or custody, or under bond of the military or naval authorities or agents of the United States as prisoners of war, or persons detained for offenses of any kind, either before or after their conviction.

"13. All persons who have voluntarily participated in said rebellion, and the estimated value of whose taxable property is over $20,000.

"14. All persons who have taken the oath of amnesty as prescribed in the President's proclamation of December 28, or the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States since the date of said proclamation, and who have not thenceforward kept and maintained the same inviolate; provided that special application may be made to the President for pardon by any person belonging to the excepted classes, and such leniency will be liberally extended as may be consistent with the facts and the peace and dignity of the United States.

"The Secretary of State will establish rules and regulations for administering and recording said amnesty oath so as to insure its benefit to the people and to guard against fraud.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed."

"MR. LINCOLN'S PLAN."

"So that Mr. Johnson has restricted from taking the oath eight classes permitted by Mr. Lincoln, and so far his plan is more stringent than Mr. Lincoln's was. Mr. Lincoln, in his plan of reconstruction, declared all persons should have the right to vote for delegates to the conventions which might be called in the States to form State constitutions who had taken the oath prescribed by him, and who were lawful voters according to the laws of the State in which they resided before the passage of the ordinance of secession. Mr. Johnson has made precisely the same condition. Mr. Lincoln provided for the appointment of provisional governors, giving to them the power of calling State conventions, with a view of forming State constitutions, for the purpose of being received back into full practical relations with the Government. Mr. Johnson did the same. Each required that the constitutions thus formed should be republican in form. Mr. Lincoln put forth no requirement or condition that was not equally contained in Mr. Johnson's proclamation. Their plans of amnesty and reconstruction cannot be distinguished from each other, except in the particulars I have already mentioned, that Mr. Johnson restricts certain persons from taking the oath, unless they have a special pardon from him, whom Mr. Lincoln permitted to come forward and take the oath without it; and in the further difference before mentioned, that Mr. Lincoln required one tenth of the people of the State to show a willingness to take the oath, while Mr. Johnson has said nothing whatever about that. This was Mr. Lincoln's favorite policy. It was presented by him to Congress on the 8th of December, 1863, accompanied by a message. In the course of the next year, 1864, on several occasions, Mr. Lincoln distinctly presented again and again this policy of amnesty and reconstruction to the people of the South. It was his settled and favorite policy at the time he was nominated for reelection by the Union convention at Baltimore last summer; and in that convention the party sustained him, and strongly indorsed his whole policy, of which this was a prominent part. Mr. Lincoln was triumphantly and overwhelmingly elected upon that policy, and soon after his election, in December, 1864, in his last annual message to Congress, he again brings forward this same policy of his and presents it to the nation. And again, on the 12th of April, only two days before his death, he referred to and presented this policy of amnesty and reconstruction."

Thus it appears most conclusively that upon these great underlying, fundamental ideas they were and are and always have been the same; and by continuing to sustain them, whatever gentlemen may think of the justness of my course, I have been consistent with my avowed principles and the principles upon which I have stood from the beginning and from before the beginning of this controversy.

Bear in mind, sir, I am not at this moment arguing the question of the justice or the injustice, the soundness or unsoundness of those ideas. I am only showing their identity, and that I have always sustained and have never deserted them. When Congress unanimously resolved, in 1861, that the whole purpose of the war was not to destroy the southern States; was not to deprive them of representation nor of the right of representation; was not to establish negro suffrage or to interfere with the right of the States for themselves to determine the question of suffrage; but was to preserve and defend the Union and the States, and the rights of all the States in the Union, with their "equality, rights, and dignity unimpaired," I believed in those ideas and that purpose then, and I believe in them now. Who has deserted them? Who has abandoned them?

When Congress, in 1862, apportioned by law Representatives among the States, including the southern States as well as the northern States, by a law which now remains in force unrepealed upon your statute-book, and which gives the States of the South just as much right to Representatives in that House as it does to any State in the North, I believed in those ideas then, that they had a right to representation. I believe in them now. I have not abandoned them; I do not expect to abandon them.

When Congress again declared, in 1862, and repeated the declaration by an amendment of the same law in 1863, that whenever the people in those States should elect a loyal Legislature, who would take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, the President should be authorized to declare the fact in a proclamation to the country, I believed in their right to return to their allegiance then, and their right to have representation when they did return. I believe in it now. Who has abandoned those ideas and those declarations?

When the Congress of the United States, in 1862, by an enactment, declared expressly that the President of the United States should have power to grant pardon and amnesty to those who had been in rebellion against the United States upon such terms and such conditions as he should deem proper, which law remained unrepealed upon our statute-books till January, 1867, I believed that those States and the people of those States had a right to return to their allegiance and accept pardon and amnesty.

I believe, also, that the proclamations of amnesty of President Lincoln in 1862 and 1863, and of President Johnson in 1865, were not only constitutional under the power which the Constitution gives, but they were sanctioned by the express authority of Congress itself. I hold that it is founded upon a basis which cannot be shaken; it is as firm as the rock of Gibraltar itself, that every man who accepted pardon and amnesty upon those terms, thus tendered by the President, in pursuance of the Constitution, and in pursuance of the express law of Congress, has been restored to all his rights as a citizen; and there is no power in Congress, and no power on this earth that can justly deprive him of them. Sir, the good faith of this nation is pledged in the most solemn form; and though this pledge was given to men who were once enemies, and been accepted by them as the condition of their return to friendship and to allegiance as citizens of this Republic, that pledge cannot be broken without covering this nation with infamy. Infamy does not express what ought to be said of the proposition thus to break this plighted faith.

I may be mistaken, sir, I may be blinded in all this. Other men may justify themselves in their own consciences for annulling at one sweep those pardons, and trampling under their feet those rights of citizenship which those pardons have restored; but, sir, with my views of the subject, it is just as inherently wrong by any ex post facto law or proceeding to undertake to annul the pardons thus given and thus accepted as it would be to try and condemn a person who has once been tried and acquitted. It is a violation of the national faith. It is in my judgment an outrage upon the rights of civilized man either in peace or in war. Whatever in the heat of the moment partisans of this day may now say or may now do, history, impartial history, will arraign the deed as a crime against civilization. She will hold it up to the execration of all mankind; she will pass inexorable judgment against it; and with her whip of scorpions scourge it through all time.

Mr. President, Mr. Lincoln proclaimed those fundamental ideas of restoration in which I have believed, and which I have sustained for more than four years. Every day has deepened and strengthened my convictions of their wisdom and their truth. He and the mass of the great Union party which he led steadfastly believed in them, and until the time of his death he continued to advocate and to urge them upon his countrymen.

That policy was, with very few exceptions, cordially sustained by the Legislature which reelected me in 1863. It was sustained by the National Union party which renominated and reelected Mr. Lincoln in 1864. I do not say that there were not some Radicals who opposed it then. I must admit there are a great many now who oppose it. I find the facts very precisely and ably stated in a speech of General Thomas Ewing, jr., from which I will read an extract:

"In the early spring of 1864 a national convention was called to meet in Cleveland to nominate Fremont or Chase for President, denounce Mr. Lincoln's policy of restoration, and read him of the party."

"The call of that convention sounds like a blast from the bugle of Greeley or Forney of to-day. Hear it: 'The imbecile and vacillating policy of the present Administration, its treachery to justice and freedom in its plan of reconstruction, whereby the honor and dignity of the nation have been sacrificed in conciliating the arrogant slave power and to further the ends of an unscrupulous ambition, call in thunder tones upon the lovers of justice and their country to come to the rescue of the imperiled nationality and the cause of impartial justice and universal freedom, threatened with betrayal and overthrow.'"

"It is hard to realize the fact that this thunderbolt was aimed at President Lincoln two years ago instead of at President Johnson this year. But the thunderbolts of to-day are forged on the same anvil, and hurled by the same hand, as those which fell in noisy impotence at the feet of Abraham Lincoln."

"Nearly all of the present Radical leaders of Congress were notoriously in full sympathy with this movement, but only a few of them were bold or rash enough to commit themselves to it openly and in advance. They knew Mr. Lincoln's high place in the hearts and confidence of the war party, and, though they then as now had the organization of the party in their hands, they halted and balked when the issue came."

"Afraid"

To be the same in their own act and valor, As they were in desire."

"Gratz Brown, Wade, Davis, Cochrane, Pomeroy, Wendell Phillips, Moss, Fred. Douglass, and a few hundred leaders of less note, 'stood the hazard of the die.'"

"The convention nominated Fremont and Cochrane; denounced the President's restoration policy; claimed that all power over the subject belongs to Congress; and insisted on the disfranchisement of all rebels repentant and unrepentant and the confiscation of all their lands for our soldiers. Its platform was pretty radical, but fell a bow-shot short of the radical programme of to-day, omitting as it did negro suffrage."

"Then followed the convention of the war party at Baltimore, which unanimously indorsed President Lincoln's policy, renominated him by acclamation, admitted to seats and votes in the convention the delegates chosen from Arkansas, Tennessee, and Louisiana, which had been recognized under his proclamation; and declared in a platform reported by Henry J. Raymond, that the only conditions of peace and reunion shall be the unconditional surrender of hostility to the rebels, and their return to their allegiance to the Constitution and laws of the United States."

"To make its repudiation of the theories of the Radical faction more marked, the convention nominated Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, for Vice President, against the protest of that faction led by THADDEUS STEVENS, who declared that patriot State was but a conquered province, and her loyal son 'an alien enemy.' The war party hailed the triumph of the President and his restoration policy over the Radicals, and indorsed them overwhelmingly. The leaders of that faction, baffled and angry, and were carried by the skirts of the Administration, and were carried with it again into power. The Radical ship launched at Cleveland was abandoned almost before it touched water, and after drifting idly a month or more sunk unnoticed, and, I regret to add, without its crew."

This last expression is to be taken of course in a political sense.

This bolting convention of Radicals at Cleveland was condemned in severest terms by the great mass of the Union party in the country, which maintained and continued to maintain the policy of Mr. Lincoln. In 1864 that policy of reconstruction was boldly advocated by the leaders of the Republican party upon the floor of this Senate in the case of Arkansas. In 1865, in the case of Louisiana, that policy was sustained in this Senate by a majority among Republicans of three to one.

In spite of this false and unfounded charge, that I have abandoned my avowed principles, I have the satisfaction of knowing that in adhering to them now, as well as during the lifetime of Mr. Lincoln, in standing for them through good report and through evil report, I have been endeavoring to discharge the highest possible duty to my country, to the Constitution, and to liberty itself. Other men, as they have the right clearly and unquestionably, may change their opinions of that policy. Multitudes who once hailed its triumphant march under President Lincoln, with glad hosannas casting their garments and flowers of adulation at its feet, may now cry out against it, and blindly led by the chief priests and elders of the people join the Radical cry, shouting, "Crucify it, crucify it." I still believe in the justice and wisdom of that policy and the principles upon which it was founded. I believe that the States still live, that they are still States under the Constitution which forms the Union, and that to declare any other doctrine is to dissolve the Union and destroy the Government. I believe that so long as republican liberty is to exist in this country under our Constitution and laws the people of those States have a right to be represented in the Government which taxes and rules them. I believe that the purpose of our war was to compel those who had been disloyal to return to their allegiance to the Constitution and the Union; and further, that after that return those who were once in rebellion against the Government, upon their acceptance of pardon and amnesty tendered by the President, under the constitutional power which he possesses as such, and under the express provisions of the law of Congress, are restored to their rights, which no power on earth can justly take away.

I hold that Congress has no right to impose as a condition precedent to these States being represented in the Union that they shall join in the change of the Constitution and shall be forced to adopt that change at the point of the bayonet.

Heaven only knows what is in reserve for us in the future, and perhaps in the immediate future; but when we have done all and suffered all and borne all that is to come, we shall come back at last, if this Republic is to live at all, to the fundamental and vital principles upon which the Lincoln-Johnson policy rests, upon which alone it can rest, upon which alone constitutional liberty can be maintained in this great Republic.

I believe, sir, as much as I believe in my existence, that if at the beginning of the last Congress this policy of Mr. Lincoln had been sustained and cordially accepted by Congress by the admission to seats in the two Houses of loyal representatives from those States, not receiving any others, almost all the evils which are now upon us would have been avoided. The Union would have been completely restored. Every State would have been represented by loyal men ready to join with all their hearts in the great duty of the hour, namely, to rebuild and restore the places made waste by war. Our national credit would have been restored. Our six per cent. bonds would have commanded gold at par in all the money centers of the world. Specie payment would have resumed itself without shock and without convulsion. So far from increasing the pay of the officers of the Army, as now proposed by the bill on your table, thirty-three and one third per cent., instead of largely increasing, doubling, and perhaps quadrupling as we shall be compelled to do the standing Army, that standing danger of this and of all other republics, we could have reduced it below twenty thousand men. The tranquil administration of the civil law by civil tribunals would have reigned throughout our vast domain. Peace and fraternity would have stricken hands together. Liberty and Union long ago would have kissed each other.

Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few moments longer. I desire in a few words to speak of the precise point upon which the Radicals of Wisconsin and elsewhere have called me in question. In the Union convention at Madison, in 1865, I had the honor of being a member and was chairman of the committee on resolutions. In that committee it was proposed to make direct and open war upon the reconstruction policy of Lincoln and Johnson, by a resolution declaring that the States of the South were to be regarded as conquered territories, and in express terms requiring as a condition precedent to their admission to the right of representation the adoption of negro suffrage. I opposed that resolution in the committee; I opposed it in the convention, which laid it upon the table by a large majority. It is for that act, sir, for opposing these two ideas which are now embodied in these very bills now upon your table that uncompromising war was made upon me by the Radicals of Wisconsin. It first showed itself in the call of a bolting Radical convention at Janesville, in that State, called for the purpose of denouncing me and denouncing the Union convention of the State, which sustained me. From that day to this the vials of relentless wrath and intolerance have been poured upon my head. The furnace of denunciation has been heated seven times hotter than usual. The weak, the time-serving, the cowardly, and even many good men have given way before the storm. But, sir, during all this tornado I have never wavered for one moment.

I believe in truth. It is eternal, for it is born of God.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again."

Believe in the resurrection and the life of the great truths upon which the Republic and civil liberty depend. In this Government and under this system of ours, with a Federal Government for general purposes, and with State governments to defend local rights and interests, liberty, equality, and fraternity between the States and all the States under the Constitution in this Union are essential to that life. If that equality of the States, if that liberty of the States, if that fraternity of the States is to be trampled under foot by the consolidated, usurping powers of Congress overriding the Constitution, then, sir, the Republic is gone—forever gone; anarchy or empire has come.

If during all this struggle, and under all this load of obloquy and denunciation, I had ever for one moment doubted the wisdom and the justness of the course I have pursued in opposing the ideas which underlie the revolution now going on, and which day by day and every day is bringing us nearer and nearer to the brink of absolute consolidation, to be sustained by unlimited military despotism, all doubts are now removed. The last report from the Reconstruction Committee, the two bills from the House of Representatives lying upon your table and pressed for immediate action here, have removed the last vestige of those doubts, and have made to my vision the course I ought to pursue as clear as the path of the sun in the heavens.

Sir, there is no longer room for me to doubt the truth of what I told the people of Wisconsin: that to adopt the ideas and follow the lead of those radical men was to dissolve the Union, drive the southern States out of the Union, abolish all constitutions and all civil governments in those States, and reduce those States and the people of those States to absolute, unqualified military despotism, of all forms of human government the worst that was ever conceived. In my opening speech at Janesville, in reply to the unwarrantable attacks upon me, I told the people of Wisconsin there what I now repeat: that those ideas, if adopted, would culminate, as they are now culminating, in their legitimate, natural, inevitable results—in that result which we now see—a proposition to establish, accompanied by a threat to push it through this Senate in twenty-four hours from the time it is proposed, concentrated military despotism. Sir, I need no other vindication for the course I pursued in Wisconsin, nor for the course that I have pursued here. That vindication is full, ample, and overwhelming. I told them also that if Congress should follow the lead of these men, and insist upon universal negro suffrage as a condition precedent to admitting those States to representation, it would be a revolution; it would be virtually abolishing the rights, the independence, and the equality of the States under the Constitution. Both of these ideas have culminated here at last. They have reached their logical results. They are embodied in the two pending measures from the House.

Mr. President, I arraign these measures and denounce them before the country and before the civilized world, because they overthrow the Constitution of the United States in ten States of the Union; because, instead of guaranteeing a republican form of government, they establish a military despotism in each of those States, with absolute power of life and death, without any appeal beyond the uniformed gentleman who, under the title of brigadier general, holds the life, liberty, and property of every man, woman, and child, black and white, at his absolute control. Great God! has it come to this, that in this age, in this country, a republican people and a pretended Republican party shall propose to establish such a dictatorship, such a despotism as this?

"O Judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason."

I arraign these measures further as an open abandonment of all practicable reconstruction by Congress after all its professions. I say "practicable," for I will refer in a moment to the proposed bill for the reorganization of Louisiana. For two long years Congress has debated and abandoned the various propositions from various men and various committees. Members of Congress have lashed each other; they have inflamed themselves; they have infuriated the country North and South. They made open war on the Lincoln-Johnson policy, boasting that they had a better policy to come; and that better policy we now see. In fact, during all this time Congress has had no policy; and what Wendell Phillips said of this boasted policy of Congress, claimed to be so much superior to the Lincoln-Johnson policy, I fear has foundation in truth. I have no disposition to wound the feelings of any, and perhaps I shall not, by substantially stating what he said: This proposed constitutional amendment has proved to be a cheat, a sham, a lie, a mere contrivance to tide over the fall elections, a political platform upon which to elect members of Congress and inflame the war passions of the North, not yet allayed, against the people of the South. Even now, sir, that boasted policy is to be abandoned; all reconstruction by civil law is abandoned; you turn it all over at last to a brigadier general with the Army of the United States. Some gentlemen see no danger in putting despotic powers in the hands of a general. Sir, how did the republic of Rome pass from its republican condition to become an empire? It was by passing from the power of its consuls and tribunes to the power of the general of the army—the imperator, which simply means general commanding the army. The name was not changed, but the thing called empire, the embodied despotism, the concentrated essence of despotism, was in the power of the general of the army, the imperator. From his assuming imperial powers in Rome the general became an emperor. The very name of emperor has been derived from the Latin word for general. Is there no suggestion for all serious minds in this great fact?

I arraign these measures as an open, shameless confession before our country and before the civilized world that republican institutions are a failure; that republicanism, constitutional liberty regulated by law, for which the good men of all ages have longed and prayed, which our ancestors fought and struggled for and hoped they had obtained, with all that longing, praying, hoping, and struggling, is here, in the home of republican institutions, in this land of liberty, in this Senate, in the very house of its friends, after all admitted to be nothing more than a terrible, bloody dream; and that dream is over.

I arraign these measures as a stupendous folly, equaled only by the more stupendous crime contained in them against this age and against civilization. No man, it seems to me, can seriously believe for one moment that thirty million freemen of the northern States can deprive eight millions of their fellow-citizens of the South of all liberty, and hold them in vassalage under absolute, unqualified military despotism by a standing army, and be able to maintain republican liberty for themselves and for their children. It concerns not merely the South; the South is wasted, almost ruined and destroyed; but it concerns the people of the North more than the people of the South whether we shall enter upon this folly and crime.

But, sir, I arraign this Louisiana bill as insidious, treacherous, and false. It pretends to bring peace. It sows the seeds of eternal internecine war. By disfranchising the great majority of the whites and by extending universal suffrage to the blacks it will inevitably lead to a conflict between the races. The idea of white disfranchisement and negro domination is born of unforgiving hate and lust for despotic power. If this Louisiana bill, as it came from the House, should be adopted by Congress and forced upon the people of that State by the Army and despotic power to back it, thus to subject the white people of our own blood, with our own history, Anglo-Saxons fighting for liberty for a thousand years, and compel them to submit to negro rule and negro domination, it will produce such a horrible state of things as no language can describe, and which has never entered into the heart of man to conceive.

It was that idea above all others which inflamed the people of New Orleans and goaded them into that terrible riot. No language can express my abhorrence and condemnation of all riots, of all lawlessness, and of all crime. I condemn that riot in the strongest and most unequivocal language; but, sir, the responsibility for it rests upon that idea of white disfranchisement and negro domination. It was that idea which inflamed the passions of that people beyond control and beyond conception. I only mention this fact to show how deeply and how terribly all the passions of the human heart are to be aroused and infuriated in the State of Louisiana if you once adopt this bill as it came from the House. Should it pass, sir, its title should be amended. It should read: "A bill," not "to reestablish civil government," but "to organize hell in the State of Louisiana." [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Order!

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Sir, the men who made the Constitution of the United States were wise men; they were great men. When they formed that Constitution it was proposed in the Convention, while defining the powers to be given to Congress, by one member that Congress should have power to declare war and make peace; but when they came to consider the proposition they struck out the last clause giving Congress the power to make peace. Why did they do it? It is a significant question. Because they knew two things: first of all that in the very nature of things the making of peace is an executive duty, not legislative. Making peace is the execution of the law. When the laws are resisted, the executive power wielding the sword overcomes the resistance, and when the laws are no longer resisted, but peacefully executed in the tribunals of the law, peace has come. Obedience to the law is peace. They knew another thing: that of all bodies in the world Congress with its three hundred members and its three hundred different conflicting and varying propositions was poorly constituted to agree upon or settle the terms of peace. The wisdom of this conclusion of our forefathers in framing the Constitution is fully justified by the history of the present Congress, and its efforts at making peace and agreeing on the basis of reconstruction and the restoration of tranquillity. A hundred propositions have been made, debated, advocated, resisted, rejected. The Committee on Reconstruction again and again has brought forward its propositions and abandoned them as impracticable; and at last we come to what? Reconstruction by Congress? Not at all; but reconstruction by the sword; reconstruction by the General of the Army. Where is your boasted congressional policy? Where is your wisdom so superior to what was proposed by Mr. Lincoln, the great chieftain of the Union party?

Mr. President, I know gentlemen may say that if we confide to General Grant, who commands the Army, all will be well. There is no man in this body or out of it who entertains for the General of the Army a higher or more profound respect than I do; but, sir, I know that this power of despotism should not be placed in any hands, though an angel from heaven could descend and take it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it is with exceeding reluctance that I rise to break the charm which has been produced by the very able and eloquent speech of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. It is not for me to intervene between him and the members of the General Assembly of his State. I hope, however, he will pardon the suggestion that his is not the first example where ingratitude has been shown to a man who has faithfully served a bad cause. He has told us that he once belonged to the good old Democratic party. He has told us how he strayed away from that honored and honorable fold; and he has told us how he became connected with that party which has filled your land with tears and made every acre of your territory fresh with graves.

Sir, it is a fact that should rejoice the Democratic heart, that from the origin of that party to the time when it ceased to control the political action of this country no such grave charges could be made against it as those which a member of the Republican party, and a faithful disciple of it, as he himself professes to be, brings against the party to which he professes to belong.

Having its origin in the early periods of American history, when your population did not number over five millions, nor your States over some fifteen or sixteen, the Democratic party never attempted to impose taxation without representation. It never repeated the offense for the commission of which our fathers went to war with an English king. It never assumed to lock the doors of this Senate Chamber against the representatives of ten States of this Union or to keep from the councils of the other House Representatives chosen by the people. It never suspended or abolished the writ of habeas corpus. It never suppressed one newspaper. It never made one arbitrary arrest. Faithful to the Constitution and careful of the rights of the people, under its guidance your country progressed in the short period of sixty years to become one of the greatest among the nations of the earth. Peace, plenty, prosperity, and happiness everywhere prevailed. In the short period of sixty years you numbered thirty-four States and more than thirty million people.

Sir, it never assumed to be wiser than the fathers. Observant of their teachings, it heeded the Charter of our liberties. It never turned traitor to God and to Providence, and never attempted to say that those whom God had said were not and should not be equals should be equals. The founders of that party were wise men, prudent men, men of common sense. When they looked forth upon nature and reviewed the handiwork of the Almighty, it never occurred to them that equality was the law of nature or of nature's God. They saw a difference in the majestic oak from the small sapling by its side. They saw a difference in the rolling of the mighty waves of the ocean and the running waters of the little brook. They saw a difference between the majestic animals that rove your forests and the humble mole which burrows in the ground. From nature's teachings and from nature's works they learned that the law of Providence and the law of God was not equality, but inequality in diversity.

They looked out upon society and they viewed the different races of men and they learned the same lesson. When they saw the race to which we belong making every improvement in their condition which was possible to be made; when they saw them commanding the lightnings of heaven and the winds of heaven; and when they looked upon the humbler, inferior negro race, and saw that throughout all the periods of the existence of that race they had never made any such strides, and that whenever left to themselves they were to be found in the most abject ignorance, poverty, and degradation, it did not occur to our fathers that that race was meant to associate with the nobler and superior race in the administration of the affairs of government.

It cannot be laid to the charge of that party, as has been laid to the charge of the dominant party in this Chamber by one of its own members to-day, that in contravention of every principle of civil and constitutional liberty it sought to govern a free people by the arbitrary will of an arbitrary military despot. No, sir; the framers of our Government, who were the fathers of the Democratic party, secured the blessings of constitutional, civil liberty in a written charter, which they swore to defend, and which, while they lived, was honestly and faithfully observed.

It cannot be laid to the charge of that party, as has been charged upon this Republican party, this "party of progress," this "party of sublime moral ideas," this party upon whose advent to power happiness and prosperity were to follow, that they brought a bill into the two Houses of Congress for reducing their own race to the abject control and government of an inferior race. Sir, go and search the history of the world; go read the history of any civilized people on earth, and point me if you can to a single instance where members of a superior race have attempted to degrade their own race into subjection to an inferior and a lately servile race. Such an instance is not to be found in all recorded history, and yet such is the proposition which is made to-day in the Senate of the United States.

What, sir; has it come to this, that you, the descendants of honored, noble, revolutionary, patriotic sires, make the open confession before the civilized world that you are incapable of administering the affairs of Government without the superior enlightenment of your colored brethren? Has it come to this, that negro intelligence and negro patriotism and negro loyalty are to be invoked for the preservation of constitutional American liberty, and that, unless they are brought into participation in the affairs of Government by this superior race your Union is destroyed and your liberty gone? That is the confession which you are making.

Sir, allow me to say that if it were not for the fact that I regard these few passing hours as the most momentous in the history of my country since the formation of the Federal Constitution; ay, sir, more momentous than in times of civil war, I would not stand up here to utter one word upon the present occasion. I have felt an indisposition during the whole period of this session to mingle in the debates of this body. Why have I felt that indisposition? When I first entered this Chamber eight years ago, peace, prosperity, and happiness abounded everywhere. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the British Possessions to the Gulf, there was naught but joy and gladness. No weeping Rachel then mourned for her children because they were not. No aged father then bent in sorrow over the fresh-made grave of his first born. No shock of arms resounded throughout your land. No public debt of any amount burdened the industry of your people. No attempt had been made to degrade the race to which I belong, and to make superior to me and mine that inferior race which God in his providence never meant should control white men, and which God Almighty and the valor of the American people will see to it shall never govern them.

Mr. President, such measures as these must have their origin in motives. I know of no motives in which they could have their origin but in three: the desire of gain, the desire of power, or the spirit of revenge. I believe that these measures had their origin in all three of those unhallowed principles. What has been proclaimed upon the floor of this Senate Chamber by the advocates of this bill? Allow the southern rebels, as they are called, to vote, and exclude the negro population, and they will send representatives here and again be the political party in power. That has been unblushingly avowed upon the floor of this Chamber as one of the controlling reasons for the passage of these measures.

What do we hear every day? Bitter, unrelenting denunciation of men of high and noble hearts; men who, for the vindication of what they thought to be their rights, met you in open, manly conflict upon the field of battle; but when they conceived their cause was lost laid down their arms, submitted to the situation, and from that day to this have done everything which even the President of the United States or the Congress of the United States has asked of them, save to adopt an infamous proposed amendment to the Constitution, which if they had adopted they would have shown themselves unworthy of their sires. "Rebels," "traitors," are the words. It is well known to every gentleman in this Chamber that I had no part in what is called the rebellion; my State did not link her fortunes to those of the southern States which seceded; but do you believe, sir, that the hundreds and thousands of brave men and noble women who gave their hearts and their all to the success of that cause are any worse at heart than you are? Do you believe that they conceived themselves as rebels or as traitors and were deserving of a rebel or traitor's doom? No, sir. The noblest spirits that this world has ever produced or that God ever made have gone into similar contests. There have been some rebellions, as they are called, that have been successful, and then their chieftains have become heroes. Your own Washington was called a rebel, and you are descended to-day from a race of rebels, for so your revolutionary fathers were called and said to be. There have been other rebellions which ought to have succeeded and have not. I do not think that this which you call a rebellion ought to have succeeded; but the fact that it did not succeed gives you no right to impose terms upon their people greater than they can bear, or to visit the consequences of your vindictive passions upon them. In the solitude of their own homes, I have no doubt, there are many of them to-day who can honestly exclaim with the poet:

"Rebellion! Foul, dishonoring word,
Whose wrongful blight so oft has stained
The holiest cause that tongue or sword
Of mortal ever lost or gained!
How many a spirit born to bless,
Hath sunk beneath that withering name,
Whom but a day's, an hour's success
Had wafted to eternal fame!"

Because, Mr. President, men may be engaged in a course which I do not approve, and seek an object to the attainment of which I will lend them no help, I will not come in to usurp the seat of Almighty God and cast my thunderbolts of damnation upon the land of those I judge to be my foes.

Sir, there is a little incident in Spanish history that nobly contrasts with this spirit of vindictiveness and cruelty which is now being practiced by the Congress of the United States, and which I am sorry to say finds approval with many of the American people of the North. I will read it. It is a beautiful incident, and we may gather lessons of instruction from it. I read from a lecture delivered by a very able historian of this country:

"Some centuries ago two kings were contending for the Crown of Castile. I forget their names for the present, but to facilitate the telling of my story, I shall call one Alfonso and the other John. Alfonso proclaimed of course that John was a usurper and a rebel, and John returned the compliment. Well, John at last defeated his rival, horse and foot, and carried everything triumphantly before him, with the exception of a single town which Alfonso had entrusted to a stout old knight, called Aguilar, and which after a long siege still remained impregnable. 'You have done enough for honor,' said King John one day to the knight, 'surrender, and you shall have the most liberal terms.' 'If you had read the history of your country,' answered Aguilar, 'you would have known that none of my race ever capitulated.' 'I will starve you, proud and obstinate fool,' 'Starve the eagle, if you can.' 'I will put you and the whole garrison to the sword.' 'Try,' was the laconic reply, and the siege went on. One morning, as the rising sun was beginning to gild with its rays the highest towers of the beleaguered city, a parley sounded from the camp of the enemy. The old knight appeared on the wall and looked down on the king below. 'Surrender,' said John again; my rival, Alfonso, is dead, and the whole of Castile recognizes my sway as that of its legitimate sovereign.' 'Sir, I believe you, but I must see my dead master.' 'Go then to Seville, where his body lies. You have my royal word that I shall attempt nothing against you on your way, nor against the city in your absence.' The knight came out with banner flying and a small escort of grim-visaged warriors. Behind him the gates closed; before him the dense battalions of the enemy opened their ranks, and as he passed along, slowly riding his noble war-horse, shouts of admiration burst wide and far from the whole host who had so often witnessed his deeds of valor, and the echoes of the loud and enthusiastic greeting accompanied him until the red plume which waved over his helmet was out of sight. He arrived at Seville, and went straight to the cathedral, where he found the tomb of his former sovereign. He had it opened, and after gazing awhile with moist eyes at the pale face which met his look, he thus addressed the dead monarch: 'Sir, I had sworn never to deliver to anybody but yourself the keys of the town which you had intrusted to my care. Here they are; I have kept my oath," and he deposited them on the breast of King Alfonso. Then bestriding his good steed, he galloped back to his post. As soon as he approached, again the ranks of the enemy opened, and King John confronted him. "Well," said the king, "are you satisfied, and do you now give up the contest?" "Yes, sire," "Where are the keys of the town?" "On King Alfonso's breast. Go and get them. We meet no more." "By heaven, we shall never part," exclaimed the king. "Get the keys back yourself, and remain in command of the town in my name." The followers of the king murmured, and complained of his rewarding a rebel. "He is no longer one," said King John. "Such rebels, when won, become the best of subjects."

Sir, let the Republican party take a lesson from this incident in Spanish history; and now that that people have deposited the keys upon the dead body of the southern confederacy let them say with King John, "No longer rebels; we never part more."

But, Mr. President, I stated that the love of gain might also be a principle which actuated the party now in power in the course which they are pursuing against the people of the South in inaugurating measures of this kind and pressing them to enactment. Such a feeling was foreseen by the men of the Revolution. You know, sir, that when the Federal Constitution was proposed for adoption there were some persons advocating unlimited monarchy, some a united republic, some separate confederacies, three or four in all. John Jay, one of the writers for the Federalist in that day, in opposing the creation of three or four or more confederacies and advocating the adoption of the Constitution by which all the States could be united under one government, uses the following language. Speaking of the distrust and jealousy which would exist between the rival confederacies in case of their formation, he says:

"The North is generally the region of strength, and many local circumstances render it probable that the most northern of the proposed confederacies would at a period not very far distant be unquestionably more formidable than of the others."

He was a northern man himself.

"No sooner would this become evident than the northern hive would excite the same ideas and sensations in the more southern parts of America which it formerly did in the southern parts of Europe, nor does it appear to be a rash conjecture that its young swarms might often be tempted to gather honey in the more blooming fields and milder air of their luxurious and more delicate neighbors."

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the permission of the Senator from Delaware, I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS and Mr. PATTERSON. Say half past seven o'clock?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; seven o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend that motion by saying half past seven o'clock. Let us have a little rest. The House always meets at half past seven.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is now but a few minutes after four o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will not insist upon it against the wishes of the Senator.

The motion of Mr. WILLIAMS was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

PETITION.

Mr. WILSON. I present the petition of Adeline G. Tarr, widow of Addison Tarr, a private in company A, thirty-fifth regiment Massachusetts volunteers, praying that her name be restored to the pension-rolls, to date from the 25th of February, 1865. She lost her pension by marrying again, and she then found that the husband she married had another wife. She now asks that her pension be restored. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 347) to change certain collection districts in Maryland and Virginia;

A bill (No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 159) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owner of the yacht Mayflower to change the name of the same to that of Silvie.

The message further announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. No. 399) relative to collection districts in North Carolina.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 878) to quiet the title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 899) in relation to revenue-cutter service;

A bill (H. R. No. 937) to authorize changes in the location of lights and other aids to navigation on the southern coast of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1001) for the relief of William B. Todd;

A bill (H. R. No. 1142) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate a Newsboys' Home," and also for the relief of abandoned children in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-houses therein mentioned, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the Secretary of State to present to Captain James G. Smith, of the British brig Victoria, a gold chronometer, in token of appreciation of his services in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and passengers on board of the American brig E. H. Fidler; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) authorizing examinations of improvements in vessels, and for other purposes, in aid of navigation and for the protection of life and property at sea.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTHERN STATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1143) to provide for the more efficient government of the insurrectionary States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the formation of one Confederacy or Federal Union did not prevent the manifestation of a disposition on the part of the northern people which was predicted by Mr. Jay in the extract which I read to the Senate before it took a recess. From the earliest period of our history that same northern hive, as he described it, have continuously looked upon the sunny plains of the South, and in his expressive language, "sought to gather honey from those more blooming fields." Hence, after the commencement of the late civil war we find confiscation bills introduced into both Houses of Congress, the estates of all the southern people sought to be taken away from them by unconstitutional acts of confiscation, and a large portion of the American people, among whom were generals who never won a battle and scarcely ever disgraced a field by their presence, clamoring for a general partition of the lands of the people of the South among the conquering hordes.

I shall now proceed, Mr. President, to a brief analysis of the measures before the Senate, and then consider the question whether you have the constitutional power to pass them. The immediate bill under consideration contains just half of one truth and no more. It does not contain a single constitutional provision, but it has the merit of containing just one half of a truth. It sets out by saying that—

"The pretended State governments of the late so-called States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas were set up without the authority of Congress."

That is the only particle of truth there is in it. The State governments there existing were set up without the authority of Congress in most of these States; but even that is not true of all of them. The governments in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia were set up without the authority of Congress; but Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas were admitted into the Federal Union by virtue of an act of Congress. And what authority, pray, has Congress to set up the State governments of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia? They were of the original thirteen States. They were States and had State governments before Congress was formed; they helped to frame the Constitution which creates Congress; and yet we are gravely told in the preamble to this bill that these States, the creators of Congress, were set up without the authority of Congress!

The preamble further says that these Governments were set up "without the sanction of the people." Mr. President, is it possible that men can so delude themselves as to bring their minds to the belief that these original States, whose constitutions were formed and whose governments were in operation before the oldest of the members of this body had an existence, were set up without authority of their people? Does any one pretend to assert that the State governments of the other States which are named in the preamble were set up without the authority of their people, when your very records show that years ago by a convention of their people, and in accordance with an act of Congress their State governments were set up.

I know what is the pretended answer to this. It is said that though it is true that Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia had State governments prior to the late war; somehow or other, during the continuance of the war, they lost those State governments, have not been able to find them, and must appeal to Congress to set up State governments for them. Sir, this doctrine is contradictory of the whole theory upon which you carried on this war. As I said last night, during the existence of the late civil war you passed more than one hundred, yea more than two hundred bills through both Houses of Congress, receiving the sanction of the President of the United States, in which you designated them as States of the Union. You published to the people of the whole country, North and South, that these States were in the Union, and you voted down a proposition made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] that they could by an act of what you call rebellion commit political suicide and destroy their own State governments. You have since the termination of the late civil war submitted to them a constitutional amendment to abolish slavery.

You submitted it to them as States, and as States they ratified it; and yet you now pretend that there were no State governments to which you could submit a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States. Sir, last night by a vote of this body, when the Senator from Massachusetts attempted to get an expression of the opinion of the Senate, that it only required three fourths of the Legislatures of the States represented in Congress to adopt a constitutional amendment, you voted down that proposition, every man in the Chamber but seven voting against it. So late as last night, while this very bill was under consideration, you solemnly, by a vote of this body, affirmed your own belief that there are legally existing State governments within these States. And this very day the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary called up a bill in the Senate with reference to the holding of circuit courts and assigning judges of the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit courts now open and in operation over the whole South. And yet a majority of this body, I suppose, in the face of all this recognition of State governments in the section of the country lately at war with you, are going to vote that there are no such things as State governments there.

But, sir, this preamble goes further, and declares that these "pretended State governments afford no protection for life or property, but countenance and encourage lawlessness and crime;" and yet you have not a particle of reliable evidence of any such fact. I know there are men prowling about the city of Washington, some of whom I have seen, whose record, if there be treason in this whole Government, is covered all over with treason, who are trying to poison the mind of Congress against the people of their own section of the country, and pretending that there are great oppressions in that portion of the country against the Union men; and some of those very men who have your confidence and the confidence of the majority in Congress were men to make speeches to confederate flags and to encourage confederate soldiers to go to the field. Such creatures are always to be found in every community. There are some men who have so degraded their character that for profit and gain they would not only turn traitors against their own section of the country, not only against their neighbors and their friends, but would sell the cross upon which their Saviour died to a Jew for firewood for the filthy gain that would accrue to them.

You further declare by this preamble that "it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said so-called States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established," and this on account of the want of protection to life and property in these States! Why, sir, any person who takes the southern journals, and knows the temper of the people there, is well aware that they recommend quiet submission, attention to business, and the withdrawal of the consideration of the people of that section of the country from mere political questions. They feel that, having submitted to your power, having been conquered by the force of arms, they are helpless in your hands; and they witness no doubt to-night this proposed outrage upon their rights, upon humanity, upon liberty, and upon law with feelings of sorrow and despondency, but with no idea of giving you occasion to trample on them further on account of any attempted resistance to Federal authority.

Then, sir, your bill proposes to divide this whole country, some ten States, occupying a territory larger than several of the most powerful and extensive Governments of Europe, into five military districts, and proposes to place over that people, whom? Military officers, who, "dressed in a little brief authority," may exercise their power in the oppression of the people. Everything, life, personal liberty, property, is made subject by this bill to the absolute will and control, the despotic will and control, of a miserable petty military officer, who perhaps before he was an officer was a beggar. I do not say this in reference to all military officers. There are gentlemen who are military officers as much so as in any class of the community; but I have seen some of them in my own State who could show their valor and their patriotism by catching up, without any pretense of justification, my own neighbors and friends and transporting them beyond the Federal lines, without even giving them a hearing or informing them of the cause of their arrest. Sir, your House of Representatives to-day is disgraced by a military officer who, when in command of the middle department, sent his soldiers into my State to keep Democrats from voting, who caused innocent, quiet, peaceable citizens of my State to be arrested and dragged from their families and their homes; and when they begged to know the cause of their arrest they were sent across the lines with a warning that if they returned their lives should be the forfeit. Here, sir, you propose to place all the people of the South under the jurisdiction of military officers.

And then, although the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress, and to Congress alone, the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and that only in time of invasion or rebellion, you propose to delegate to a lieutenant or any petty officer this great power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus throughout that whole territory; and you deny to a Federal judge even the power to issue that great writ of right unless some military officer shall certify to him on honor that he believes it to be a proper case.

Mr. President, the pending amendment to this bill, I believe, is the one submitted by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON,] and it goes the whole figure. It is plain upon its face; it shows what it means; there is no deception or fraud about it. It is a proposition from beginning to end to give the government of all these States to the negro population to the exclusion of the white population; for it is expressly provided in that amendment that a Governor and provisional council shall be appointed, and that when elections are called no one shall vote who was ever engaged in or countenanced what you call rebellion, and who cannot take your test oath, except persons who have never occupied a higher position than that of a common soldier, and even his right is made subject to question and put at the mercy of any challenging party. What is the effect of that? You say that you want to give loyal governments to the people of the South; you say that the negroes are all loyal; and you say that scarcely any of the white population of the southern States are loyal. Well, sir, according to your standard of loyalty, there are very few men in the southern States who can conscientiously take your test oath. Those who did not go to battle, those who were too old to go to battle, or who were exempted from going to battle, had brothers and sons who were engaged in the war, and do you suppose they sat quietly at home and saw their suffering kindred in distress and did nothing to relieve them? You excluded all this class of people and what is the consequence? The giving over to the absolute control of the negro population of the entire government of that section of the country. Sir, such a proposition was never heard of in any civilized country before; and such a proposition, although you may adopt it, will never be submitted to by the people of this country. It seems to me if your design was to provoke another war, to drive an oppressed people again to desperation, you could not adopt more efficient or effective means to accomplish your design and purpose. I am very much afraid that there are some, and not a few, in this country who have such a design.

Sir, as these two bills have been so fully discussed by gentlemen who have preceded me, I shall not further consider them in detail, but proceed to inquire into the authority of Congress to pass them, and that will lead necessarily to a brief review of the nature and character and form of government under which we live. That political party which now controls the legislative branch of the Government seems to think that Congress is omnipotent, that it has all power, that there is no limitation upon its authority, that it may do just what it pleases. Hence, if a President displeases them they threaten impeachment, suspension, removal; if the Supreme Court of the United States displeases them they threaten the abolishment of the court; and they, a coördinate branch of the Government, are assuming to themselves all power and attempting to reduce the Government to an absolute despotism. Now, sir, where did Congress get this power?

There was a time when there was no such thing as the Federal Union. A long time ago many of the people from the continent and islands of Europe, some under the pretense of the enjoyment of religious and political liberty, came to this shore; others for the purpose of benefiting their worldly condition. A portion went to Massachusetts and exercised themselves in the delightful employment of burning witches, whipping women, banishing Quakers, and buying and selling negroes and Indians into slavery; others went to Virginia, South Carolina, and other Colonies. They were all Colonies of the parent country, England. They had no political connection between themselves; a citizen of the one was not a citizen of another. They were totally distinct, and dependent upon the British Crown. In the course of time the British Government attempted to do toward them as a majority of Congress are doing to the people of the South now, imposing upon them taxation and denying to them representation. For this among other causes, and for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, which you propose now to effect in the southern States, the Colonies took up arms against the parent country. They never, except for the purpose of carrying on the war against the common enemy, had any such union as we have had since. During the progress of that war and before its termination they entered into the Articles of Confederation, each reserving to itself its own absolute sovereignty. They were united for certain common specified objects and purposes; and yet even under that limited restraint, that restive section of the country which is always meddling with the affairs of the others could not live in peace and harmony with the other sections. In 1786, if you look at the writings of Mr. Monroe you will find that he wrote a letter to Patrick Henry, in which he described that section of the country as trying to break up the Union formed by the Articles of Confederation, and he also addressed a similar letter to Mr. Madison. To show that I speak by the book on this point, I beg leave to quote from the second volume of Rives's Life and Times of Madison this letter addressed by Mr. Monroe, then a delegate in Congress from Virginia, to Patrick Henry, the Governor of the State, dated New York, August 12, 1786:

"Certain it is that committees are held in this town of eastern men, and others of this State, upon the subject of a dismemberment of the States east of the Hudson from the Union, and the erection of them into a separate government. To what length they have gone, I know not, but have assurances as to the truth of the above position, with this addition to it: that the measure is talked of in Massachusetts familiarly, and it is supposed to have originated there. The plan of the Government, in all its modifications, has even been contemplated by them."

On pages 123 and 124, of the same work, is Mr. Monroe's letter to Mr. Madison of September 3, 1786, in which he says:

"I consider the party, especially Jay and the principal advocates, as having gone too far to retreat. They must either carry the measure or be disgraced, (as the principle already hath been by the vote of five States,) and sooner than suffer this they will labor to break the Union. I therefore suspect they have been already (and indeed have too much reason for my suspicion) intriguing with the principal men in these States to effect that end in the last resort. They have even sought a dismemberment to the Potomac, and those of the party here have been sounding those in office thus far."

To defeat the measure therefore, completely, we must follow their movements everywhere; advise the leading men of their designs, the purposes they are meant to serve, &c.; and, in the event of the worst extremity, prepare them for a union with the southern States.

When peace was declared in 1783 what did the parent country do? Did it recognize the people of the United States as one collective independent sovereign Power and Government? No, sir. If you look to the treaty of peace, you will find that it names specifically every State in the Union and recognizes each one of these States to be a free, sovereign, and independent State. Subsequently our fathers sent their delegates to a Convention to frame a Federal Constitution. What kind of a Constitution did they frame? Such a one as would give omnipotence to the legislative branch, Congress? Assuredly not. You hear it often said in this Chamber and by the press of the country and elsewhere that this Government was framed by "the people of the United States" based upon the language of the preamble, "We, the people of the United States." In violation of the historic records and of all the facts connected with the adoption of the Constitution, we hear this doctrine almost every day in the legislative halls of this country; and the only proof that is pretended to be given in support of the proposition is that the preamble to the Constitution commences with the words "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union," &c. Now, what is the historic fact connected with that?

When the Constitution was drafted, completed, and agreed upon, the preamble read, "We, the people of New Hampshire, of Massachusetts, of Connecticut," and so on, naming all the thirteen States specifically, "do ordain and establish this Constitution." After the Constitution was adopted by the Convention, it was referred to a committee of revision and style, who changed the language to "We, the people of the United States," and for a very obvious reason, because some of the States might not enter into the Union at first, as Rhode Island, New York, Virginia, and North Carolina did not for a time; and hence, the assent of only nine States being required to the ratification of the Constitution, it would be improper to place in the preamble the names of the States, until they had assented to the ratification of the Constitution.

The Constitution then formed was not a national Constitution, nor did it create a national Government; but it was a Federal Constitution, creating a Federal Government. This is apparent by an examination into the organization of the different departments of the Government. Is the Congress of the United States a national Congress? Why has Delaware two Senators and New York but two? Because in this Hall the States are represented, and represented as equals. Is the House of Representatives a national body or a federative body? In no sense national; and why? If so, the whole people of the country must have a voice in determining who shall compose it; but each member of the House is elected by the people of his own State. You provide a certain ratio for representation in that House, and yet every State must have at least one member. The present ratio I think is one hundred and twenty-seven thousand, and yet Florida, when she was in the Union with only about fifty thousand inhabitants, was held entitled to one Representative. It is not therefore the body of the people, the whole mass of the people, that are represented in either branch of Congress, but it is the States. So with the executive power of your Government; it is not national in the sense that you use the term. Why? Is the President elected by a majority of the people of the whole United States? Not so; but each State elects its members of the Electoral College, and it is possible that a President may receive a majority of the electoral votes although two thirds of the people of the United States may be opposed to his election. So in the organization of the judicial department of your Government, the President nominates the judges, but the States represented in the Senate give their advice and consent. It never was intended, as I maintain, that the powers which you claim, which are powers that can only be exercised by a national consolidated Government, should be delegated to you.

But, Mr. President, let me ask the attention of the friends of this bill for a moment to the consequences which would result from its adoption. It treats all the State organizations existing in the South as having no legal existence. Then, what is the consequence? Then the proclamations of the President were void, then the convening of their State conventions was void, then the repeal of their ordinances of secession was void, then the abolition of slavery in the southern States was void, and there are as many slaves in the southern States to-day as there were at the time of the repeal of the ordinances of secession. These are some of the consequences which the assumed friends of this negro race, in their blindness and madness, are bringing about. If these State organizations be not valid, then the conventions which abolished slavery, ratified that amendment to the Constitution, and repealed the ordinances of secession were unlawful bodies.

Now, Mr. President, I know that much; if not all, the feeling engendered against the southern section of the country arises from the fact that the people of that section, for reasons which they thought sufficient, but which we thought were insufficient, took up arms and attempted to assert their independence. But where, let me ask you, did the southern people learn this doctrine? I mention the facts which I am about to state, not for the purpose of reflecting upon any section of the country, but to show you that if they did act upon the impression that they had a right to secede from the Union and to resist your authority by force of arms, there were mitigating circumstances in their case which should relieve them from the visitation of punishment because the people of the northern States had held to the same doctrine. Where did it first originate? As I have stated to you, upon the authority of Mr. Monroe, it sprang up in the North. We know that the first commentator upon the Constitution of the United States, and the ablest one in his day, Mr. Rawle, broadly asserted the doctrine and maintained that it was the universal sense of the founders of the Government; and he was a northern man. We know that Josiah Quincy, of Massachusetts, on the floor of Congress, when the bill for the admission of Louisiana into the Union was under consideration, avowed that in case that bill passed and became a law, it would be the right of all, as it would be the duty of some, to secede, peaceably if they could, forcibly if they must.

But, sir, they had higher authority than Josiah Quincy or Mr. Rawle: they had the authority of Mr. Madison and Mr. Hamilton for the doctrine that their primary allegiance was due to their native State. I am not here justifying the doctrine of secession, because I do not believe that a State has a right to secede; but when a State does secede and calls upon her citizens to support her authority, even as against the Federal Government, I hold as both Mr. Madison and Mr. Hamilton held that the people of the State would be justified in so doing; and why?

Mr. McDUGALL. Allow me to ask the Senator from Delaware how, if a State had not a right to secede, her citizens could be justified in war against the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will answer the Senator's question and then I hope I shall be allowed to proceed with my remarks without further interruption. The reason is this: the citizen is not responsible for the action of his government; and when his State, acting as a State, although she may act wrongfully, demands his obedience, he having been born upon her soil, she having the right to compel his obedience and to hang him if he refuses obedience, and the Federal Government not having the power to protect him from the consequences of disobedience, allegiance and protection being reciprocal, he is justified if he obeys his State. This is no new doctrine. It is a doctrine recognized by the English law. It is a doctrine which was practiced upon and executed by the judgments of the courts in this country during your revolutionary war. It is the doctrine which Mr. Madison asserted in the case of William Smith in the First Congress of the United States. Let me refer to the authorities on this point.

In the third volume of Dallas's Reports will be found the case of Talbot vs. Janson. In the argument of the case the doctrine of expatriation, allegiance, and citizenship was discussed. I read from page 140:

"With this law, however, human institutions have often been at variance, and no institutions more than the feudal system, which made the tyranny of arms the basis of society; chained men to the soil on which they were born; and converted the bulk of mankind into the villains, or slaves of a lord, or superior. From the feudal system sprang the law of allegiance, which pursuing the nature of its origin, rests on lands, for when lands were all held of the Crown, then the oath of allegiance became appropriate; it was the tenure of the tenant, or vassal. (Black's Commentaries, 366.) The oath of fealty and the ancient oath of allegiance were almost the same; both resting on lands; both designating the person to whom service should be rendered; though the one makes an exception as to the superior land, while the other is an obligation of fidelity against all men. (2 Black's Commentary, page 33, paragraph 140.) Service, therefore, was also an inseparable concomitant of fealty, as well as of allegiance. The oath of fealty could not be violated without loss of lands; and as all lands were held mediately or immediately of the sovereign, a violation of the oath of allegiance was, in fact, a voluntary submission to a state of outlawry. Hence arose the doctrine of perpetual and universal allegiance. When, however, the light of reason was shed upon the human mind the intercourse of man became more general and more liberal; the military was gradually changed for the commercial state, and the laws were found a better protection for persons and property than arms.

But even while the practical administration of government was thus reformed some portions of the ancient theory was preserved; and, among other things, the doctrine of perpetual allegiance remained with the fictitious tenure of all lands from the Crown to support it. Yet it is to be remembered that whether in its real origin, or in its artificial state, allegiance as well as fealty rests upon lands, and it is due to persons. Not so with respect to citizenship which has arisen from the dissolution of the feudal system; and is a substitute for allegiance, corresponding with the new order of things. Allegiance and citizenship differ, indeed, in almost every characteristic. Citizenship is the effect of compact; allegiance is the offspring of power and necessity. Citizenship is a political tie; allegiance is a territorial tenure. Citizenship is the charter of equality; allegiance is a badge of inferiority. Citizenship is constitutional; allegiance is personal. Citizenship is freedom; allegiance is servitude. Citizenship is communicable; allegiance is repulsive. Citizenship may be relinquished; allegiance is perpetual. With such essential differences the doctrine of allegiance is inapplicable to a system of citizenship, which it can serve neither to control nor to elucidate."

In the case of William Smith, of South Carolina, in the First Congress of the United States, I have before referred the Senate to the doctrine of Mr. Madison. Let me read his very words:

"What was the situation of the people of America when the dissolution of their allegiance took place by the Declaration of Independence? I conceive that every person who owed this primary allegiance to the particular community in which he was born retained his right of birth as the member of a new community; that he was consequently absolved from the secondary allegiance he had owed to the British sovereign. If he was not a minor, he became bound by his own act as a member of the society who separated with him from a submission to a foreign country. If he was a minor, his consent was involved in the decision of that society to which he belonged by the ties of nature. What was the allegiance as a citizen of South Carolina, he owed to the King of Great Britain? He owed his allegiance to him as a king of that society to which, as a society, he owed his primary allegiance. When the society separated from Great Britain, he was bound by that act and his allegiance transferred to that society, or the sovereign which that society should set up, because it was through his membership of the society of South Carolina that he owed allegiance to Great Britain."

"This reason will hold good unless it is supposed that the separation which took place between these States and Great Britain not only dissolved the union between those countries, but dissolved the union among the citizens themselves; that the original compact which made them altogether one society being dissolved, they could not fall into pieces, each part making an independent society, but must individually revert into a state of nature. But I do not conceive that this was of necessity to be the case; I believe such a revolution did not absolutely take place. But in supposing that this was the case lies the error of the memorialist. I conceive the Colonies remained as a political society, detached from their former connection with another society, without dissolving into a state of nature, but capable of substituting a new form of government in the place of the old one, which they had for special considerations abolished. Suppose the State of South Carolina should think proper to revise her constitution, abolish that which now exists, and establish another form of government; surely this would not dissolve the social compact. It would not throw them back into a state of nature; it would not dissolve the individual members of that society. It would leave them in perfect society, changing only the mode of action, which they are always at liberty to arrange. Mr. Smith being then, at the Declaration of Independence, a minor, but being a member of that particular society, he became, in my opinion, bound by the decision of the society with respect to the question of independence and change of government; and if afterward he had taken part with the enemies of his country he would have been guilty of treason against that Government to which he owed his allegiance, and would have been liable to be prosecuted as a traitor."

I read not these authorities to justify the acts of the southern States. I only cite them to show that men may honestly entertain at this day a doctrine to which such men as Mr. Madison, Mr. Rawle, and Mr. Josiah Quincy assented. But, sir, if you will look into the twenty-eighth number of the Federalist, a number written by Mr. Hamilton, you will find that he lays down in clear and express terms the right of the States to use force to repel the aggressions of the Federal Government. I will read it:

"It may safely be received as an axiom in our political system, that the State governments will, in all possible contingencies, afford complete security against invasions of the public liberty by the national authority."

How mistaken even the wisest of men may be!

"Projects of usurpation cannot be masked under pretenses so likely to escape the penetration of select bodies of men as of the people at large. The Legislatures will have better means of information; they can discover the danger at a distance; and possessing all the organs of civil power and the confidence of the people, they can at once adopt a regular plan of opposition, in which they can combine all the resources of the community. They can readily communicate with each other in the different States; and unite their common forces for the protection of their common liberty."

What did he mean by that? Did he not mean that whenever in the judgment of the people of a number of the States the Federal Government has trespassed upon their rights they may unite their forces in repelling that aggression and in subduing it; all their forces, mental, moral, and physical? It meant that or it meant nothing.

But, sir, Mr. Madison went further, as you will find in the debates of the Convention. When it was proposed to authorize the calling forth of the force of the Union against a delinquent State, he said:

"An Union of the States containing such an ingredient seemed to provide for its own destruction. The use of force against a State would look more like a declaration of war than an infliction of punishment, and would probably be considered by the party attacked as a dissolution of all previous compacts by which it might be bound. He hoped that such a system would be framed as to render this resource unnecessary, and moved, therefore, that the clause be postponed."

The proposition was, says the historian, "accordingly postponed and finally pretermitted altogether."

I have already referred to the claim of omnipotent power asserted for Congress under the allegation that "we, the people of the United States," made the Constitution according to the language of the preamble. Perhaps I may as well here read on that point an instructive statement from a work "by a Virginian," published in 1840, entitled "A Brief Inquiry into the Nature and Character of our Federal Government":

"The history of the preamble itself ought to have convinced our author that the inference which he draws from it could not be allowed. On the 6th of August, 1787, the committee appointed for that purpose reported the first draft of a Constitution. The preamble was in these words: 'We, the people of the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, do ordain, declare, and establish the following Constitution for the government of ourselves and our posterity.' (1 Elliott's Debates, 255.) On the very next day this preamble was unanimously adopted: and the reader will at once perceive that it carefully preserves the distinct sovereignty of the States, and discountenances all idea of consolidation. (Id., 256.) The draft of the Constitution thus submitted was discussed, and various alterations and amendments adopted (but without any change in the preamble,) until the 8th of September, 1787, when the following resolution was passed.

"It was moved and seconded to appoint a committee of five, to revise the style of and arrange the articles agreed to by the House; which passed in the affirmative." (Id., 324.) It is manifest that this committee had no power to change the meaning of anything which had been adopted, but were authorized merely to 'revise the style' and arrange the matter in proper order. On the 12th of the same month they made their report. The preamble, as they reported it, is in the following words: 'We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.' (Id., 326.) It does not appear that any attempt was made to change this phraseology in any material point or to reinstate the original. The presumption is, therefore, that the two were considered as substantially the same, particularly as the committee had no authority to make any change, except in the style. The difference in the mere phraseology of the two was certainly not overlooked; for on the 13th September, 1787, it was moved and seconded to proceed to the comparing of the report from the committee of revision with the articles which were agreed to by the House, and sent to them for arrangement; which was passed in the affirmative. And the same was read by paragraphs, compared, and in some places corrected and amended.' (Id., 338.) In what particulars these corrections and amendments were made we are not very distinctly informed."

But, Mr. President, in addition to the authorities which I have adduced on the question of the right of the States to compel the obedience of their citizens, let me refer on the question of secession to John Quincy Adams. In an address before the New York Historical Society, in 1839, he said:

"But the indissoluble link of union between the people of the several States of this confederated nation is, after all, not in the right, but in the heart. If the day should ever come (may Heaven avert it) when the affections of the people of these States shall be alienated from each other: when the fraternal spirit shall give way to cold indifference, or collisions of interest shall fester into hatred, the bands of political association will not long hold together; parties no longer attracted by the magnetism of conciliated interest and kindly sympathies; and far better will it be for the people of the dissipated States to part in friendship from each other than to be held together by constraint. Then will be the time for reverting to the precedents which occurred at the formation and adoption of the Constitution, to form a more perfect union, by dissolving that which no longer could bind, and to leave the separated parts to be reunited by the law of political gravitation to the center."

These are some of the reasons that these southern gentlemen had for pursuing the course they did. Admitting that the doctrine they held was wrong, that the theory they adopted was fallacious, yet that it was honestly entertained you cannot for a moment doubt, because it was honestly entertained by the fathers. Then, being a theory, though erroneous, honestly entertained, will you visit upon honest intentions and honest purposes and honest objects the vengeance provided for in this bill?

But, sir, you have not the authority to pass the bill, because all the power you have is derived from the Federal Constitution. Now, turn to the article of the Constitution in which your powers as the legislative department of this Government are conferred, and show me the slightest particle of authority for you to take under control States of this Union—States of this Union as recognized by yourselves—States of this Union as recognized by the very bills under consideration, because you yourselves in these bills call them Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, &c. What do we know about Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, except as States? And yet, in this very bill, you propose to put these States under absolute military authority, to erect a despotism absolute and complete, over nearly one half of the whole territory of the United States and one third of the people.

But, sir, the power to pass this bill is claimed by its friends to be based in that provision of the Constitution which makes it the duty of Congress to guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government. Under the pretext of guarantying to these States a republican form of government you are creating over them an absolute despotism, denying them the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, of trial by jury, and of every right that is guarantied and secured to the people of the whole country by the fundamental law of the land. That is the republican government which you in your boundless munificence and generosity are bestowing upon an unwilling people. You make slaves of them that they may be republicans and enjoy republican liberty. You will put their former slaves over them for Governors; you will send their slaves as Senators to represent their States in this body; you will send them to the lower House to represent them in that branch of Congress; and you will deny to the people of these States—the only people existing there within the meaning of the Federal Constitution—any voice in the management of their own affairs. Sir, it shows to what madness and folly, fanaticism and party zeal and the hope of public plunder and the love of political power will drive men. I think I have as much of the milk of human kindness in my bosom as most men, and I like to be as charitable as other men, but I cannot for the life of me see any other reason for the passage of these bills, any intention to pass them based upon any other reason than that of securing to the Republican party a lease of power for years to come. You think that if you give electoral votes to the negroes they will be your allies. You say they are superior to their disloyal masters, and they will yet be clothed with all the power in their respective States, and having done this great act for them, you will call upon them to rally to your support at the polls. I suppose it is true that you may have to sit side by side with them in this Chamber if you should accomplish your purpose, and be enlightened by their superior wisdom in your deliberations, and share the benefit of their sage advice in the council chambers of the nation. All that can be borne so that your party is perpetuated in power. Do not talk to me about guarantying to the people a republican form of government when you practice despotism. Rather speak out and say, "We have got a brief hold of power in this Government: the Treasury is ours, the public plunder is ours, and we mean to keep it, even by violating every principle of the Constitution of the United States."

But, Mr. President, even if you had the power to pass this act there are reasons why you should not do it. If it is not a case for the exercise of vengeance, I ask your attention to one important consideration. You call all these southern people rebels. I do not believe a word of it, and never have. They do not believe they are rebels. You say they are. How, let me ask, can one equal rebel against another? Who were the parties to the Federal Union? Were they not the independent States? Was it not ratified separately by each? Has it been ascertained even that a majority of all the people of the United States were in favor of it? Certainly, there was no convention or congress of the people of the whole United States to act upon that matter; but the Constitution was ratified by the people of the several States, and was a compact or agreement between the States, not between the individual people composing the different States of the Union.

Then, it being a compact between the States, it is a compact between equals; and being a compact between equals, let me ask you; how can one equal rebel against another. How can the State of Georgia rebel against the State of Delaware? They entered into a compact with each other. When one gets dissatisfied and a revolution is started, civil war follows; but "tell it not in Gath" that one sovereign, independent party to a compact ever could or ever did rebel against another. This has been the recognized doctrine among all republican States that were ever united together for common purposes. Go, read Grecian history. The republics of Greece were united for certain purposes; but because they had their dissensions and their wars, do you ever read in Grecian history that one of the States of Greece rebelled against the others? Go, read Roman history, and though you will find that Romans might sometimes be called traitors, a Roman citizen was never called a rebel, and it is not to be found in all Roman history or Roman literature. It is on the ground that equals cannot rebel against equals.

Oh, but you say that they rebelled against the Federal Government. Is that possible? The creator rebel against the creature! What power has the Federal Government in reference to the States that a State can rebel against it? It does not possess in reference to the States a single element of original, sovereign power. The powers of the Federal Government are derivative, delegated, not original in any sense of the word, nor sovereign when considered in reference to the States, the creators of the Federal Government. What is sovereign power? Original, inherent, independent, a power above all other powers; and such was the power of the States of this Union when they entered into this compact of Government, and formed a Federal Union with each other. What, then, is derivative power? Sovereign power may be compared to the light of the sun; derivative power, delegated authority, to the light of the moon reflected from the sun.

Mr. President, what I have thus far said has been intended as preliminary to the more succinct, legal argument which I intended to make upon this occasion. Your bill establishes martial law throughout the whole southern country; it puts every person within the limits of the States designated in it under the authority of martial law. I propose now to show that you have no right to pass this bill, by showing that you have no authority, that the Federal Government in all its departments combined has not the authority, and that no officer of the Federal Government has the authority to declare martial law.

The Government of the United States nearly two years ago succeeded in completing the suppression of a most formidable revolution after a struggle of four years. Being the first that has ever occurred in the country on so extended a scale, it is not surprising that we should have lacked experience in the management of such conflicts. And perhaps it was natural that our zeal in the cause should have induced us to disregard the means employed to accomplish the end. But now that peace has been restored it becomes us to profit by the lessons of the revolution. Let us look back and inquire into the constitutionality of the measures we have employed during the progress of the revolution to bring it to a close, and some of the most objectionable of which measures we propose by the bill under consideration to continue over the southern States. It may be that we have inflicted wounds upon the body-politic which require a speedy correction before they become precedents. Junius, in the dedication of his letters to the English people, gives this profound and impressive warning to his countrymen:

"Let me exhort and conjure you never to suffer an invasion of your political Constitution, however minute the instance may appear, to pass by without a determined, persevering resistance. One precedent creates another. They soon accumulate and become law. What yesterday was fact, to-day is doctrine. Examples are supposed to justify the most dangerous measures; and when they do not suit exactly the defect is supplied by analogy. Be assured that the laws which protect us in our civil rights grow out of the Constitution, and they must fall or flourish with it."

Every word of this warning is peculiarly applicable to us. Let us, therefore, now inquire whether we have not suffered invasions of our political Constitution to pass by without resistance, and be warned in time to suffer no such invasions in the future. The innovation of to-day will become a precedent for to-morrow; and passive submission to one encroachment on the Constitution, however slight, will provoke others of a more aggravated character. Power, stimulated by ambition, which is common to all men, never relaxes its hold. The people cannot, therefore, with safety, submit to the exercise of even doubtful powers; and as the Constitution is the supreme law, it cannot be expanded or contracted to suit emergencies, either real or imaginary. If it does not suit all emergencies the remedy is to be found exclusively in amendments to be made in the proper manner.

These remarks have been introduced as preliminary to an inquiry into the constitutionality of "martial law" in the United States, which has been proclaimed and enforced until the people have been, and even now are, in the condition of the people at a memorable period in English history, when it was said, "The whole nation was sick of government by the sword, and pined for government by law."

As "martial law" has been declared and enforced to such an extent that it has been, and is even yet, sought to be made the law of the land, and has been practiced to the utter subversion of civil law, I propose to inquire whether it be within the scope of the powers of the Government of the United States, or of any department thereof, or of all the departments together, or any officer, civil or military, to establish and enforce what is now understood to be martial law either against the citizen or the soldier in actual service. Is it competent for our Government or any of its officers, either civil or military, to subject the citizen, who is wholly unconnected with the Army or the Navy or the militia in actual service, to be charged and tried in a manner unknown to the Constitution, but actually prohibited by it, for alleged offenses unknown to the law, or even for acts made offenses by law? These are grave questions, and merit the most profound and attentive consideration. The liberties of the people and the preservation and utility of the Constitution are involved in their solution. Such powers have been claimed and exerted, and their validity or invalidity should be promptly settled. If the Constitution has been thus violated, either in its letter or its spirit, the people should know it, and either Congress or the judiciary department should promptly so declare and strangle the monster usurpation before it becomes too powerful to be resisted. The tyrant's plea of necessity can furnish no palliation or excuse; that is a poisonous parasite that too often fastens itself on the body-politic but to eat out its substance.

It is essential to a correct understanding of the subject to be discussed that we should, in the outset, ascertain precisely what is meant by "martial law," a term that has been used until it has become familiar to all, but which is understood by few. What is its appropriate definition? Does it signify a prescribed rule of conduct, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong? Has it been promulgated for the information of the people, or is it a mere arbitrary unknown theory of right and wrong, not found in any known code of laws, but locked up in the bosom of the commanding officer or the military tribunals that may be called on to enforce it, with no other guide to direct them than their own crude ideas of right and wrong, or perhaps their own resentments? Does it hold a sort of inquisitorial right of supervision over the actions of men, and by a magical power convert acts into crimes, although not prohibited by any law where they were committed? It cannot be unwritten or common law for two obvious reasons: it is not part of the common law of England, from which we receive what we have of that system; but if it were so, the United States have no common law, though the States may have it. The Constitution, the acts of Congress and treaties constitute the whole body of laws of the United States.

Judge Story and Chancellor Kent, our ablest commentators, have both failed to shed any light on "martial law," even by a definition of the term. And Blackstone, whose definitions are usually so pertinent and clear, has failed to give us any just idea of the meaning of the term. He makes a quotation from Sir Matthew Hale, who said that "martial law is built upon no settled principles, being entirely arbitrary and in truth no law at all." And the commentator adds, "the necessity of order and discipline in the army is the only thing that can give it countenance." He spoke of it as something applicable to the army only; the idea that it could be extended beyond the lines of the army, or to persons not connected with the army, never seems to have entered his mind; indeed the idea of such an extension is excluded by the language employed. Even the equivocal recognition which it received from these English commentators had reference to the nature and extent of its existence in Governments very different from our own; it was left for a free Government of limited powers to extend its sphere of operation, and to give it universal application to citizens as well as to armies. Indeed, it seems now as during the war to be altogether applicable to citizens; there is no pretense that it is necessary for the government of the army.

It is true that Congress, by an express provision in the Constitution, has power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces and for the government of the militia when in actual service, and the Senator from Maine seemed to consider this bill simply as such a rule. But these rules must not only be written out and passed by Congress like any other act or law, for it is a power confided to Congress as a legislative body. And the application of these rules can extend no further than to the Army or Navy. That is the extent of the grant to Congress by this clause of the Constitution; they cannot be employed or enforced on the citizen; his rights are placed entirely above the power of Congress by other provisions in the Constitution. This clause in our Constitution supplies the place of the power to enforce martial law in more arbitrary Governments, whose powers are not limited by written constitutions, which confer only so much power, and no more, on the rulers. Nor can Congress delegate the power herein granted to any other person or set of persons.

But the rules prescribed by Congress for the regulation and government of the Army and Navy do not constitute the martial law under which the country has been placed and under which it is proposed to permanently place the South. The chief law officer of the Military Department, Mr. Holt, defines it thus: "Martial law," says he, "is defined to be the will of the General who commands the Army." And he adds:

"While its declaration could not properly be referred to as authorizing acts of excess or wanton wrong, it would at the same time justify the military commander in summary and stringent measures, which, in the absence of martial law, might be deemed extraordinary and oppressive."

We thus see what "martial law" is, and the scope of its application; and we see, too, that it substitutes a new and paramount unwritten code of laws, if it may be called a code, for existing laws, with no other limitations or restraints except such as may comport with the will of the General in command, whose will is the criterion of law and justice. And this is the law that was put in force throughout the United States by the proclamations of the late President Lincoln. As the will of the commander is the law, both citizens and soldiers must square their actions by his will whether they know it or not; and according to this definition of "martial law," I shall proceed to inquire whether it be consistent with a just idea of constitutional liberty, no matter what emergencies may be supposed to exist.

Before proceeding to a critical test of the constitutionality of "martial law" by trying it by the Constitution itself, it may not be amiss to submit a few general remarks which may serve to present it in contrast with the general spirit of a free government. I shall call this mode of government by no harsh name; every one knows the proper appellation of a government where all its powers, legislative, judicial, and executive are vested in the same person or body of persons. But even such a government, if the laws be written, is vastly better than "martial law," since the will of the commander may be violated without a knowledge of that will, inasmuch as he is not required to promulgate his will. Blackstone informs us that—

"A bare resolution confined in the breast of the legislator, without manifesting itself by some external sign, can never be a law. It is requisite that this resolution be notified to the people who are to obey it."

So universal and so just is this principle that even tyrants have not dared directly to disregard it. In the worst days of Roman despotism Caligula, the greatest tyrant of all the Cæsar's, in order to render a seeming compliance with this humane requirement, but at the same time to entrap the people, wrote his laws in small characters and hung them on high pillars. By the aid of ladders the people could still have informed themselves as to the law. Even the code of Draco, which has been stigmatized in history as the "bloody code," was written so that the people had some chance of escaping its penalties. But not so with "martial law;" nothing but supernatural power could enable the people to penetrate the commander's breast and find out his will.

The author of the definition above quoted says, "and its (martial law) proclamation by the President necessarily invests a general commanding in a district where it is declared that it shall prevail, with plenary powers;" that is, full power to enforce his will. The people may be inclined to ask where the President got his authority to invest any person with such power, or where did he get the power to declare what should be law. Does he himself profess this absolute power? Not at all; he professes only a limited executive power to enforce law, not to make it. Our Federal Government is not a sovereignty, but it professes only derivative, limited powers, all of which have been delegated to it by the States. It is the creation of the States; and all powers not delegated to it are reserved to the States or to the people. As a matter of course such a Government can do only what it has been empowered to do. The Constitution created it and is the law of its being, its enabling law; it has enabled it to do all that it may do. The natural person can do only what the law of his nature has enabled him to do; he cannot do what is physically impossible, because the law of his nature has not enabled him to do it. The artificial person, the Government, cannot do what is morally impossible; the law of its being, the Constitution, has not enabled it to do so. But as the Government must be administered by agents or officers, they may exceed its just powers; this is usurpation. Where, then, did President Lincoln get his power to proclaim martial law, and to invest his officers with "plenary powers" and whence is the power claimed by this bill for Congress derived? Where did he get the power to prescribe a rule of conduct for the people which has not been passed by Congress, the only law-making power of the Government, and the only body in which the people, through their representatives, announce the public will, which becomes the law? There is no express power given in the Constitution either to a President or Congress to enforce martial law; that instrument is entirely silent on the subject. The necessary logical consequence is, if it has not been given, it is not possessed by the Government or its officials. But it is said to be an implied power, resulting from the war-making power, or from the power to suppress rebellions; these being expressly granted. But there is now no rebellion. The resistance of the southern people to Federal authority has ceased. It is true, there are such things as implied powers, resulting from that clause in the Constitution which authorizes Congress—

"To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into effect the foregoing powers."

But what is the legitimate office of implied powers? To give practical utility and energy to some express power which would be defective or inefficient without incidental aid, or a resort to implied power, which is supposed to be included in the grant. But such powers are to be exercised with great caution and limited to the sole purpose of carrying out some express power from which they are supposed to result as within the intention of the framers of our organic law. And they must receive the recognition of the legislative or judicial department. It is not the province of civil or military officers to judge of the existence and extent of implied powers. And it is monstrous to suppose that a mere implied power, something which is but auxiliary, should not only become paramount to the express grant from which it is deduced, but that it is sufficiently potent to override the whole Constitution, and to establish on its ruins an unrestrained military despotism. Yet this is the inevitable effect of "martial law;" it is above all restraints; it arrests, tries, and punishes by a method of its own, unknown to the Constitution and the law, for offenses not made so by the legislative department. Our Government is republican in form; it does not countenance or tolerate anything which is anti-republican; and yet we see the singular spectacle of a despotic Government springing from it, and claiming legitimacy by construction. The Constitution was ordained by the people as the framework of Government, consisting of certain great fundamental principles, to be filled out by legislation in strict accordance with these principles, and not at variance with them. But it was not intended to establish a flexible thing, or an elastic fabric, that should be bent by the breeze of popular opinion, or that should change to any imaginable necessity, being a Republic at one time, a despotism at another. Whenever experience proves that amendment is necessary, let it be made in the proper way, and not by so straining the original framework as to make it useless.

"Martial law" presupposes that the Constitution is defective in not having granted sufficient powers, or that it imposes improper restraints, and also that legislation is insufficient, and it undertakes to remedy all defects by a short method, by a total disregard of both. In any well-regulated Government, laws suited to the condition of the people are prescribed by the legislative department. Whatever is deemed wrong either as against the public safety or individual security is prohibited by law, and suitable tribunals, with ample jurisdiction, are provided for trying and punishing offenders. It is not a crime to do what the law does not prohibit, and any one who is punished for such an act is punished wrongfully. Martial law, however, makes its own crimes, and punishes in its own way. The people may well complain that their inalienable rights may be swept away by the breath of a military commander or at the bidding of the President.

The first objection to "martial law" as it is defined, when tried by the critical test of the Constitution, and by the spirit and genius of our Government, is that it makes the civil power subordinate to the military power. No one, surely, will deny that when the will of a military commander at the head of an army is announced as the law, and when he acts accordingly, he is thus placed above the civil authorities. If there could be a doubt left on this subject, it is completely removed by the broad declaration of the same law-officer of the Government in his exposition of the province of martial law, which he says will "justify the military commander in summary and stringent measures; which in the absence of martial law might be deemed extraordinary and oppressive." And why would they be deemed "extraordinary and oppressive?" Because contrary to and in violation of the Constitution and laws, neither of which permit, but on the contrary prohibit, measures which are extraordinary and oppressive. Of course when such measures are put in practice, it must be in virtue of some power which is above the restraints of the Constitution and the laws. The civil authorities act under the laws, and cannot proceed in a summary way, or impose "extraordinary or oppressive" punishments; and of course the power which can do so must be above or superior to the civil law.

The question then arises, can any power be placed in this most extraordinary position? Can any power be placed so far above the Constitution as to deprive the citizen of the sacred rights secured to him by that instrument? For example, can the citizen be deprived of his liberty of speech, his liberty of conscience, his right of trial by jury, and can he be thus deprived in the face of that provision which declares that—

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

What is meant by this language? What is the meaning of the words "supreme law?" "Supreme" is a relative term, having relation to something below it, for to call that supreme which has nothing below it or inferior to it would not be a very intelligible mode of expression; and certainly it would be absurd to call that a supreme law which has another law above it. Supreme law, then—and this involves the idea of constitutionality—means that which is above all other laws, in the States or in the United States; and being supreme, it necessarily makes void and of no effect whatever is contrary to it or in conflict with its provisions. Where, then, do we get a foothold for martial law to stand upon in harmony with the Constitution? It arrests without affidavit and without warrant, it tries without jury, and it punishes without offense. It will not be doubted, it is presumed, that if Congress were to enact a code of laws after the pattern of martial law it would be decided to be void by every court in the country, provided the question could ever be brought before a court. It is a peculiarity of this system, however, that it does not need the incumbrances of courts and juries; or if they should be at all in his way, the military commander may suspend their functions.

It cannot be necessary at this day to enter into a lengthy argument to prove what every one ought to know, that it is of the very essence of a free Government that the military shall always be subordinate to the civil power. This is now an axiom in our American system of government; it admits of no dispute. Most, or perhaps all, of our State constitutions declare this in express terms. It was not necessary so to declare in the Constitution of the United States, because it created but a limited Government, which could do nothing but what it was authorized to do, and especially could it not pervert the whole purpose and object of its creation. If the military may be placed above the civil power, of course the Government may be easily subverted and converted into a military despotism. An army has always been regarded as dangerous to a State. A distinguished writer on Government tells us "when a country is to be enslaved the army is the instrument to be used. No nation was ever enslaved but by an army." Another tells us "whether our enemies shall conquer us is uncertain; but whether a standing army will enslave us neither reason nor experience will suffer us to doubt." And it is an easy matter to make a temporary army a standing one.

The republic of Athens was subverted by the power of an army which had its beginning from fifty guards raised to protect a crafty tyrant. A Praetorian guard in Rome made reigning princes at pleasure, and once murdered a good one and sold the kingdom at auction to a bad one. The framers of our Constitution had the solemn warnings of history before them; they knew that military power had in all ages been the irresistible instrument of oppression, and they surely did not intend to foster such a foe to liberty by laying a foundation from which it might spring up in its most terrific form and claim by implication a constitutional parentage. They could not have forgotten that one of the causes of the Revolution was that the king had affected to make the civil power subordinate to the military, and that another was that in many cases he had deprived them of the right of trial by jury, both of which wrongs and grievances your bill proposes to inflict upon the people of all the southern States.

Sir, these people went to war, as they supposed, for sufficient cause, but which we deemed insufficient cause. Had they had one tithe of the cause for going to war then that they would have now if this bill should pass, if they did not go to war they would be the veriest cravens that ever disgraced God's footstool or dishonored His image. And yet, sir, I suppose they will submit. They have been conquered, their country laid waste, and ruin and desolation are all around them; and you, finding them in this subjugated, helpless, blighted, ruined condition, propose the exercise of a tyrant's power to drive them to further desperation and madness. Sir, such legislation is a disgrace to a civilized age, and those who advocate it I am afraid will live to regret it.

Martial law has reestablished the grievances which our fathers thought good cause for revolution, and it is perfectly certain that they did not intend to revive them; and yet they are revived to a far greater extent than ever they were practiced by George III, and we submit almost without a murmur; and you propose to revive them now in times of peace. I have no doubt that the people of the desolated, ruined South will retire in quietude, sadness, and sorrow to their homes and submit. I advise no resistance. But, sir, speaking for the people of my State, small and limited in extent as she is, few as her population are, if you were to attempt such legislation in reference to her I believe that her gallant sons would seek out some second Thermopylæ and fall, if fall they must, in defense of their constitutional liberties and the rights of their State; and would send a second message—

"Go, stranger, and at Lacedæmon tell
That here, obedient to her laws, we fell."

It is not very wonderful that we should bear the evil so quietly when the object of the complaint, the usurper, is to be the judge, and his usurpation the cause of complaint. But the people may rest well assured that when these two powers, civil and military, are made to change places, liberty is at an end.

The bill under consideration delegates to even a lieutenant the power to punish a citizen of any one of these States for freedom of speech or freedom of worship or for anything he pleases. Sir, you may have the days of Daniel revived. He may fancy it to be an offense and mark you. You do not define the offenses in your bill; you leave it discretionary with him and him alone to determine what shall be an offense. He may consider it an offense that man prays to his God three times a day; and if there be a lion's den in all that section of country you may have, by the arbitrary will of a little petty despot, the man of God thrown into the den of lions. Your bill is capable of reviving the days of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego; and if your little, petty military tyrant takes it in his head that fidelity to Heaven is an offense to him, he may arrest the offender, and he may throw him into the fiery furnace, not only seven times heated, but seventy times heated. And yet the party who are pressing and advocating this measure are par excellence, according to their self-laudation, the friends of liberty, a liberty so pure, so universal that they hug to their bosoms the degraded African, while denying liberty of thought, liberty of speech, and every other species of liberty to their own race.

I shall proceed with the inquiry by taking up, in the order in which they stand, the several provisions of the Constitution to which I wish to call particular attention, beginning with the first article of the amendments, which declares that—

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

The value of the rights here secured to the people by the prohibition imposed on Congress must be too well understood to require extended comment. It might be enough to say that no Government can claim to be free which has the power to abridge them. A celebrated Roman emperor, whose character has come down through history as that of a tyrant, once said, "In a free Government the mind and the tongue must be free." And no one who has reflected on the subject will deny that "the liberty of the press is the palladium of all our civil, political, and religious rights."

This encomium coming from one so completely master of the science of government as its distinguished author is eulogy enough. But it is not the language of flattery or of an over-estimated value of the liberty of the press. To the political world it is a source of light; all would be darkness without it. The press is the medium of intelligence to the people; the sentinel that warns them of danger. It is the good man's shield and the bad man's scourge; the hope of good public servants and the terror of bad ones. By its instrumentality the one receives his just reward, and the other his just punishment. It is emphatically the home guard of the people. Now, I ask, has not this clause of the Constitution been violated? Has not press after press been suspended and publishers punished for venturing to express their opinions; and has not this been done under the authority of martial law? This bill confers the power on the most insignificant lieutenant to destroy the freedom of the press. And if one press be stopped why not as well the whole of them? The same breath that suspends one may suspend the whole. True, this is not very likely to occur on so comprehensive a scale, because there always will be those who—

"Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning."

But can they be called the friends of the people, or can their exemption be called the freedom of the press? They are the reverse; they are but the miserable instruments of oppression, properly only a part of the machinery of martial law. Even in France a press cannot be stopped until after it has been notified to desist in its objectionable course. Now, I ask any American citizen, after he shall have read the Constitution, if any power in this country can rightfully abridge the freedom of the press? I ask him then if this has not been done, and then I ask if the power by which it was done was not usurped? I present these questions to the advocates of this bill, and ask that they should ponder on them and invent an answer if they can that will harmonize our action with our Constitution.

We may remember that Congress once undertook to extend its fostering care to the ever-restless spirit of despotism by means of the sedition law, which abridged the freedom of speech and of the press and imposed heavy penalties against such as might by speech or by writing traduce the character of the President or the judges. While that measure was pending before Congress, a distinguished Virginian, Mr. Nicholas, said:

"He was not ready to create a domestic tyranny. The people of this country were competent judges of their own interests, and he was desirous the press should remain free to give them information relative to them; and to restrict it would be to create a suspicion that there is something in our measures which ought to be kept from the light. It was striking at the root of republican government to restrict the use of speaking and writing."

The sedition law had but a brief existence; public indignation soon consigned it to a grave of ignominy; but its spirit seems to have been a restless tenant of the tomb; like Hamlet's ghost, it has arisen to stimulate revenge. As it was not successful under congressional authority, it now claims a more potent paternity, and is marching and proposes in this bill to continue marching over the land under the banner of martial law with an escort of bayonets to execute its will. But an insulted and outraged people, if they are true to themselves, will yet check its career and consign it and its votaries to such a destiny as marked the exit of the sedition law and its friends. If they do not, it will surely consign them to slavery. It is very certain that no legislative body in that country could pass a valid law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, and yet we have seen it done over and over again without law, and this bill proposes by pretense of law to make valid the outrage. And it is surely absurd to say the Constitution is so inconsistent, so contradictory, and so repugnant in its provisions as to authorize in one place what it has so positively prohibited in another, or that it authorizes inferences or implications which destroy, nullify its express and leading declarations, which constitute the very groundwork of liberty. If such an intention could be imputed to the framers of the Constitution, they would be justly chargeable with fraud in having provided a concealed instrument to defeat their open expressions of protection to the people.

The next article to which I desire to direct particular attention, as being directly prohibitory of martial law, is the fourth article of the Amendments, which is in these words:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched or the persons or things to be seized."

Now, I ask, has it not been the daily practice to search houses, seize papers, and arrest persons without warrant, without affidavit, without charge of crime, under the authority of martial law? On the precedents of the Inquisition, citizens have been often arrested without even a knowledge of the charges against them.

Why, sir, only two or three years ago, during the continuance of the war, an able judge in the adjoining State of Maryland, whom I knew when I was a boy, had been, as I heard, arrested and placed in Fort Delaware. I went over to see him. I found him, a wealthy gentleman and a man of great ability, in a wooden shanty, with common horse-blankets for his bed. I inquired into the alleged causes for his arrest. He was a judge on the bench; and some persons having no authority, but calling themselves loyal, wishing in that guise to steal off the Treasury, had, without affidavit or warrant or any authority whatever, in the night time seized and arrested some citizens of his county, and he, as a judge, in a charge to the grand jury, told them that this conduct was in violation of law, that the laws of Maryland forbade such outrages. While he was holding his court, and a case was on trial, a set of loyalists from Baltimore—and when I say loyalists I mean those who style themselves loyalists; and you know Dr. Johnson said that patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel, and it has become now-a-days that some of the so-called loyalists in this country are an exemplification of that remark—these men went and dragged that judge from his bench, beat him over the head with their pistols till he fell prostrate upon the floor, dragged him away from the temple of justice, and placed him in a military fort for no other cause than that; and this bill of yours justifies any lieutenant in the whole South in dragging a judge from the bench if he declares the law to a grand jury.

This summary mode of arrest has not been confined to persons connected with the Army or Navy, but it has been freely practiced on citizens. And the question is: can this be done without a plain, palpable violation of the Constitution; is there any power in this country that can exercise such authority? If so, the Constitution must be inferior and subordinate to that power. I assert that this provision was intended to guard against abuses by martial law, and I appeal to history—to its origin.

We derive this clause in our Constitution from the "Petition of Right" of our English ancestors, or, as it is often called, the second charter of liberty. The right of personal liberty is a natural right, but innovations having been made upon it by kingly prerogative a more permanent security was demanded, and by Magna Charta it was declared that—

"No freeman may be taken or imprisoned, or disseized of his freehold or his free customs, or be outlawed or exiled, or in any manner destroyed, but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the laws of the land."

By the common law an oath was required before a warrant could be issued, and this charter was an affirmation of the rights of Englishmen. Notwithstanding that strong and explicit guarantee, in subsequent reigns kingly prerogative, which is always restive under restraints, was used to make inroads on Magna Charta, until in the reign of Charles I it had occupied almost absolute supremacy. That misguided monarch, in virtue of his prerogative, claimed and exerted the right to extort forced loans, benevolences, and taxes from the people without the consent of Parliament. He also made arbitrary arrests, and issued general commissions to his officers to proceed by "martial law," which brought unparalleled outrages on the people.

And, Mr. President, your bill under consideration authorizes these petty military officers to try civilians by a military commission, a thing unknown in American history till Abraham Lincoln became a statesman and Edwin M. Stanton a patriot.

Their liberties were thus placed under the discretion of the monarch. The pressure on Charles was so great that at length he was obliged to convoke a Parliament. The House of Commons was composed of the foremost men in England—foremost in talent, in firmness, in independence, and in devotion to liberty. Being determined to rebuke and to check the usurpations of the Crown, and to reiterate and protect their ancient rights, the "Petition of Right" was prepared for that purpose. It was introduced, discussed, and passed in defiance of the threats of the king and his ministers. Compromises were offered, but the Commons would not yield, and Charles was obliged to sign it; and for failing to observe it in good faith he lost his head. This celebrated instrument recited the grievances under which the people had been laboring, one, and not the least of which, was that commissions of martial law had been issued and men had been imprisoned without any cause shown.

Yes, sir, the fathers of English liberty beheaded their king because he had illegally issued military commissions; and you, the descendants of the men who fought one of the kings of England—and our grievances then did not bear any comparison with those which you now propose to inflict by this bill—in the nineteenth century are repeating the outrages of Charles. He lost his head for his outrages upon liberty. What will the friends of liberty and the admirers of liberty, when your stormy passions shall cease, if not before, when you lie still in the grave, think of you, and your proposed outrages upon civil liberty and constitutional law? Let not your memories be cursed by all the friends of free government and civil liberty in the future. Think not that your reputation will be safe in the future. Think not, if this be your action, that you will go down to the grave with honored names. The oppressors of the weak, the foes of the right, may prosper for a time; but God is just. He is the fountain of justice. He will take care of it that retributive justice shall either meet you in this life or in that which is to come.

To remedy this particular evil the provision we now have in our Constitution was inserted in the "Petition of Right." This being the history of that constitutional provision, I assert that it was intended to prevent the exercise of martial law, inasmuch as that was its object in England. We must suppose the framers of our Constitution knew something of history, and when they inserted precisely such a provision as had existed in England they intended it should answer precisely the same end it had answered in England; that is, to guard against arbitrary arrests and the exercise of martial law. The inference is irresistible; there is no escape from it. They knew the evil and they knew the remedy. Notwithstanding this safeguard thrown around us we are now in the depressed condition the people of England were in under the tyrannical reign of Charles; but we have not such a House of Commons to give us relief. Our authorities have done and are now doing with impunity such acts as caused an English king to lose his head. That which was a remedy for an evil in England is disregarded here. The Queen of England would not dare to do at this day what President Lincoln has done; and the British Parliament would not dare to do what Congress proposes by this bill to do. Indeed, it has been judicially declared to be out of her power to declare martial law. And such a thing has not existed in England for two hundred years, except in two instances, when it was declared by Parliament in virtue of its attribute of omnipotence. Our limited constitutional Government does not hesitate, however, to declare and enforce martial law; and American citizens, under their boasted constitutional liberty, will meekly submit to acts of usurpation which would dethrone a British monarch. What a commentary on what is miscalled free Government! An Englishman may well boast of his freedom; his monarch knows the penalty for a violation of the sacred rights of his subjects. An American is content with the name, the idle and senseless boast of having freedom in form, which his President or a Congress may trample on at pleasure; and yet he, in his degraded condition, boasts of the name of a freeman while wearing the manacles of a slave. His great Charter says that no person shall be arrested without warrant founded on affidavit; but a President has said, "I declare martial law, and invest my lieutenants with power to arrest any one without warrant, without oath, and to imprison him at pleasure, try him without jury, and punish him according to the will of a military commander;" and Congress now proposes to do the same thing. I repeat, then, not only are arbitrary arrests, either under martial law or without it, not allowed by inference or construction of any clause in the Constitution, but expressly prohibited by it in words so appropriate that it is impossible to mistake their meaning, and by no fair and legitimate course of reasoning can their meaning be perverted.

The next provision in the Constitution to which I wish to direct attention is the fifth article of the Amendments, which is in these words:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger."

This language is so plain that no reasoning, no illustration can make it clearer. This is one of the safeguards placed around the liberty of the citizen by the dictates of judgment, founded on the history of oppression in past ages. Like the preceding article, it originated from abuses practiced in the barbarous days of that nation from which we chiefly derive our ideas of the necessary checks against the encroachments on liberty. This provision secures the benefit of a grand jury to every person and in every criminal case, except only in cases arising in the Army or Navy. The exception is so clearly marked and defined as to leave no room to doubt as to what class of cases and persons it applies. To be within the exception the person must have belonged to the land or naval forces, and the case must have originated in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service. By what possible forced construction can mere citizens, men over age and boys under age, the man of eighty, the boy under sixteen, and the women of the country be deprived of the right here secured to them? The exception only applies to persons belonging to or connected with the land or naval forces, and the reason of the exception is perfectly apparent; it is founded on necessity and it ends with the necessity; it was because resort could not be had to civil tribunals in the class of cases excepted, and because the discipline and the efficiency of the Army and Navy could not wait the tardy process of civil law.

Yet, we have seen a court of "star chamber" established under the name of a "military commission," for the trial of all persons and for all grades of offenses the existence of which court this bill proposes to make perpetual. The civil tribunals of the country are stripped of their constitutional jurisdiction and have become useless incumbrances in the system of government, and the Constitution is a sort of peace establishment, to take effect only when a state of peace shall be proclaimed, which may be postponed at the pleasure of the Executive or at least of Congress. The clangor of arms and the array of armies are no longer the indicia of war; it exists wherever those in authority shall choose to say it exists, and while it does so exist the Government is transformed; martial law and the law of nations are made to supersede the Constitution and convert the country into a camp, and subject the people to the will of a commander.

The English law, when it was disgraced by what were called constructive treasons, was a mild and humane system compared to our own as recently administered and as the advocates of the bill would have it now administered in the South. The tyrant Jeffreys, while carrying on King James's celebrated western campaign, though he made the law to bend to satiate his thirst for blood, still gave the unfortunate victims of his vengeance the forms of trial by course of law. They were indicted by grand jury and tried by petit jury. These we dispense with as useless ceremonials, and our citizens are tried without the intervention of either.

This same article contains the further provision that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." What is due process of law? We know what it was under Magna Charta, from which we derive this provision, and it has been already shown that Charles's commissions to proceed by "martial law" were considered so gross a violation of this provision in Magna Charta that the Petition of Right to check these violations of the rights of Englishmen was introduced and passed by Parliament. We have the principles of Magna Charta and the Petition of Right fully incorporated into our Constitution, but they are far less potent than in England; there they put an end to martial law; here it flourishes under it.

The remaining provision of the Constitution to which I would direct particular attention is the sixth article of the Amendments, which declares that—

"In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed," &c.

This of course does not refer to cases arising in the land or naval forces, for the exception in the preceding article applies also to this. But this provision secures to every citizen, to any person not connected with the Army, the Navy, or the militia in actual service, the right of trial by jury; and before it can be taken from them, some law, some authority higher than the Constitution must be shown. It will not do to fall back on martial law or the laws of nations; they do not, they cannot, deprive the citizen of his right to trial by jury, and the absurdity lies in relying on the precedents of monarchies and in applying them to our constitutional Government. The precedents of sovereignties can never apply to a limited Government without extending to it the attributes of a sovereignty. Queen Elizabeth established her court of high commissions, more terrible than the star chamber; but can our President or Congress do the same? But even that self-willed monarch, when she complained that martial law had not been practiced, was admonished by her ministers that such a law could only be enforced in times of rebellion by authority of Parliament. We, however, practiced and enforced it long after civil war has ceased, and it is now sought to be made the law in the southern States, although no hostile arm has been raised against the Government for nearly two years. What Queen Elizabeth did not dare to do under her almost unlimited prerogative our President does with impunity. Citizens have been tried, they have been executed, long since the war ceased. Why or how is this? It is simply by usurpation; by trampling the Constitution under foot, and by erecting a military despotism on its ruins; for the people are now and have been living under an unmitigated despotism. The Constitution has been, by construction, by the exercise of ordinary power, set aside, and martial law and the laws of nations constitute now the supreme law of the land.

The pretext for all these violations of our rights is that the President and Congress had a right to suppress rebellion; but in doing this has he or Congress a right to disregard all the provisions of the Constitution? Not at all;

they must do so in subordination to the Constitution. A rebellion is but an effort to throw off the obligations the citizen owes to the Government, and the President, and those who advocate a violation of the Constitution, by disregarding these obligations were precisely in the attitude of the rebels; they rebel against the Government, and by one rebellion attempt to suppress another. And if the Constitution be the true form of government, those who have discarded its sacred injunctions by the adoption and practice of martial law are as much rebels in principle as those who attempted openly to throw off its obligations. We are now a nation of rebels; we have thrown off all the securities of the Constitution, and have in practice adopted a despotism; the party in power have rebelled against the Government our fathers left us.

I will barely allude to another article, the tenth, which is not without great significance. It declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people thereof." The object of this is too plain to be mistaken; it was intended to guard against the very system which has been inaugurated, the system of latitudinous construction, which without this guard was likely to be employed to the total overthrow of the instrument itself and to the utter subversion of the rights of the States and the rights of the people. In its effect this is a plain declaration that no power shall be raised by construction. How flagrantly this provision has been violated the history of the last six years but too abundantly proves. Construction has built up an entirely new and different Government from that established by the Constitution.

It is not remarkable that there should be a meagerness of judicial precedent on this question in this country, for it is so bold an innovation on our theory of government that it has been seldom ventured on. We are not, however, entirely without judicial authority of the highest character, though these precedents seem never to have been discovered by the advocates of this system. Judge Bay, of South Carolina, in Lamb's case, said:

"If by martial law is to be understood that dreadful system, the law of arms, which in former times was exercised by the king of England and his lieutenants when his word was the law and his will the power by which it was exercised, I have no hesitation in saying that such a monster could not exist in this land of liberty and freedom. The political atmosphere of America would destroy it in embryo. It was against such a tyrannical monster that we triumphed in our revolutionary conflict. Our fathers sealed the conquest by their blood, and their posterity will never permit it to tarnish our soil by its unhallowed feet or harrow up the feelings of our gallant sons by its ghastly appearance. All our civil institutions forbid it; and the manly hearts of our countrymen are steeled against it."—Car. Law Rep., page 330.

This is strong language, directed against precisely the same system under which we have been living for the last four years. Our definition gives precisely the English idea of martial law as practiced by the king and his lieutenants. What was such a monster in the estimation of Judge Bay has been the presiding genius in this our once free country for four years past. We have had the will of the commanding generals for the law, and their words the power to carry it into execution. However much the manly hearts of our countrymen may be steeled against it, it is nevertheless the law of arms, which emanated, not from our legislative halls, but from the edict of a single person, and by the power of the sword compelled submission to its mandates.

The colleague of Judge Bay in that case delivered a very able and learned opinion that under the Constitution of the United States there could exist in the free Republic of the United States no such martial law. Sir, it cannot be administered as against the citizen; it cannot be administered as against the soldier in the field, because the soldier in the field has his law which to him is "due process." It is the Rules and Articles of War, enacted by the Congress of the United States.

He is not subject to the arbitrary will of the commander. That is the definition given of martial law by the Duke of Wellington—the will of the commander in the field. It cannot be administered as against the citizen, because the Constitution, which is the bulwark of his liberty, says that if he is accused of crime he shall have the benefit of an indictment by a grand jury and trial by a petit jury; that he shall not be arrested except upon warrant; and that the warrant shall not issue except upon an affidavit showing the commission of crime. This authority does not stand alone. I shall make an extract at some length from a decision of the supreme court of Louisiana in the case of Johnson vs. Duncan, 8 Louisiana Reports, 551; 1 Condensed Louisiana Reports, 157. This case was decided in 1815, and involved the validity of "martial law" as declared by General Jackson at New Orleans:

"Martin, J. A motion that the court might proceed in this case has been resisted on two grounds: "1. That the city and its environs were, by general orders of the officer commanding the military district, put on the 15th of December last under strict martial law."

"2. That by the third section of an act of Assembly, approved on the 18th of December last, all proceedings in any civil case are suspended."

1. At the close of the argument on Monday last, we thought it our duty, lest the smallest delays should countenance the idea that this court entertained any doubt on the first ground, instantly to declare viva voce (although that practice is to deliver our opinions in writing) that the exercise of an authority vested by law in this court could not be suspended by any man.

"In any other State but this, in the population of which are many individuals, who not being perfectly acquainted with their rights, may easily be imposed on, it could not be expected that the judges of this court, in complying with the constitutional injunction in all cases to adduce the reasons on which their judgment is founded, take up much time to show that the court is bound utterly to disregard what is thus called martial law; if anything be meant thereby but the strict enforcing of the rules and articles for the government of the Army of the United States, established by Congress, or any act of that body relating to military matters, on all individuals belonging to the Army or the militia in the service of the United States. Yet we are told that by this proclamation of the martial law, the officer who issued it has conferred on himself, over all his fellow-citizens, within the space he has described, a supreme and unlimited power, which being incompatible with the exercise of the functions of the civil magistrate necessarily suspends them."

"This bold and novel assertion is said to be supported by the ninth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States. It is there provided that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of invasion or rebellion the public safety may require it. We are told that the commander of the military district is the person who is to suspend the writ, and is to do so whenever in his judgment the public safety appears to require it; that as he may thus paralyze the arm of the justice of his country in this most important case, the protection of the liberty of the citizen, it follows that as he who can do the more can do the less, he can also suspend all other functions of the civil magistrate, which he does by his proclamation of martial law."

"This mode of reasoning varies totò cœlo from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Swartwout and Boleman, arrested in this city in 1806, by General Wilkinson. The court then declared that the Constitution had exclusively vested in Congress the right of suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and that body was the sole Judge of the necessity which called for suspension."

"If at any times said the Chief Justice the public safety shall require the suspension of the powers vested in the courts of the United States by this act [the habeas corpus act] it is for the Legislature to say so. This question depends on political considerations, on which the Legislature is to decide. Till the legislative will be expressed, this court can only see its duties and must obey the law." (4 Cranch, page 101.) The high authority of this decision seems, however, to be disregarded, and a contrary opinion is said to have been lately acted upon to the distress and terror of the good people of this State; it is therefore meet to dispel the clouds which designing men endeavor to cast on this article of the Constitution, that the people should know that their rights thus defined, are neither doubtful nor insecure, but supported by the clearest principles of our laws."

Judge Martin then proceeded at some length and with great force and clearness to show that the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus is exclusively a legislative power, and cannot be exerted by any other authority in the Government, and after having done so, he continued:

"If it be said that the laws of war, being the laws of the United States, authorize the proclamation of martial law, I answer that in peace or in war no law can be enacted but by the legislative power. In England, from whence the American jurist derives his principles in this respect, martial law cannot be used without the authority of Parliament. (5 Comyns, 229.) The authority of the monarch himself is insufficient. In the case of Grant vs. Sir C. Gould, (2 H. Black, 69,) which was on a prohibition [applied for in the Common Pleas] to the defendant as judge advocate of a court martial to prevent the execution of the sentence of that military tribunal, the counsel who resisted the motion said it was not to be disputed that martial law can only be exercised in England so far as it is authorized by the mutiny act and the Articles of War, all which are established by Parliament or its authority, and the court declared it totally inaccurate to state any other martial law as having any place whatever within the realm of England. In that country and in these States by martial law is understood the jurisprudence of those cases which are decided by military judges or courts-martial. "When martial law is established and prevails in any country, [said Lord Loughborough] in the case cited, it is totally a different nature from that which is inaccurately called martial law, (because the decisions are by court martial) but which bears no affinity to that which was formerly attempted to be exercised in this kingdom, which was contrary to the Constitution, and which has for a century been totally exploded." When martial law prevails, [continued the judge,] the authority under which it is exercised claims jurisdiction over all military persons in all circumstances; every species of offense committed, by any person who appertains to the army is tried, not by civil jurisdiction, but by the jurisdiction of the corps or regiment to which he belongs."

After having made this reference to the English law, Judge Martin continued:

"This is martial law as defined by Hale and Blackstone, and which the court declared not to exist in England. Yet it is confined to military persons. Here it is contended, and the court must admit, if we sustain the objection, that it extends to all persons, that it dissolves for a while the government of the State."

And he might have added also, with perfect truth, that it dissolves also the Government of the United States.

"Yet, according to our laws, [continues Judge Martin,] all military courts are under a constant subordination to the courts of law. Officers who have abused their powers, though only in regard to their own soldiers, are liable to a prosecution in a court of law, and compelled to make satisfaction. Even a flagrant abuse of authority by members of a court-martial, when sitting to judge their own people, and determine in cases of a military kind, makes them liable to the animadversions of a civil judge. (Delolme, 447; Jacob's Law Dictionary, Verbo Court-Martial.) How preposterous, then, the idea that a military commander may, by his own authority, destroy the tribunal established by law as the asylum of those oppressed by military despotism."

I have extracted at length from the opinion of Judge Martin because of his eminence as a jurist, and because of the force and clearness of his opinion. He has not only shown us what American law is, but he has also shown us what English law is on this very interesting subject. He has shown us, too, that we have picked up and practiced a system of oppression which, according to Lord Loughborough, has been exploded in England for a century. We have invested our President with a power that was claimed and exerted as a prerogative of the Crown when English monarchs were despots, and which has, happily for the people of that country, been expelled from its dominions to find a lodgment here.

But I will also make an extract from the opinion of one of Judge Martin's associates, Judge Derbigny, who said:

"To have a correct idea of martial law in a free country, examples must not be sought in the arbitrary conduct of absolute Governments. The monarch who unites in his hands all the powers may delegate to his generals authority unbounded as his own. But in a republic where the Constitution has fixed the limit and extent of every branch of Government, in time of war as well as of peace, there can exist nothing vague, uncertain, or arbitrary in the exercise of any authority."

"The Constitution of the United States, in which everything necessary to the general and individual security has been foreseen, does not provide that in times of public danger the executive power shall reign to the exclusion of all others. It does not trust into the hands of a dictator the reins of Government. The framers of that charter were too well aware of the hazards to which they would have exposed the fate of the Republic by such a provision; and had they done it, the States would have rejected a Constitution stained with a clause so threatening to their liberties."

Judge Derbigny then made an extract from Delolme in regard to the suspension of the habeas corpus in England, and proceeded thus:

"And can it be asserted that while British subjects are thus secured from oppression in the worst of times, American citizens are left at the mercy of the will of an individual, who may in certain cases, the necessity of which is to be judged of by himself, assume a supreme, overbearing, unbounded power? The idea is not only repugnant to the principles of any free Government, but subversive of the very foundations of our own.

"Under the Constitution and laws of the United States, [continued the judge] the President has a right to call or cause to be called into the service of the United States even the whole militia of any part of the Union in case of invasion. This power exercised here by his delegate has placed all the citizens subject to military duty under military authority and military law. That I conceive to be the extent of the martial law, beyond which all is usurpation of power.

"The proclamation of martial law, therefore, cannot have had any other effect than that of placing under military authority all citizens subject to militia service. It is in that sense alone that the vague expression of martial law ought to be understood among us. To give it any larger extent would be trampling upon the Constitution and laws of our country."

If any question can be settled by a judicial determination, fortified as this is both by reason and by precedent, then this decision surely is sufficient to put at rest forever in this country the question of the power to proclaim and enforce martial law. It is the argument of profound jurists who were acting in the discharge of the solemn duty of protecting the Constitution from innovations from those who were clothed with "a little brief authority," and with the strong arm of power to enforce their will. As such I commend it to the calm consideration of the lovers of constitutional liberty.

I will also call attention to the very able opinion of Judge Woodbury, delivered in the case of Luther M. Borden and Martin Luther, 7 Howard, S. C. Rep., 1. The case grew out of what is known as the Dorr rebellion in Rhode Island. To suppress that rebellion the old or charter government, through its Legislature, declared martial law in the State, and while this was in existence the cause of action originated. A majority of the Supreme Court, and it was but a bare majority, three out of the nine judges being absent and one dissenting, bestowed a brief notice on the question of martial law, and sanctioned its declaration by the State. But Judge Woodbury did not choose that a question of such vital importance should be so briefly passed over, and he took the pains to state that he dissented on the question of martial law. I should here remark that even the meager decision of the majority of the court sustaining the Legislature in declaring martial law would by no means be an authority for the exercise of a like power by the Government of the United States or any of its officials. A State constitution is a limitation of power imposed by the people on the legislative and other departments of the State government; and as a State is a sovereignty, its Legislature can exert all legislative power if there be no limitation or prohibition. The United States Government possesses only such power as has been given to it. Owing to the great length of Judge Woodbury's opinion, I can only state some of the points he did decide, and give a few extracts. He held that a State Legislature had no power to declare martial law, and the whole course of his very conclusive argument and the principles he lays down show that no such power exists in this country, but that it is utterly at war with the spirit of our Government, State and Federal. He said:

"For convincing reasons like these, in every country which makes any claim to political or civil liberty, martial law, as here attempted and as once practiced in England against her own people, has been expressly forbidden there for near two centuries, as well as by the principles of every other free constitutional Government. (Hallam's Con. His., p. 420.) And it would be not a little extraordinary if the spirit of our institutions, both State and national, was not much stronger than in England against the unlimited exercise of martial law over a whole people, whether attempted by any Chief Magistrate or even by a Legislature."

He also said:

"Under the worst insurrections and even wars in our history, so strong a measure as this is believed never to have been ventured on before by the General Government, and much less by any of the States, as within their constitutional capacity either in peace, insurrection, or war. And if it is to be tolerated, and the more especially in civil feuds like this, it will open the door in future domestic dissensions here to a series of butchery, rapine, confiscation, plunder, conflagration, and cruelty unparalleled in the worst contests in history between mere dynasties for supreme power. It would go in practice to render the whole country what Bolivar seemed at one time to consider his—a camp, and the administration of the Government a campaign."

The judge also urged the importance of always keeping the military subordinate to the civil power, and utterly denied that the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus would furnish any pretext for or in any way justify martial law.

I make one further extract from the judge's learned opinion. He says:

"It is to be hoped we have some national ambition and pride under our boasted dominion of law and order, to preserve them by law, by an enlightened and constitutional law, and the moderation of superior intelligence and civilization, rather than by appeals to any of the semi-barbarous measures of darker ages, and the unrelenting, lawless persecutions of opponents in civil strife which characterized and disgraced those ages."

This is Judge Woodbury's opinion of martial law, and I ask the candid observer if he has not witnessed the fulfillment of many of his predictions, and much more, under its relentless rule?

Odious, however, as this system is, and much as it conflicts with the Constitution, the means or instrumentalities employed to give it a vigorous, practical operation are equally so. The whole country has been filled with swarms of secret emissaries, spies, and detectives, watching the people, by eaves-dropping and loitering about hotels and public resorts, to catch and report every word they hear uttered, and each striving to distinguish himself in his ignoble vocation by collecting most information, which he does not hesitate to exaggerate. Such agents can only be found among the vicious and depraved, such as would not hesitate to gratify their malice and revenge on the slightest pretext. And their work is often done under the mask of duplicity. Such men were the detestable agents of the clubs in France in furnishing subjects for persecution, and of the Inquisition in its days of most vigorous prosperity. By such men have the people of this country, men and women, been watched, and on their information incarcerated in prisons or exiled from their homes. Such were their masters, the custodes legum, as a celebrated Roman tyrant called his hired witnesses and false accusers. In the language of Judge Woodbury, the whole country has been converted into a camp and the Government into a campaign against its own citizens. Provost marshals, officers unknown to the Constitution and to the laws, have been placed in most of our towns, with just such powers as they might choose to exercise. The civil government and the civil laws have scarcely been heard of. In such a state of things the people fail to realize the bright promise held out in the Constitution that it was intended to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, and to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity. Nor will they incline to give to the Government a stronger hold in their affections. Well-founded prejudices have arisen against a Government which must live, if it live at all, by the force of public opinion, of public confidence. If we would preserve a Republic in substance it must be kept within its proper landmarks, for of all other forms of government it is most liable to revolutions, and consequently most easily converted into a despotism. Burke maintained that all Governments were alike in effect, all tyrannies; and perhaps he was not far wrong; certainly all may be made so by abuses of power. These abuses, wrongs, and crimes are now, in a time of universal peace, sought to be established over eight million white people through a senseless fanaticism in behalf of the degraded negro race.

But I have said that martial law, in the sense of our definition, cannot be enforced against the soldier in actual service, by which I mean that he is not liable to be punished for a violation of the will of the commander; or in other words, the commander cannot exercise a discretionary power over the soldier in actual service. He is subject to the rules and articles of war, but is subject to nothing else. These rules must be prescribed by Congress, and while Congress may repose some discretion in the commander, this discretion does not exist unless it be expressly confided to the General. For any violation of these rules the soldier is entitled to a fair and impartial trial by court-martial; which to him is "due process of law." He is entitled to know what the law is before he can be punished. Is the soldier to be told when he leaves his home to fight the battles of his country that he leaves behind him the mantle of the law which protects him as a citizen, and that he submits himself entirely to the will of his commander? This cannot be; he is entitled to all the protection which the Government can give him. His condition would be otherwise deplorable, indeed; he has no means of protection against the exercise of arbitrary power, which may often be exacted unjustly, unless he can find it in the laws of his country; and as he is removed from the protection which is enjoyed by him as a citizen, his condition and the character of his duty should make him the especial object of governmental protection. When without offense he is punished, or when he is tried in a manner unknown to the law, the officer who so directs is himself liable to be punished for the offense. This could not be the case if the will of the commander be the law.

It is proper that a few remarks should be added on the effect of the proposed suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, which is supposed by some to furnish a justification for the declaration of "martial law;" a conclusion which is reached by a most singular process of reasoning: that inasmuch as a man can have no speedy remedy to relieve himself from illegal imprisonment, therefore he may be imprisoned without cause as well by a military or executive officer as by a civil magistrate. The right of personal liberty is a natural right; the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is a civil right, derived from government, for the better protection of the natural right, being a speedy mode of obtaining our liberty when illegally imprisoned, and this writ is intended to give better protection to the natural right. The right of personal liberty existed long anterior to the habeas corpus, and it is a most illogical argument which would make the natural right depend on the civil right and end with it. If this were true, it would follow that before the invention of the habeas corpus man had no right to his liberty; yet we know this is the gift of God, which cannot be taken away without a forfeiture first legally established in the manner prescribed in the Constitution. We are informed by writers of high authority, especially by Burlamaqui, in so many words, that the organization of civil society does not destroy or impair natural rights, but secures and strengthens them. This theory, however, would make the natural right depend on the civil one, and it would follow that the civil right being destroyed, no man has a right to his liberty, and prima facie every one ought to be put in jail until he can show good cause for his discharge.

But the writ of habeas corpus is not the only remedy for an accused party; he is entitled to be enlarged on bail; he is entitled to a speedy and impartial trial by jury, and he is entitled to his action for false imprisonment. Are all these destroyed by the suspension or privation of the former? Absurd as this may seem it must be so if by the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus he loses his natural right of personal liberty. These remedies were all invented and intended to secure the natural right, and it is therefore very clear that the mere suspension of one remedy does not suspend the others; and if these others still exist, then it is also clear that no one may be arrested without warrant founded on affidavit. The habeas corpus does not change the mode of arrest; it only operates on the imprisonment.

In the ninth section of the first article of the Constitution this provision is found:

"The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it."

And the fourth article of the Amendments declares that—

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

These provisions have no necessary connection or dependence on each other, except that if the right secured by the latter be invaded the first is but one of the remedies for the aggrieved party. The history of the latter provision has already been given.

It has been shown to have originated out of abuses practiced by Charles I., which gave rise to the celebrated Petition of Rights, in which it is incorporated. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus received further security by that instrument. Prior to that time the courts had refused the writ where the warrant of arrest contained the words "by special command of the king;" which words that instrument declared to be insufficient cause for refusing the writ. And it received further security in the reign of Charles II by the celebrated habeas corpus act, which made the writ a matter of right. But in no part of this history do we find anything which gives countenance or pretext for the idea that the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus authorizes arrests to be made without warrant founded on affidavit. On the contrary, the right of personal liberty is the paramount right, the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus being but the auxiliary. And it would seem to be very certain that the framers of the Constitution did not intend to make the natural right of personal liberty depend alone on the remedy by habeas corpus. If all remedies had been taken away, man would still have had the natural right of personal liberty: a right so essential that no civil society can deprive him of it unless it be legally forfeited. And if any civil government should undertake to deprive the citizen of this natural right of liberty such act would undoubtedly be held void. How, then, can the mere suspension of the writ of habeas corpus effect this object? But it is sufficient on this subject to refer to the decision of Judge Woodbury, already quoted.

It remains only to add a brief notice of that most remarkable opinion of Attorney General Speed, given to the President in support of the power of the military to try and execute the assassins of the President. The best refutation that can be furnished to this extraordinary document, so far as the members of the legal profession are concerned, is to ask them to read it. It carries with it its own condemnation; it exhibits the workings of a mind intent on one purpose, which is clearly foreshadowed in the beginning: that the accused should be tried and punished by military commission. Starting out with the affirmative of the proposition, it is not very wonderful that the document should abound in error, in assumption without precedent, in sophistry without logic, and in false deductions from axiomatic truths. In the outset the late Attorney General makes an admission that shows the fallacy of his whole argument, and would show the fallacy of any and every argument that could be made which reached a like conclusion. He says:

"In time of peace neither Congress nor the military can create any military tribunals except such as are made in pursuance of that clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces. I do not think that Congress can, in time of war or peace, under this clause of the Constitution, create military tribunals for the adjudication of offenses committed by persons not engaged in or belonging to such forces. This is a proposition too plain for argument. But it does not follow that because such military tribunals cannot be created by Congress under this clause that they cannot be created at all. Is there no other power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress or the military under which such tribunals may be created in time of war?"

I should answer certainly, none whatever.

But hear how and where the Attorney General finds this other power. He says:

"That the law of nations constitutes part of the laws of the land must be admitted. The laws of nations are expressly made laws of the land by the Constitution when it says Congress shall have power to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the laws of the nations."

In the first place, I for one do not admit that the laws of nations constitute part of the laws of the land, which the Attorney General says must be admitted. To sustain his theory probably this must be admitted, but to sustain the true theory of our Government it must be flatly denied; that denial I make. But he says again:

"The laws of nations are expressly made the laws of the land by the Constitution, when it says 'Congress shall have power to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the laws of nations.'"

Now, I say that this provision in the Constitution does not expressly or impliedly make the law of nations the law of the land, except only so far as we have intercourse with other nations. And I assert, moreover, that this is the first time that it ever was contended that the laws of nations became the municipal laws of a State or nation, with cognizance of offenses committed by individuals of the same community against each other. What is the law of nations? It is the law of nature as applicable to States in their intercourse with each other, either in peace or in war—

"And it is not applicable to men considered simply as such, but to nations or States in the relations they have together and the several interests they have to manage between each other."—Burlamaqui, 135.

The Constitution, in express terms, declares itself to be the supreme law of the land, and yet the Attorney General has so contrived as to make it subordinate to the law of nations, and hence maintains that although Congress cannot establish a military tribunal for the adjudication of offenses by persons not engaged in the Army or Navy, either in peace or in war, yet such tribunals may be established under the laws of nations. This, of course, is making the laws of nations supreme over the Constitution, and that, too, long after war had actually ceased. The Constitution declares that no one shall be arrested unless on warrant founded on affidavit; that no one shall be held to answer for a criminal charge except on indictment found by a grand jury, and that every one shall be entitled to trial by jury. These rights are all expressly and clearly guaranteed to every citizen of the country by the Constitution; they are placed beyond the reach of legislative authority; they constitute part of our bill of rights that no power on earth can invade. But, says the Attorney General, although neither the executive nor legislative department of our own Government can invade these rights, either in peace or in war, yet they may be overridden by the laws of nations; therefore the laws of nations are paramount to the Constitution. This is a fair statement of the case as presented by the Attorney General; and it is the irresistible deduction from his premises. The mere statement is sufficient to show the error of his conclusion. He is entitled to the credit of the terrible enormities practiced on the Constitution and on the citizen. It is hoped the precedent set by him will not be followed. If it should be, the Constitution is but an instrument by which the Government may be converted into a despotism at pleasure. It is not, as it declares itself to be, the supreme law of the land, but it is subordinate to the laws of nations. How the Attorney General could bring his mind to the conclusion that the laws of nations had anything to do with our mere domestic quarrels is impossible to conceive. If he be right, we should cease to talk about treason.

But the laws of nations make no provision for military commissions to hold their sessions under the very shadow of the civil tribunals for the trial of citizens on charges of having violated the municipal laws of the State. The American people may be inclined to ask: if the Constitution has been so grossly violated, where is the remedy? The usual remedy for a violation of law is the punishment of the offenders. And it is presumed that no well-read lawyer or judge will at this day question the power of the civil tribunals to punish the members of a court-martial or of a military commission for having acted without authority or for having transcended authority, and in such cases the criminality of the party tried by them has no influence in the decision of the question of power. Guilt must be established and punished in the manner prescribed by the laws of the land; this is the great bulwark of individual security. If neither Congress nor the judiciary can apply a remedy, the people will at once perceive the necessity for a radical change in their organic law.

Mr. President, a few words more and I have done. You engaged in a conflict of arms with the southern people. You proclaimed that your object was the preservation of the Constitution and the restoration of the Union. You either had a right to wage that war, or you had not. Some of the ablest men in this whole country now living believe, many of the ablest men among our fathers believed, that when the whole people of a State spoke it was the voice of the State, and the Constitution not conferring upon Congress the power to make war upon a State, that in case a State chose to discontinue its connection with the Federal Union, force could not be used against it to compel it to continue that connection. One thing, however, is certain, you had no power to wage that war unless it was for the preservation of the Union and of the Constitution. You had no power to wage it unless it was to compel the parties who had contracted with you to live up to their contract, that contract being the bond of Union, and when that war ceased by their submission, then it necessarily arises from the objects and purposes for which you could prosecute the war, that these States and these people are remitted to all the constitutional rights secured to you by the Constitution and secured to them by the Constitution; and when they have submitted to the authority of the Federal Government they have a right to representatives in this Chamber and in the other House of Congress, and they have a right to be represented by just whom they please without the interposition of any other oath than that required by the Constitution, to observe and obey the Constitution of the United States. You have no right to impose upon that people taxation and deny them representation. You have no more authority to try them by military commission than you have to try the people of your State or my State; and whenever the party in power attempt to do so, they become tyrants and oppressors and violators of the Constitution of their country, and history will adjudge them such.

I appeal to you, sir, and I appeal to those who exercise political power in this country now, by all the memories that cluster around the glorious past; by the recollection of the noble deeds and heroic sufferings of our ancestors, for you and for me, for your posterity and for my posterity; by all the bright realizations which might be ours in this present hour; by all the bright future and all the glories which are in that immediate future, stop your aggressions upon the Constitution of your country; cease to think that party is above country; awake, arise to the noble, solemn, awful duties and responsibilities of the hour; observe with fidelity the constitutional obligations imposed upon you as grave and learned Senators here to act for the benefit of your country; and the people of the present age shall bless you, coming generations shall proclaim your name to their children, and you will go down to posterity the saviors of a country bought for you, and of liberty purchased for you with the blood of patriotic sires.

Mr. DAVIS addressed the Senate. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I do not know the precise stage of the question, and I ask for information what is the state of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Chair is informed that there has been already submitted a proposition to strike out the original bill and insert a substitute; but the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] is first in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator who offered that substitute is not present; but I believe he is willing to withdraw it. Perhaps we can take a vote and informally vote down the pending amendment, and I will then offer my substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now desire to offer the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. HENDERSON,] which is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert a substitute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, let us vote it down. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to strike out all after the word "whereas" in the preamble, and to insert what I send to the Chair.

Mr. COWAN. What is now the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to have my amendment read. I have modified somewhat the printed amendment which is lying on the table of Senators. The modification does not change the meaning in any respect, but simply transposes some words in the fifth section to make the meaning clearer.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

No legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exist in the rebel States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas; and whereas it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said rebel States shall be divided into military districts and made subject to the military authority of the United States, as hereinafter prescribed, and for that purpose Virginia shall constitute the first district; North Carolina and South Carolina the second district; Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, the third district; Mississippi and Arkansas the fourth district; and Louisiana and Texas the fifth district.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the President to assign to the command of each of said districts an officer of the Army, not below the rank of brigadier general, and to detail a sufficient military force to enable such officer to perform his duties and enforce his authority within the district to which he is assigned.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property, to suppress insurrection, disorder, and violence, and to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders, or, when in his judgment it may be necessary for the trial of offenders, he shall have power to organize military commissions or tribunals for that purpose; and all interference under color of State authority with the exercise of military authority under this act shall be null and void.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all persons put under military arrest by virtue of this act shall be tried without unnecessary delay, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted; and no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district, and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That when the people of any one of said rebel States shall have formed a constitution of government in conformity with the Constitution of the United States in all respects, framed by a convention of delegates elected by the male citizens of said State twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition of servitude, who have been resident in said State for one year previous to the day of such election, except such as may be disfranchised for participation in the rebellion, or for felony at common law, and when such constitution shall provide that the elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all such persons as have the qualifications herein stated for electors of delegates, and when such constitution shall be ratified by a majority of the persons voting on the question of ratification who are qualified as electors of delegates, and when such constitution shall have been submitted to Congress for examination and approval, and Congress shall have appointed the same, and when said State by a vote of its Legislature elected under said constitution shall have adopted the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and known as article fourteen, and when said article shall have become a part of the Constitution of the United States, said State shall be declared entitled to representation in Congress, and Senators and Representatives shall be admitted therefrom on their taking the oath prescribed by law, and then and thereafter the preceding sections of this act shall be inoperative in said State.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President—

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will yield to me, I will make a motion to adjourn. It is now about the commencement of the Sabbath day. I have not been in my professional life in the habit of working on the Sabbath day, and I do not see the necessity of doing it to-night. I make the motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COWAN. I yield to that motion of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senate will not adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COWAN addressed the Senate. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. I beg you to be assured, sir, that I do not rise to make a speech. In the fourth section of this measure appears the following clause:

And no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district.

I spoke to a similar provision in the original bill last evening, and stated the insuperable, and, I think, well-founded objection which exists to depositing this power of life and of death in the hands of these subordinate military officials in the several districts established by the bill or amendment. I propose after the word "district" in the seventh line to add these words:

And when it affects life, the approval also of the President of the United States.

By irresistible inference the section as it stands makes the decision of the officer in command of the district adequate for the purpose of the execution of the sentence. The conclusion cannot be denied successfully or resisted by argument, if there be any sense or meaning to be attached to the words. I am content to meddle as little as possible with this amendment, and to provoke as little as possible of debate. The ordinary and the most numerous class of cases which can arise under that clause will be those in which imprisonment is inflicted. The cases where life is to be taken of course will be but occasional and rare, and the exception of cases where life is involved will not cast upon the President any large amount of duty, and will produce no considerable delay in the administration of the peculiar system of criminal justice provided by this amendment. I leave untouched by my amendment cases of imprisonment; but where life is involved I propose to add a security which the amendment of the Senator from Ohio does not contain—a security which it negatives and excludes—and for the reason which I stated before.

Now, sir, I feel myself under the pressure of necessity, moral necessity, to offer this amendment when I perceive a bill or an amendment of this sort proposed and about to be passed, as I suppose, by the Senate. In the interests of human life, in the interests of justice, in the interests of humanity, in the interests of public decency, and in view of the character of this nation, I protest against the passage of a measure which allows the life of an American citizen to be determined upon finally by a brigadier general of the Army of the United States.

Gentlemen say, "Why, this is the existing system." To be sure it is. Except in some exceptional cases during the war, under the pressure of stern necessity and justified only by the existence of hostilities, the complicated and necessary operations of enormous masses of military force in the field, the provision is universal that human life cannot be taken under the laws of the United States, except by the consent of the President. We are in a time of profound peace. There is no necessity upon us that a statute which contains a provision of this kind must now be enacted, because of carelessness, inattention, disregard to human life, or, an alternative which I will not suppose to influence any member, from an innate cruelty or malignity of heart.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think this amendment is quite unnecessary. This identical question was considered by the Committee on Reconstruction, and there was supposed to be no occasion for putting the word "President" in the section. The word "officer" was only put into the section out of abundant caution, so as to make it absolutely certain that in no case should the life of a person be taken without the approval of the commanding officer of the district. This very section provides that the regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this bill, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions, intending to put in force as applicable to the administration of justice under this bill the laws of the United States as they now stand.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon: do not the rules and regulations of the Army as they now stand declare that the sentence of death, on a conviction by a military commission, shall not be inflicted until it is approved by the President? Is not that the way the law now reads?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is my understanding.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Very well. Then, if the existing law reads that the sentence of death by a military commission shall not be inflicted but by the approval of the President, and you now enact in this section that the sentence of death passed by a military commission shall not be inflicted except by the approval of the brigadier general, you change the regulation. That is the difficulty in the case. By the very terms of the statute itself your regulations are modified by this very bill. That is just as clear as that two and two make four.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It may be very clear to the gentleman, but I insist that it is not so by any reasonable construction of this statute, because the provision is:

And no sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district; and the laws and regulations for the government of the Army shall not be affected by this act, except in so far as they conflict with its provisions.

Now, to say that that clause requiring the approval of the commanding officer of the district is a repeal of the law which requires the President to approve the sentence is a construction that the section will not bear.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator, if that is the construction of it, why not make it plain, as the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because I will not consent to unnecessary amendments. I think we may as well proceed with the bill and not amend it unnecessarily.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. You admit that that is the law. What is the objection to putting it in the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have stated the objection. The Senate can put it in if it pleases. I object to it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will simply add that by the express language of the third section there is direct power conferred upon this officer or these officers to punish for these offenses. A direct substantive, positive power of punishment and to punish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Grimes, Hendricks, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, and Saulsbury—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Nye, Riddle, Sprague, and Sumner—12.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I rise to what I regard as a privileged question, and that is to suggest that this in the law is dies non. It is now a quarter to two o'clock on the Sabbath morning. I hold that it is not proper for those who observe that day to continue in session at this hour. I submit that it is not proper to transact any legislative business at this hour. I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting at the end of the fourth section the following:

And no punishment shall be inflicted which is not prescribed by law.

Mr. President, this amendment is kindred to the amendment just proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which has been rejected by the Senate by a decided vote, and I suppose this amendment will receive the same fortune which befell the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I understand that this measure is not now in a condition for amendment. It has received the sanction and approval of a body from which there is no appeal, which allows no amendment or modification of its decrees. I speak of a political party caucus. The Senator from Oregon was not justified in saying that this bill was considered by the Committee on Reconstruction organized by the Senate and by the House. It is known to us all that this is not the bill of that committee. Therefore his answer to the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania was not sustained. The bill that came from the Committee on Reconstruction is on our tables. The language of this bill and of that in this particular regard is alike; but the bill is not the bill of the committee. It is a bill that is brought in—I presume it is not disguised—from no committee, but from a political caucus. I do not think it is possible otherwise that the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania would have been rejected, and otherwise I do not think it possible that the amendment which I have proposed would be rejected.

The bill as it now stands provides that cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted. Otherwise there is no rule prescribed to the military court in the trial of men for crime, and therefore, except as the punishment may in some instances be defined by the regulations of the Army, the will of the court becomes the law for the punishment of the defendant; and I use no words more descriptive of oppression. It is marvelous, Mr. President, that it shall be proposed to organize a court for the trial of persons not belonging to the Army or the Navy, and to punish men without a definition of the crime or a regulation in regard to the punishment that shall be imposed.

My amendment is simply that this court as thus organized shall in the punishment it inflicts be governed by the law of the land. It is a plain, straightforward amendment, an amendment which I think the common people of the country will understand, and they will think it marvelously strange when they come to read that that amendment was voted down. In advance, I say to them, the common people of the country, North as well as South that when a proposition like this is voted down in the American Senate, it is because the judgment of the Senate is not without embarrassment. If this bill came from an ordinary committee of the body, having inadvertently omitted to place some little restriction upon the judgment and decision of this extraordinary court, then the Senate would provide for the omission.

Does any Senator wish a man to be punished in some mode not known to the law? Why, sir, there is a bill pending in this body to change the mode of punishment in some of the States. Although the mode of punishment is fixed by law where whipping is resorted to, it is proposed that Congress shall interfere to prevent it. So careful are Senators of the manner and mode in which men shall be punished, that some members of this body at least believe it to be right to interfere to control the mode of punishment in the States, and that, too, under State laws. But that is particularly in the interest, as it is said, of the colored people. This amendment is in the interest of all. All are liable to be brought before these courts upon a charge ever so vague and uncertain, the mode of proceeding not defined, the manner of establishing the offense, the character of the testimony not pointed out, and last and greatest of all, the character of the punishment which shall be inflicted upon the man is not prescribed. That is to depend upon the pleasure of the court. I know, ordinarily, this Senate would not leave a bill thus upon its passage.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish simply to say that this section provides that "no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted;" and by its requirements if a man is sentenced by a military tribunal to punishment he is to be sentenced to that punishment which is usual in cases of such crimes, and no others.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggested the fact that that was the only limitation upon the court. But go down to the State of North Carolina and whipping is a usual punishment for misdemeanors. That is a usual punishment for whites and blacks—a punishment most offensive to my sentiments. To prevent that punishment a bill is pending before this body. When that punishment is inflicted in the court after full trial and the verdict of the jury, we would interfere with it; and I have no doubt the Senator from Oregon will vote for that bill when it comes up; but in this bill we would enact that that very punishment may be inflicted upon a white man or a negro either. Because it is decreed outside of the Senate we must enact that if this military court arrests a man and puts him upon summary trial, and he is found guilty, he may be tied up and lashed, a usual punishment in some localities. A white man in North Carolina who may all the while have been true to this Government, who has never breathed a disloyal breath or done a false act to the country, may be brought before this military court for some misdemeanor and tried and tied up and lashed. Now, I ask that, if he be lashed, the number of lashes shall be defined by the law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Allow me to ask the Senator from Indiana if his amendment would help it?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I say the number of lashes shall be limited by law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Have you proposed it in your amendment?

Mr. HENDRICKS. My amendment is that the punishment shall be limited and defined by the law; the court shall be limited by the law in the infliction of the punishment. The Senator from Oregon answers me that this section provides that unusual punishments shall not be inflicted. I give an instance. Under this law the lash may be used and without limit as to the stripes, except that in the judgment of the court they shall be not unusual, not cruel.

Mr. LANE. I believe that whipping is expressly abolished in the Army and Navy by express law, and never can be inflicted under this or any other law until that is repealed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does that apply to civilians or to the Army and Navy?

Mr. LANE. To the Army and Navy.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is right. I would not want to see it applied to a soldier. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 8, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, Nesmith, Norton, and Saulsbury—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, McDougall, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, Sprague, and Sumner—16.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the amendment in section five, lines fourteen and fifteen, by striking out the words "elective franchise shall be enjoyed by all," and inserting "right to vote shall not be denied to," and by inserting after the word "stated," in line sixteen, the words "or in any way abridged because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude;" so that the clause will read:

And when such constitution shall provide that the right to vote shall not be denied to such persons as have the qualifications herein stated, or in any way abridged because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and shall have been submitted to Congress, &c.

As it now stands I think the section would give universal suffrage or would provide for it. The amendment which I have proposed would require impartial suffrage, and I have used the language, as far as it was applicable to the case, of the constitutional amendment adopted at the last session of Congress. "The right to vote shall not be denied or in any way abridged," was the language of the constitutional amendment, "because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," and this is to carry out, as I understand, the purpose of the constitutional amendment upon that question. I do not care about discussing it. I wish to place myself right about it.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In section three, line three, after the word "property," I move to insert the words "as fixed by law;" so that it will read:

That it shall be the duty of each officer assigned as aforesaid to protect all persons in their rights of person and property as fixed by law, to suppress insurrection, &c.

The object of this amendment is that these military commanders shall, in deciding what are the rights of persons and property, be governed by the law of the land. It may be claimed that under the language of the bill they would be thus governed. I do not choose to leave a question of that sort vague and uncertain. In my judgment, the military officers would regard themselves as clothed with very large power under the language that is now used. It is not safe to pass the bill in its present language. When they come to decide civil suits between man and man in regard to their property there should be a provision requiring them to be governed by the law of the land.

Mr. LANE. All the rights of person and property are fixed by law. You may repeat it a hundred times and not make it any stronger. It is precisely the same. There are no rights of persons or property but what are guaranteed by law and exist by law.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In section three, line five, after the word "criminals," I move to insert "according to law;" so as to read:

And to punish, or cause to be punished, all disturbers of the public peace and criminals, according to law, and to this end, &c.

In a word or two I can explain the effect of this amendment. The section now provides that the officer assigned to the district shall punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace and criminals. He may allow the local tribunals to try cases, or in cases where in his judgment he may think it necessary he may organize a military court to try criminals; so that, take it altogether, I understand that if this be passed he may himself order the punishment of persons disturbers of the public peace, and criminals. My amendment is that in punishing he shall punish according to law; that his discretion shall be controlled by those words. On this question, as it is kindred to the first one that I offered, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 8, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, Nesmith, Norton, and Saulsbury—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, McDougall, Nye, Patterson, Riddle, Sprague, and Sumner—15.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope the Senate will not be vexed with me if I offer one more amendment. It is in section five, line eight, after the word "State," to insert the words "voting therein."

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator that that is so in the amendment as it stands. I have modified the phraseology somewhat from the original printed amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will it accomplish the same thing?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I have changed the phraseology.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw my amendment. I am glad that I have offered one amendment that is clearly right, so that Senators will not charge me with simply offering amendments for the purpose of consuming time, or anything of that sort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio as a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the patience of the Senate for a few minutes while I submit a few remarks on this bill. I do not intend to occupy more than a few minutes in regard to it. Most of the views that I thought it my duty to present to the Senate I expressed last night. There are one or two others to which I will now ask the attention of the Senate. It is with very great pain to myself that now, at near three o'clock on the Sabbath morning, I am called upon to discuss this particular measure; but it is not my fault that it is so. I am a little in the condition on this question of one of the chief justices of the State of Pennsylvania, not altogether, however, I will say to the Senate. In the assignment of the circuits at the commencement of the courts on Monday morning, it became necessary for the chief justice, in order to reach his courts by the time the juries would be in, to travel on the Sabbath, and upon some friend of his speaking to him about it he said that he had to travel on the Sabbath; it was much against his will; but the Legislature had so fixed it, and he hoped the Legislature would be damned for it. [Laughter.] I would not hope that the Senate would be damned for compelling me to labor upon the Sabbath day, which is against my sentiments.

But, Mr. President, we are here engaged in the consideration of perhaps one of the most important bills that has ever passed the Congress of the United States, and as we must dispose of it to-night, I suppose it is right that I should say what I have got to say upon it. And I beg to assure the Senate that I do not wish to consume the time. I have had no such motive from the first. I said yesterday evening that this bill had to be considered. The Senator from Oregon thought otherwise. He has now found that it had to be. And when his bill was well torn to pieces it had to go to another body to be fixed up, and it comes in this evening, printed this evening, and we have this opportunity to look at it. What will be its final construction of course on so brief an examination of it none of us can tell.

This bill rests upon the proposition that for ten States of the Union we have the power to establish a new form of government. I suppose it rests upon the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] that these States are conquered States and subject to the legislative will of Congress. I do not admit that doctrine at all. I do not concede that these States have ceased at any time to be States of the Union. I believe they have been and now are States of the Union. Sir, some of these States helped to form the Union; they helped to fight the battles of the Revolution, and were parties to that great Convention that made the Constitution which established the Union. I do not believe they have been out of the Union. I am fixed in that opinion.

But, sir, for the sake of argument, suppose that the position be true that these States are now in the condition of conquered countries, at the feet of the conqueror; that they are held by us by conquest; then I wish to ask the lawyers of this body what are the powers that we have as conquerors? Is it the right and the power to establish any form of government that we choose? No, sir; I deny the proposition. The conqueror holding territory by conquest has not the power to establish over the conquered country any form of government that he may please. He is restricted in his power. I suppose the right rule is that the conquered country comes to the conqueror with its local laws, and that all those laws that are not inconsistent with the policy of the Government of the conqueror continue in force. We are told that the conqueror may prescribe laws for the conquered country; but what sort of laws? The laws that the conqueror in that case may establish over a conquered country are laws analogous to the laws of the conqueror. Ours is a free Government, as we claim. Among the provisions of the Constitution is one that the States shall have republican forms of government, and it is made the duty of the Congress of the United States and all the departments of the Government to guaranty to each State a republican form of government. Now, can we, under any power, establish over a conquered country a form of government altogether inconsistent with the Government which we ourselves have? The government proposed by this bill is the most arbitrary government possible; it is a government by the most irresponsible power, the military power; a form of government not analogous to ours, not consistent with it, but wholly inconsistent with it.

On the 7th of July, 1846, California was a conquered country. The Supreme Court have recognized the conquest of California as being completed on the 7th day of July, 1846. The treaty was made and came in force in 1848. There was a period between 1846 and 1848 that we held a large country by conquest. Now, let me ask Senators, after war had ceased, after peace had been restored, what form of government could we give to California, a conquered country? What form of government could we establish over California? Pending arms, of course the question was settled upon other principles; but after the war ceased, after hostilities between Mexico and the United States had ceased, what form of government could we, as a Republic, establish over California? Could we establish over that country, conquered from a foreign Power in a war declared by Congress, or recognized as existing by Congress, a monarchy and place a king upon the throne to govern in California?

Senators seem to assume that over a conquered country any form of government may be established at the will and pleasure of the conqueror. I deny the proposition, and give a case now. California is at the feet of the conqueror, a subjugated country, wrested by military power from a foreign foe. Could we have established over California a kingly government? No, sir. In establishing a government in California we were compelled to establish one analogous to and in harmony with the Government of the United States, and not one in conflict with it in its very nature. Over California could we have established permanently a provisional government, to be controlled by the military power, in which the rights of person and property should be decided at the will of the commanding general assigned to the conquered province, and in which punishments should be imposed at the will and pleasure of the commanding general? No, sir. We could establish in California such a form of government as would enable the people to set up a State government. It is not within the powers of the Government of the United States to establish anywhere in any country conquered by arms or ceded by treaty a form of government inconsistent and not in harmony with the Government of the United States.

Could France establish a republican form of government in a conquered province? I presume it will not be questioned that in the exercise of the powers of that Government, if those powers are defined and limited, that country would be required to establish over a conquered country a form of government similar to her own. But however that may be, our Government, the Government of the United States, is one of defined powers, and when we conquer a country or receive it by treaty we must establish over that country a form of government similar to and in harmony with our own.

Now, sir, if this principle be sound, if it be correct, and if I should concede the southern States to occupy the position of a foreign territory conquered by arms, what form of government must we establish there? What does the country become according to this argument? Does it become a country in which we can gratify revenge and passion, and do the work of hatred instead of establishing a wholesome and useful government? No, sir; according to the argument of the gentlemen who occupy this opposite position it is territory, territory to be provided with a proper form of government. What sort of government then may we establish in our Territories? The practice during the whole history of the country has established that. In the Territories we establish a government in harmony with our own, extending the laws of the United States over them, the institutions of the country, the trial by jury, the writ of habeas corpus. All these guarantees and securities for liberty are extended over the Territories; and according to the established doctrine, Congress may go just so far in the establishment of territorial governments as will enable the people to establish State governments with a view to their admission as States.

Mr. President, it was not my purpose to continue the discussion at any length. I wished to meet this one point, for I cannot conceive that this bill rests upon any proposition other than that the State governments of the South have been crushed down and that we hold that country as the conqueror holds a country wrested from a foreign foe by the power of his arms. Holding that doctrine, then I say to Senators, even under that extreme proposition, they have not the power to establish such a form of government as this. Holding even that proposition, we must establish a form of government in harmony with our own. I have illustrated it by the case of California. When the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] votes for this bill does he understand himself as voting that when we conquered California we could have established in that beautiful land a monarchy and placed upon a throne a king to govern them? No, sir, we have no such power. That is not a power that can be exercised by our Government. We must establish a government in harmony with our own.

But the fact I do not admit, upon which I have based this argument. I do not admit the fact that these States are disrobed of their sovereignty. They are States of this Union. This bill proposes to go into ten States of this Union and establish a military government there, unknown to the common law, unknown to the law of our race for a thousand years; that military power and military government, the will of the commanding general, shall be the form of government for men, women, and children in a time of peace. That is the bill that we have before us; a bill which, under the pretense of establishing republican governments, takes away from the government there every republican principle and form that can possibly be conceived. A republican form of government is one in which the people govern themselves through their representatives. Here we establish a government most despotic in its character, having no republican features about it, in no way analogous either to our State governments or to the Government of the United States.

I do not intend, sir, to examine the provisions of this bill that have been for the first time brought to the attention of the Senate this evening. I offered such amendments as in good faith could be adopted upon this bill, not with any purpose of voting for the bill, because no amendment could be made to it that would induce me to vote for a bill that I consider so dangerous to my country. I proposed those amendments, because I thought they would, to some extent, mitigate the evils of the measure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Even at the risk of wounding the feelings of others, I propose to take four or five minutes, not to exceed five, in stating why I offer this amendment as a substitute.

The principle of this bill is contained in the first two lines of the preamble. It is founded upon the proclamation of the President and Secretary of State made just after the assassination of President Lincoln, in which they declared specifically that the rebellion had overthrown all civil governments in the insurrectionary States, and they proceeded by an executive mandate to create governments. They were provisional in their character, and dependent for their validity solely upon the action of Congress. These are propositions which it is not now necessary for me to demonstrate. Those governments have never been sanctioned by Congress, nor by the people of the States where they exist; that is, all the people.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me, for I shall be through in three minutes.

Mr. COWAN. I have but a simple question to ask.

Mr. SHERMAN. I decline to yield. I simply wish to state the proposition; I do not want to debate it. Taking that proclamation and the acknowledged fact that the people of the southern States, the loyal people, whites and blacks, are not protected in their rights, but that an unusual and extraordinary number of cases occur of violence and murder and wrong, I do think it is the duty of the United States to protect those people in the enjoyment of substantial rights.

Now, the first four sections of this substitute contains nothing but what is in the present law. There is not a single thing in the first four sections that does not now exist by law.

The first section authorizes the division of the rebel States into military districts. That is being done daily.

The second section acknowledges that the President is the commanding officer of the Army, and it is made his duty to assign certain officers to those districts. That is clearly admitted to be right.

The third section does no more than what the Supreme Court in their recent decision have decided could be done in a State in insurrection. The Supreme Court in their recent decision, while denying that a military tribunal could be organized in Indiana because it never had been in a state of insurrection, expressly declared that these tribunals might have been, and might now be, organized in insurrectionary States. There is nothing in this third section, in my judgment, that is not now and has not been done every month within the last twelve months by the President of the United States. The orders of General Sickles, and many other orders that I might quote, have gone further in punishment of crime than this section proposes.

Now, in regard to the fourth section, that is a limitation upon the present law. Under the present law many executions of military tribunals are summarily carried out. This section requires all sentences of military tribunals which affect the liberty of the citizen to be sent to the commanding officer of the district. They must be approved by the commanding officer of the district; and so far as life is concerned the President may issue his order at any moment now, or after this bill passes, directing that the military commander of the district shall not enforce a sentence of death until it is submitted to him, because the military officer is a mere subordinate of the President, remaining there at the pleasure of the President.

There is nothing, therefore, in these sections that ought to alarm the nerves of my friend from Pennsylvania or anybody else. I cannot think that these gentlemen are alarmed about the state of despotism that President Johnson is to establish in the southern States. I do not feel alarmed; nor do I see anything in these sections as they now stand that need endanger the rights of the most timid citizen of the United States. They are intended to protect a race of people who are now without protection, and they are not intended to oppress anybody who now can oppress.

Now, in regard to the fifth section, which is the main and material feature of this bill, I think it is right that the Congress of the United States, before its adjournment, should designate some way by which the southern States may reorganize loyal State governments in harmony with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the sentiment of the people, and find their way back to these Halls. My own judgment is that that fifth section will point out a clear, easy, and right way for these States to be restored to their full power in the Government. All that it demands of the people of the southern States is to extend to all their male citizens, without distinction of race or color, the elective franchise. It is now too late in the day to be frightened by this simple proposition. Senators can make the most of it as a political proposition. Upon that we are prepared to meet them. But it does point out a way by which the twenty absent Senators and the fifty absent Representatives can get back to these Halls, and there is no other way by which they can justly do it.

It seems to me that this is the whole substance of the bill. All there is material in the bill is in the first two lines of the preamble and the fifth section, in my judgment. The first two lines may lay the foundation by adopting the proclamation issued first to North Carolina, that the rebellion had swept away all the civil governments in the southern States; and the fifth section points out the mode by which the people of those States in their own manner, without any limitations or restrictions by Congress, may get back to full representation in Congress. That is the view I take of this amended bill; and taking that view of it I see no reason in the world why we should not all go for it. I desire to say, in closing, that I am authorized by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] indeed he requested me, to say that if he were here he would feel bound to vote for this amendment, and then on the final passage of the bill he would vote against it; but on that question he is paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will, with the indulgence of the Senate, take five minutes to answer these numerous and long speeches that have been made against this bill.

Mr. COWAN. If the Senator from Oregon wants to make the last speech I hope he will allow me to say a word at this place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. COWAN again addressed the Senate. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio made a few remarks, which, in my opinion, ought not to go upon the record of the debates without a word in reply. He said that at the end of the war the present President of the United States, through the Secretary of State, announced to the people of this country and to the world that the then existing governments in the South were unlawful, and commenced a proceeding for reestablishing valid governments in that section of the country; and as I understand him, he places this amendment of his that he proposes to make a law, upon the ground, at least to some extent, of that official declaration of the Chief Magistrate of the United States. In other words, the country is to understand and accept the position of the member who offers this proposition, that this bill is based upon that executive action; that it is a natural, or at least a proper sequence from it.

The Senator, in speaking, forgot that the State of Virginia reorganized had been set up long before, and that that organization yet continues. He forgot that Louisiana had been reorganized, and that that reorganization yet continues, modified in form. He forgot that the same state of things existed with reference to the State of Arkansas, the reorganization of which was instigated by a communication from President Lincoln to General Steele, in command in that State. He forgot that Tennessee herself was in the same category. So that, as to a large part of the States of the South which had been concerned in the rebellion they had been organized under new State authorities before the time which he mentioned; that is, before the close of the war; and as to those States, constituting a large part of the whole number, there was no executive declaration, no executive proceeding for their reorganization; but upon the contrary they were then held, as they have since been held, by the President of the United States to be lawful State governments, and as such entitled to the respect, to the amity, or rather to the protection of the Government of the United States. The Senator's argument therefore fails, for the enactment of this bill is applicable to all the States which I have enumerated, save Tennessee.

Why, sir, let us go a step further. Not only was that the position of the present President with regard to these States, but in point of fact it was the position of his predecessor; for the State government in each one of the States which I have mentioned was organized under his administration at his instance, and under proclamations and messages which are known to the whole world. Mr. Lincoln announced to the inhabitants of all the States in insurrection that wherever in any State a number of legal voters, according to the qualifications which existed before the rebellion, not less than one tenth in number, should organize a State government in conformity with the views which he stated, the government so organized should be recognized by the Government of the United States; and the Congress of the United States, by its silence, by its acquiescence, concurred in that public proclamation and declaration of his. I say, therefore, that at the conclusion of the war, the time mentioned by the Senator from Ohio, and upon considerations connected with which he puts the measure now before the Senate, a large part of these States were acknowledged in the full sense by the executive department as the governments of those States, as they had been previously recognized by Mr. Lincoln when he exercised the duties of that high office.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him right upon that point, I will suggest that when the question arose as to the division of Virginia and the establishment of West Virginia the opinions of the members of the Cabinet of Mr. Lincoln were taken in writing, and they all unanimously, including the present Chief Justice Chase, gave their opinion in writing in favor of the validity of the act of Virginia in giving its consent through the Legislature to the division of the State; and the act of this Congress of March 10, 1866, one year ago, the transfer act by which this Congress consented to the transfer of two counties to West Virginia from the State of Virginia acknowledged that the State of Virginia had given its valid consent by its Legislature.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Why, Mr. President, so general was the concurrence of public opinion in this policy announced by Mr. Lincoln in proclamations and messages, that it was with extreme difficulty in this very Senate that we prevented the introduction of Senators from Arkansas and from Virginia at former sessions. I was obliged, as a member of the minority, as were others who thought with me, to stand with a section only of the dominant party in resisting their introduction at that early period. But as governments of the States, so far as the Executive was concerned, their recognition was complete.

I say, then, that the Senator from Ohio, standing here as the organ of those who introduce this measure and ask for our votes for it, is not justified by the facts in putting the enactment of this bill upon the ground which he has stated to the Senate in its justification. I go further. I say that the second or other ground which he stated is equally incorrect. He says that the Supreme Court have expressed an opinion which justifies this bill. Pray, when did they announce any such opinion or express any such sentiment? Certainly it was not in any of those recent cases which have attracted public attention and been the subject of vituperative denunciation in the country. They determined that military commissions in the State of Indiana were illegal because that State was not within the theater of military operations. That conceded, impliedly at least, perhaps the court said so expressly, that such military commissions or military courts might be organized in States in rebellion, might be organized within the theater of active hostilities, that they were an incident of military operations when warranted by the Rules and Articles of War or by the legislation of Congress. But, sir, that court in no part of either of the opinions delivered by it laid down the doctrine that military commissions might now be organized, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, in the States of the South. They did not enter upon that field of inquiry which has been entered upon by members of Congress at all. They did not cover it by their investigations. They did not explore it. They did not attempt to determine whether the war yet continued, as some gentlemen seem to think. They did not attempt to determine what was the present condition of those States in a political point of view, and very properly they refrained from that investigation, and that for two reasons: in the first place, because it is a political question, and therefore not appropriate to their examination unless brought before them directly and in such manner that they cannot evade it in a judicial investigation; in the next place, the case before them invited no such inquiry, and they made no such inquiry. I say the Senator from Ohio will search in vain in any of those opinions for any such doctrine as that which he has suggested. I presume without reflection, on the spur of the moment, in the heat of debate. So much in reply to the Senator from Ohio. His speech has led to these remarks which I should not otherwise have made.

There is, however, a question which I would desire to ask him; I perceive he is present. It is what is the signification of the expression used in the first line of this preamble? What is its meaning? The language is—

Whereas no legal State governments * * * now exist in the rebel States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas and Arkansas.

What is meant by the expression "legal State governments" in this preamble? Does it mean that there is no government in existence in any one of these States which has a legal character, which can, in point of law, take jurisdiction, through its courts or through its political authorities, of rights of person or property, or of any other matter pertaining to the jurisdiction of a government within a State? Because, if that be so, perhaps there is some ground and some reason for congressional action; but if, on the contrary, the Senator supposes these governments have some sort of validity, I should like to know to what extent he assigns them their validity and consequence. What is their legal character?

Mr. SHERMAN. I prefer to answer the Senator's question at once if he will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The view I take of it is the same that was taken by the President and Secretary of State when the proclamation of May, 1865, was issued, that the authorities of those States were overthrown by the act of rebellion, precisely like the case of the authority of a Government being overthrown by the occupation of its territory by a hostile Power. That does not disturb the courts or the sheriff or the ordinary operations of the law. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] stated properly the law, that where we occupy a conquered territory we occupy it subject to the local laws for the administration of private justice between man and man; for the disposition of rights of property, and for the punishment of crime. If this bill passes the law will be administered there. But the legal State governments are the governments represented here in Congress. A legal State government is a government which forms a part of the United States. I agree with the President and Secretary of State in the proclamation to which I have referred, that that government there was overthrown; the rebellion overthrew all civil authority there; but the ordinary municipal regulations, administered by their courts and sheriffs and officers of justice are not disturbed even by the occupation of an armed force. If the Government of Great Britain should occupy the State of Ohio by her military power, and exclude the authority of the United States, that would not necessarily disturb the administration of justice except so far as military law might be substituted for civil law. I think that is an answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Then I understand the Senator in general terms to hold that these are not State governments in the sense of the Constitution as entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States, holding that relation to the Union which is held by the States represented; but at the same time that they are governments for municipal or local purposes, if this Government so chooses to treat them.

I have said what I have said from no desire to delay the action of the Senate, but because these points were raised by what had previously been said.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. President, I had desired and intended to express my views to the Senate upon the subjects that are embraced in this bill; but I did not suppose that business would be pushed forward so rapidly, and that it was expected by anybody that bills of this character would be pressed on the attention and consideration of the Senate so hastily as this bill has been pressed. I desire now, without going into any discussion of the details of the bill, to move merely to strike out the preamble, and I do so for the reason that, in my judgment, it is false in fact and false in inference. In my judgment, not a single statement or a single recital of this preamble is true in point of fact; and if it were possible for it to be more false in inference than it is in fact I would say it is much more false in inference.

The details of the bill probably are as nearly correct as they could be if the principle upon which it proceeds were correct. If it is necessary to establish in the ten States that are now unrepresented in Congress a military government, if it is necessary to set up there a military power which shall override and supersede everything like civil government, this amendment, perhaps, is sufficient for that purpose. But, sir, I cannot remain in my seat silently and permit the passage of a bill that recites, as this bill does, what are, in my judgment, and what I think the history of legislation for the last three or four years and the history of legislation of the present Congress should be, allegations that are not true in point of fact. The preamble of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio recites that "no legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exists" in certain "rebel States." The first assertion is that there are no legal State governments in these States.

I shall not refer to the proclamations of the President, nor to the manner in which these governments were organized; but for the purpose of showing the falsity of that recital, I will merely refer to the action of the committee of fifteen organized by the present Congress, who for eight long months sat in deliberation upon this subject, knowing all the time that these State governments as they were organized by the President, as gentlemen say, by usurpation, were in existence, and that committee never proposed to interfere with them, nor has this Congress in any manner attempted to interfere with them. On the contrary, Congress has recognized them as legal, valid, subsisting State organizations and State governments; and not only that, but this Congress has proposed constitutional amendments and submitted them to the very Legislatures which gentlemen now say derived all their validity from executive usurpation, for those Legislatures to act upon the amendments and adopt or reject them as they saw fit. It is true, it may be said that those amendments were proposed to the States generally; but who is there now upon this floor who would object to the admission of representatives from these States if they had adopted your constitutional amendment? Suppose the Legislatures of these various States had adopted the amendment which you proposed as article fourteen, and upon its adoption by them that article had become a part of the Constitution of the United States, who is there here that would have dared to object to the admission of Senators from those States under such circumstances, if they could take the prescribed oath? No one. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts, not now present, [Mr. SUMNER,] would have objected, because he did not consider himself committed by the proposal of that amendment to the judgment of the country. But, sir, your elections last fall were carried upon the idea that that amendment was a settlement and an adjustment of the whole question of reconstruction, and that if the southern States would adopt it their Representatives and Senators would be admitted to seats.

Then I say that this recital that there are no legal State governments in these States is false in point of fact, because we have treated and we have regarded them as legal, valid, subsisting State governments. I do not go at all into the question of the power of the President to institute these governments. I shall not attempt to discuss that power or to speak of the proclamations to which the Senator from Ohio has referred as instituting State governments for these States. I am willing, for the purposes of the argument, to grant that the President had no such authority, and that all that has been done is the result of usurpation; but I say it does not lie in the mouth of the Senate to say, by way of recital in a bill, that there are no legal governments in these States, and to undertake to wipe them all out.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Suppose the people had acted without any proclamation?

Mr. NORTON. As is suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, if the people themselves had come together without a proclamation, without invitation, and had themselves instituted these State governments, elected their Legislatures and State officers, and set all the machinery of State government in motion, would it then lie in the mouth of this Congress to say that those governments were not legal State governments, especially after it had submitted to their consideration as States amendments of the Federal Constitution?

But, sir, this preamble is more false in inference than in fact. It not only asserts that there are no legal State governments, but it asserts that "no adequate protection for life or property now exists" in the ten States named; and why? Because of the want of civil government there? Because of the want of tribunals where parties can go and test and try their rights of person and property? That is the inference. That is supposed to be the condition of things there. Is that so? If such a state of facts exists at all, it is because Congress has not allowed or permitted them to have civil governments and civil tribunals, courts of justice into which parties can go and test their rights of person and property. Such a condition of affairs as is alleged to exist is not because, as the inference might be from the recital in this preamble, of the action of that people; but it is because Congress will not allow them to have their courts, and will not allow the supremacy of civil authority and of civil law; and following that, Congress undertakes in this amendment and in this bill to set up military power and a military authority, before which persons shall ascertain and settle their rights of person and of property. Why, sir, in every one of these States the Federal laws are enforced as they are in any of the northern States. Rights of person and property are determined in the courts as they are in the northern States, save and except when they are interfered with by your military or Freedmen's Bureau agents. What is there in these States now that prevents an individual from going into court and enforcing his rights of person and property? Nothing, save and except your Freedmen's Bureau agents and your military officers; they sometimes interfere with the administration of justice and obstruct and prevent the action of the courts.

The last clause of the preamble recites that—

It is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established.

That is all very well; it is necessary, it is desirable that peace and good order should be enforced in these States; but how? How do you enforce peace and good order in the northern States? You enforce the laws there through the civil tribunals, the tribunals established by law, in which persons seek redress for wrongs and injuries to person or to property. But this bill proposes that all this shall be done by the military commander in each district, a brigadier general; it overrides and supersedes the civil tribunals and authorizes him to mete out justice to suitors as he may see fit.

For these reasons I move to strike out this preamble. It is false in fact, because there are legal governments in these States. If there are legal governments in any of the States of this Union there are in these States; and it does not lie in the mouth of this Congress to allege that there are no legal State governments there. Whatever defects there may be in the administration of justice and securing the rights of person and property there result from the fault of Congress, and not the fault of these States or their people.

Mr. NESMITH. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to interrupt him for the purpose of calling his attention to this clause: "and to this end he may allow local civil tribunals to take jurisdiction of and to try offenders."

Mr. NORTON. I thank the Senator, and I was just going to refer to that clause myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to state that the motion of the Senator from Minnesota is not in order at this time. The first question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert a substitute. After that shall have been disposed of, if no other amendment be moved, the question will come up on the adoption of the preamble moved by the Senator from Ohio. In that way the Senator from Minnesota will get a vote on the preamble.

Mr. NESMITH. I think from the range of this debate almost anything is in order.

Mr. NORTON. I was going to refer to the fact that in the body of this bill there is a recognition of the validity of the civil tribunals of these States, because it allows the brigadier general in command of a district to permit the local civil tribunals to take part in the administration of justice in these various States.

I said I should move to strike out the preamble, and I shall further move to amend the first section by striking out in line three "said rebel States" and inserting "the States now unrepresented in Congress."

As I have said, I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the details of this bill. The Senator from Ohio has said that it is a very simple proposition. Certainly it is simple to my mind, and yet it strikes me very differently from what it does him. Yes, sir, it is a simple proposition to establish for ten States of this Union a purely military government; and if by any possibility a civil tribunal may have anything to do with the administration of justice in these States, it is to be only by the permission of the military governor. It will not do to say that this bill is intended to subvert some good purpose; it will not do to say that this bill is intended to protect persons in their rights of persons and property; it will not do to say that the object you have in view is a praiseworthy object. I look to the details of the bill, to the manner in which you propose to accomplish the object which you say you have in view, and I say that the argument which sustains this bill is the same argument under which the fugitive slave law was sustained. Persons who were in favor of the fugitive slave law said it was carrying out a constitutional obligation; but it was the manner in which that obligation was attempted to be enforced by that bill which made it so objectionable to the people. While the people of the northern States acknowledged the constitutional obligation, the mode in which it was attempted to be executed under that bill was offensive to them. So with this bill. It will not do to say that you are here attempting to accomplish a good object or a good purpose. It is the manner in which you attempt to do it that is offensive to the people. In my judgment you will find any such measure offensive to the people, and if they can reach it in any manner (no matter what the object may be, no matter what good purpose you may attempt to subvert,) they will condemn a proposition to hand over ten of the States of our Union to unlimited military power, ignoring or superseding all civil tribunals, all civil law, and all civil authority.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I move to strike out the preamble, it being, as I said, unfounded and false in fact and in inference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to the preamble is not now in order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Is not the preamble a part of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORTON. I understand that the preamble is a part of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Action on the preamble will not be in order till after action on the amendment proper.

Mr. NORTON. Then I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Ohio by striking out in the third line of the first section the words "said rebel States," and inserting "the States now unrepresented in Congress."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. As this preamble has been brought into discussion, I wish to say a few words upon it. I have waited till it should come up regularly. I have no motion to make in reference to it; but I merely want to justify, as far as may be necessary, the position of my State and the vote I shall give in reference to it.

The preamble contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives was so framed as in my opinion to question the very foundation upon which the State of West Virginia rests. It assumed—and there were no qualifying words in it as there are in the preamble offered by the Senator from Ohio—that the Legislature which gave its consent to the erection of that State was a "pretended" Legislature only. I did, three years ago, in the Senate, attempt to set that matter on its proper footing, and I showed in full the motives that governed us and the causes for the action we took; and I cited most illustrious examples to justify the course we felt ourselves compelled to take for our redress, and I showed that it was the only way in which our State could be retained in the Union.

But the language of the preamble has been modified in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and it reads, "whereas no legal State governments" "now exist" in the State of Virginia among other States. As to the present status of the State of Virginia, I have only to say that some change may have taken place since our State was admitted into the Union and since her consent to our formation was given. It must, however, have taken place very lately, because the government of Virginia has always been recognized at any rate by the executive department of the Government of the United States, and it has been recognized, I think, by acts of Congress subsequent to the erection of the State of West Virginia.

But, sir, it is not important to go into that now. I rise not for the purpose of attempting to discuss or settle the question whether the present State government of Virginia is legal or not; that is aside from the purpose I have in view; but it is simply to say that since the modification of the preamble by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, if that amendment be adopted by the Senate, I do not feel that the State of West Virginia is at all called in question. The government of Virginia may have changed its character since the consent to the formation of West Virginia was given. I am not called upon to examine into that point; but as the phraseology of the preamble of the amendment relates to the government which now exists in that State, it leaves the State of West Virginia in my opinion free from any such imputation as was conveyed by the original preamble. I do, so far as I may, in the name of my State and in my own as one of its representatives, protest against any inference from the passage of this bill, if it shall pass through Congress, that would be against the perfect legality and constitutionality of the mode in which the State of West Virginia was erected.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to understand the point the Senator makes: it is a very interesting one. Do I understand him to say that he is willing to vote that the government of old Virginia is now wholly illegal, while at the same time he holds that it was legal in some former year when the assent was given to the formation of West Virginia?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I have said that I was not called upon at this time, at all events, to say anything about the present State of Virginia. My object is to vindicate the position of my own State. If the old preamble had been continued here, I should have felt constrained, in spite of any reasons to the contrary, to vote against the bill; I could not have done otherwise. But I say, as this preamble refers to the condition of the government of Virginia at this time, the word "now" being used, making it somewhat emphatic, it cannot be supposed to refer to the condition of that government in 1862, when the consent was given under which the State of West Virginia was erected. I know that up to the time the government of Virginia was removed from Wheeling to Alexandria it was acknowledged by every department of this Government. I know that the Senate admitted into this body, with a full understanding of the whole case, the Senators who had been elected by the Legislature of Virginia when it sat at Wheeling; and I know, moreover, as all here know, that but for the unfortunate death of Mr. Bowden, who resided in the Williamsburg district in Virginia, he would have been sitting among us at this time as a Senator from Virginia, with two years of his term unexpired.

I know, therefore, from the records of Congress, from the records of the executive department, and from a subsequent acknowledgment by the Supreme Court itself, that at the time the consent was given, which is the only important matter in the view I am now taking, the government of the State of Virginia was a legal government and so acknowledged to be. What I may do in reference to this preamble, and what I may do with reference to the bill itself if amended as proposed by the Senator from Ohio, I am not now called upon to say; nor do I wish to take up the time of the Senate at this hour with any remarks as to my views upon it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If there is any Senator upon this floor who knows of any change in the government of Virginia since the act passed by its Legislature which gave validity and constitutionality to its assent for the formation of West Virginia, which now makes it an illegal government, certainly the Senator from West Virginia is more acquainted with these facts than any other gentleman here. When West Virginia was admitted into the Union as a sovereign, independent State, that admission was advocated by my honorable friend upon the ground that the Legislature of Virginia, and the Government of Virginia, then existing, was a legal, constitutional Legislature, and a legal, constitutional State. If any change has since occurred which has rendered the Legislature of that State or the government of that State illegal, it is, I think, due to this body from that honorable Senator above all men on this floor to make that fact known to this body. Living within the border of old Virginia, "the mother of States and statesmen"—though now in ruins, still glorious, noble Virginia—he should feel sufficient pride in her noble character, now unrepresented on this floor, to state to us any fact or circumstance with which he must be presumed to be acquainted to show how she has forfeited that relation; and how it is that since she gave her assent to the formation of the new State which he so honorably and so ably represents on this floor she has forfeited her State character. What has she done since to forfeit her character as a State in the Union or to render her Legislature an illegal body? There is no Senator on this floor who is to be presumed prima facie to know of any such change so well as my honorable and distinguished friend from West Virginia. Have not her elections gone on under the same laws, under the same Constitution without change or modification?

It will not do for my honorable friend to claim that at the time the new State of West Virginia was admitted into the Union old Virginia was a State, that she had a constitutional Legislature and a constitutional government, and then to decline to enter into the discussion whether she has any such constitutional government or constitutional Legislature now. Sir, when we shall have departed from these Halls, when other men shall fill our places, when we shall be known no more among men, when the places that now know us shall know us no more, the rising generation and future generations will read our debates, and they will ask and anxiously inquire what change has transpired in the government of old Virginia since the admission of West Virginia which has rendered her constitution, her government, and her Legislature illegal now, when they were legal then. What has occurred since the passage of that important act admitting my friend to a seat on this floor to cause old, noble, glorious Virginia to forfeit her status in the Federal Union as a State? I call upon my honorable friend, therefore, if there be any facts or circumstances within his knowledge of that character, to disclose them to the Senate and not to tell us that he is not bound to enter into the consideration of that question now.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Mr. President, I was so long a resident of the State of Virginia under the old organization of that State that I should regret that it should fall to me to say anything that would seem to reflect upon it. I rose on this occasion simply for the purpose of stating my position in reference to this preamble, and saying that I was satisfied with the change that had been made, because it did not refer to the time at which West Virginia was separated from the old State. I will say, however, as the Senator from Delaware puts his questions so closely, that actions have been taken by the State of Virginia and by the Legislature of Virginia since West Virginia separated from her that did not at the time meet my approval. How far they constitute illegal acts; how far they go to invalidate the legality of the government of that State, others must judge. After that government removed to Alexandria, it called a convention for amending its constitution. I had objections to that course at the time. I strongly urged members of the convention and of the Legislature not to act in that way. They were representing but a small number of counties, while the whole State ought properly to have been consulted. I thought they could have got along without amending the constitution, and that they had better defer it under the circumstances, the then expectation being that there would be a speedy restoration to Richmond. But they amended their constitution at that time, and they inserted in it a provision that—"No one shall be allowed to vote who, when he offers to vote, shall not thereupon take or shall not before have taken the following oath."

And the oath prescribed, after binding the affiant to uphold and advocate the government of Virginia as restored by the convention which met at Wheeling on the 11th of June, 1861, adds:

"That I have not since the 1st day of January, 1864, voluntarily given aid or assistance in any way to those in rebellion against the Government of the United States for the purpose of promoting the same."

It is well known that in the Legislature of Virginia at this time are not only those who cannot take that oath, but that they were elected by voters who could not take it; and I am sure—my colleague will be able to correct me if I am wrong—that oath was not set aside by any convention of the people of Virginia. How precisely it was managed I do not distinctly recollect; but I think it was by some calling of the Legislature together; I do not know whether it was by a legislative act or in what form the oath was attempted to be got rid of. I do not think that was a perfectly legal act. How far it may tend to invalidate the legality of the State government I will not say.

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me to ask the honorable Senator the date of that amended constitution?

Mr. CONNESS. Is this in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate on the main question is in order.

Mr. CONNESS. Is this debate on the main question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator makes a point of order the Chair will decide it.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The ordinance providing for establishing the restored government passed May 4, 1864. I have been called upon to state what I believed in reference to this matter. I now wish to add that from private information communicated to me from an authentic source, I know that the law is not administered in that State as it ought to be. I know this particularly in reference to the freedmen. I know that they are taken, tried for petty and trivial offenses, and the utmost penalty of the law is inflicted upon them. I am happy to say in regard to my former fellow-citizens that I am told this is not the fault of the judges nor the fault of the lawyers at the bar, who frequently try to mitigate these penalties; but it is the fault of the juries, uninstructed men probably. The administration of the criminal law in Virginia is peculiar. In the first place, the juries are judges of both law and fact; and in the second place, in every case the jury fix the term of imprisonment, so that the judge has no control whatever over it. I can give one instance. A negro whose employer kept a tavern broke into the bar in order to get some liquor, and he was taken up and tried for burglary and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary; and Governor Peirpoint has had to exercise the pardoning power and the mitigating power constantly and repeatedly.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I did not intend to provoke a discussion of this subject. I simply asked a question for my own information. I think the fact last stated by the Senator is a pretty strong reason for assigning some merit to the government of Virginia, for the Governor mitigates penalties.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The Governor, I think, holds his office by a perfectly valid election; but his term of four years is about expiring.

Mr. CONNESS. I trust I shall be pardoned for suggesting that we lay over these discussions about Virginia statutes and Virginia authorities until we get through with the business before us. It is rather trying to us to engage in it on the Sabbath. I hope we shall come to the main question.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the honorable Senator from West Virginia, in his statement with relation to the administration of the law in Virginia, to assert that the law was executed with the extremest rigor. Did I understand him to state that any jury, in trying the case of any negro, found a verdict in conflict with and in opposition to the law?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I did not say that; but I say great injustice is done if juries invariably put a heavy punishment upon a slight offense by a certain class of the population.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think there is anything in the statement of fact by the honorable Senator from West Virginia to authorize the passage of such a law as the Senate is now considering.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I have not said that.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator concedes that the administration of justice there by the juries in rendering their verdicts is in conformity to the letter of the law; but his position is that it is an excessive punishment. If that be so, the law itself ought to be mitigated: certainly the juries are not censurable; and it is no reason for declaring that a government is insufficient for the purposes of government and must be set aside and another one raised upon its ruins and substituted for it by Congress, because juries find verdicts in conformity to the law!

But there is another idea suggested to me by the remarks of the honorable Senator from West Virginia. The objection by the majority of the Senate to the continuance of Virginia in the Union after the act of rebellion is that by the act of rebelling Virginia ceased to be a State. That is the ground upon which all legislation of this class has been placed by those who advocate it. If that ground be true, what becomes of the State of West Virginia? Virginia had rebelled before the consent of the government of Virginia or the pretended or seeming government of Virginia was given to the erection of the State of West Virginia. The rebellion of the State of Virginia by the authorities of its government was a consummate act before this consent was given by the State of Virginia to the erection of West Virginia as a State. If, then, the ground assumed by the majority in the Senate be valid, and it authorizes the Senate to treat the State of Virginia as dissolved and as not being in existence at all at a time previous to the giving of consent to the erection of West Virginia, how can the honorable Senator support a measure that sweeps that State from existence at the very time it was attempting to give its consent to the erection of West Virginia?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. It gave its assent two years before the making of the constitution to which I referred.

Mr. DAVIS. That I admit; but the consent that was given was after the fact of rebellion; that is the point I make, and that is the material point. The honorable Senator does not controvert that the consent of Virginia to the erection of the new State of West Virginia was given after the rebellion of the State of Virginia occurred and after the promulgation of the act of secession by the State of Virginia.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I wish to remind the Senator from Kentucky of what I said when I first rose. I stated that three years ago I had gone over the whole question of the admission of the State of West Virginia, and I did not think it necessary to go over it again in the Senate. I stated that I believed all that was done then to have been constitutional and legal; that it had had the approbation of I thought every department of the Government, and that it had the sanction of most illustrious precedents. I have that speech here; the gentleman can read it if he chooses. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate in going over ground I have heretofore presented.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator has not yet reached the point of objection which I make. It is simply this: if the theory or the assumed principle upon which the measure now before the Senate has been framed be true, which is that Virginia by her ordinance of secession ceased to be a State of the Union, that secession having occurred before the consent which Virginia is said to have given to the erection of the State of West Virginia, the honorable Senator cannot sustain the measure now before the Senate and at the same time insist upon the validity of the consent which Virginia after the act of secession gave to the erection of the new State of West Virginia.

Mr. WILLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether I correctly understood him that Virginia by the act of secession thereby ceased to be a State in the Union?

Mr. DAVIS. I have made no such admission; but I have stated that that was the principle upon which the bill before the Senate was based by its friends. I said the act of secession amounted to nothing; it was simply void then and now for every purpose; but the friends of this measure claim the act of secession to be a sufficient ground for the introduction of the bill which the Senate now has under consideration. My position is that if the act of secession was sufficient for the purpose of dissolving the State, the honorable Senator from West Virginia cannot make that concession and at the same time say that the State of Virginia existed after the act of secession for the purpose of giving her consent to the erection of West Virginia as a State.

Mr. President, I was struck with the pertinent and most sensible criticism of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NORRIS] upon this preamble. I agree with him that the preamble is false in fact and false in inference. I am not going to repeat the remarks which he made to prove that position, but I will make a statement of one or two facts auxiliary to his position.

The honorable Senators from Massachusetts have told us again and again, and have read letters here by the score declaring that life and property were not safe in the southern States, that especially the lives of Union men in those States were not safe. They have studiously and perseveringly withheld the names of the writers of those letters from the knowledge of the Senate. Instead of frankly laying them before the Senate, they have studiously withheld them. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts, now in his place, [Mr. WILSON,] has done so in a number of instances, and a day or two since he gave a statement or table of cases in which, as he said, justice had not been administered according to law in the southern States. The number was very large. He and his colleague have time and again read to the Senate, without reading the names of the writers, letters giving accounts of violations of law and of right in the southern States. I regarded and still regard these letters as fictions, as the merest fabrications and falsifications, and I say so for this reason: the writers of these letters have amounted, not only to scores, but to hundreds, and they were written from communities in regard to which it was said that a knowledge of these letters and of the names of the writers could not be made known without peril to their persons and lives. Now it is morally certain that in many cases the writers of these letters were known in the communities in which they lived. Nobody can doubt that general fact. Amidst the writers of so many letters, hundreds of them, from communities hostile to the writers themselves and to the statements they were giving in those letters, it would be impossible that that number of letters should have been written and many of the writers not have become known to the hostile people among whom they lived. Now, has either of the Senators from Massachusetts given us an example of any case where any writer of any such letter has lost his life, where any writer of such letters has been assassinated or murdered, or where any personal violence has been perpetrated upon any one of them? The absence of all allegations that any of these consequences came to the writers of these letters is to my mind most satisfactory and conclusive evidence that the state of feeling, of society, of vengeance, and of violence and bloodshed that these letters represented to exist in the States from whence they were written did not in fact exist.

But, Mr. President, I have some other evidence bearing upon that point. There was a General Clinton Fisk that commanded at the post at Lexington, Kentucky, some year or two ago. He had previously been a Methodist preacher. He was one of the preacher-warriors, so many of whom entered into this war, not to assuage its fury or cruelties, but to aggravate and inflame them. This General Fisk went from Lexington to the city of Cincinnati, and there made a public speech, in which he described the condition of things in Lexington, and in that speech, as reported in the Cincinnati Commercial, a paper friendly to the speaker and to his policy and principles, was this passage:

"Only the day before yesterday, in Lexington, thirteen discharged colored soldiers stood in the street, in full sight of Henry Clay's monument, with their bodies lacerated, their backs bleeding from the cruel lath, their heads out to the scalp, and one or two of them with their eye put out; and what for do you suppose? Simply for going to their former masters and asking for their wives and children. I appealed to the civil authorities in their behalf, but was told that there was no law in Kentucky to help them."

Sir, was there ever a more atrocious statement embodied in as few words? If it were true, it was disgraceful not only to the community of Lexington, but to the State and to the age; it revealed a state of violence and of crime as revolting as any I ever have read. But it turned out—I have the evidence before me—that there was not a word of truth in this passage from the speech of General Fisk. Madison Johnson, the sheriff of Lexington, himself a Radical, and other men of character and truth, went to work and inquired diligently for the fact whether such enormous crimes as these against the law and against humanity had been perpetrated in Lexington, and they could not find a vestige of truth in the charge; they could not find a solitary fact upon which to base it. The Legislature of Kentucky was then in session. This speech from which I have read reached the members of that Legislature. They immediately raised a committee of investigation to inquire into the truth of the charge. That committee immediately summoned General Fisk to appear before it. It was allowed to sit during the sessions of the Legislature; it sent him citations and information time and again when it would hold its sittings and invited him to appear before it and to make good his statements; but General Fisk could never be got to appear before the committee. He failed to appear when challenged to come and to prove the foul libel which he had uttered in the city of Cincinnati upon Lexington, upon the State of Kentucky, and upon the judiciary of the State, for he said that he had appealed to the proper authorities for the redress of such enormities and that they had refused, saying there was no law in Kentucky to punish them. The latter proposition is utterly false; the whole statement is false in all its points. There have been laws in Kentucky from the beginning of the State to punish such wrongs and outrages upon negroes, and no magistrates and no people could be more prompt to give full redress to negroes who had been injured and outraged in the mode in which that parson-general in his slanderous charges against Kentucky denounced the people and the State for. Every word of it was untrue.

If a Methodist preacher and a general in the service in command of such a place as a military post as Lexington could have the audacity to go to the city of Cincinnati and make a speech in which he uttered such charges against that people and that State and against the magistracy and the laws of that State, and on being challenged for their truth would not come forward to make good his charges, and when they turn out to be, and are proved to be, entirely false and atrocious, as they are, how can these anonymous letters from the South making charges of such violations of law, such violence, such outrages and crimes as figure in the correspondence of the two Senators from Massachusetts be believed? They are not true. I know men living in the South, I have seen hundreds of them since these charges were first made. We have heard the disclosures in this debate in relation to the order and observance of law in these States as a general rule. That there are acts of violence and crime in the southern States no man can deny; such things occur in all the States. A looseness, a violation of law, a proneness to commit crime and to indulge in deeds of violence and blood, are the natural fruits of war, and especially of civil war. They are the natural consequences that have resulted from this war; but sporadic cases of murder, of cruelty, of flagrant aggression on the rights of others exist all over the United States. They do not exist in greater numbers at the South than at the North. Indeed, I do not believe, judging by the statements in the newspapers, that they are anything like as numerous. I believe that in the State of New York there are more outrages and crimes of that character than in any half dozen southern States.

Mr. President, I simply rose to enter my protest against any authority, any credence being given to these anonymous letters; and I have adduced some evidence of that kind here for the purpose of furnishing a test and a rule by which the value of such statements may be ascertained.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NORRIS] to the first section of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as a substitute for the original bill after the enacting clause.

Mr. WILSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not in favor of the original bill, nor of the substitute as an independent measure; but deeming the substitute less objectionable than the bill I shall vote for it as an amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, and Saulsbury—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Sprague, and Sumner—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the preamble.

Mr. NORTON. I renew my motion to strike out the preamble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment now pending in reference to the preamble. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio; which is to strike out the preamble of the bill and in lieu of it to insert the following:

Whereas no legal State governments or adequate protection for life or property now exists in the rebel States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and Arkansas; and whereas it is necessary that peace and good order should be enforced in said States until loyal and republican State governments can be legally established: Therefore.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is that open for discussion? ["Certainly."] Then I have but a word to say, and that is that however much I am opposed to this bill in its sections and to the recitals contained in the preamble, and however fully I may be convinced that the enactment of this bill into a law will be disastrous to my country, there is one little consolation left to me, and that is that I feel a full assurance that "life's fitful fever" will soon be over with the political party which has done so much injury to this country for the past six years. The passage of this act I regard as the death-knell to the worst enemy of my country, and that is the Republican party.

The amendment to the preamble was agreed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I now move to amend the bill, as amended, by adding to the fifth section the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this act as to the elective franchise shall not apply to citizens made such by virtue of the act of April 9, 1865, entitled "An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights and furnish the means of their vindication," until such persons so made citizens shall have been five years such citizens.

Now, Mr. President, I present the inquiry exactly, not to yourself, sir, but to all Senators and to the country, whether we are to introduce by one act of law a body of men known to be altogether ignorant and altogether different from our own race into our society and to be a part of our institutions, with privileges over and above those of our own race and kindred, educated, intelligent, and who understand our institutions. I desire to know whether a Feejee Islander who may be in my State, or a Malayan who may now inhabit there, shall take precedence of a man from Europe; whether it is the determined policy of this majority to force upon the intelligence and virtue of the country those who are unfit for citizenship, who are unequal for this high office, and to attempt to give them equality with me or with any other man educated under our institutions, and who has learned what liberty is and tried to learn the system of our Government.

My amendment simply proposes that these new recruits of the Republican party shall have five years of discipline. Frederick of Prussia would not let a fellow go into the ranks of his cavalry till he had served five years and jumped ditches and hedges. Now, you propose to improvise citizenship of persons whom every man in this Senate knows to be as ignorant as a horse in the stable about all things that belong to government, and you propose to give them no time for education or information. They have been made free. I am glad that they have been made free. Freedom is one thing, government another. I am free; but I am free only subject to the law as the law is established. I am not altogether free, nor is any man; for I have to bow my knee to the law and subject myself to it, and pay penalties for its violation if I violate it. That a body of men, known to me, known to every man here, known more particularly to every western man; to be altogether unfit for the office of electing a magistrate in a town or a village, altogether unfit even for the ceremonies of social life, unfit for anything beyond mere obedience to law and to the law of some present particular superior should be obtruded immediately into the office of government, is strange. When we receive from Germany, from England, from Ireland, from Scotland, from the Frankland, and from all the lands of Europe men of our own blood, who will intermingle with us and make a great race, no matter how highly they may be cultivated, no matter how well instructed, no matter how learned they may be, we require them to go through the discipline of a certain period of years that they may be citizens of the United States and entitled to the right of suffrage.

Now, Mr. President, there are a great many things about this question, as it has been presented, that are so singular that they seem to me absurd, and I would rather send Sancho Panza after the controversy than engage in it myself. Nevertheless, as Sancho is not here, and died I believe in Salamanca, I will have to do something on his account. [Laughter.] Sir, I say these words not as a jest of the fellow who rode the ass after Don Quixote del Manche and told all the good things Don Quixote was supposed to think, but I say it in a more serious vein. I say that this thing of degrading the right of suffrage is one of the most serious things, and it is a pressing evil on the country dangerous to the public health, and it will culminate in time in great confusion. Already the right of suffrage in this Republic is beneath the standard of intelligence; already the right of suffrage is beneath the standard of true virtue. Virtue is said to be the true foundation, the true quality of a republic; fear the quality of a despotism; and honor the particular quality of a monarchy. A republic cannot be maintained without virtue. This virtue means first virtue in the entire people, and then virtue in office. Honor may be represented by the idea of chivalrous character, a man who submits to no wrong—

"But rights his wrong where'er 'tis given Though it be in the courts of Heaven."

as Rhoderick Dhu said he would. Despotism, as I said, is characterized by the quality of fear. Sir, I fear not, I would do nothing from a sense of fear.

A good many of these ideas are found in those who have taught us wisdom and who taught our fathers wisdom. These ideas belong to the business of the present age. They have not so much to do with the present amendment I propose as they will have to do with the discussion I propose to make after the amendment is disposed of. I undertake to say now that the Hungarian, the Russian, the Frenchman, the Irishman, the Englishman, the Scotchman, the man from any land of Europe who comes to our country, is entitled to equal rights with the negro, and that is all this amendment involves, and I ask that it may be adopted. I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Hendricks, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, and Saulsbury—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—30.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, Nye, Riddle, Sprague, and Sumner—15.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. NORTON. Now I move to strike out the preamble of the bill as it stands, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 9, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, and Saulsbury—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, Nye, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Yates—16.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to renew the amendment I moved in committee to the fourth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole has been concurred in by the Senate. It is not in order now to amend an amendment which has been concurred in.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move an addition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his amendment; if it is an addition to the amendment already adopted it is in order, not otherwise.

Mr. BUCKALEW. My amendment is to insert after "district," in line seven of section four the words "and when it affects life, the approval also of the President of the United States."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it in order now to renew that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not strictly in order to move the amendment this time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Why not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because it is an amendment to an amendment which has been adopted in Committee of the Whole and concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the amendment is ruled out of order, I shall content myself with reading what I proposed to do upon the reception of the amendment as a proper proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not strictly in order; but the Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor and he can make any remarks.

Mr. BUCKALEW. By the fifth section of the act of July 17, 1862—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the amendment will be in order if the vote concurring in the amendment made as in the Committee of the Whole be reconsidered. ["Oh, no!"]

Mr. BUCKALEW. I presume there is no general determination among members to reconsider anything. [Laughter.] By the fifth section of the act of July 17, 1862, it was provided that—

"No sentence of death or imprisonment in the penitentiary shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by the President."

Then by the twenty-first section of the act of March 3, 1863, it was enacted—

"That so much of the fifth section of the act approved 17th July, 1862, entitled 'An act to amend an act calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union,' &c., as requires the approval of the President to carry into execution the sentence of a court-martial, be and the same is hereby repealed, as far as relates to carrying into execution the sentence of any court-martial against any person convicted as a spy or deserter, or of mutiny or murder; and hereafter sentences in punishment of these offenses may be carried into execution upon the approval of the commanding general in the field."

Then by the act of July 2, 1866, section one, it was provided:

"That the provisions of the twenty-first section of an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,' approved 3d March, 1863, shall apply as well to the sentences of military commissions as to those of courts-martial, and hereafter the commanding general in the field, or the commander of the department, as the case may be, shall have power to carry into execution all sentences against guerilla marauders for robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault with intent to commit rape, and for violation of the laws and customs of war, as well as sentences against spies, mutineers, deserters, and murderers."

So that these special exceptions cover all the classes of cases mentioned in the last enactment read—murder was included in the former one—and apply to cases before courts-martial, and military commissions also, and expressly confer powers upon the commander of a department to execute these sentences without any appeal whatever to the President of the United States. Thus there is excepted from the supervising power of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States by the Constitution the very class of cases to which I alluded in my former remarks; and there is, therefore manifestly upon the face of the existing law good and sufficient reasons for inserting the words which I proposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The third section of the bill provides that a military officer may punish crimes. How? By a trial either before a civil or a military tribunal. Then the fourth section provides that—

No sentence of any military commission or tribunal hereby authorized, affecting the life or liberty of any person, shall be executed until it is approved by the officer in command of the district.

This does not change in the slightest degree the law read by the Senator; but simply further provides that, before any sentence affecting the life or liberty of a citizen shall be executed, it shall be approved by the commander of the district. The President may by a simple order direct that no military warrant involving the life of an individual shall be executed until he shall have had an opportunity to pass upon the case. He has the undoubted power to pardon a person convicted of a military offense, and this does not propose to interfere with it; it simply provides that the penalty shall not be enforced until it is approved by a military officer. That does not prevent the President from exercising his pardoning power or preventing the execution of the sentence until he shall have passed upon it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Of course this provision in the present bill does not affect the general power of pardon possessed by the President under the Constitution, but under the existing law for cases of murder, arson, rape, and a number of other offenses recited there is an exception of those cases from the supervision of the President. That was intended for time of war; but by this bill the action in those very classes of crimes is expressly brought within the approval of the commander of the department, besides those in the former law.

Mr. CONNESS. As I understand this provision, it is a mere prohibition on the exercise of such power by any officer less than the commander of the district. It is a prohibition as to that, and leaves the law just as it stands in other respects.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes, sir; and the law as it stands authorizes a final approval and the execution of a sentence by the commander of a district. I have done my duty, however, in bringing the matter to the attention of the Senate. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is an addition to the amendment already adopted. I think it is in order. It does not strike out anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a change of an amendment already adopted and therefore is not in order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will offer it as an additional section:

That no sentence of death under the provision of this act shall be carried into effect without the approval of the President.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Two or three years ago we established a Bureau of Military Justice; it was supposed that before that bureau were to go all important cases of military trials. It seems to me that this amendment is right; it ought not to be questioned.

Mr. DOOLITTLE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I shall vote for this amendment as I voted for it before. It seems to me that, even admitting everything that is claimed by the Senator from Ohio and by the Senator from Oregon, it is not a very bad thing to add this amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Davis, Doolittle, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Willey and Yates—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Howard, Howe, Lane, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, and Sumner—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order not to derange the sections of the bill, I prefer to have that amendment put as a proviso at the end of the fourth section, by general consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to that suggestion? No objection being made, the change will be made.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, I observe that gentlemen are disposed to laugh when I rise at this hour to address the Senate upon this question. Sir, I am in no humor for jesting. On a question of this kind, as solemn and grave as this, this is no time for jesting. It is so grave and solemn a question that I tremble when I look upon it and dare to advance to its exact consideration. Looking through the field of former years, and looking back through our own history, and looking at our present condition, I cannot but both think and feel that this is the gravest question which has arisen in the civilized world, and it is now presented for determination by this Senate. There were those who jested when Rome was burning; I say nothing about the use of musical instruments on that occasion. We are approaching a great crisis in the history and condition of this Republic, and those who do not see and feel it must be exceedingly ignorant of the time and the time's necessities and the time's condition. I, not ordinarily uncourageous, approach this subject trembling. It is graver than any subject that ever came within the range of my life where I had an opportunity for effort and where good or evil depended upon the result.

This is a question that involves anarchy. Whether anarchy exists now or not I will not affirm; but whether it exists or not I know that the anarchy is abroad, and whether they have the power to triumph and to achieve anarchy and again make chaos is the question of the hour. In the providence of Him who is master of us all, it may be that out of the influence of anarchy and out of the condition of chaos order may finally be made; but if anarchy triumphs now, order will not be achieved out of anarchy in the day of any one here, in my judgment. It is the office of men gifted by God with intelligence, whose duty it is to exercise their intelligence for the benefit of themselves and their kindred and mankind, to inquire what is best. That inquiry has been made from the ancient ages down to our present time.

I think all who hear me thought in their youth the fathers of this Republic had determined best how order could be produced out of anarchy, or rather how order could be best established so that anarchy could not be triumphant. Anarchs are governed by no law but their own particular will, and that is supposed to be often an evil will. Those who govern adverse to them throughout the universe are supposed to hold that the right is right and should be maintained; and that is the idea on which our Republic was based by those who constructed it. They inquired carefully into what was the right; they tried to lay the foundations deep; they tried to make them strong; they tried to build up walls; they tried to establish the edifice so that it might last forever. Five years ago there was nobody here who differed in that opinion from myself; but some strange force of demoralization has gone abroad and has entered into the council chambers of States and has entered into the council Chambers of the nation, demoralizing, depraving; and by force of untruthful reason inducing men to think that the wrong was the better reason, and to lend themselves to the forces of anarchy, the forces of evil opinions, the forces of disturbing causes against those forces that seek harmony, that seek unity, that seek truth.

We in our agitations necessarily come in conflict with each other. Man comes in conflict with man; States with States; and out of these conflicts it is expected that accord will result, and it does generally result. But there is a disposition exhibited here to-day that concord shall not be achieved, or at least that it shall be long delayed. There is no reason why we should not behold all the States of this Republic united and in accord. Nothing but sectional feeling, nothing but party interests, nothing but political ambitions interfere with the accomplishment of a result desired by all persons who love their country more than they love themselves. The idea that a large portion of the nation comprising the great North American Republic should be not of us, not with us, should be excluded from among us by arbitrary power, when they affirm all that is asked; that they should be denied a place at our table or a place in our councils, is something that we would not deny to the savage barbarians of our frontiers, and that was never denied by any State. It is not a subject much to be reasoned about. If men's hearts and men's instincts and men's prompt judgments, accompanying their instincts, do not see what is right about these things, then God giving the dispensations has got to give us a new revelation.

We, having vanquished a rebellion of our own people, and they having submitted themselves to our power, it is proposed to make them go beneath the yoke and humiliate themselves below the dignity of men. Sir, no Roman citizen would go beneath the yoke; he would suffer death first. It will be found, probably, in the experience of this country, that there will be the same hostility to going beneath the yoke. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] said last evening I think, "We will make them do it." Sir, there is no such thing as "make." You cannot conquer an indomitable will. That these men were wrong they have admitted; that they were deceived they acknowledge; that they would be at home again with us they ask as a request; but it is denied. Why denied? That power may culminate in certain quarters so as to be capable of exerting forces sufficient to control this confederacy, united or disunited. Sir, there is no such devil, no such Beelzebub, or Apollyon in all the angels of hell, as this thing of political ambition; and, in my judgment, it is the ambition of power in a section of the country that induces a majority of Congress to deny to States which I recognize and hold to be States in the Union any right except the right to be taxed and the right to suffer and be punished; denying all the superior rights of liberty that belong to free men.

Those who think that they are to-day possessed with power and that now the skies are pleasant and the showers falling just so as to make the meadows grow green and the grass grow high, may in their jocund and pleasant days think that this will last forever; but all things move in circles, and I say now that those who think they possess the power to enjoy for their particular purposes the functions of this Republic will find themselves vastly askant in a few years from this. They will go off tangentially, and they will only come back comet-like after centuries. It is a foolish notion that many entertain that politicians govern this country. They may for a day; they may while the sun shines upon them; but there is a people in this country who not merely read, but converse and think; and in and about that business they have been engaged for some time past; and it is my inclination that they will think that the powers of this Government intrusted in the two Houses of Congress have been vastly abused, and that instead of judgment governing conduct, interest sometimes pecuniary, more frequently political interest, has frequently been the master, and that the millions, the people of the Republic have not been regarded at all.

I care not, Mr. President, particularly to pursue these remarks. I would if time were convenient pursue them at some length. I rather choose to characterize the present measure now than to speak at length of my particular views with regard to it. A more atrocious measure never was submitted to any convened body in a civilized state. The measure need not be characterized in detail, although I could discuss it in detail, for it is all of the same quality, black as night, and hideous as it is black. That in our free Government, where all the gentlemen who surround me have been raised, where they received their early lessons of freedom, lessons of regard for free institutions, they could for a moment attempt to make pro-consuls here as emperors were made in Rome, to divide a large portion of our country and give them absolute jurisdiction and deprive the inhabitants of their freedom and undertake to govern them as consulates, with a power on the part of the Governor, or the general commanding, if you please, changing the term, to do as he may please with regard to all matters even as to matters of justice; because it is only by the permission of the general commanding that a judge can render a sentence or pronounce a judgment; that such things can be excites my special wonder. It so excites my wonder that I cannot think of it in the form of argumentation, for it is so great an outrage that reason furnishes no premises for discussing it. That men bred in this Republic, taught the principles and foundation rules of our institutions, should undertake to make a military despotism over ten States of this Republic, I know of no words that can reach up to the conception of my feeling of high indignation at the thought, conceived by whom it may have been originated by whom it may have been; for who will undertake to carry into execution here, who has been educated under republican institutions in our republican Government, under our laws, and who have by their intelligence or supposed intelligence at least arrived at the dignity of Senators of the Republic, military rule superseding the courts of justice?

I believe it is only proposed to create five tyrants now. Like all recent tyrants they will probably all be killed. My impression is that no tyrant can live, and these would only be tyrants. They might, if they were good tyrants, as one was; and I do not know but one or two good tyrants that ever did live, and one was chosen I believe by the oracle of Delphis, Miltiades.

Mr. HOWARD. And Cincinnatus.

Mr. McDUGALL. No, he was not a tyrant. Cincinnatus was called upon by the Roman people; and as the idea is suggested by the Senator, if such a time should come to us as did to Rome, it might be necessary for us to do the same thing. The enemy were thundering at the gates of the capital and threatened Rome itself, and not relying upon the Senate alone, who were trembling in their places, they had to call upon a great man; they had to call Cincinnatus from his plow, and he came as a dictator for the day to lead its armies into battle and achieve a victory, and then he did as did Washington: he laid down the baton of command and resigned power again to the Government. So with all the old dictators in the Roman period. If the time should come when we should be threatened at our capital, it might be necessary for us to do the same thing. That time has not yet come. It has never been. Some of my friends have been alarmed at the thundering across the other side of the Potomac, and hundreds left here over the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. They never did really thunder about here at all. It is all a mistake, and we never had any occasion for those alarms, and the instruments on the top of the Capitol. We are free from all such dangers. No enemy of ours, no Sabines from the hills about Rome or the valleys there, will come as they came to Rome, and attack us. When they do, we will talk then about Cincinnatus and his plow.

Mr. President, I shall feel, if this bill be passed, that we have passed the period of belief, of faith in our institutions. I have lived with great faith; I have great faith now; but my faith will be terribly shattered if we undertake to establish a military despotism throughout the whole southern part of our Republic. I shall feel that we have forgotten all the lessons that belong to the past. I shall feel that there are some evil, anarchic spirits now seeking and securing rule who do not aim at the security or the unity of the Republic, but seek anarchy and confusion for ultimate results, the exact ultimates of which I cannot now understand. I have endeavored to comprehend them. They have been beyond my comprehension; but I can conceive of their being nothing less than this, at least: that out of this confusion, this trampling down of others, they may arise themselves. It may be well for some men to think that these things can be done; it may make them happy for a day; they may enjoy the prospect of triumph for a day; but that will not be a long day. It must necessarily be a brief one, for the truth must triumph, and I cannot myself but feel that those who seek this trampling down, crowding down, compelling and conquering, as they say, an already conquered and vanquished people, are men whose hearts have no touch of the milk of human kindness and whom God hath not blessed.

Mr. President, I do not dare to pursue this thing into lengthy discussion, although were it not for the hour and the occasion I would discuss it at particular length. In all this there is great wrong, and for all this the vengeance that is asserted—and they say that vengeance belongs to God alone; it is His—but then there is a vengeance that will return upon the authors of this measure, though it may be long concealed within the skies; for no wrong, no cruelty, no injury to others, but leaves its scar upon the body of him who commits it; and when you go down to Hades, all of you, you have got to unclasp yourselves, and for every piece of iniquity you have committed, every piece of wrong you have committed, there is a scar upon your body; and when you pass through all your scars will be examined, and I say that those who promote this measure will be so full of scars that they will never be admitted into the company of the heroes and sages.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that the vote be taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. My colleague [Mr. FESSENDEN] is detained from the Senate by illness, and he desired me to say that if he were here he would vote for the bill with or without the amendment, but that he had paired off with Mr. JOHNSON, who would vote against the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cattell, Chandler, Connors, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Patterson, and Saulsbury—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Sumner, Nye, Riddle, Sprague, and Sumner—13.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the title of the bill by striking out the word "insurrectionary" and inserting "rebel;" so as to read: "A bill to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States."

Mr. McDUGALL. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I simply wish to say that I cannot vote on this question. I do not believe that these States are either rebel States or insurrectionary States.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 27, nays 4:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Connors, Creswell, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Patterson, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Doolittle, Hendricks, and McDougall—4.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Sumner—21.

So the title was amended.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at twenty-two minutes past six o'clock, Sunday morning, February 17,) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 22, 1867.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

On motion of Mr. ALLEY, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with by unanimous consent.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL. I offered a resolution yesterday, which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the rule, asking for the printing of two thousand extra copies of the tariff bill as amended by the Committee of Ways and Means. We are daily in receipt of many letters from our constituents who take a great deal of interest in that bill. I would inquire whether it is in order to move to suspend the rule by which that resolution was sent to the Committee on Printing, so that it may be acted upon at once?

The SPEAKER. It is not a rule of the House, but a law of Congress, which no order of the House, even by unanimous consent, can set aside.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the Senate amendments to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes. The committee recommend concurrence in some of the amendments and non-concurrence in others. I ask that they may be considered now.

No objection was made.

First amendment of the Senate:

On page 3, line five, strike out the words "for Congressional Globe," and insert in lieu thereof the words "for reports of debates and proceedings of the Senate in book form."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

On page 3, strike out all after "proceedings" in line seven, and including "Congress" in line eight, and insert "of the Senate daily."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

On page 6, strike out all after "dollars" in line four down to "twenty-five" in line six, as follows: "Amounting to $50,000, one half of which is to be paid by the Senate."

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

In lines thirteen and fourteen, on page 6, strike out "Congressional Globe and Appendix," and insert "debates and proceedings of the House."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. LE BLOND. I have noticed quite a number of these amendments relating to the Congressional Globe. I would ask what changes have been made in the bill by the Senate in which the Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence?

Mr. STEVENS. In the original bill the House made the usual appropriations for the Globe, and the Senate struck them all out. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. LE BLOND. That is all I desired to know.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Page 6, lines fourteen and fifteen, strike out "first regular session of."

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Insert:
For the purchase of reports for the Supreme Court of the United States and for the use of the State Department, $1,000.

The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirtieth amendment:

Page 46, strike out all after "dollars" in line twenty-three to the end of line twenty-five, on page 47, as follows:

Provided, That no further expenditures shall be made for the experimental system of hydrostatic printing by the Treasury Department until such experiments shall have been definitely authorized by law and a distinct appropriation made therefor.

The committee recommend concurrence.

Forty-fifth amendment:

Strike out the following:
Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the proviso contained in the third section of chapter two hundred and ten of the act of July 2, 1864, shall be construed to embrace all suits to which the United States shall be a party in the Court of Claims, either plaintiff or defendant.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-sixth amendment:

Add the following:
Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That each night watchman at the Treasury Department shall, from the 1st day of July, 1867, receive a compensation of $900 per annum; and an amount sufficient to pay said increased compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, is hereby appropriated.

The committee recommend concurrence, with an amendment striking out "night."

The amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Forty-seventh amendment:

Add the following:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to appoint in the office of Commissioner of Pensions, in addition to clerks now authorized in said office, twenty-eight clerks of class one; twenty-four of class two; eighteen of class three, and ten of class four; said clerkships to expire at the end of this year; and a sum sufficient to pay the salaries of said clerks from the date of their appointment to the 30th of June, 1867, and for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1868, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-eighth amendment:

Add the following:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of the district judge of California shall be $5,000; the salary of the district judge of the district of Massachusetts, southern and eastern districts of New York, eastern district of Pennsylvania and Maryland, northern district of Illinois, Louisiana, Oregon, and Nevada, shall be $4,500 each; and the salaries of the district judges of every other district shall be $4,000 each; and such salaries shall be in full compensation for all official services performed by such judges, and no other allowance or payment shall be made to them for traveling expenses or otherwise; and the amount necessary to pay the increased compensation herein provided for shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee recommend concurrence.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, on the part of the committee I move non-concurrence, with a view of a modification of one or two items.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

Add the following:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to direct a geological and topographical exploration of the territory between the Rocky mountains and the Sierra Nevada mountains, including the route or routes of the Pacific railroad: Provided, The same can be done out of existing appropriations.

The committee recommend concurrence.
The amendment was concurred in.

Fiftieth amendment:

Add the following:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of the Chief Clerk of the Senate shall be $4,000, that of the Sergeant-at-Arms $3,500 per annum, and that of the Assistant Doorkeeper shall be $2,500 per annum; that section eighteen of an act allowing twenty per cent. on the pay of officers and employes of the Senate shall not apply to the salaries hereby fixed; and the sum necessary to pay the increased compensation herein provided for the current and ensuing fiscal year shall be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-first amendment:

Amend the title of the bill by adding thereto "and for other purposes."

The committee recommend concurrence.
The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the various amendments of the Senate were concurred in and non-concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved a committee of conference.

A committee of conference was ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. STEVENS, NIBLACK, and CONKLING conferees on the part of the House.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. SPALDING. I rise to a privileged question. I wish to obtain, if necessary, the sense of the House on having the rules rigidly enforced in regard to the admission of others than members and officers of the House to the floor and in the lobbies. If necessary I will offer a resolution directing the Doorkeeper to rigidly enforce the rules.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman will give some reason.

Mr. SPALDING. Because we are impeded every hour by outsiders and lobby members. We must have the Hall clear in order to go on with the necessary business of the House.

The SPEAKER. Any member has a right to call for the enforcement of the rules, and they will therefore be enforced.

COLLECTION OF TAXES IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. ALLISON, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate joint resolution No. 90, to suspend the temporary collection of direct taxes in West Virginia, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the sixth amendment of the House to said joint resolution and agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
ROBERT C. SCHENCK,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. G. VAN WINKLE,
T. O. HOWE,

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBELL, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Agriculture, which will occupy very little time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I demand the regular order of business. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose of setting aside the morning hour entirely, so that we may now go on with the tax bill.

Mr. HUBBELL, of Ohio. I object to that.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] under a suspension of the rules, it was ordered that the morning hour should not be interrupted by any other business. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] now moves to suspend the rules, for the purpose of rescinding the action taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. MOORHEAD, and two thirds not voting in favor thereof the rules were not suspended.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I now demand the regular order of business.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 912, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, with the recommendation that some of the amendments of the Senate be concurred in and some be not concurred in.

The first amendment of the Senate was to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line forty-one, page 3, down to the end of the fifty-third line, as follows:

Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated by the provisions of this act shall be expended in violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862. And provided further, That no part of the moneys appropriated by this or any other act shall be applied to the pay or subsistence of any cadet from any State declared to be in rebellion against the Government of the United States, appointed after the 1st day of January, 1866, until such State shall have been returned to its original relations to the Union under and by virtue of an act or joint resolution of Congress for that case made and provided.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Add the following as an additional section:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the chaplain of the West Point Military Academy shall hereafter be relieved from academic duties, in order that he may devote himself exclusively to the moral and religious training of the cadets. He shall be required to hold daily in the chapel morning prayers, and to form a class for Biblical instruction on the Sabbath day; and all parades and other military duty shall be dispensed with at the Academy on that day, as far as consistent with proper military discipline.

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

On page 3, line sixty, strike out the words "stove in," and insert in lieu thereof the words "stove and."
The committee on recommend concurrence.
The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth and last amendment:

Amend the title of the bill by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

The committee recommend concurrence.
The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the votes by which the several amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved that a committee of conference be appointed on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, on the amendments of the Senate to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. SPALDING, Mr. KASSON, and Mr. ELDRIDGE, the conferees on the part of the House.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 904, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes.

First amendment of the Senate:

On page 1, line nine, after the word "Peru" insert "Portugal."

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

On page 2, line nine, strike out "sixty-five" and insert "thirty."

The committee recommend non-concurrence.
The amendment was non-concurred in.

The remaining amendments of the Senate were, on the recommendation of the committee, concurred in.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House non-concurred in the Senate amendment in reference to the Minister of Portugal. I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendment in that case.

Mr. STEVENS. There will have to be a committee of conference, and probably some arrangement will be made in reference to that mission.

Mr. LE BLOND. I am aware of that; but I am also aware of the difficulty of separating one amendment from the rest in a committee of conference; hence I move to reconsider the concurrence at this time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division, there were — yeas 18, noes 80; not one fifth voting in the affirmative.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. LE BLOND called for tellers upon ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and twenty-five voted in the affirmative.

So (one fifth of a quorum voting in the affirmative) tellers were ordered; and Mr. FARNSWORTH and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were yeas twenty-five, noes not counted.

So (the affirmative being more than one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 30, not voting 74, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, De-frees, Deming, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hawkins, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kootz, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Bart Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Campbell, Chanler, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Hise, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Kerr, Le Blond, McCulloch, Niblack, Neill, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Taber, Nelson Taylor, and Trimble—30.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Culver, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dismont, Eekley, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburt, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jones, Ketcham, Laffin, Latham, William Lawrence, Letwith, Loan, Marshall, Marston, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Nicholson, Patterson, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—74.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. FERRY said: I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. DRIGGS, is still confined to his bed by illness; and therefore is unable to be present in the House at this time.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the various votes of the House upon the amendments of the Senate; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that a committee of conference be requested upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following as the conferees on the part of the House: Mr. STEVENS, Mr. FARNSWORTH, and Mr. LE BLOND.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 910) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Dalles City, on the Columbia river, to Fort Boise, on the Snake river;

An act (H. R. No. 965) declaring Clinton bridge, across the Mississippi river, at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, a post route; and

An act (H. R. No. 1130) to amend section twelve, chapter two hundred and ninety-nine of the laws of the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

PUBLICATION OF LAWS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. COOPER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, under the law:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to inquire into the expediency of having ten thousand copies, in pamphlet form, of the laws of the United States, enacted during the Thirty-Sixth, Thirty-Seventh, Thirty-Eighth, and Thirty-Ninth Congresses, published for distribution under the direction of the Clerk of the House, in the States lately in rebellion, and to report by bill or otherwise.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. HUMPHREY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill in relation to district and circuit courts for the northern and southern districts of New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS.

Mr. SLOAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This being private bill day, the first business in order during the morning hour is the consideration of reports from committees of a private nature. At the conclusion of the morning hour on Saturday last the bill under consideration was the bill of the Senate No. 220, for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels-of-war and steam machinery, upon which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SLOAN] is entitled to the floor for forty minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to explain briefly the principle which governed the Committee of Claims in making their report in these cases, and then if there is no desire for further discussion I will call the previous question.

The case, as presented to the Committee of Claims by the Senate bill referred to the committee, is an application for relief on the part of over forty contractors who were engaged in building vessels-of-war and steam machinery for the Government. These claims are based upon two grounds. The first is that the Government, through the action of the Navy Department, did not comply with its contract with these contractors; that these vessels and machinery were required to be constructed according to certain plans and specifications prescribed in the contracts; that the Government failed to furnish the plans and specifications which were necessary that the contractors might prosecute the work; that after the work of construction was entered upon the Government, in consequence of its plans being imperfect, made extensive alterations which much delayed the execution of the contracts until, in consequence of the continuance of the war, the demand for men and material, prices had greatly increased; and that thus the contractors, by the action of the Government in not complying with the contracts, were subjected to large losses.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to ask the gentleman whether that extra work was not paid for?

Mr. SLOAN. I will refer to that point directly.

Mr. SPALDING. Certainly it was paid for by the Navy Department. It so appeared in the evidence.

Mr. SLOAN. As I understand, the Navy Department undertook to adjust and settle with these contractors all the loss and increased expense which they suffered on account of the delays caused by the action of the Department and the changes and alterations which were made in the vessels.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit a single inquiry? The report of the committee states that a certain resolution accompanies the report. I have been unable to find it.

Mr. SLOAN. The resolution is printed and ought to be upon the desks of members. I presume the gentleman can obtain a copy.

Mr. HILL. It has not been furnished.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the propositions now pending, they are, first, the Senate bill; then the substitute reported from the Committee of Claims by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SLOAN;] and then the proposition reported as an amendment to the amendment by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE,] a minority of the committee. Those, as the Chair understands, are the several propositions pending.

Mr. SLOAN. I do not understand that the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky is pending. I believe he simply gave notice that it would be offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, as the Chair understood, had leave to make a minority report and to offer a substitute for the amended bill reported by the committee.

Mr. SLOAN. As I understood, he simply had consent to make a report, and gave notice that he would, if he had an opportunity, offer a proposition as a substitute for the bill reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the Journal examined. Meanwhile, perhaps, the gentleman from Kentucky, can state whether when he made the minority report he obtained consent to have his substitute pending.

Mr. McKEE. On the day the report of the committee was presented, just at the conclusion of the morning hour, I gave notice of my intention to offer a substitute; and on the next day, when the matter was under consideration, the gentleman from Wisconsin yielded to me that I might offer my substitute, which I did.

The SPEAKER. It is recorded on the Journal as having been offered on the second day, when the bill was under consideration.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, the second ground upon which these claimants ask relief at the hands of Congress, is that these contracts were made at a time when labor and material were at ordinary prices, that subsequently the price of labor and materials advanced so greatly that it was impossible for the contractors to build these vessels at the prices stipulated.

The first action taken upon these claims in the Senate was to pass a resolution directing the Navy Department to cause a board of naval officers to investigate and report to the Department and to Congress how much each of these vessels has cost the contractors over and above the contract price.

In that resolution there was no discrimination as to whether the loss was caused by the mismanagement of the contractor or by the action of the Government.

This same resolution required a report as to how much these vessels and machinery had cost over the contract price. That report was submitted to Congress, and it presents some remarkable features. It will be observed by the gentlemen who have examined the report that the difference in cost of those vessels over the contract price varies very much. They were built at different stations, by different contractors, at very different prices. For instance, in constructing the machinery for the double-enders the contract price was the same, in all cases $82,000, and the machinery was of the same description, of the same character and dimensions; and we find in this report the loss of contractors at the same price for work of the same description varied from $5,817 in one case to $61,752 in another. You will find that the other cases vary between these two sums. You will also find there were five iron-clad vessels contracted for, the contract price for which was $275,000 in each of the five cases, and the increased cost over the contract price ranges from $28,974 to $118,554 on vessels where the contract price was the same and where they were of the same dimensions. There were six other contracts in which the contract price is $460,000 in each case, and the cost over contract price, according to the award of the naval board, varies from $4,793 38 to $119,020 57. It will thus be observed in the contracts for the same work the cost was very widely different, some contractors being subjected to a small loss and others to a very heavy loss.

Now, when this report came into the Senate, instead of attempting to pay these claims according to the loss, in each case, instead of investigating how much of the loss had been produced by the action of the Government, and how much by the mismanagement and improvidence of the contractor, a bill was passed to pay each of these claimants twelve per cent. upon the contract price, without regard to whether the Government had been at fault, or had not been at fault; without regard to whether the execution of the contracts had been managed prudently, economically, and wisely on the part of the contractors or not. The Senate adopted the arbitrary rule to pay twelve per cent. upon the contract price. The result of that rule as applied to these cases is this: some contractors are paid in full for the loss they sustained, while other contractors are paid a small percentage, as low as fifteen per cent. in some cases; the amount ranging from fifteen to one hundred per cent. The Committee of Claims were of the opinion there was no reason, no justice in this rule to pay this amount without regard to whether the Government was in fault in regard to the contract; whether there was any legal or even equitable liability on the part of the Government to pay them.

I think it must be conceded if this loss was produced by the mismanagement of the contractor himself there is no claim even on equitable grounds that he should be reimbursed out of the Treasury of the United States. The Committee of Claims therefore in the first place discarded the partial and inequitable rule upon which the Senate bill afforded relief. The next question presented was what rule ought the Government to adopt in dealing with these contractors. There is certainly a desire I take it on the part of every member of this House and the other House that the Government of the United States should deal justly and equitably with all of these contractors; if there are any legal grounds of liability on which they can be reimbursed for any loss they have sustained in dealing with the Government, that the Government should promptly, freely, and without reluctance do it.

The Committee of Claims have decided that if it be true the Government has failed to perform its part of the contract, if it subjected the contractors to delay in prosecuting their work by not furnishing specifications and drawings, then they ought to be reimbursed for all loss occasioned by such delay; also in case of alterations and changes in the construction of these vessels or their machinery which the contracts did not provide for, the Government ought to indemnify the contractors.

The second ground upon which the claimants ask relief is that the price of labor and materials advanced greatly during the time the work was being prosecuted, and claim that the Government ought to make good the loss occasioned by such advance. By adopting that principle in every case where the Government enters into a contract with an individual, if prices go up so as to render the contract unprofitable to the contractor and subjecting him to loss, the Government would be bound, following the precedent we are asked to establish in this case, to make good the loss. The Committee of Claims probably take a more serious view of the consequences of establishing this principle than other members on this floor, for the reason that they have had their attention called to the large amount of expenditure it would involve if the principle is adopted. Already applications have been made to the committee to reimburse men who have done work upon the Treasury buildings because prices advanced during the execution of the contract; and the same is true in regard to contracts for work on the Capitol dome, in contracts with the Post Office Department, and for light-houses. And this would be the case with contracts made by all the Departments of the Government if you establish the principle of giving relief because prices advanced during the fulfillment of the contract. In order to deal impartially you would have to give relief to all, for there is no contract between the Government and individuals entered into before 1862 any part of which was to be fulfilled after that time, in which the same ground for a claim against the Government does not exist.

The committee therefore decided that that is not a safe or a proper ground upon which to afford relief to the claimants in these cases, and accordingly we have reported this resolution which provides that the Navy Department shall inquire how much loss each of these claimants was subjected to on account of any delay which the Government caused in the execution of the contract on its own part, and also on account of any change or alteration which it directed in the work during its prosecution, with a view that when Congress becomes possessed of that information it may award to these claimants what is properly and equitably due them; or if nothing is due, it may have some substantial reasons to base its refusal upon.

As the case now stands, Congress is asked to legislate upon these cases blindly, and to appropriate more than a million dollars from the Treasury with no knowledge whether a single dollar ought to be paid or not. These contractors allege that the Government is at fault, that it has dealt unjustly and harshly with them; but there has been no investigation, no report that shows to what extent the Government has violated its contract, if at all. And in addition to that, it appears from the report of this naval board that the Government has already paid over fourteen hundred thousand dollars to these same contractors to reimburse them for delays and for the alterations which the Government caused them to make in the vessels. It is thought that this amount which the Government has already paid may be sufficient to reimburse all the losses it has caused, but no one can form an intelligent opinion in relation to that until we have a report of the facts.

Now, by the resolution reported by the committee, if this $1,400,000 already paid is not sufficient to make good to the contractors all the losses which occurred from the action of the Government, the necessary information is required to be furnished upon which Congress can act and give them a just and true measure of compensation.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask if that $1,400,000 already paid was over and above the contract price?

Mr. SLOAN. It was. It is alleged that this allowance is not large enough to compensate for the action of the Government, and the House is in entire ignorance whether it is or not, or whether it was at fault at all; and there are no means of judging to what extent, if any, the Government was at fault. I apprehend, if the Senate bill shall be adopted by this House in lieu of the resolution which the Committee of Claims have reported, it will not be a final settlement of these claims; for when the claimants find themselves in the situation of having this arbitrary and partial rule applied to them by which some will be paid in full one hundred per cent. on all their losses, others fifteen per cent., others twenty-five, and others fifty, we shall find those who have been awarded but a portion of their loss coming here at some future session and saying, without inquiring whether there was any liability on the part of the Government, "You have paid A, B, and C in full one hundred per cent. for all their losses, and you have paid me but fifteen per cent.," or twenty-five or fifty per cent., as the case may be. Now, I desire to know what answer will be made to that by any member who desires to do justice between the Government and the claimant? No answer can be made; and the result will be that in addition to this $1,100,000 which the Senate bill requires to be taken out of the Treasury, another $1,100,000 must follow at some future time for the purpose of equalizing the claims and putting them upon just grounds.

Mr. GRINNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he considers that a payment in this case would be the establishment of a precedent which could not be resisted in the settlement of the claims of other contractors, which are sure to be presented for consideration?

Mr. SLOAN. I do regard it as the establishment of such a precedent. I know of no reason why, if one contractor is paid on a certain principle and another contractor also comes and brings his case within the same principle, he shall be denied the same measure of relief. If the House adopts this Senate bill, it will be an instruction to the Committee of Claims to give to those contractors who have built light-houses, who have furnished paper to the Post Office Department, who have done work on the Treasury Department, or on the Capitol dome, and who bring similar claims before the committee, the same relief.

Mr. GRINNELL. I have a great many friends who are mail contractors, and they want to come in and get pay for the losses they have incurred.

Mr. SLOAN. It will depend upon the action of the House in this case whether they shall apply or not. If we afford relief to the contractors in this case without having it established that the Government occasioned the loss, then, in my judgment, we can refuse relief to no contractor who is in the same situation and who falls within the same rule, through the whole wide range of business which is carried on by the Government in the Navy Department, the War Department, the Interior Department, the Treasury Department, and the Post Office Department. The contractors under all these Departments will stand in the same situation as these men wherever prices went up during the execution of their contracts. The establishment of this principle by the adoption of the Senate bill would be an invitation to swarms of claimants from all the Departments of the Government, and from all parts of the country, to come here and ask relief, because they lost on their contracts in consequence of the increase of prices during their execution; and what answer can gentlemen make to them if they vote for this Senate bill? Are we to say that we will arbitrarily, as it pleases us, give relief to one man and deny it to another who stands upon the same principle and who has every consideration of justice and equity to support his claim that these claimants have? I trust not. It is equivalent to establishing the principle that no man shall ever sustain a loss by taking a contract of the Government of the United States; that if from any cause prices go up so that he is involved in loss in executing his contract the Congress of the United States will make him good; no matter what enormous profits he may make from contracts with the Government when he has a good one he may retain them; but when he happens to have an unfortunate contract, the Government will insure him against loss.

I speak more strongly on this question because I have been in a situation as member of the Committee of Claims to see and to judge to what an alarming extent such a principle would involve the Government in the expenditure of money. If it is adopted it ought immediately to be followed by a law which would abolish the making of contracts on the part of the Government for any work, or in any of its Departments.

Mr. MYERS. With the permission of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I desire to say that I am in favor of the principle adopted generally in this bill, but I want to ask the gentleman why the committee omit the names of a large number of men, such as C. H. & W. M. Cramp, Neafe & Levy, and Hillman & Streaker, who are equally entitled to relief with those named? I should like the gentleman to answer that question.

I am in favor of the Senate amendment, or the equally fair substitute of my friend from Kentucky, on the committee, [Mr. McKEE.]

Mr. SLOAN. It is true, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania states, that the amendment which we have reported includes only a part of the cases which the Senate bill proposes to relieve; but the reason for our omitting the cases which are left out is this: the largest amount of the loss which is claimed to have occurred was sustained by the builders of iron-clads and their machinery. The claims of the builders of wooden vessels and the machinery for wooden vessels are generally small, and it is not urged in relation to them that they were delayed or that, to any considerable extent, important changes or alterations were made on the part of the Government; and we therefore thought that those cases could be omitted from this inquiry. We proposed to let the principle upon which relief shall be granted be settled in the case of the more important claimants, and then if there were any of the contractors for wooden vessels or for the machinery for wooden vessels who were entitled to relief on like principles, it would be very easy to give them relief in the same way.

Mr. MYERS. Only one moment, in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SLOAN.] One of the parties to whom I have referred has a claim of $22,000; I do not know that the gentleman will consider that of much importance. Now, if we adopt the principle recommended by the committee—that the Government shall pay these men for losses occasioned by the fault of the Department—the matter will be left to a commission appointed by the Department to determine whether the Department has been in fault.

Mr. SLOAN. I think all important interests will be subserved by having the reference which the committee recommend.

I now call the previous question on the adoption of the substitute reported by the committee. If the previous question is seconded there will be an hour for debate, of which I will yield some to others.

Mr. LYNCH. Is the bill now open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. There is now pending to the Senate bill an amendment and an amendment to the amendment. The amendment was reported by the majority of the Committee of Claims; the amendment to the amendment was reported by the minority of the committee. That is as far as the power of amendment can go, except by unanimous consent, now that the previous question has been called.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent to amend the substitute reported by the committee by inserting the words "Portland Company" after the words "Stover Machine Company."

Mr. SLOAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the substitute will be modified as suggested. No objection was made.

Mr. SLOAN. I now call for the previous question.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to move to amend by inserting the following: "C. H. & W. M. Cramp, Neafie & Levy, and Hillman & Streaker" after the words "Stover Machine Company."

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. And also to insert "Poole & Hunt."

Mr. SLOAN. I think such change will be made as will be satisfactory. I insist upon the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SLOAN] is now entitled to one hour to close the debate.

Mr. SLOAN. I now yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WOODBRIDGE.]

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I may want a little more than ten minutes. I would inquire of the Chair if the Senate bill is now pending?

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is pending with the substitute reported by the majority of the Committee of Claims, and the amendment to the substitute reported by the minority of the committee.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Doubtless all the members of the House, in their private and business relations, desire to do justice to all with whom they are brought in contact. Now, I believe that the passage of the measure proposed by the majority of the Committee of Claims will fail to do justice to a class of men with whom the Government have had business relations, and who have devoted their best energies and their capital for the benefit of the Government, and have met with very serious losses by reason thereof.

In 1861, when the late rebellion was inaugurated, the vessels of our Navy were scattered all over the world. We had a coast of three thousand miles to blockade. In the insurgent region there were forts and important places then in possession of the enemy, which it was indispensable for us to take. And it became necessary to raise in the shortest possible time—to build a fleet sufficient not only to blockade our coasts, but monitors and iron-clads were required which could successfully pass forts and resist the cannon with which they were mounted.

The Government had no experience in the building of iron-clads, and were not able in their own work-shops and navy-yards to meet the necessary demands. All the ship-yards of the country of any magnitude and importance were called into requisition; and the ship-builders abandoned their accustomed work and devoted their money and their time to the service of the Government.

The claimants do not ask any profits out of their contracts. They only ask that they may be placed just where they were before they began the construction of the vessels which were imperatively demanded at the time they were constructed. They do not ask to make one cent, and if we pass the Senate bill they will lose the interest on their money for several years.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SLOAN,] representing the majority of the committee, has said that if we vote for the Senate bill we must vote blindly. He admits that where losses resulted from the delays caused by the action of the Government in changing the specifications and plans, &c., it is proper that some compensation should be made; but he holds that no compensation should be made except where loss occurred by the direct interference of the Government. In other words, his position is that the Government should pay nothing except what it would be obliged to pay in an action at law, could the Government be made a party to a suit at law.

Now, sir, so far as regards the argument that in adopting the Senate bill we must act blindly, the gentleman, who I know would not misrepresent, is mistaken. What are the facts in reference to the matter? Some of these applications were before the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and were then discussed, being conscientiously opposed by some gentlemen and advocated by others, who held that the Government would only perform its duty by paying these claims. Finally a resolution passed the Senate authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to raise a commission of intelligent and scientific gentlemen, who should examine the vessels each by themselves, take testimony, and decide what had been the actual loss to the contractors. Any gentleman who will examine that report will find that so far as the iron-clads are concerned, the naval commission in almost every instance finds that the losses were incurred to the greatest extent and in some cases entirely by reason of changes made in specifications and plans by the Government, which caused great delays and large losses by reason of the advance in the prices of materials and labor during the time that the work was suspended. Sir, with this report before us, we shall not vote blindly. These scientific naval men, honorable and intelligent gentlemen, made their investigation under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy and the Senate of the United States, and reported the result of their investigation, with the testimony adduced before them, and a specification of the losses incurred on each vessel.

There is no doubt, sir, that for all loss incurred by reason of the interference of the Government in the contract, there would be a legal claim against the Government if it could be enforced; and it is urged that if we go further and pay a claim based only upon equity we make an extravagant and unwarrantable use of the people's money. But, sir, I hold that a Government which cannot be made a party in an action at law, which cannot be sued and compelled to do right by a decision of the courts, should deal equitably with its citizens. The claimants simply ask us, who are the guardians of the people's rights, as well as of the people's Treasury, to do that equity which a generous and conscientious man would do in his personal business. Ought we not to do it? Are gentlemen frightened at the idea of taking $1,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States to place these men in statu quo, to protect them from the actual loss which they have incurred in doing their duty to the utmost extent of their ability? What is proposed is that we shall say to these contractors, "We will not allow you one dollar of profit; you shall lose the labor of months; you shall lose the interest on your money; you shall lose the use of your yards; but we will pay you precisely what the vessels, which have been of such service to the country, have cost you." Is there anything wrong in this? Surely not, sir.

The contractors when the war broke out abandoned their customary business that they might do this work for the Government. None of them expected that in consequence of the war and the necessary inflation of our currency the price of labor, the price of timber, and the price of everything entering into the building of a ship would be doubled, if not quadrupled. They did not know this, and they could not be expected to know it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. I now yield twenty minutes to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I am sorry that my time has expired, as I have a few more observations to make.

Mr. SPALDING. I move the gentleman have leave to print the remaining portion of his speech.

Mr. McKEE. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont five minutes of my time.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will not trespass on the gentleman's time to the extent of five minutes, as I have already gone through the principal argument respecting the propriety of affording the relief which the bill as it passed the Senate grants. The demand is not unreasonable, and is based upon the highest equity. There is no pretense of any fault or laches on the part of the contractors. The delays were occasioned by the action of the Government, and in the mean time the contractors were obliged to pay their employes, while waiting for permission to continue their work. They were in the hands of the Government and utterly remediless. The currency was constantly depreciating. Gold was constantly advancing, and with it every species of labor and material. They lost money which they would not have lost if it had not been for the direct and positive interference of the Government with their contracts.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is always best to do right. Henry Clay uttered a noble sentiment when he said it was better to be right than to be President. Is it not just that these petitioners should be made good for the losses they have sustained? They constructed a new and powerful navy for the country, and had it not been for the efficiency of their work the result of the war through which we have just passed successfully would have been postponed to a still later day. It was the iron-clads that protected our northern ports from the ravages of the pirates of the rebel confederacy which so long preyed upon our commerce. It was the iron-clads that captured the fortresses at the mouths of southern rivers, and blockaded those rivers against the entrance of all articles contraband of war.

To these gentlemen we are indebted for the iron-clads which accomplished such great results for the country; and by voting to them this relief we do nothing but what is equitable. Although we may not come down to the absolute point of division where the loss was occasioned by the delay of the Government, and by the rise of materials, still we know that the greatest portion of the loss was caused by the direct interference of the Government. We were the first nation that ever attempted to build iron-clads. It was an experiment, and whenever any new suggestion was adopted, the contractors were obliged to wait for drawings and specifications of the proposed changes, and this was the main cause of their loss. I think there should be no objection to the Senate bill.

Mr. McKEE. As a member of the committee to whom this subject has been referred, and not exactly agreeing with the substitute for the Senate bill, I feel it to be my duty to say a few words in regard to this matter. While I agree very fully, and I believe the committee in this were unanimous, in the reasons upon which they made up their minds that the Senate bill was an unfair settlement of this question, I do not agree in the substitute reported by that committee. My reasons I will give briefly. In the first place these contractors for these vessels-of-war all stand upon the same footing, with the slight difference in a few instances that the Government in these contracts had no reservation for changes of plans and specifications. The original resolution of the Senate of March, 1865, when these contractors went before that body demanding relief, provided for a board to be appointed by the Navy Department to examine into and report the exact amount of loss accruing to each of the contractors for the building of war vessels and steam machinery made during the years 1862 and 1863. These contractors claimed to have incurred loss from various causes, loss from rise in material, loss from interference on the part of the Government, loss because in some instances the Government seized their yards, loss from the fact that the labor they needed was taken by the Government and appropriated to its own purposes. The committee agreed on this general rule, which I think is sound, that where the contractor suffered loss from the direct fault of the Government he shall be paid.

That is the rule laid down by the committee upon which they make their report. The objection to the Senate bill was that it applied a partial rule; that while it recognized the justice of the claims of the contractors to a certain amount for losses sustained, it proposed an unequal remuneration, whereby some got more than the amount of their claim, while others got but a very small part.

I concurred with the committee in their objection to the rule adopted by the Senate; but when we come back to the principle laid down in the report of the majority of the House committee, that the contractors shall be paid for losses accruing to them by the direct interference of the Government, and when the committee make a report which contains a very few of these contractors, leaving the whole of the rest out, I cannot agree with them. The resolution submitted by the committee as a substitute embraces simply a few iron-clad vessels. The original resolution of the Senate committee embraced all the contracts for iron-clads and machinery in 1862 and 1863. There are perhaps not more than ten or twelve cases embraced in the report of the Committee of Claims; the rest are summarily thrown out, and that, too, in the face of the declaration made in the report that if these men had lost by the fault of the Government they should be paid.

Now, sir, so far as the claimants for the iron-clads are concerned, I do not wish to say one word against them, because they have suffered the greatest amount of loss on their work. This country had never had an iron-clad navy before, and the work of building iron-clad vessels was experimental in great part. On account of the fact that changes were necessarily continually to be made in the construction of these vessels the Government saw fit to reserve the right to make these changes, with a stipulation that it would pay for the additional cost occasioned thereby. For that increased cost the Government claims to have settled. But while it claims to have settled for the additional work, it is not pretended on the part of the Government that it has ever paid one dollar for the additional cost added to the construction of the vessels on account of the change. By the rule adopted by the committee the Government is held to be liable for that. The builders of iron-clads were the heaviest losers. They were to get the most in the Senate resolution. The builders of the double-enders have suffered very largely and they have suffered on this account; when the contracts for the machinery of some sixteen wooden double-enders were made it was given out that the machinery was to be for the class of vessels built after the plan or model of the Paul Jones. When, however, the specifications were furnished for the machinery the contractors found that the weight of metal required was more than double. Now, should these men be turned out with nothing on that account? Not at all. Yet that is the proposition of the committee. They propose to exclude everything but iron-clads, and they do not embrace even all these.

The report of the committee is objectionable in my view on one other ground. It provides for a board to report to the next Congress which will have to examine the matter again. I ask gentlemen to consider in what better position they will be after they have a report made than they are now? Such an investigation has already been made, approved by the Navy Department, referred to the Congress of the United States, and now it is proposed to go over the same ground once more and bring these men right back to the same point where they are to-day.

What is the alleged reason for giving Congress the supervising power over the award made by the Naval Bureau? Gentlemen seem unwilling to trust the Department with this matter. Well, sir, in all matters of this kind of course humanity is liable to err, but so far as I am concerned individually I do not hesitate to say that I believe the Government would mete out justice just as well through any of its Departments as through the Congress of the United States. What interest have they in the matter? These men are appointed by the Navy Department, wholly uninterested, to examine into and report upon this matter. They are paid officers of the Government. They receive a salary, get nothing for this work, and as a matter of course, as discreet men—and it is presumed only such would be selected for that purpose—their report is presumed to be a fair one.

But take for granted that it is unfair; what does this Congress know about it? When it comes here you take up a vast mass of paper, running over many pages, showing all the specifications, all the items, all the allowances; and what member of Congress, what member of the committee, knows whether it is right or wrong? After all, you are reduced to the necessity of making up your report on the award made in pursuance of the examination by the naval board.

Therefore I object to the report of the committee. I desire this thing ended; and the substitute that I have offered from the minority of the committee provides for an examination by a competent board. It provides that an examination shall be made by this board, and that nothing shall be taken into account in that examination except the actual cost to the contractors, over and above the contract price—extra cost arising from the acts of the Government itself; and it provides that then, after that examination, payment shall be made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that there are a great many men in Congress and out of it who raise up their hands in holy horror whenever such a thing as an appropriation is mentioned; and I appreciate their feeling in regard to the public Treasury, and appreciate their feeling that it is our duty to regulate our expenditures by rules of the strictest economy. But what kind of economy is that which leads a great nation, when its life is imperiled, when its very existence is at stake, to summon its citizens to aid in its defense, and then, when it has been saved through their exertions and sacrifices, to turn to them and say, "Yes, you have done well, and I know that in my service you have suffered great loss, but I cannot think of paying you anything?" That is such economy as no liberal-minded man would adopt in dealing with his fellow, and certainly it is not the economy of a liberal and great nation.

With the gentleman from Vermont, I might well ask the House and the country, where would we be now but for the noble Navy created by these men?

But I am met by the question, "Why did not these men withdraw from their contracts when they found they were going to lose?" Sir, they had no option in the matter. They had the establishments for the construction of these naval vessels, and it needed but a nod from the head of the Department to authorize the United States authorities to pounce upon these yards and take possession of them and run them on their own account, as they did on more than one or two occasions. Therefore, I say, these men had no option.

But besides, they were liberal-minded, patriotic men, desirous of serving their country, and they went on under the assurance that they would be reimbursed by the Government, to the amount of whatever actual losses they might suffer—to the amount of their actual losses, I say, and that is all they ask now. We do not want these men to make profit out of the Government; they do not ask that themselves; but we have the sworn testimony and the figures showing the amounts that they actually lost in this way, and that is what they ask the Government to make good.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some of these naval contractors have already been relieved. We propose in this case only to follow the rule laid down by Congress in 1864 in the case of Ericsson, the builder of the Dictator and the Puritan. That contractor found that he was going to suffer severe loss under his contract, and Congress came in and by a joint resolution provided that he should be paid by the Government for whatever actual loss he incurred. We only propose to follow the just action of Congress in that case.

Talk about the Government being thus involved in the expenditure of a million of dollars.

What are one million or ten million dollars compared with the great Navy that we now have upon the seas, which enables us to defy the world, and the creation of which is so largely due to the enterprise of these men who have suffered such heavy losses?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SLOAN] is again entitled to the floor.

Mr. SLOAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. I wish to inquire if an amendment would be in order.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order; the House is now acting under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I do not propose to occupy more than a few moments upon this question. I desire to explain to the House the position in which the question is, so that they may understand the action of the committee.

Now, I do not know that any report of the committee upon this question will affect the vote of the House at all. It has been said and reiterated time and again to the committee, by the multitudes who are interested in this bill, that if they could only get the committee to bring it before the House, they knew their men there, so that whatever might be the report of the committee they knew they could carry through the House any measure that they desired. If that be the situation of the question, all I can say is that any report that may be made by the committee, and anything that may be said here pro or con., is simply time lost.

But the gentleman from Vermont, who appears here as the advocate of this measure, says that we ought to act in this matter as any generous, liberal-minded man would act in dealing with his fellow-man.

Now, that is not the principle upon which your committee have acted. A liberal-minded man may be generous and may give away any amount of property or money that he chooses; but your committee supposed that they were simply sitting in judgment to decide whether there was a legal or a fair and equitable claim upon the Government on the part of these contractors, and to ascertain upon what principle their claim could be sustained. According to the report of the Senate committee, that claim was based upon the principle that the Government, by its action in expanding the currency, caused a rise in the materials which entered into the work for which the contracts were made, and thereby greatly increased the expense to the contractors; and therefore that the Government was bound to make good to the contractors the consequent loss. But when they adopted that principle as a basis for action, they adopted a principle upon which nearly every contractor with our Government during the four years of our great struggle might with equal justice come to the Government and plead for relief.

Now, is the example to be set of giving relief to all contractors with this Government in all its callings, because of any action of the Government, the expansion of the currency, or the rise in the prices of materials? If so, then $100,000,000 will not cover the expense to the Government. Every contractor, whether with the Government or with individuals, has suffered from this rise of prices, and they do not all expect to obtain relief.

Therefore the Committee of Claims settled the principle that no such broad ground for relief could be established; because if they once opened the door and set the precedent of affording relief on account of the action of the Government in this regard there would be no end to it.

Then the next point which presented itself to the committee was this: is there anything in these cases to take them out of the action of the general principle referred to? In the examination of that question it was claimed on the part of the contractors that the Government, after it had made contracts with these various parties, had caused them to be delayed by not giving them the plans or by making alterations in them, so that they were unable to go on and complete their contracts within the specified time. In reference to that, the committee say that if it can be shown that the Government caused delays to these contractors which were not contemplated when the contracts were made, and on account of those delays any or all of these contractors have sustained losses which have not been satisfied by the Government, there may be a clear claim which may be valid against the Government.

But it is said on the part of the Navy Department that this omnibus bill, as reported by the Senate, contains some twenty-five cases in which no such claim can be set up; in which there was no allegation of delays or alterations on the part of the Government. Therefore the committee concluded that those cases did not come within the principle which they had adopted; and consequently they do not recommend the passage of the Senate bill.

The question then arose: are there any other cases in which alterations or delays have been occasioned by the action of the Government? The evidence submitted shows that there were such cases. But the claim was made on the part of the Government that it had paid on account of those alterations nearly a million and a half of dollars. But it is also claimed on the part of the contractors that that million and a half of dollars does not pay them for the losses they sustained in consequence of those delays and alterations.

Then what was left for us to do? We could not settle the question whether those parties had or had not been properly paid. We did all we could do: we referred the subject to the House, and recommended that the whole matter should be referred to the Navy Department to determine and report to Congress what extra cost had been incurred by contractors on account of these delays and alterations which the Government had not already paid for, the Department to report just what expense had thus been incurred in each case.

What more or what less could we do? One of my colleagues upon the committee has said that all these contractors stand upon the same ground. Not at all. As I have already said, in twenty-five of these cases it is not claimed that there was any fault on the part of the Government, so far as alterations or delays are concerned.

In some other cases it is claimed that such was the fact; and in some of those cases $100,000, and in other cases $50,000 has been paid. And the simple question in each individual case is this: has the amount paid been sufficient to cover the damage and loss which the Government has occasioned to those contractors by reason of the various delays and alterations made, and which were not contemplated when the contracts were made? If it does not, then the commission shall examine each individual case and report to us how much more is due on the part of the Government. Does any individual find fault with that? Is it not fair? Can we stand upon any other principle? Certainly not, unless we adopt the broad principle which, as I have said, throws your doors wide open and lets in an irresistible flood of claims. As has been well said by my colleague on the committee, [Mr. SLOAN,] there are claims being pressed to-day for work on this Capitol, for work on the Post Office building, for work done on various light-houses.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DELANO obtained the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL. With the consent of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] I wish to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

Mr. DELANO. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the report of the committee has been predicated upon the loss of any profits by these contractors. My reason for asking this question is that some of my constituents, who have made nothing on their contracts for furnishing machinery for some of these vessels, have refrained from making any claim for loss of profits; but if it is proposed to grant compensation in any such cases these men have as strong a claim as any others can have.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. In reference to that point, the opinion of the committee was that these individuals might have a just claim for whatever they have actually lost on account of the action of the Government. Let me make one further remark. It has been objected by some members of the House that the report of the committee does not cover all the cases. Of this the committee were fully aware; but we supposed that by our action in this case we should establish a precedent. If the House believes that we have acted properly, it will sustain our report; and the precedent being once established other cases can be settled in the same way. I know very well that there are other cases not embraced in this bill. There may be fifty such. The cases to which the gentleman refers may be among those. But when we shall have once established the precedent I have no doubt that the same principle will be applied to the cases not now embraced in our action.

Mr. O'NEILL. A single remark further. If I have correctly understood the gentleman, this report does embrace cases where there was a claim on account of loss of profits which might have been realized but for the interference of the Department in directing the machinery to be made in a different manner from that stipulated in the contract. If this be so, then, in behalf of these conscientious constituents of mine to whom I have referred, I ask that their names may be inserted. I see no reason why their claims should be overlooked when others no more meritorious are provided for.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The gentleman has misunderstood me. In no case do we propose to pay anything on account of profits which it may be supposed should have been realized. In these cases it is claimed that the contractors have actually made a loss. The simple question before the committee was, has the action of the Government imposed on these contractors a loss which we are bound to relieve? We adopted the principle—

Mr. DELANO. I believe I must resume the floor. I cannot yield further because I have but little time remaining.

There are three propositions before the House, and I desire that the House shall understand them so as to be able to vote intelligently upon them. The first is the bill of the Senate, which proposes a horizontal payment to all these contractors of twelve per cent. on the contract price. I wish the House to understand distinctly that in the Senate bill these contractors all stand on the same level, and if that bill be adopted they will get a uniform payment of twelve per cent. on the contract price. My colleagues on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SLOAN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN,] have, I think, shown the injustice and the viciousness of such a principle. A bill resting on that principle is nothing but an omnibus to carry through bad, worthless measures with those that have some merit.

Why, sir, here are embraced in this Senate bill fifteen contracts for wooden double-enders; twenty-two contracts for machinery for wooden double-enders, and twenty-one contracts for iron and iron-clad steam vessels of war; fifty-eight, I believe, in all. Now, sir, take wooden double-enders. They were all contracted for at $75,000 apiece. Listen. Some of the contractors claim $4,000 and some $77,000. The Senate bill will give each $9,000, and pay some of them twice as much as they claim and some of them only half as much as they claim. If Congress does not want to disgrace itself, I hope it will not adopt a principle like this. It is nothing less than what I have characterized it, an omnibus to carry white and black together; I suppose upon the rule there shall be no distinction of race or color.

The bill of the Senate was made on the report of a naval board which undertook to give to these gentlemen the cost of these fifty-eight contracts over and above the contract price. That estimate was made on the advance in the price of material growing out of the depreciation of currency and the increase in the value of gold. It proposes to remunerate all these contractors for all the increase of expenses which the change in the condition of the country had brought upon them. Why, sir, that principle will bankrupt this Government. If this House adopts that principle it is impossible to anticipate the end of the expense. There is, as has been well said, a claim for $100,000 for finishing the dome of the Capitol now before the House resting on this very principle. There is also a claim for $50,000 for building the custom-house in Baltimore, another claim for $50,000 by the contractor who furnished paper and stationery to the Post Office Department, and another for $15,000 for a light-house, and God only knows how many more that have not come before us. There is no end to it. You will have to increase tenfold your taxes. There are the contractors for Army supplies; not only for the commissary but for all the other departments of the Army. You will have to go into a general settlement with all these contractors to do equity to them. My friend from Vermont [Mr. WOODBRIDGE] has a large heart and would to God his constituents had purses long enough to pay for its benevolence.

That would be the state of things if we adopt a principle like this. The Committee of Claims have repudiated this principle. They have said the principle on which these claims ought to be settled is this: where the contractor has suffered loss by reason of alteration in his contract not provided for in the contract, then he should be paid such increased expense as this change has caused, and in that they have the payment of the rise of prices during the time prolonged by this change, but not otherwise. It is a just principle if the House will understand it. As it is impossible for the committee to investigate all these claims in detail, we propose to refer it to the Navy Department to settle the amount due to these claimants on this principle, and report that back to the next Congress for their action. Congress will then proceed with intelligence and upon a correct principle, one upon which they can stand before the world.

Mr. MYERS. Which bill does the gentleman favor?

Mr. DELANO. The resolution reported by the House committee, which provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall be authorized and directed to investigate the claims of the contractors named; but I am willing to change it to embrace all the contractors for vessels-of-war and steam machinery.

Mr. MYERS. That is what I want.

Mr. McKEE. That is my resolution.

Mr. DELANO. But the gentleman's resolution has a tail to it, and I want to cut that tail off. [Laughter.] We provide that said investigation to be made upon the following basis: he shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government, which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work, rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor; and from such additional cost, to be ascertained as aforesaid, there shall be deducted such sum as may have been paid each contractor for any reason heretofore over and above the contract price, and shall report to Congress a tabular statement of each case, which shall contain the name of the contractor, a description of the work, the contract price, the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, and the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as aforesaid, and the amount already paid the contractor over and above the contract price.

Then he is required to make a tabular statement, showing the names of the contractors, the amount of the contract price, the increased cost under these rules, and the amount already paid above the contract price, and then Congress can act upon that report.

Now, sir, the third proposition on this subject, which comes from the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE,] is that the Secretary of the Navy may make up his mind to pay the claims without referring them back to Congress. It is not safe, it is not right, it is injudicious legislation; it is best that Congress should retain the power of revision.

Mr. McKEE. I would like to correct my colleague on the committee. My proposition is not that the Secretary of the Navy shall do this, but that a board shall be appointed and that board shall do it.

Mr. DELANO. If there is any advantage in submitting it to a board, I have never found it out. The board is always so constructed as to break through, so far as the Government is concerned, and give the contractors the advantage. I would rather leave it to the Secretary of the Navy than any of the employés or agents of that Department. It is unwise legislation to commit this matter to the ultimate judgment of any board of men. Let Congress reserve the power, when this subject comes back, of examining and ascertaining whether the investigation and report of the Navy Department are in accordance with justice and right.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the three propositions that are before this House. The majority report was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SLOAN;] the minority report by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE.] The latter, as I have already said, adopts the same principle for damages that the majority report adopts, only it proposes to give to the Department or to the agents of the Department authority to close the matter up. That is a proposition that I oppose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know very little about your rules, and perhaps never shall have sense enough to understand them; but I would like to know how this proposition may be amended so that it will embrace all contractors for building vessels-of-war and steam machinery. I would like to have that amendment made if it is possible.

The SPEAKER. It can be done by reconsidering the vote by which the previous question was seconded, and then by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKEE] withdrawing his amendment to the amendment reported by the committee. That would open the substitute to amendment; but if the gentleman from Kentucky insists upon his amendment, no amendment can be made except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DELANO. I will submit to the House the proposition that all these contractors may be included by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to making the proposed amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DELANO. The amendment is to strike out the names of the contractors in the substitute of the committee, and insert in place of the words "the following" the word "all," and further, by striking out the words "iron and iron-clad;" so that the clause will read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels-of-war and steam machinery for the same.

The amendment was by unanimous consent agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. I would like to understand why the claim of Donohue, Ryan, & Secor is excepted by the committee?

Mr. DELANO. We have made no exceptions. We are of opinion that some of these claims are more meritorious than others, but we do not think that any one of them ought to be singled out and excepted. We do not know enough about it to recommend that; therefore, we have now put them all on the same level by the amendment which has been adopted by unanimous consent. They all go to the naval board, to be investigated on the principles that we have named in the substitute; and when that investigation is made and the report made to Congress, it can act intelligently upon the question.

But, sir, if you adopt the principle contained in the Senate resolution, of remunerating every contractor for losses sustained, as I said before, you will bankrupt your Government. I know enough about the claims that are presented to this Government to be warranted in saying that there is no end to them and no safety for the finances of the nation in this time of onerous taxation if that principle is adopted. There is no way with safety to the nation but to adopt the principles laid down in this majority report. They will be found to be broad, liberal, and comprehensive. They will also be found to be principles that will prevent us being governed by mere sympathy and compassion. I saw $80,000 voted here yesterday for the relief of a contractor which, in my judgment, ought not to have been spent. The day will come when our people will inquire of us why we are so lavish of their money which is so precious to them while their taxes are so heavy.

Mr. McKEE. I desire to make two slight verbal changes in my amendment: first to strike out the word "which," in the first section, and insert instead the words "where such;" and then to strike out in section two the words "in the first section" and insert in lieu thereof the words "within the limit prescribed by the first section of this resolution."

The amendments were by unanimous consent agreed to.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER. I move now to lay the joint resolution and pending amendments on the table; and on that I call the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 109, not voting 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, Baker, Benjamin, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Campbell, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cooper, Dawson, Defrees, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hawkins, Hise, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kerr, Koontz, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Maynard, McClurg, Mercier, Miller, Moulton, Niblack, Paine, Plants, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Spalding, Stokes, Thayer, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Warner, and Wentworth—47.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marshall, McCullough, McKee, McRuer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Pomeroy, Price, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Schenck, Shelabarger, Stigraevs, Starr, Stevens, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—109.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Blaine, Chandler, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Garfield, Hale, Harris, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hunter, Jones, Julian, Latham, William Lawrence, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McIndoe, Morrill, Patterson, Pike, John H. H. Rice, Sloan, Stilwell, Strouse, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Bihu B. Washburne, Welker, and Wright—34.

So the joint resolution was not laid on the table.

The question recurred on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. McKEE to the substitute reported by the committee, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the contractors of vessels-of-war and steam machinery, on contracts made by the Navy Department during the years 1862 and 1863, the actual cost to each contractor incurred, over and above the contract price, and allowance for extra work, where such cost was the result of delays, caused by the order of the Department, either from changes in plans and specifications or from delays in furnishing the same: Provided, That none but those which have given satisfaction to the Department shall be considered.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That in the adjustment of these claims the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to appoint a board of three competent persons to examine into and report upon each separate case as provided within the limit prescribed by the first section of this resolution, and the award of losses so ascertained shall be paid to the claimants by the Secretary of the Treasury without further authority than that given in this resolution.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That the payments hereby authorized to be made shall be in full for all claims on the part of said contractors, and no moneys shall be paid until each party to whom an award is made shall execute to the Secretary of the Treasury a receipt in full, and releasing all claims against the Navy Department for further compensation on account of said contract or alterations thereto.

Mr. WINFIELD. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. If this amendment is rejected, will there then be an opportunity to amend the Senate resolution?

The SPEAKER. There will. The antagonizing questions now are between the minority report of the committee and the majority report, and the question will recur between whichever amendment prevails and the Senate resolution.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. McKee to the substitute of the committee, and it was not agreed to—ayes 36, noes 79.

The question recurred upon the substitute reported from the committee, which had been modified to read as follows:

Amend the bill of the Senate by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels-of-war and steam machinery for the same, said investigation to be made upon the following basis: he shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work, rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor; and from such additional cost, to be ascertained as aforesaid, there shall be deducted such sum as may have been paid each contractor for any reason, heretofore, over and above the contract price, and shall report to Congress a tabular statement of each case, which shall contain the name of the contractor, a description of the work, the contract price, the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, and the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as aforesaid, and the amount already paid the contractor over and above the contract price.

Mr. ALLEY. Is this the amendment reported by the majority of the Committee of Claims?

The SPEAKER. It is, as modified on the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. And if this is voted down we will then come to a vote on the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the Senate bill then be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will not, for the House is acting under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. SPALDING. If we adopt this amendment, that will be an end of the matter for a time at least.

Mr. SCOFIELD. And if we vote down both the amendment and the Senate bill, that will kill the matter for a time at least.

The question was then taken upon the amendment as modified; and upon a division, there were—ayes 88, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read a third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Upon that question I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BROMWELL, Mr. SCOFIELD, and Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes seventeen.

Before the noes were counted,

Mr. SCOFIELD called for tellers.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and there were—ayes twenty-one.

So (more than one fifth of a quorum having voted in the affirmative) tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BROMWELL and DAWSON were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes thirty-one.

So (the affirmative having more than one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 105, nays 42, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader

W. Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Dawes, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Keontz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Morris, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pomeroy, Price, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—105.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Campbell, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cooper, Davis, Dawson, Deffrees, Deming, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hawkins, Hise, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Hunter, Leftwich, Maynard, Newell, Plants, Samuel J. Raudall, Ritter, Scofield, Shanklin, Stokes, Thayer, Trimble, Andrew H. Ward, Hamilton Ward, Warner, and Wentworth—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Blaine, Chanler, Culver, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Garfield, Hale, Harris, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Jones, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Marston, McIndoe, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—43.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 283) for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke;

An act (S. No. 513) granting a pension to Patrick Meehan; and

An act (S. No. 602) granting a pension to Ezra B. Gordon.

AUGUSTA AND SOMERVILLE RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House of the 20th instant relative to correspondence between the commandant of Augusta arsenal, Georgia, and the president of the Augusta and Somerville railroad company; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments to the bill of the House No. 1134, declaring and fixing the rights of volunteers as a part of the Army, disagreed to by the House; had agreed to the request of the House for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ABOLISHING THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That one thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to abolishing the Marine corps and substituting therefor soldiers from the Army be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, also reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of this House two thousand copies of the tariff bill, as reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL SCHOOL OF SCIENCE.

Mr. CHANTLER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be requested to inquire into the expediency of bringing in a bill to establish a National School of Science.

ELIAS BEALE.

On motion of Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 584) entitled "An act for the relief of Elias Beale, late captain of company H, eighth regiment Tennessee volunteer infantry," was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 820) entitled "An act for the relief of Henry S. Davis."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) to extend the provisions of the act in regard to agricultural colleges to the State of Tennessee, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 176) relative to the post office and sub-Treasury of the city of Boston; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TAX BILL.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. ALLISON to the amendment of Mr. DAVIS.

The amendment of Mr. DAVIS was to insert after line sixty-one the words "sewing-machines."

The amendment to the amendment was to strike out "sewing-machines" and insert in lieu thereof the words "shirt-fronts, wristbands or cuffs for shirts."

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to modify his amendment by adding the words "except those made of paper."

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that. I make that modification.

On agreeing to the amendment to the amendment there were—ayes 28, noes 35; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN under the rules, ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. ALLISON and BAKER.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 43.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to go back to a part of the bill which has already been read, so as to insert a word which has been omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD?]

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend by in-serting, on page 7, between lines twenty-six and twenty-seven, the following:

That section twenty-four be amended by inserting in the proviso to said section, after the word "spirits" wherever it occurs the words "or petroleum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line sixty-two the words "that from and after the 1st day of September, 1867, no tax shall be levied or collected on cotton grown within the United States."

Mr. Chairman, from the temper which has already been evinced by the House on this question I do not know whether there is the slightest hope that this amendment will be adopted; but I believe, with the old covenanters of Scotland, that it is sometimes valuable to bear testimony against a wrong which we are unable to resist. I think the tax on raw cotton is altogether the most extraordinary that was ever laid by an intelligent Government. Six years ago, when the war began, we had a monopoly of this article in the markets of the world. The course and events of the war robbed us of that monopoly. The system of labor on which the cotton culture rested was utterly destroyed, destroyed as a necessity of war and for the permanent welfare of the nation as well as to vindicate the right of every man to personal freedom. Nor was this all. The war in its ravages consumed the horses, the mules, and the farming implements of the South, laying waste the plantations and using up the accumulated wealth and the reserved capital of the South. Owing to this state of circumstances in our own country we find that Brazil, Central America, the West Indies, Egypt, Australia, and the East Indies were greatly stimulated and encouraged to engage in the cultivation of cotton, and hence during the five years in which the business was practically suspended in the United States every other country in the world, where the climate and soil are suitable, engaged in the effort with great zeal and enterprise. And they have succeeded in a remarkable degree, despite the assertions to the contrary, and are now presenting a formidable competition with us in foreign markets.

We now desire to regain our ascendancy, and the first step which Congress takes is to impose a heavy tax of fifteen dollars on each and every bale of cotton before it can be removed from the plantation or district in which it is raised. It seems to me that absurdity cannot go further; that if we had specially designed to lay a great obstacle in the way of our ever reviving the cotton business in this country we could not have invented a more certain and efficient mode than this tax presents.

Many gentlemen seem to imagine that the business of cotton-growing is enormously profitable and can therefore pay any amount of tax. Now, sir, I do not hesitate to say that no business of equal magnitude in the whole country was attended with such unsatisfactory results as was cotton-growing in 1866. I hold in my hand some very valuable and reliable statistics on this subject, and I wish I had time to read them to the House; but some brief extracts must suffice. In Alabama, on sixteen plantations, the total cost of the year, allowing a very moderate rental for the land, was over $242,000, while the total product was only $137,000, showing a net loss of $105,000. Twenty-four plantations in Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Georgia, show a total loss of $121,000. The season was, I admit, extraordinarily unpropitious, and the misfortune is that this fact operates to discourage the cotton culture to such a degree that we ought to make some special effort to revive and stimulate it; and we could do nothing so effective in this direction as to remove the tax. I have no doubt that if Congress were to repeal this tax to-day, thousands of acres would at once be planted in cotton that will otherwise lie idle throughout the present year.

We hear a great deal of talk in this Hall, Mr. Chairman, about the resumption of specie payment. Theorizing on this subject may be entertaining if not instructive, but practical men see that we shall not get on to a specie basis until we export something else than gold eagles and five-twenty bonds to pay our balances in Europe. Our hope of a balance of trade in our favor rests on the increase of our exports, and the only way we can effectively increase our exports is to encourage the growth of cotton. Put the cotton region in a position to produce a crop of five million bales—and with proper legislation they will do that in 1869—and I warrant you that we shall be on the specie basis at once, without further effort and, indeed, without any one knowing it until we have actually realized it. Two hundred and fifty millions in gold to our credit annually in Liverpool will force us to the specie basis, even if we did not desire to reach it. One peculiar hardship in this cotton tax is that it places the cotton grower, white and black, under the control of the money-lender. When the crop is ready for market it cannot be removed until the tax is paid, and the planter having exhausted his means in producing his crop is forced to go to the usurer and he is thus inevitably oppressed to a cruel extent. One gentleman who had to raise $3,000 to pay the tax on his crop told me that he had paid forty per cent. for the money on a loan for only a few weeks. I submit that a law which thus places labor in the hands and under the power of capital is faulty and vicious in the extreme.

If we desire, Mr. Chairman, to elevate the material condition of the freedman—and that is the direct road to his moral and intellectual elevation—we must open to him profitable avenues of industry. The fate of the negro and the cotton plant in this country seem to be indissolubly connected, and just in the degree that we retard the cotton culture we retard the progress and the profit of negro labor. In urging the repeal of the cotton tax, therefore, I feel that I am most effectively pleading the cause of the emancipated negroes of the southern States.

The idea that we are punishing the South by this tax (which some gentlemen advance) is utterly delusive, if it were not indeed unworthy. The cotton tax is not an injury to the South merely, but to the whole country, and quite as great an injury to the manufacturing and commercial interest as it is to the agricultural. Resentment is always an unsafe basis for legislation, and especially unsafe when applied to business and financial questions. Let us throw such feelings aside and look at the question in its true light. Let us remember that a heavy export of cotton with cheap cotton at home are among the most desirable objects for the whole country that can possibly be attained. Let us remember that the tax of fifteen dollars per bale is not merely an oppression and a hindrance to cotton growing in the United States, but that it is a bounty and a stimulus to cotton growing in Egypt, in India, and everywhere else that the plant can be successfully cultivated. We may, I know, get several millions per annum from this tax, but every dollar derived from this source is a loss of five dollars in its adverse effects on other business interests of the country. It is a tax in short, Mr. Chairman, which we cannot afford to collect, and which in my judgment should be remitted at once.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I oppose the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 46.

Mr. PRICE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLAINE and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 54.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sleds, wheelbarrows, and hand-carts.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move after the words "carts" to insert "and fence made of wood." The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Soles and heel-taps made of India-rubber or of India-rubber and other materials; Steel of all descriptions, whether made from muck-bar, blooms, slabs, loops, or otherwise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to insert "and bar, plate, and sheet iron."

This is in accordance with the recommendation of the special commissioner. I cannot recapitulate all the reasons for it in the time allotted to me. On the basis of the returns of 1866 the reduction would be 1,500,000, but there is abundant margin furnished by previous action of the committee in regard to leather.

There is another reason. Fifty rolling-mills in western Pennsylvania, employing ten thousand hands, are now idle, and it may not in fact involve any reduction at all. The British article is now selling in our market at a price less than it costs us to manufacture it.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the gentleman adopt all of the recommendations of the special commissioner?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; so far as this article is concerned.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 52.

Mr. WILLIAMS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 52.

The CHAIRMAN voted in the negative.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on the amendment in the House.

Objection was made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steam locomotives and marine engines, including boilers.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out "locomotives and marine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Straw or binder's board and binder's cloth.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to insert at the end of that line the words "and straw wrapping-paper." There is no objection to that amendment on the part of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after line sixty-eight "stove polish, or other manufacture exclusively of plum-bago."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to insert after the amendment just adopted "buck-saws."

In line thirty-two "frames and handles for saws and buck-saws" are placed on the free list. I understood that the committee intended to put buck-saws also on the free list. Buck-saws are the saws which are used in sawing wood before our doors by very poor persons, and the amount of revenue derived from this source is very small.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MERCUR. I move to insert after the amendment just adopted "stump-machines." This is an article very much used in some portions of the country.

Mr. BROOMALL. This article is already exempted.

Mr. MERCUR. No, sir; "root-diggers" are, and there is no reason why "stump-machines" should not be exempted on the same principle.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HART. I move to insert after that amendment the words "potato diggers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tags, merchandise and direction of cloth, paper or metal, whether blank or printed.

Mr. FERRY. I move to insert "log sidings and shingle machines." I will state that I have the approval of the Committee of Ways and Means in offering this amendment. I intended to have offered it at the end of line sixty-seven in connection with steam-engines. These machines are worked by steam-engines, and yet they are known by their technical names. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert "thimble skeins and pipe-boxes made of iron."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tinware for domestic and culinary purposes.

Mr. DODGE. I move to add to that line the words: "and for packing articles not subject to tax." I will state that boxes made of tin are used for packing articles that are on the free list, and there has been a great deal of difficulty heretofore growing out of this fact. For instance, a tin box with yeast powder in it is taxed while a tin box with allspice in it is not taxed. The Committee of Ways and Means agree to this amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I trust this amendment will not be adopted. Packing-boxes of wood or other materials are already exempted in lines ten and eleven of page 13 of the bill.

Mr. DODGE. These are the little boxes that hold only a pound of allspice or pepper.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are "packing-boxes," and I hope the gentleman will not cumber the bill by unnecessary verbiage.

Mr. DODGE's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert "two-ply carpets, the product of hand-looms."

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman will leave out the words "two-ply carpets," so as to leave it "the product of hand-looms."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I am afraid that would be going too far. I should want to know just how far it would go. I do not know that there would be any articles that would be reached, but this amendment which I have offered has been carefully considered by the Committee of Ways and Means, and I hope it will be adopted without amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. What I want to get at is the exemption of the labor of the country which is carried on by hand-looms.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is not taxed now, unless the product exceeds $1,000 in value.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am aware of that.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I should be afraid to adopt that amendment. I think we had better pass the amendment as it came from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MAYNARD's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment, to correct an error in line sixty-nine.

No objection was made.

Mr. DAWES. I move to insert after the word "tags" the word "for," so that it will read "tags for merchandise and direction of cloth, paper, or metal, whether blank or printed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Kentucky. I move to insert after line seventy-one the words "turn-pike roads."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to insert "boxes made of taggers' iron." This is the thin fine iron of which spice boxes are made, and I do not think they come under the provision in lines nine, ten, and eleven which exempts "packing-boxes." You exempt small boxes made of tin, and I do not see why boxes made of taggers' iron should not also be put on the free list. I am sure that the provision to which I have referred does not include the class of boxes in which spices more especially are packed. I hope the committee will adopt this amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ultra-marine blue; varnish; wagons, carts, and drays made to be used for farming, freighting, or lumber purposes, and valued at less than $200.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to strike out the words "and valued at less than $200."

I will state that the farmers around New York use wagons for carting produce to market, which at this day cost three or four hundred dollars. I know this by experience. I have no doubt that the intention of the committee was to exempt all farmers' wagons; but if the value is fixed at $200 it does not exempt all such wagons.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I now move to strike out all after the word "drays" to the end of the paragraph, so that it will read: "wagons, carts, and drays." I offer this amendment to prevent the difficulty there will be between the assessors and the manufacturers of these articles. How can an assessor or a manufacturer say whether a wagon or dray is being manufactured for farming purposes or not? And why should he say it? He ought not to say it. All these articles should be exempted, because there will be no tax realized from them.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. EGGLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is a lumber wagon, cart, or dray used for any purpose except for farming or freighting?

Mr. EGGLESTON. I know of wagons that are used for nothing but hauling stone from quarries until they are worn out.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That is freighting.

Mr. EGGLESTON. And for what are drays used? Not for farming.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. They are used for freighting.

The amendment of Mr. EGGLESTON was not agreed to.

Mr. DEFREES. I move to insert the words "and draught harness" after the word "wagons."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to amend by adding the words "fabrics when the product of hand-looms." I offer this in the interest of many branches of industry, in which there is no other than hand labor used; and which are as much branches of hand labor as the making of boots and shoes. In Philadelphia we have quite a number of manufacturers of a very humble style of carpet; there are some one hundred and twenty odd establishments in which there is no power but hand power used. And this branch of industry embraces many manufacturers in the rural districts.

Mr. DELANO. There is a large amount of manufacturing by hand labor done in penitentiaries. This amendment is too broad, I think.

Mr. KELLEY. I will modify my amendment so that it will read, "not produced in penitentiaries or other penal establishments."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Are not these hand-looms used very extensively in the manufacture of laces and other articles of luxury?

Mr. KELLEY. Those articles are not produced in this country; it would be more fortunate for us if we did produce those articles. I will state that the Committee of Ways and Means approve this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendments being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Washing, mangling, and clothes-wringing machines, spinning-wheels, hand-reels, and hand-looms.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting "dyeing, redyeing, or reprinting of cloth and other articles, except in the process of their manufacture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by inserting the words "tailors' gooses." [Laughter.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to amend by inserting after the words "clothes-wringing machines" the words, "zinc washboards." If a washboard is made entirely of wood, under the law as it now stands, it is allowed to pass untaxed as wooden manufactures. But if, as is generally the case, a little piece of zinc is attached to the washboard it is taxed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments to the bill of the House No. 896, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, and had agreed to the committee of conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two houses thereon: and had appointed Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. COWAN the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendment to the bill of the House No. 904, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, and had agreed to the committee of conference asked by the House of Representatives upon the disagreeing votes of the two houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. SUMNER, Mr. FOGG, and Mr. JOHNSON the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the House No. 912, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, disagreed to by the House, and had agreed to the committee of conference asked by the House of Representatives upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. DOOLITTLE the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

The House then resumed the consideration of the tax bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I move to amend the clause last read by adding the words "wooden knobs."

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman must mean "wooden nutmugs." [Laughter.]

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. No; "wooden knobs."

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman ought to include "wooden nutmugs," also.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. Wooden nutmugs, I will tell the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] are an article which defy all tax or tariff; and I have no doubt my successor, the celebrated P. T. Barnum, will be able next summer to sell cargoes of them to the constituents of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPALDING. That is the reason I want them put on the free list.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend by adding the word "bee-hives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to insert after the word "washing" the word "sewing."

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a point of order. My point is that this amendment has already been voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DARLING. Now, sir, admitting that a few of the "pioneers" in this art have after years of labor, after years of unceasing and almost unparalleled enterprise and perseverance, succeeded in acquiring a competence; they have richly earned it, and I say let them enjoy it. But these parties have generally retired from the business, and it is now in the hands of new and younger men; men who are not rich, nor likely soon to become so. Men who, however, are eminently public spirited, proverbially liberal, and always loyal. Men who have striven from the outbreak of the rebellion to keep their prices at the gold basis, and who have done so. Men whose avowed policy it is to reduce rather than advance prices, and whose ambition it is to place a sewing-machine in every household in the land. I say shall this interest, shall these men suffer because their predecessors (one perhaps out of every hundred of the inventors in the art) have made something? Shall they be driven to increase their prices or add the manufacturers' tax (which they have hitherto refrained from doing) to the price of the machine?

Who suffers by this? Is it not the poor sewing-girl? Is it not she who is watching and guarding her meager earnings, prayerfully looking forward to the day when she will be able to buy a sewing-machine? When she, too, in common with the thousands now possessing them, may have the means of always acquiring a respectable and honest living? Why, sir, there is not a person within the hearing of my voice who does not know and acknowledge that this invention has done more to elevate, ameliorate, and improve the condition of woman, whether rich or poor, whether in the work-shop or in the family, whether in the "boudoir" of the refined or the garret of the toiling seamstress, than any instrumentality ever before devised. Why, sir, this is a public benefaction, it is an art which this Government should be proud to foster and encourage; for it comes home to every fireside, it lightens the burdens and gladdens the heart of every mother, every wife, and every sister in the land. Every widow made desolate by the war and dependent upon the scanty earnings of her daily toil to feed her helpless orphans is interested in this question. I say, then, God speed to the thousands of men who are manufacturing these machines and who are distributing and educating the people in their use throughout every section of our country. I hope there is not a member of this House who will not vote for this amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York by adding after the word "machines" the words "selling for less than sixty dollars." My object is to confine this exemption to the cheaper sewing-machines. Let those who want handsome well-boxed machines pay the tax.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. DARLING. I accept the amendment as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend the amendment by adding "provided that the manufacturers of sewing-machines shall reduce the price of their machines to an extent equal to the amount of the tax."

This House has already taken action allowing railroad companies to charge over their tax upon the persons traveling over their roads. Now, it strikes me that, carrying out the same principle, we should compel the manufacturers of these machines to reduce the price of them to an extent corresponding to the amount of the tax from which they are relieved. I apprehend there should be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Chairman, how does the gentleman propose to enforce such a provision as that? I ask this question for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to what I have no doubt the gentleman intends as the effect of his amendment—to ridicule the whole idea of exempting sewing-machines. If he adopts this as an effectual method of defeating the pending amendment I am with him.

The committee seems to be this morning looking about with some diligence for objects of exemption; and it does seem to me that this is one of the most far-fetched of all the propositions that have yet been suggested, extraordinary as I deem some of them to be. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there be in this country one branch of industry or industrial enterprise as able as any other to bear any tax which has been or is likely to be imposed upon it, it is that interest embarked in the production of sewing-machines. I know that these machines cost a great deal less than they formerly did. The cost of manufacturing them is, I think, forty per cent.—I am sure it is thirty per cent.—less than it formerly was. The idea that the reduction or abolition of the tax on these machines can make any difference, "even in the estimation of a hair," to the sewing-women, whether of high or low degree, who use these machines, is in my judgment utterly ludicrous, and is demonstrated to be so by experience. The simple question is, whether we shall by an exemption from taxation add a certain percentage to the profits (already so great that they dizzy all arithmetic) of the men who deal in these machines.

My colleague [Mr. DARLING] has suggested that new wine has been put in old bottles by putting new men in the places of those who have grown rich in this business. The limitation fixed in the amendment of my colleague over the way, [Mr. DODGE,] who proposes an exemption on machines selling for not more than sixty dollars, would practically be an exemption of all the machines except those inlaid with pearl or ivory or otherwise highly ornamented. Many of the ordinary machines now cost less than twenty dollars, and an exemption of those selling for sixty dollars or even fifty dollars will embrace a vast majority of all the machines sold. The manufacture of these machines is to a great extent a monopoly; and if any industrial production ought to be taxed, I submit that these machines ought to be.

Mr. BENJAMIN'S amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. DARLING was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to insert after the word "spinning" the word "flax," so that it will read "spinning and flax wheels." The small wheel used in spinning flax is not called a spinning-wheel.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEMING. I move to insert after line seventy-eight, page 16, the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, be amended as follows:

That section one hundred and five be amended by striking out the words "by fire, or," "or fire," and "by fire or," where they occur in said section.

The section proposed to be amended is as follows:

77. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one and a half of one per cent. upon the gross receipts of premiums or assessments for insurance from loss or damage by fire or by the perils of the sea, made by every insurance company, whether inland or marine, or fire insurance company, and by every association or individual engaged in the business of insurance against loss or damage by fire or by the perils of the sea; and by every person, firm, company, or corporation who shall issue tickets or contracts of insurance against injury to persons while traveling by land or water; and a like duty shall be paid by the agent of any foreign insurance company having an office or doing business within the United States; and that in the account or return to be rendered they shall state the amount insured, renewed, or continued, the gross amount of premiums received and assessments collected, and the duties by law accruing thereon.

I will explain the precise purpose effected by this amendment. It is to exempt fire insurance companies from the tax of one and a half per cent. levied on their gross receipts from premiums, and I am induced to offer the amendment in deference to petitions from all parts of the country from these associations, for the purpose of having the Committee of the Whole pronounce on the justice and equity of their prayer. I have it from most reliable statistics that the losses of these companies during the past year have been entirely unprecedented in the history of fire insurance companies. The losses have exceeded the receipts by $15,000,000, which is more than twenty per cent. of their entire capital, presumed to be about seventy million dollars. Why, within the last twenty days the loss of fire insurance companies has been upward of three million dollars, and this, too, in spite of the increased premiums laid on buildings and manufactories they have insured. These premiums have increased most enormously, almost to a prohibitory rate, and yet have not compensated them for their immense losses. They have advanced from $25,000,000 in 1861 to $60,000,000 in 1863, and to upward of one hundred million dollars in 1866.

As an additional reason why these companies should be exempted from this tax of one and a half per cent. on their gross receipts, considering the hazardous nature of their business, is that they already pay largely toward the national resources. For instance, in schedule B their tax on stamps alone amounts to about one per cent. on their premium, and in addition they are taxed five per cent. on their dividends, making in all six per cent. they are taxed, independent of this one and a half per cent. it is the purpose of my amendment to relieve fire companies from. If there ever was a case which appealed to the justice and equity of the committee it seems to me it is the one I have thus briefly presented.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the gentleman state what advance of rate has recently been made by fire insurance companies; and to what extent this arrangement of advance prevails among the leading companies?

Mr. DEMING. I am informed they have advanced the rate from three to four per cent. on all manufactories and all kinds of buildings, and that arrangement is universal with all companies in this country. One fact has been brought to my knowledge, where it was sixty cents on $100 on cotton, they have now advanced the rate to four and five per cent. per annum.

Mr. HILL. Has not this increase in the rate been caused by the unusual number of fires during last year?

Mr. DEMING. Most assuredly that is one of the reasons. It is to compensate them for their tremendous losses. Many of the companies have been unable to continue their business.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman mean to continue this permanently or only for a year?

Mr. DEMING. Only for a year.

Mr. DODGE. This is a just amendment. Their losses for the past year have been unprecedented, and every man who looks at his policy of insurance trembles for fear the company will not be able to respond in case of fire. They now pay tax in three different ways, and that certainly is an argument why they should be relieved. I hope they will be relieved.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the amendment by adding "for the next year the tax on all the burned district of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, shall be remitted." Last year we made the same provision for Portland, Maine, and I think it is but fair that the relief should be granted to Chambersburg. These people are trying to rebuild their houses.

Mr. LYNCH. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to Portland; we did not remit any tax but simply extended the time for its collection, and a very short time it was.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would inquire of my colleague how this remission is going to be made. There is no real estate taxed by us.

Mr. STEVENS. There is a great deal of tax levied upon the people of that town.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted and no further amendment is in order.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. DEMING.

Mr. DELANO. I move to strike out the last word of the section proposed as an amendment for the purpose of opposing the amendment. I see that it is supported by gentlemen in whose opinions I have great confidence, but I confess I do not understand why it should be adopted. As at present advised it seems to me a very unwise proposition. The tax assessed upon these insurance companies now proposed to be remitted is one and a half per cent. on their gross receipts. Now, it is said that during the last year or two they have not been earning any money or have been losing largely, and that those insured by them have felt themselves insecure; and yet we are informed that their rates of insurance have increased since the tax was assessed to an extent perhaps of one or two per cent. Now, how are we going to make these companies lose less or give greater security by taking off this tax? I do not comprehend it. I suppose there has been a year of disaster, and that is likely to occur again. These companies take their risks with others. Some periods of time I believe in the history of insurance companies show a very great profit. Their stock is sometimes high and the most profitable of any in the land, and then they have their years of disaster and loss. But on the whole I think insurance stock is among the best in the country.

But, sir, what security do the insured get by your taking off this tax? It looks to me like exempting a great extensive monopoly from taxation when the people have to endure it. I cannot see it in any other light. And yet I see those in whose opinions I sincerely feel a great deal of confidence moving and supporting this proposition. I hope, however, it will not be adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.] This tax for more than two years has come out of the capital of the insurance companies, and just so much as you take out of this capital you must necessarily impair their solvency. And it has been the fact, not only for the last year, but for several years past, that such has been the competition in the business, and such have been the disasters, that instead of this being a monopoly, as the gentleman from Ohio suggests, many companies have failed, one after another, and only a few have survived and maintained their solvency. It is only because they have no profits out of which to pay this tax that they ask us to remit it for one year, so that they may be able to recover from their great losses.

The increased rate of insurance has been rendered necessary by the disasters to their business and by the competition in it. While it is open to everybody to enter into the business from the nature of the case there can be no monopoly. There must be an aggregation of capital for the business; and while it is true, as the gentleman says, that some years they do a very profitable business and their stock goes up, yet if you take it for a series of years, say for the last twenty or thirty, it will be found that more money has been sunk in the aggregate than has been made out of the business. It is an uncertain and fluctuating investment—the most so, perhaps, of all; and this does not seem to me an unreasonable request that is made on behalf of these companies, when everybody who has watched their business knows that it has been depressed by disaster as well as by competition. They simply ask that for one year this tax shall not be taken out of their capital, which is wanted for the security of my friend from Ohio and everybody who gets insured.

Mr. DELANO. If I understand it, this proposition is put upon the alleged fact that the last year or two have been years of disaster. Now, sir, that would be a very vicious system of legislation. Take the agricultural interest of the West or the cotton interest of the South. Last year the wheat crop was almost a total failure, and the cotton crop in the South has also been a comparative failure. We cannot adjust our legislation upon a sliding scale to meet these contingencies, and I assert again what I believe to be true, that for a series of years this stock is as valuable as any other; and to give these companies relief because for a particular period of time they may have not realized a profit is certainly a wrong principle.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman forgets the peculiarity of this tax. It is upon their gross receipts in addition to the ordinary tax which everybody pays. Now, the principle which influenced gentlemen in voting to take off the cotton tax was because of the disaster and hardships of the case.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; we will take the vote now.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the vote can be taken now I withdraw the motion.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. DEMING, and it was disagreed to—ayes twenty four, noes not counted.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend by adding at the end of the last paragraph "Windsor common wooden-seat chairs."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I insist on my motion that the committee rise, unless debate is closed on the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was understood to be closed by unanimous consent when the motion that the committee rise was withdrawn, so the question must be taken on the amendment without debate.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, be amended as follows, namely:

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the word "be" and insert the words "and as subsequently amended be further amended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCOME.—That section one hundred and sixteen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof as follows: "that there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every person residing in the United States, or of any citizen of the United States residing abroad, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation, carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, a tax of five per cent. on the amount so derived over $1,000; and a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States, and not citizens thereof. And the tax herein provided for shall be assessed, collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said tax.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend by inserting in line seventeen, after the word "dollars," "and not exceeding $6,000, and a tax of ten per cent. on the excess over $6,000." I will say a word in support of the amendment. As the law now stands a tax of five per cent. is levied on the excess of income over $600 and not exceeding $5,000, and a tax of ten per cent. on the excess over $5,000.

Mr. ROSS. Would not the gentleman as soon say "on the excess over $10,000?"

Mr. BAKER. I prefer it as I have offered it. Now, the change in the law proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means would be a uniform tax of five per cent. on all sums above $1,000, thus relieving persons of small income from taxation to the extent of $1,000 instead of $600, and making the rate uniform at five per cent. above $1,000. The amendment which I propose retains the tax of ten per cent., but advances the sum at which it commences from $5,000 to $6,000. It appears to me that taxation should be imposed with some reference to ability to pay. That principle is recognized in the imposition of tariffs upon articles of luxury; it is also recognized in the manner in which we discriminate in placing articles on the free list, and I do not see why it should not be retained in the levying of an income tax. If the principle is sound in its application to the imposition of tariff duties, and the placing of articles on the free list, it appears to me it is sound in its application to internal revenue, and therefore I think by all means the amendment or something like it ought to be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the gentleman to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. BAKER. I prefer it as it is now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say a word on this subject. I do not desire to contest the matter at all beyond a mere statement of the grounds on which the Committee of Ways and Means reported this amendment.

I believe, in the first place, that it will be found to be not sound legislation; that ultimately it will be declared unconstitutional to levy a tax at a different rate upon the incomes of different men. Because some men are poor and others are rich I do not believe that the poor man has the right to say to the other, "You shall pay more tax per dollar upon all your income than I will pay." I do not believe such a law will be considered constitutional.

Now, if you have a right to say that there shall be two rates of taxation upon incomes, you can say that there shall be ten rates. Suppose a schedule like this should be put into the law: every man whose income does not exceed $5,000 per annum shall pay a tax thereon of five per cent.; every man whose income shall be more than $5,000 and not more than $10,000 shall pay ten per cent.; every man whose income shall be more than $10,000 and not more than $15,000 shall pay a tax of fifteen per cent.; and so on. Then, when his income shall be over $90,000 and not over $100,000, he will pay a tax of one hundred per cent., or the whole of his income. Go on still further: when his income gets to be $150,000 he will pay one hundred and fifty per cent., or all his income and half as much more, for the mere pleasure of having made a large income.

Now, if we start out upon this principle of discriminating taxes upon income there is no limit, except the will of the Legislature. We have just as much right to demand that the rich men of this country shall give all their income, and a bonus besides, as to demand that they shall pay twice as much per dollar as others pay.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SPALDING. I will ask the gentleman if, in his opinion as a constitutional lawyer, we cannot exempt $5,000 of all incomes and put all the tax upon that portion of incomes above $5,000?

Mr. GARFIELD. We can exempt, and do exempt, only upon the principle of not taxing that which embraces the necessities of life. So far as the Constitution speaks of taxation at all it says that it shall be equal.

Mr. SPALDING. In the gentleman's judgment, does not that infringe upon the Constitution a little?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not if it is applied to the necessities of life. Now, I do not wish to prolong the discussion upon this matter; but simply to state the grounds upon which the Committee of Ways and Means have based their action. As a matter of justice and of principle we felt bound to put this provision in here, and make it at least a protest against the unjust mode of taxation which has hitherto been adopted. I will leave the Committee of the Whole to act on it as they please.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 204, to provide an annual inspection into Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the tax bill in Committee of the Whole, the section in relation to incomes being under consideration.

Mr. MILLER. I cannot see any good reason for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BAKER.] I think all taxes should be uniform. The tax upon incomes for the last two years has yielded more revenue to the Government than the tax upon anything else. Incomes over $5,000 have been taxed at the rate of ten per cent., which is certainly a very onerous tax; and we know that statements of income have been returned honestly. Look at the returns of incomes in New York, Philadelphia, and other great cities; men there have made very fair and honest returns of their incomes, and from that source has come an enormous sum for our Treasury.

Now, why should this distinction be continued? As the bill now stands, all incomes over $1,000 pay a tax of five per cent. It is proposed to change that so as to require a tax of five per cent. on all incomes over $6,000. Now, what justice is there in that? Why say to people who by their industry have made large incomes that they shall be still more heavily taxed than are those who are not so industrious and who have made but a small income, because they are not or have not been so industrious? Where is the justice of that? I cannot see it. [Here the hammer fell.]

On the amendment of Mr. BAKER, there were—ayes 21, noes 72.

Mr. BUCKLAND called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BAKER and GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 26, noes 73.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will allow this proposition to be reserved so that we may have a vote in the House.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. For the purpose of closing debate on this bill, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, amending the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely necessary to press this bill through if we are to pass the other important measures which are now pending; and I therefore move to suspend the rules so as to provide that there shall be no debate on the remainder of this bill in the Committee on the Whole, allowing however amendments to be offered.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move to amend the motion, so as to provide five-minute debate on each side upon amendments.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule now.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest that one minute instead of five minutes be allowed for debate on amendments.

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not amendable nor debatable.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] that he modify his proposition so as to allow ten minutes debate on each section.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a question of order. My point is that debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LE BLOND. Would it not improve the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that we shall simply take the report of the Committee of Ways and Means for granted, and that no amendments to the bill shall be allowed?

The question being on the motion to suspend the rules to close all debate on the tax bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union,

Mr. HILL called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On the question, there were—ayes 74, noes 40.

Mr. ANCONA called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 45.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that when the House shall again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the tax bill all debate on the pending section be closed in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the tax bill as the special order.

The CHAIRMAN stated that under the order of the House debate on the pending section closed in one minute.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend as follows:

Strike out after the word "whatever" in line sixteen to the end of line seventeen, and insert "a tax of three per cent. upon the amount so derived over $1,000 and under $5,000; a tax of five per cent. on the amount so derived over $5,000 and under $10,000; and on the amount so derived over $10,000 a tax of ten per cent."

This is perfectly constitutional, even under the objection of the gentleman from Ohio, as it is perfectly uniform in every respect. Any person who receives an income under $5,000 is taxed three per cent. and under $10,000 five per cent. There is no inequality in the tax at all. It applies equally to every man, and therefore is constitutional.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call attention to the following rule:

"No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately and particularly interested, or in any case where he was not within the bar of the House when the question was put."

Mr. GARFIELD. That is not the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Gentlemen are voting who are excluded by the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order unless the gentleman will state who are so voting.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move the same amendment, with the last clause stricken out.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to make the five per cent. on the amount over $5,000 and ten per cent. over $10,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and seventeen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: That in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person, there shall be included all income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States; profits realized within the year from sales of real estate purchased within the year or within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated; interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, and mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good and collectable, less the interest which has become due from said person during the year; the amount of all premium on gold and coupons; the amount of sales of live stock, sugar, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay and grain, or other vegetable or other productions, being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; all other gains, profits, and income derived from any source whatever; and the share of any person of the gains and profits of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, who would be entitled to the same, if divided, whether divided or otherwise, except the amount of income received from institutions or corporations whose officers, as required by law, withhold a per cent. of the dividends made by such institutions, and pay the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or other officer authorized to receive the same; and except that portion of the salary or pay received for services in the civil, military, naval, or other service of the United States, including Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, from which the tax has been deducted. And in addition to $1,000 exempt from income tax, as hereinbefore provided, all national, State, county, and municipal taxes paid within the year shall be deducted from the gains, profits, or income of the person who has actually paid the same, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgagor; losses actually sustained during the year arising from fires, shipwreck, or incurred in trade, and debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values and losses within the year on sales of real estate purchased two years previous to the year for which income is estimated; the amount actually paid for labor or interest by any person who rents lands or hires labor to cultivate land, or who conducts any other business from which income is actually derived; the amount paid out for usual or ordinary repairs: Provided, That no deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate: And provided, further, That only one deduction of $1,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make such deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family, and have joint property interest, only one deduction shall be made in their favor: And provided, That in cases where the salary or other compensation paid to any person in the employment or service of the United States shall not exceed the rate of $1,000 per annum, or shall be by fees, or uncertain or irregular in the amount or in the time during which the same shall have accrued or been earned, such salary or other compensation shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of the person to whom the same shall have been paid in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved in lines fifty-one and fifty-two to strike out "Commissioner of Internal Revenue or other;" in line eighty-three, after the word "provided," to insert "further;" and in line seventy, after the word "derived," to insert "amount actually paid by any person for rent of house or premises occupied as a residence for himself or his family."

The amendment was agreed to.

The hour of half past four o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House, pursuant to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

SAFETY OF PASSENGERS, ETC.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, the House took from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 467, to amend the act entitled "An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes," approved July 25, 1866; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that section nine of the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes,'" approved July 25, 1866, be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all vessels navigating the bays, inlets, rivers, harbors, and other waters of the United States, except vessels subject to the jurisdiction of a foreign Power and engaged in foreign trade, and not owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States, shall be subject to the navigation laws of the United States; and all vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and navigating as aforesaid, shall also be subject to all rules and regulations consistent therewith, established for the government of steam vessels in passing, as provided in the twenty-ninth section of an act relating to steam vessels, approved August 30, 1852. And every sea-going steam vessel now subject, or hereby made subject, to the navigation laws of the United States, and to the rules and regulations aforesaid, shall, when under way, except upon the high seas, be under the control and direction of pilots licensed by the inspectors of steam vessels; vessels of other countries and public vessels of the United States only excepted: Provided, however, That nothing in this act, or in the act of which it is amendatory, shall be construed to annul or affect any regulation established by the existing law of any State requiring vessels entering or leaving a port in such State to take a pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of such State or of a State situate upon the waters of the same port.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to report a bill from the Committee of Elections to provide for a uniform day for holding the election of members of Congress. I wish to report it now that it may be passed and go to the Senate.

Mr. ORTH. I object.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. ANCONA, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men, having met, after full and free conference do recommend that the Senate recede from its amendments to the said bill.

SYDENHAM E. ANCONA,

JOHN A. BINGHAM,

JOHN H. KETCHAM,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. W. NESMITH,

EDGAR COWAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MURDER OF UNION SOLDIERS.

Mr. PIKE, from the select Committee on the Murder of Union Soldiers in South Carolina, submitted a report in writing; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Leave was granted to the minority of the committee [Mr. COOPER] to submit his views.

Mr. PIKE submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand extra copies of the report of the select Committee on the Murder of Union Soldiers in South Carolina, with the evidence taken by the committee, be printed for the use of the House.

BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask that bill of the House No. 598, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, be taken from the Speaker's table with a view to agreeing to the request of the Senate for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill.

Mr. COOK. I object.

INDEMNITY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The House now resumes the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 859, to declare valid and conclusive certain proclamations of the President and acts done in pursuance thereof, or of his orders, in the suppression of the rebellion against the United States, upon which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is a good one, and if Congress possesses the constitutional power to pass it we should place it among the statutes of the nation without unreasonable delay.

The condition of the business of the House will not admit of the latitude of discussion to which I would be glad to submit this measure. I feel confident that it would survive the ordeal of critical discussion, and receive the approving judgment of Congress and the country. I am disposed to allow such latitude of discussion as the circumstances surrounding us at this time will admit of, and were it not for the pressure of the business of the House and the impatience of members to proceed with the revenue bills, I would be glad to submit the bill to as ample debate as could reasonably be desired by any one.

The bill embraces two leading propositions. The first relates to certain acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States, and acts done by his authority or approval, including those done by and through courts-martial and military commissions, and is set out in the bill in these words:

That all acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States, or acts done by his authority or approval after the 4th of March, A. D. 1861, and before the 1st day of December, A. D. 1865, respecting martial law, military trials by courts-martial or military commissions, or the arrest, imprisonment, and trial of persons charged with participation in the late rebellion against the United States, or as aiders or abettors thereof, or as guilty of any disloyal practice in aid thereof, or of any violation of the laws or usages of war, or of affording aid and comfort to rebels against the authority of the United States, and all proceedings and acts done or had by courts-martial or military commissions, or arrests and imprisonments made in the premises by any person by the authority of the orders or proclamations of the President, made as aforesaid, are hereby approved in all respects, legalized and made valid, to the same extent and with the same effect as if said orders and proclamations had been issued and made, and said arrests, imprisonments, proceedings, and acts had been done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress of the United States, and in pursuance of a law thereof previously enacted and expressly authorizing and directing the same to be done.

The object of this part of the bill cannot be mistaken. It is alleged that the President of the United States, in regard to the various matters here enumerated, has acted without authority of law, and that all who have been in any manner associated with him, as instruments in rendering effective his acts, proclamations, and orders, are guilty of infractions of the law, for which they may be indicted, convicted, punished, and subjected to civil actions for the recovery of damages. Many officers and soldiers of the United States have already been made defendants in civil and criminal actions for acts which it is proposed to cover by the broad mantle of this bill. Security for the future for all those agents who acted for the Government in its hour of peril is the objective point at which this measure is aimed. They were our agents and we propose to make their acts our own. It would not be right for us to enjoy the benefits resulting from the acts which surround our agents with perils and refuse or neglect to shield them against impending danger.

The power which this bill invokes has in several instances been exercised by Congress. The third section of the act of August 6, 1861, provides:

"That all acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States after the 4th of March, 1861, respecting the Army and Navy of the United States, and calling out or relating to the militia or volunteers from the States, are hereby approved and in all respects legalized and made valid, to the same intent and with the same effect as if they had been issued and done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress of the United States."

The Supreme Court in the prize cases, (2 Black's Reports, 270,) in pronouncing on the right of the President to institute a blockade, (which he did by one or more of the proclamations covered by the act of 1861,) made use of this language:

"If it were necessary to the technical existence of a war that it should have a legislative sanction, we find it in almost every act passed at the extraordinary session of the Legislature of 1861, which was wholly employed in enacting laws to enable the Government to prosecute the war with vigor and efficiency; and finally, in 1861, we find Congress 'ex majore cautela,' and in anticipation of such astute objections passing an act approving, legalizing, and making valid all acts, proclamations, and orders of the President, &c., as if they had been issued and done under the previous express authority of the Congress of the United States!"

"Without admitting that such an act was necessary under the circumstances, it is plain that if the President had in any manner assumed powers which it was necessary should have the authority or sanction of Congress, that on the well known principle of law 'omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato equiparatur,' this ratification has operated to perfectly cure the defect."

It will be observed that while the court intimated that such curative legislation may not be necessary in such cases, it followed the intimation with an emphatic affirmation of the validity of such congressional action in case the President had exceeded his powers. Nor was the court willing to let the case rest here. After citing the case of Brown vs. United States, (8 Cranch, 110,) the doctrine of the court therein so far as it relates to the present discussion is reversed, and the principle contended for by Mr. Justice Story in his dissenting opinion is declared to be the law. The position of Justice Story, so far as it relates to the question which I am now considering, is stated as follows:

"For every purpose applicable to the present case it does not seem necessary to controvert these positions; and whatever may be the correctness of the others, I am perfectly satisfied that the position is well founded, that no subject can legally commit hostilities or capture property of an enemy, when, either expressly or constructively, the sovereign has prohibited it. But suppose he does, I would ask if the sovereign may not ratify his proceedings; and thus, by a retroactive operation give validity to them? Of this there seems to me no legal doubt."

This doctrine was adopted in the opinion of the court in the prize cases unqualifiedly, and in these words:

"Although Mr. Justice Story dissented from the majority of the court on the whole case, the doctrine stated by him on this point is correct and fully substantiated by authority."

I accept this concurrent affirmation by Congress and the Supreme Court of the power to pass this bill as a sufficient justification for urging it upon the House. It is not necessary for me to refer to other precedents. Every one who is familiar with the legislative history of the country knows that time and again Congress has in various ways asserted this power; in some cases authorizing to be done acts kindred to those directed and authorized by the orders and proclamations to which this bill refers; in other cases affirming and declaring legal and valid acts which had been done without the sanction of law. The legislative and judicial action of the Government presents no difficulty in this regard until we reach the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Milligan case, and even that case interposes no real and valid objection to the passage of this bill. It is true that a majority of the court, in the opinion announced by Mr. Justice Davis, declares that Congress could grant no power to try, in the State of Indiana, a citizen in civil life, in nowise connected with the military service, by a court-martial or military commission, and in so far as this goes the court stands in opposition to this bill. But this is a piece of judicial impertinence which we are not bound to respect. No such question was before the court in the Milligan case, and that tribunal wandered beyond the record in treating of it. Its discussion by the court was out of place, uncalled for, and wholly unjustifiable. Milligan presented no point in his case upon which Mr. Justice Davis and his concurring associates can hang an excuse for this unnecessary examination of the powers of Congress. All the court said upon this subject brought neither benefit nor harm to Milligan. The court found that Congress had not authorized nor attempted to authorize the trial of Milligan by a military commission. This in and of itself should have closed the door against the voluntary wanderings of the court into the fields of congressional power.

Mr. Speaker, it may not be out of place for me to devote a few minutes to an examination of some of the interesting and important questions discussed by the court in the opinion delivered in the Milligan case. The difficulty under which the court labored in this case seems to me to have been the want of a just and proper appreciation of the condition in which the nation rested at the time of the arrest and trial of Milligan. The nation was in a condition of war. The war powers of the Government were in intensely active operation and were being applied to every part of the national domain. When a nation is at war it acts as a unit. One part of it cannot be in a state of war and another in a state of peace. In war the condition of a nation is indivisible, and the state of war is national. The United States can not be at war and the State of Indiana at peace; for that State is a part of the United States. The fact that courts were open in the State of Indiana and that hostile armies were not encamped within its borders could not suspend any of the war powers of the United States in time of war. The State of Indiana was not carrying on war; that was being done by the United States. Hence, when Justice Davis and his concurring associates remark in their opinion—

"If armies were collected in Indiana they were to be employed in another locality where the laws were obstructed and the national authority disputed. On her soil there was no hostile foot; if once invaded, that invasion was at an end, and with it all pretext for martial law. Martial law cannot arise from a threatened invasion. The necessity must be actual and present; the invasion real, such as effectually closes the courts and deposes the civil administration."

They manifest most singularly crude ideas of the great questions they are discussing. The recent war was not one of invasion in any correct sense of the term; it was a war organized and carried on against the United States within their jurisdiction by their own citizens. "Hostile feet" were pressing more than one half of the soil of the United States. Within the United States all of the furies of war were raging. Army met army, and in the fearful shock men met death by tens and scores of thousands. The strong arms of the Government were stretching out to every home in the land, breaking the domestic circles and placing their members in the front of battle, there to fight and die for the safety of the nation. Treasure and blood flowed in rivers all over the land. Every resource and power of the Republic was drawn upon and strained to the utmost limit.

These great facts are forgotten by the judges, who arrest and turn away from their legitimate offices the war powers of this Government because the State of Indiana was or was not actually invaded. Parties in Kentucky, in the early days of the war, said to the Government, "Over the soil of this State no hostile forces shall pass: neutrality shall be observed throughout its borders." The voice of the judges seems like an after-the-war echo of the voice which proclaimed neutrality at the beginning of the strife. The voices sound alike; both lack harmony with the Constitution and the national life, and both were toned by State rights' teachings; both assert the superiority of the condition of the State over the necessities of the nation. Had this judicial voice spoken in the midst of the war as it has since its close, and enforced its mandate, the Government would have failed in the struggle, and the confederate States would to-day occupy a place among the nations of the earth. It is well for us that we have a time of peace in which to examine the dangerous tendencies of the positions assumed by the Supreme Court concerning the war powers of the nation and the power of Congress relative thereto. It is well for us, also, that these positions are assumed outside of the record of the case presented, and that they are occupied by a bare majority of the court; that in no sense do they convey to the nation the law of the land. These things will direct the attention of the nation to its highest judicial tribunal, and ultimately result in checking the present tendencies of some of the members of that body toward thrusting upon the country without warrant in the record the opinions of a mere majority the gravest questions of constitutional law.

The failure of the majority of the court to comprehend the national character of the state or condition of war produced a natural result. Having ignored the war status of the nation, it next shuts its eyes against everything like martial law, and the laws and usages of war, except in that circumscribed sphere occupied by persons in the—"Land and naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger."

Beyond this narrow limit, it is said, martial law cannot extend unless the pressure of actual war is "such as effectually closes the courts and deposes the civil administration." This seems to me to be perfectly fallacious. There are such things as martial law, and the laws and usages of war, and these were put into the Constitution of the United States with their entire latitude of jurisdiction, when the framers of that instrument provided that—

"Congress shall have power to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, make rules concerning captures on land and sea, raise and support armies, provide and maintain a navy, make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions," &c.

And made the President Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. Now, sir, whatever is necessary for the full enjoyment and effective execution of these powers follows them as incidents. When the nation is at war it must be left free to exercise these powers in such manner as will most surely, safely, and lawfully promote the interests and well-being of the Republic. The execution, administration, and enforcement of these powers are not devolved on the civil courts or the ordinary civil authorities. The jurisdiction of these war powers is as comprehensive as the state of war, and as the latter is national in its extent the former extends to and embraces the nation. I do not mean to be understood as saying that the military authorities absorb the civil jurisdiction throughout the nation in time of war and may punish civil offenses, but that they may, under such regulations as Congress may from time to time establish, punish military offenses.

A military offense may be committed by a civilian. The civil status of the offender will not relieve him of liability to punishment. He may be punished by the authorities who administer the law against which he has offended. A civilian may commit an act which would place in jeopardy an entire army, and yet his act may not be known to the civil law as a crime. His act may hazard the life of the nation, and yet he be entirely free from intent to "adhere to the public enemy, giving him aid and comfort." His act may be a blunder without intent, but a blunder under such circumstances is a crime which may be punished by military authority. Where punished? The Supreme Court says where the civil authorities have been deposed and the civil courts are closed; I say wherever the state of war exists, and by a court which can punish according to military law. A civil court could not try such an offense. The dissenting judges in the Milligan case very truthfully say:

"The Constitution itself provides for military government as well as for civil government."

And this military government must be clothed with power to punish offenses against itself or it would be utterly powerless to enforce its commands and to protect itself against interference with its proper offices and powers from whatever source it may come.

But the majority in the case under consideration say:

"Until recently no one ever doubted that the right of trial by jury was fortified in the organic law against the power of attack. It is now assailed; but if ideas can be expressed in words, and language has any meaning, this right—one of the most valuable in a free country—is preserved to every one accused of crime who is not attached to the Army or Navy, or militia in actual service."

I admit the sacred character and great value of the right of trial by jury. It is a great right which should not be abridged. But in the case of United States vs. Davis, (Wall. 106,) it was held that the provision of the Constitution which says—

"The accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury," &c., "is only intended of those crimes which by our former laws and customs had been tried by jury."

Now, sir, every one knows that military offenses never were tried by jury. Hence this parade of the right of trial by jury can serve no other office than that of a popular float for a mischievous decision. The guarantee upon which the court places so much stress relates to those "criminal prosecutions" in which the accused was entitled to a trial by jury at the time the clause was placed in the Constitution, and this is its entire length and breadth.

Great stress is placed upon that part of the fifth amendment which declares—

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger."

This relates to crimes known to the common law, or declared by statute and punishable by the civil courts. It has no reference whatever to military offenses. This clause of the Constitution, instead of being a limitation upon the powers of military tribunals, is an enlargement of their jurisdiction, inasmuch as it subjects persons attached to the military service to trial by court-martial for any crime which they may commit. The common law crime of murder, if committed by a civilian, can only be tried upon indictment or presentment of a grand jury, and by a petit jury. For the same crime a soldier may be tried by a court-martial. Now, if a soldier may be tried by court-martial for the highest grade of common-law crime, it must follow that for every lesser grade of common law and statutory crime he may be tried by the same tribunal. In this view of the subject I may very well adopt the language of the majority of the court in the Milligan case, and say that—

"The framers of the Constitution doubtless meant to limit the right of trial by jury, in the sixth amendment, to those persons who were subject to indictment or presentment in the fifth."

What follows? Why, that persons involved

"In cases arising in the land and naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger"—

No matter what the character of the offense, and all other persons charged with the commission of military offenses, are not entitled to trial by jury under the sixth amendment, because those of the first class are excepted from the operation of the fifth amendment so far as it relates to presentment and indictment; and those of the latter class are charged with offenses which have never been subjects of indictment or presentment by grand juries. This construction of the Constitution removes all danger of conflict between the civil and military authorities of the Government. Each have their appropriate sphere, clothed with ample and perfectly harmonious powers to protect the citizen and the nation. A contrary construction must render inoperative to an alarmingly dangerous extent all those parts of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, which embrace the war powers of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, the views which I have endeavored to present are not without support in former decisions of the Supreme Court. Section four of the act of 1795 declares—

"That the militia employed in the service of the United States shall be subject to the same rules and Articles of War as the troops of the United States."

Upon this statute the Supreme Court, in the case of Martin vs. Mott, 12 Wheaton, 19, following the case of Houston vs. Moore, 5 Wheaton, 1, held that—

"Although a militiaman who refused to obey the orders of the President calling him into the public service was not, in the sense of the act of 1795, 'employed in the service of the United States,' so as to subject him to the Rules and Articles of War, yet he was liable to be tried for the offense under the fifth section of the same act by a court-martial called under the authority of the United States."

Thus clearly asserting that a person not in the military service may nevertheless be tried by a court-martial for a military offense. But the court did not stop here. It was urged by Mott that—

"The proceeding of the court-martial took place and the sentence was given three years and more after the war was concluded and in a time of profound peace."

The court answered the objection in these words:

"The opinion of the court is, that a court-martial, regularly called under the act of 1795, does not expire with the end of a war then existing, nor is its jurisdiction to try these offenses in any shape dependent upon the fact of war or peace."

"It would be a strained construction of the act to limit the authority of the court to the mere time of the existence of the particular exigency, when it might be thereby unable to take cognizance of and decide upon a single offense. It is sufficient for us to say that there is no such limitation in the act itself."

This case establishes these positions:

1. A military offense can be committed by a person not "in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger;" for such persons are subject to the Rules and Articles of War, and Mott was not.

2. That such offenses, though committed by persons not included in the classes just recited, may be tried by a court-martial.

3. That the jurisdiction of a properly constituted court-martial does not cease with the termination of a war, but may continue until the case for the trial of which it was organized can be disposed of.

4. That such jurisdiction does so continue unless it be limited by act of Congress. This case and the Milligan case cannot stand together. The former stands in support of those powers of the Government upon which it must rely for its protection, defense, and maintenance in time of war or public danger; the latter dwarfs these powers, and, if enforced, would render it impossible for the Government to prosecute a war. The one manifests a just appreciation of the distinction which exists between the civil and the war powers of the nation; the other presents alarming evidence of a disposition on the part of the court to assume control of powers never committed to its jurisdiction. I know of nothing in the Milligan case which should stand in the way of the triumphant passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, common justice demands the passage of this bill for the indemnification of those who served the Government, and who to-day stand in peril because they served the Government faithfully and well. Not a man of all the long list of those whose safety depends on the passage of this bill had any cause to suspect, when he was performing the services which bring him within its provisions, that he was acting at his own peril, and that the shield of the Government was not extended over him. Our legislative and judicial history both warranted every such person in resting upon the belief that for the time being he was absorbed into the body of the Government, and that it, and not himself, was the party acting. In the first few months of the war Congress declared by solemn statute a ratification and pronounced the validity of the acts, orders, and proclamations of the President. The Supreme Court in 1862, in the prize cases, while intimating that this legislative action was not necessary, still held that if the President had acted without authority of law, the act of Congress operated as a ratification of his acts and cured all defects, the same as though the acts had been authorized by act of the national Legislature. Every officer and soldier acting under the orders and proclamations of the President relied on this action of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government, and went forward in the discharge of his duty fully believing that he was acting for the nation and not at his own peril. They knew that the Supreme Court had decided in the case of Martin vs. Mott, already quoted by me—

"That the authority to decide whether the exigency has arisen belongs exclusively to the President, and that his decision is conclusive upon all other persons. We think that this construction necessarily results from the nature of the power itself, and from the manifest object contemplated by the act of Congress. The power itself is to be exercised upon sudden emergencies, upon great occasions of state, and under circumstances which may be vital to the existence of the Union. A prompt and unhesitating obedience to orders is indispensable to the complete attainment of the object. The service is a military service, and the command of a military nature; and in such cases every delay and every obstacle to an efficient and immediate compliance necessarily tend to jeopardize the public interests. While subordinate officers or soldiers are pausing to consider whether they ought to obey or are scrupulously weighing the evidence of the facts upon which the Commander-in-Chief exercises the right to demand their services, the hostile enterprise may be accomplished without the means of resistance." "If a superior officer has a right to contest the orders of the President upon his own doubts as to the exigency having arisen, it must be equally the right of every inferior officer and soldier; and any act done by any person in furtherance of such orders would subject him to responsibility in a civil suit, in which his defense must finally rest upon his ability to establish the facts by competent proofs. Such a course would be subversive of all discipline and expose the best disposed officers to the chances of ruinous litigation."

The officers and soldiers of the United States had little reason to expect from the source whence come this doctrine that cruel abandonment of them which seeks to deny through the doctrine of the Milligan case all power in Congress to protect them; and still less reason had that class of officers who stand most endangered by the position of the majority in the Milligan case. I refer to those who had participated in the acts of military commissions such as Milligan was tried by. They could look with confidence to the opinion of the court in ex parte Vallandigham (1 Wallace's, 248,) wherein the instructions contained in the order of the Secretary of War of April 24, 1863, are approvingly referred to, and the jurisdictions of courts-martial and military commissions held to be—

"Applicable, not only to war with foreign nations, but to a rebellion, when a part of a country wages war against its legitimate Government, seeking to throw off all allegiance to it, to set up a government of its own."

So far as the court in that opinion refer to the instructions contained in the order cited, it treats them as valid, and they expressly affirm that—

"Military offenses, under the statute, must be tried in the manner therein directed; but military offenses which do not come within the statute must be tried and punished under the common law of war."

And upon this the opinion states:

"In the armies of the United States the first is exercised by courts-martial, while cases which do not come within the rules and regulations of war or the jurisdiction conferred by statute or court-martial, are tried by military commissions."

Sir, it is our duty to so act as that these things shall not have led our agents into dangers from which they cannot escape. It would be criminal in us to permit harm to come to our officers and soldiers or to leave the law in such condition as to afford the courts an excuse for bringing harm to them. Justice, right, propriety, all combine in urging the passage of this bill.

The next general proposition contained in this bill is as follows:

And no civil court of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, or of any district or Territory of the United States, shall have or take jurisdiction of or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid, nor shall any person be held to answer in any of said courts for any act done or omitted to be done in pursuance of any of said proclamations or orders, or by authority or with the approval of the President, within the period aforesaid, and respecting any of the matters aforesaid.

Mr. Speaker, if Congress has the power to ratify and to render legal and valid the acts, orders, and proclamations of the President, and the acts done in pursuance of them, it has power to enact this part of the bill. If we have the power to ratify and render legal and valid past acts, orders, and proclamations, it follows that we might have authorized the doing of these things. They all relate to his powers and duties as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. They are military in their character, and do not properly belong to the jurisdiction of the civil courts. If Congress had conferred these powers on the President in advance of their exercise, to be used by him in his discretion, and he had exercised his discretion to the extent of the acts, orders, and proclamations named in this bill, there could be no doubt about any and all of them coming within the rule laid down in the case of Martin vs. Mott before cited, and affirmed in the case of Luther vs. Borden, (7 Howard's Reports, 45,) that—

"Whenever a statute gives a discretionary power to any person to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, it is a sound rule of construction that the statute constitutes him the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of the fact."

But it is said the President was not so authorized. If this be true, we propose to ratify what we might have authorized, and when this is done the rule cited operates with the same force as it would if the power had been granted before the President acted. This of itself is a sufficient reason for depriving the civil courts of jurisdiction in all cases and questions involved in this legislation, or rather to forbid the exercise of such jurisdiction by them; for if the President is the exclusive judge of the facts upon which he exercises his discretion, and all his military subordinates are bound to obey his orders, as has been decided by the Supreme Court, and as every member of the Army is required to take an oath to do upon entering the service, no other jurisdiction can exercise any control over him except that which possess the power of impeachment. Moreover, these acts of the President were not judicial acts in the sense in which the term judicial is used in the Constitution nor in the statutes conferring power on the civil courts; "nor can it be said that the authority to be exercised by a military commission is judicial in that sense;" nor can any of the acts of the President's subordinates in the cases involved in this bill be considered in that sense judicial. They all belong to another class of powers, having no reference to the judicial power of the United States. They involve another jurisdiction, whose exercise and operations should be kept free from the interference of the civil courts except so far as the law-making power of the United States may deem it proper to subject them to it. But if it were otherwise, it is clear that these cases do not come within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and its appellate jurisdiction is subject to such exceptions and regulations as Congress shall make. As to the inferior courts we have the power to withhold this jurisdiction. In the case of Sheldon et al. vs. Gill, (8 Howard's Reports, 448,) the Supreme Court held that—

"It must be admitted that if the Constitution had ordained and established the inferior courts, and distributed to them their respective powers, they could not be restricted or diverted by Congress. But as it has made no such distribution, one of two consequences must result—either that each inferior court created by Congress must exercise all the judicial powers not given to the Supreme Court, or that Congress, having the power to establish courts, must define their respective jurisdictions. The first of these inferences has never been asserted, and could not be defended with any show of reason, and if not, the latter would seem to follow as a necessary consequence. And it would seem to follow, also, that having a right to prescribe, Congress may withhold from any court of its creation certain jurisdiction of any of the enumerated controversies. Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction but such as the statute confers. No one can assert a just claim to jurisdiction exclusively conferred on another or withheld from all."

Looking at this question from either standpoint suggested, our power to withhold the cases embraced in this bill from the jurisdiction of the civil courts is perfect.

It has been suggested to me, sir, that the clause of the bill which provides that "all officers and other persons in the service of the United States acting in the premises shall be held prima facie to have been authorized by the President" is objectionable and should be stricken from it. I do not regard it in this light. This provision is incorporated in the bill as a rule of evidence, and is merely an enlargement of the rule that "every public officer is presumed to act in obedience to his duty until the contrary is shown." This bill enlarges this rule so as to include "other persons in the service of the United States," a class which really stands in need of the rule more than officers; for a large proportion of the orders under which subordinates act are mere verbal commands. These persons are as much entitled to the protection of the Government as are the higher grade of officers who may be able to present the written orders or instructions of the President delivered directly to them or kept on the records of the appropriate department.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the bill, taken as a whole, is a good one. I know it has been drawn with great care, and that it has had the deliberate consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary. That it may work harshly in some cases I do not doubt; but this results from the fact that it is necessarily general in its application, and all general rules have their exceptions. This could not be more readily avoided in this instance than in any other. I can but express the hope that the bill will be approved by the House.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, this bill goes a good way toward granting indemnity I admit, but it is not in the English fashion of giving direct indemnity. In the act of indemnity for the President, which we passed about the middle of the war, we copied the English statute, putting in a direct and explicit indemnity for all acts done under his orders. I do not know that that is necessary. This bill possibly goes far enough to legalize all these acts without a special act of indemnity, but I would suggest to the gentleman to put in a direct indemnity to all persons who acted under these proclamations.

The law with regard to the power of military tribunals is one about which there is not very great harmony among the legal fraternity. While I feel disposed to support them all as far as possible, and while I believe that nothing has been done by them which was not requisite for the country, yet I am not quite prepared to believe that a mere civilian can commit an offense except it be as a spy, which can be tried by a military tribunal. Take, for instance, the case of Mr. Harris, of Maryland, who was tried by a military tribunal, he never having been in the Army or Navy, or in any way participating in military operations, but being simply charged with giving a dollar to a confederate soldier to buy a night's lodging. I have not made up my mind yet, but I can hardly believe that an offense of that kind is triable by a military tribunal.

I do not wish, however, to criticize this proceeding. I am not quite as competent to decide it as those who ordered the trial; still I should like to see full indemnity provided, if it is not already contained in the bill, to everybody who acted on any such tribunal as that. That Congress could authorize such trials, just as they can now authorize them in the rebel States, I have no doubt at all. That part of the opinion of the Supreme Court is, I ought not to say absurd, but I think clearly erroneous. But without such authority, I have some doubt about the validity of these tribunals and I should like to see the officers who acted on them have direct indemnity.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, resumed the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest to the gentleman that before he yields the floor he call the previous question, and if the House sustains it we had better act on the bill to-night.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether he intends by this bill to prevent the review of any case or cases where the parties may now be in prison or may now be suffering from decisions which they claim to be illegal, if his purpose is, as far as an act of Congress can do it, to prevent a review of any such cases as that?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The purpose of the bill is very plainly indicated in its terms, and that is to deprive the civil courts of the United States of all jurisdiction in relation to the acts of military commissions and courts-martial.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it the purpose of this bill to prevent a review of any case where the party may be now in prison, and illegally in prison, under some sentence of some pretended military court? Is it to deny justice to such persons and to prevent them from obtaining what they have a right to under the Constitution and the laws?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This bill has no reference to "pretended military tribunals," but to those which have acted in pursuance of the orders of the proper officers of the Government of the United States. Now, if the gentleman has a particular case to which he wishes to direct my attention, I will endeavor to give him an answer in regard to it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I have no particular case, but I suppose there are many cases where parties have been condemned by these military tribunals and who are now suffering the penalties pronounced upon them by those tribunals, and which may be illegal. I desire to know if it is the purpose of this bill to inflict upon them still further illegal punishment and to prevent them from having any remedy, or to prevent them from asserting their rights under the Constitution and laws, where they have been illegally tried and convicted?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have already stated that the purpose of this bill is to keep separate and distinct the civil and military jurisdiction of the Government, that the civil courts shall not interfere with the military tribunals in the administration of military law, except so far as the Congress of the United States may confer that jurisdiction, nor shall the military tribunals interfere with the exercise of the proper jurisdiction of the civil courts except so far as belongs to them under the powers that may be conferred upon them by the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is the gentleman going to deprive these parties of the opportunity of inquiring where the jurisdiction of the one ends and the other begins? Is the party to have no remedy, but must he suffer, without the right of trying the question where the jurisdiction of the one court commences and where the jurisdiction of the other ends?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It seems to be very difficult for me to give an answer which shall be satisfactory to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] or which he can comprehend; that may be my fault and not his. I will say again that if the proceedings have been in pursuance to proper orders, if the persons who have acted have done so in pursuance of those orders, the effect of this bill will be to remove entirely from the jurisdiction of the civil courts the power to review these proceedings. And the last clause, to which I will call the attention of the House, simply provides that persons who have claimed to act in pursuance of these proclamations of the President shall be deemed prima facie to have acted in pursuance of such orders and proclamations. In a case of that kind the burden of proof is thrown upon those who may question the authority of the person claiming to have acted as an agent of the Government. That provision is based upon the well-settled principle of law that persons who are acting for the Government as its officers or agents are presumed to act in pursuance of law in the discharge of their duty. It is merely proposed to extend that principle of law so as to cover the cases of all officers and soldiers who are now made subject to civil action for what they have done in pursuance of orders or proclamations of the President during the war.

Mr. STOKES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly; for a question.

Mr. STOKES. I desire to know whether this bill will relieve soldiers against whom suits have been or may be brought for acts done while in the military service of the Government and before they were mustered out? If the gentleman will allow me I will state that there are a number of cases of the kind to which I have referred. There is not a court in my district before which suits have not been brought against Federal soldiers for alleged crimes or offenses committed while they were in the military service of the Government. These soldiers are obliged to fee lawyers to defend them, and thus are compelled to pay out all the little money that they may have earned in the service of their country. Some of them are already in prison, and many of them are being persecuted and hunted down by the rebel portion of the community. Now, I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] whether this bill will reach those cases, and whether it will relieve these Federal soldiers and take them away from the jurisdiction of a rebel judge and a rebel jury?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not doubt that this bill will cover every case where a person has acted in pursuance of the orders or proclamations of the President, or of orders approved by him.

Mr. STOKES. Then I will vote for the bill.

Mr. PIKE. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that the bill as it now stands only pertains to proclamations and orders of the President made before the 1st day of December, 1865. I would inquire what objection would there be to make the date subsequent to that? There have been military commissions held since that time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection to changing the date if the House desire it.

Mr. PIKE. I move, then, to amend the bill by striking out "December, 1865," and inserting "July, 1866."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Now, unless there is a general desire to refer the consideration of this bill to some other day, I will call the previous question upon it.

Mr. HISE. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that he did not propose to press this bill to a vote to-night, provided there was a desire on this side of the House to enter upon a discussion of it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If there is a general desire that this bill shall not be put upon its passage to-night, of course, I will not press it; but I will test that by asking a vote on seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Gentlemen around me say they understood the gentleman from Iowa to say that he would not press this bill to a vote without some debate upon it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the previous question should be seconded, and gentlemen on the other side desire to discuss the bill, it can go over until to-morrow, when I will be willing to yield to them the most of the hour to which I would be entitled to close the debate.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The understanding was that a reasonable time for debate would be allowed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am pressed on all sides by members who desire to proceed with the consideration of the tax and tariff bills and other measures of legislation.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. It seems to me that so important a measure as this is ought not to be passed without some opportunity for discussing it being allowed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will test the question by calling for a vote of the House upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will not the gentleman consent to let this bill go over until to-morrow without at present calling the previous question upon it? He can call the previous question to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would myself be very willing to do that; but we all know that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] has the power to make a privileged motion, which would prevent me from getting up this bill again until the tax bill and tariff bill have both been disposed of; that is, the motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole on those bills. Under other circumstances I would allow any latitude of discussion which the other side might desire; but the gentleman can appreciate the position in which I am placed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Some gentlemen on this

Mr. McKEE. I move, in line one hundred and eighty-five, to insert the following:
That section one hundred and twenty-two be amended by striking out the word "turnpike."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The clause to which this is moved as an amendment has been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. DAWES moved, in line one hundred and ninety-nine, after the word "aforesaid" to insert "whose compensation is determined by a fixed annual salary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty-four be amended by adding thereto the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That any legacy or share of personal property passing as aforesaid to a minor child of the person who died possessed as aforesaid shall be exempt from taxation under this section, unless such legacy or share shall exceed the sum of $1,000, in which case the excess only above that sum shall be liable to such taxation."

That section one hundred and twenty-five be amended by inserting after the words "that the tax or duty aforesaid" the following: "shall be due and payable whenever the party interested in such legacy or distributive share or property or interest aforesaid shall become entitled to the possession or enjoyment thereof or to the beneficial interest in the profits accruing therefrom; and the same," and by inserting after the words "United States," in the first sentence of said section, the words "and every administrator, executor, or trustee having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive share, as aforesaid, shall give notice thereof in writing to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the deceased grantor or bargainer last resided, within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust;" and by inserting after the words "shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon," the words "and in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit."

That section one hundred and thirty-seven be amended by inserting after the words "imposed by this act" the words "shall be assessed in the collection district where the estate is situate, and."

That section one hundred and thirty-eight be amended by adding thereto the words: "and every such person having in charge or trust any disposition of real estate or interest therein, subject to tax under this act, shall give notice thereof in writing to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the estate is situate, within thirty days from the time when he shall have taken charge of such trust, and prior to any distribution of said real estate, together with a description and value thereof, and the persons interested therein; and for willful neglect or refusal so to do, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered with costs of suit."

That section one hundred and forty-five be amended by inserting after the word "years" the words "from the time when such tax shall have become due and payable."

That section one hundred and forty-seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That any person liable to pay tax in respect to any succession shall give notice to the assessor or assistant assessor of his liability to such tax, within thirty days from the time when he shall become entitled in possession to such succession or to the receipt of the income and profits thereof, and shall at the same time deliver to the assessor or assistant assessor a full and true account of said succession, for the tax whereon he shall be accountable, and of the value of the real estate involved, and of the deductions claimed by him, together with the names of the successor and predecessor and their relation to each other, and all such other particulars as shall be necessary or proper for enabling the assessor or assistant assessor fully and correctly to ascertain the taxes due; and the assessor or assistant assessor, if satisfied with such account and estimate as originally delivered, or with any amendments that may be made therein upon his requisition, may assess the succession tax on the footing of such account and estimate; but it shall be lawful for the assessor or assistant assessor, if dissatisfied with such account, or if no account and estimate shall be delivered to him, to assess the tax on the best information he can obtain subject to appeal as hereinafter provided; and if the tax so assessed shall exceed the tax assessable according to return made to the assessor or assistant assessor, and with which he shall have been dissatisfied, or if no account and estimate has been delivered, and if no appeal shall be taken against such assessments, then it shall be in the discretion of the assessor, having regard to the merits of each case, to assess the whole or any part of the expenses incident to the taking of such assessment, in addition to such tax, and if there shall be an appeal against such last-mentioned assessment, then the payment of such expenses shall be in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike that out. It is in the existing law, and is here by a clerical mistake.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEE. I renew my amendment here, and wish to explain it.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion has been exhausted on this section under the order of the House.

Mr. McKEE. I will withdraw it and offer it in another place.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all distilled spirits, upon which no tax has been paid according to law, a tax of two dollars on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or any person having possession thereof, and every proprietor and possessor of a still, distillery, or distilling apparatus shall be jointly and severally liable for the taxes imposed by law upon the spirits distilled therein; and the tax shall be a lien on the spirits distilled, on the distillery used for distilling the same, with the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, together with any building thereon, from the time said spirits are distilled until the said tax shall be paid: Provided, That the tax on all spirits shall be collected at no lower rate than the basis of first-proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of first-proof.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert the following before the proviso in the section just read:

Provided, That the tax upon any spirits distilled and removed from the place where the same were distilled, and not deposited in bonded warehouse, as required by law, shall at any time, upon knowledge of such fact obtained by the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where such spirits were distilled, be assessed by him upon the distiller of the same and certified or returned to the collector, who shall immediately demand payment of such tax, and upon the neglect or refusal of payment by the distiller, shall proceed to collect the same by distraint; but this provision shall not exclude any other remedy or proceeding provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. It will now be necessary to insert in place of the word "provided" in the section as it is reported the words "and provided further."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I offer the following proviso as an amendment to come in at the end of the section:

And provided further, That nothing in this act, or the several acts of which this is amendatory, shall be construed as preventing or in any way restricting the continuous distillation of whisky by distillers.

I hope the committee will give me their attention for a moment while I state the object of this amendment. I understand the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided that under existing laws the distiller cannot redistill spirits. I understand he has also decided that spirits may be rectified within the distillery, provided there is a separation by a wall between the distillery and the rectifying establishment, while at the same time he has decided that you cannot redistill within the same building, notwithstanding you have taken the same precaution. I can see no reason why redistillation should not take place continuously within the distillery, and no reason why you should confine the distiller to the most crude and imperfect production of spirits that are made. This provision is designed to enable him to distill spirits in the highest degree, to take all the impurities out and make a perfect article. Why should it not be permitted?

I regard the decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as contrary to the spirit and letter of the law. You cannot make proof-whisky without redistillation. If you must pass it through one doubling to make whisky, why can you not pass it through two, three, or four doublings and produce the highest class of distilled spirits? This proposition is designed to enable the distiller to make the purest kind of whisky instead of imposing upon the public that crude and poisonous article which is scattered broadcast throughout the land.

I offer this proposition for another reason. This redistillation is required to be done through another class of distillers. The whisky has to go from the distillery into the bonded warehouses, then it is taken out and another set of men within the ring, known, not as distillers, but as rectifiers and redistillers, who perform the operation of purifying the liquor which the original distiller is not entitled to do.

And here let me say that there is no protection against these rectifiers and redistillers. They can introduce any amount of fomented matter after it has passed from the bonded warehouse into their redistilling establishments, and you have no superintendent or inspector to oversee them and prevent the whisky from adulteration, and thus imposing upon the Government by depriving it of the revenue it ought to receive; when if you will allow continuous distillation the result will be that instead of an inferior and impure article you will have the purest article of whisky.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment proposed if adopted will have the effect to open up one of the greatest means of fraud on the revenue. The object of preventing the distillation of alcohol or the rectification of whisky in the distillery is to enable the proper officers of the Government to test the proof of every gallon of distilled spirits that comes from the still. It is true that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided that you cannot rectify distilled spirits or distilled alcohol upon the same premises; that is to say, there must be a dividing wall between the distillery proper and the distillery where the spirits are redistilled into alcohol. But we cannot say what shall be the nature of that division line. One man may own a distillery in a block and the establishment next door may be a rectifying establishment. We cannot say what shall be the nature of the division line except that there shall be a wall between the distillery and the rectifying establishment.

Now, my friend knows very well, if he is familiar with the process of distillation, that if you distill alcohol from proof-spirits it must be done by a process of redistillation, which does lead to frauds; and as distilled spirits are put into the still for redistillation there is no possible opportunity of identifying it. If the gentleman proposes to have established within the distillery a rectifying establishment and an establishment for the production of alcohol, then I know of no means whereby we can prevent frauds or secure their detection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? What objection can there be to redistillation, thereby making the purest kind of whisky; not alcohol, but first-proof whisky?

Mr. DARLING. I suppose that debate is exhausted upon this amendment; and I move to strike out the word "redistillation" for the purpose of saying a word.

There is a case in point in New York where there was a rectifying establishment on the front of the lot and a distillery in the rear, and a fence between them, in order, as was supposed, to evade the letter of the law. Whisky was made in the distillery, carried into the rectifying establishment and there branded "rectified" by the United States inspector, and then carried out, tax-free, in open daylight. Now, there is the objection to having a rectifying establishment upon the same premises with the distillery. Whisky that comes from a distillery is supposed to be taxed before it leaves the vault, and goes to the rectifier under the assumption that the tax upon it has been paid. It is then rectified and passes out free, after being marked "rectified;" and under the present law all barrels that are found so marked in the country, in the market anywhere, pass free, upon the supposition that the tax has been already paid. When those barrels are taken by the rectifier the brands are immediately erased, the bungs knocked out, and the contents emptied into the leech-tubs, and then, after going through the process, the liquor is put back into the barrels, branded "rectified," and sent out broadcast.

The objection, then, to having rectifying establishments upon the same premises with distilleries is that it opens the door for great frauds.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. DARLING] to answer the point that I made in my question, and not to make a case for himself. I do not ask about rectifying. Does not the gentleman from New York know the difference between rectifying and redistilling spirits?

Mr. DARLING. Yes, I do.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then why not reply to my question? I asked about redistillation, not rectification.

Mr. DARLING. By the improved system that they now have in distilleries, they can run and rerun their whisky until they reach the highest degree of proof. But they do not rectify for the purpose of making alcohol, but for the purpose of reducing the proof and putting in coloring and other matter, when they send it forth as "copper-distilled," "French brandy," "Bourbon whisky," &c.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I do not know how well acquainted with this business the gentleman from New York is. He may have investigated it very thoroughly, but his views upon it do not correspond with mine, which are based upon my own observations and upon information that I have received.

I am informed that, notwithstanding the fact that the House at the last session, upon my motion, inserted the words "continuous distillation," which was suggested by the large distillers in the West, to enable them to make four or five barrels together into one, thus lessening transportation and expense. The insertion of those words was objected to then, not for any reason that has been referred to here to-night, but because it gave to the great distillers in the West complete possession of the business, as against those who purchased whisky to redistill. This provision prevents the very thing which enables men to perpetrate these frauds. Under it, in every instance, the liquor is run, by continuous distillation, to alcoholic proof before inspection; that has been the practice. The gentleman in the interest of New York rectifiers endeavored to stop it and to compel us to ship large quantities of water to New York, to enable them to redistill it there. In New York they cannot distill it out of grain by continuous distillation, up to the alcoholic standard, so cheaply as we can in the West.

As they are compelled to buy their materials from a bonded warehouse they wish to compel us to do the same. That is the reason, and the only reason, why in the interest of their eastern manufacturers the law, as it was intended by Congress, has been violated. Therefore I hope the House will adopt this amendment, under which frauds cannot be practiced as they are now, for every particle of the product of these distilleries would be run off and inspected as alcohol, and then how could there be fraud?

Now, we do not wish to take this product from the distillery before the process of manufacture is half completed, be obliged to put it into a bonded warehouse, take it out and put it in another establishment, and there rectify it. That would be putting us on an equality with the New York rectifiers. Now, if we can do this cheaper than they can, we can pay the tax better than they can. That is all I have to say; and I hope the House now understand the question.

Mr. DARLING. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HILL. I renew the amendment to the amendment for the purpose of saying that I have been making diligent inquiry from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and others in order to ascertain what possible reason there could be, if any, for not permitting this redistillation in our western distilleries. And I think I have been able to get at the cat which is hid under the meal. These New York refiners can get our crude whisky from the West and refine it in New York more cheaply than they can afford to buy our corn and ship it to New York, and there make from it the crude whisky themselves. That, it seems to me, is the real secret of all this hostility to the proposed amendment. The object of this amendment is merely to give every distiller an opportunity of making the most refined article of whisky which he is capable of making with the apparatus he possesses. What objection there can be to that I cannot see.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the gentleman state to the Committee of the Whole what he understands to be the process of continued distillation, or "repeated doublings," as it is termed by some?

Mr. HILL. I understand the term "redistillation" to mean to distill over again; continuous distillation, or continuous redistillation is the continuing the process of distillation so long as the distiller may think proper.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the gentleman tell us how, under the machinery of this bill, or of the provision which he advocates, the Government officers are to know whether a given distillation is a redistillation in point of fact of something already once distilled, or whether it is a fresh and swindling distillation of something which has not already been once distilled?

Mr. HILL. I will do my best to inform the gentleman. The Government has now a detective in every distillery; the distiller is obliged to pay this detective five dollars a day to see that the laws of the United States are executed in that respect. Now, I do not say that the detective is worth anything at all; I am not sure that it is not a swindle upon the Government and the distiller to have such an officer; but if the detective is good for anything, I should think he could tell whether it was an original distillation or a redistillation.

Mr. CONKLING. How?

Mr. HILL. By attending to the duties of his office.

Mr. CONKLING. By what process?

Mr. HILL. I do not myself understand all about the process of making whisky; but I know that no redistillation could take place in a distillery without the detective knowing it, if he performs his duty properly.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If my friend [Mr. HILL] will permit me, I will say in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in his construction of this law, has decided that one redistillation in a distillery, producing proof whisky, is all that can be allowed under this law. That is, produced by once distilling and then doubling or turning back the product of that distillation and running it through the still again. Now every turning back of the whisky, every doubling, as it is called, reproducing it in vapor, constitutes a distillation, and you may continue that and make it if you please not a redistillation but a continuous distillation until you obtain the highest possible proof whisky that can be made; and that is all that we ask the opportunity for our distillers to do. All we ask is that, under the lock and key of the Government inspector, the distillation of the whisky may be carried by our distillers to the highest proof, to the highest state of refinement possible.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Chairman, I hope that no gentleman, in talking about whisky or by doing anything else with whisky, will become so excited as to suppose that the Committee of Ways and Means intended anything by these provisions except to carry out the genius and object of this law. Our country is groaning under a system of taxation unexampled in the world; it is so chiefly because it reverses almost all the accepted theories of taxation. We are seeking to spread all over a continent a drag-net which shall catch all the diversified representatives of industrial enterprise. Why? Because the revenues needed are so great that without this we should be unable to realize the sum adequate to carry on the business of the Government. Yet here is a subject of taxation which, if the frauds could be stopped, would of itself enable us to disentrail one fourth if not one third of all the present objects of taxation. I desire to be correctly understood when I say that, if we could enforce against alcohol the taxes laid upon it, we could emancipate from taxation one fourth if not one third of all the people who groan under the burdens laid upon them. The question is whether the manufacturers of whisky or the Government are to be strongest in this struggle for the mastery which is now going on in this country and which we call tax-gathering of whisky manufacturers.

Now, sir, the proposition of the committee in this regard was, after a careful investigation by the sub-committee, in conjunction with the Government officers, that this process, called in parliamentary language "continuous distillation"—called again in another phrase "repeated doublings"—is a process which passes the comprehension of detectives, which eludes any mode of detection which we could apply, and enables these men not only to distill and redistill, but to distill afresh and make in place of one quantity of liquor repeated quantities, only one quantity being taxed. That was the proposition; and to meet it this provision was adopted. Now, if any gentleman can propose a mode in which all this thing can be done, and yet confined literally and legally to redistillation, not going beyond that, so be it. But let him propose it with his eyes open to the fact that here is a great door which has been easily swung open to frauds, and that in all the machinery of tax-gathering in this country, in all the opportunities for collecting taxes on the one side and evading them on the other, there is no particular in which it is so important that we should be guarded and no particular in which the Government has thus far been baffled so successfully as in this.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the gentleman how any fraud can possibly be practiced in mere redistillation of whisky which has not been sold and which cannot have been liable to a charge in the shape of taxation?

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Chairman, a logician would answer my friend by saying that his remark is a mere petitio principii. He begs the question. Answering his inquiry directly, I might say that it could not be done. If you state upon paper or state hypothetically a case of mere continuous distillation or redistillation, as you may choose to call it, there is no fraud in that; but the practical proposition is that you cannot permit this thing to be done without incurring a liability to frauds against which you cannot guard.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman tell us how?

Mr. CONKLING. I have been endeavoring to tell the gentlemen how. I will endeavor to repeat in a word. The officers of the Government, the experts whose business it is to administer this law, who have been endeavoring to do it for a year or two, have said to the Committee of Ways and Means, and have satisfied the very able sub-committee that has had charge laboriously of this question, that they cannot with the machinery now existing, or by any mode which they are able to propose, guard against not only the possibility, but the easy and continual occurrence of precisely the frauds which the gentleman asks me to point out the mode of carrying on.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HILL. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, with no particular knowledge of the special subject under consideration, I desire to say that in my judgment the remedy for the frauds which have been perpetrated in reference to the manufacture of whisky has not been looked for in the right direction or in the right place. It will be remembered by members of the House we spent a long time at the last session in revising and remodeling the laws intended to prevent frauds upon the revenue in this regard, and what is the result? Why, sir, the frauds have gone on increasing, while the revenue has been diminishing. Everything we have done seems to have made the matter worse.

I assert it is the general belief in the country among the people that no respectable attempt has yet been made by the revenue department to enforce the laws we have now upon the statute-books; that there has on the contrary been an exhibition of weakness and folly and imbecility. There has never been, so far as I am informed, a prosecution carried to the final result even in a civil proceeding, much less in a criminal one, for a violation of the law. Until there is a vigorous effort on the part of the department, it is impossible we can prevent these frauds or derive any considerable revenue from this source.

Now, sir, the true remedy in my opinion lies in the Committee of Ways and Means revising this system to its foundation. Last year we created a horde of inspectors, an inspector for every distillery in the country. Men hired at five dollars a day have been set down in every distillery, and there is no distiller who carries on business of any importance who cannot afford to pay that inspector to aid him in violating the law. He acts as a spy or informer, and the Committee of Ways and Means seem to expect a man employed at this small salary can be placed in a distillery as a protection against fraud. It is a mere waste of time to be legislating in this way.

Mr. HIGBY. Allow me to suggest there is only one inspector in each distillery to watch night and day.

Mr. SLOAN. The whole system is wrong, and until it is reorganized it is idle to expect any considerable revenue.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say in response to one point the gentleman has made he is mistaken in alleging no prosecution has been made. Suits have been brought, but the courts have dismissed the parties on a fine of a sixpence or an imprisonment of an hour. We do not propose to continue the discretion in the court, but now provide the fine shall not be less than a certain amount and the imprisonment shall not be for less than a certain time.

Mr. MAYNARD. In what part of the United States did that administration of the law take place?

Mr. GARFIELD. New York.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman for information, what was the amount collected by this tax?

Mr. GARFIELD. From January to January $37,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Within that time how much whisky was distilled?

Mr. GARFIELD. The general estimate is we have not received the tax on more than two gallons in five.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee have undertaken to perfect our system. Instead of tearing up the whole system, as the gentleman from Wisconsin suggests, we have, I think, established some good safeguards. If this process of continuous distillation be permitted, if we are not to cut up this distillation into several processes so we can examine into them, then they have covered up the chief source of all the frauds upon the revenue. I hope it will not prevail.

Then there is another thing in which we have made a vital change. As the law now stands, one man inspects the whisky in the warehouse and the same man inspects it out of it. He may cover his tracks; he may lie twice and shield himself. We have now two inspectors, one to inspect in, and one to inspect out.

I move that the committee rise to close debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOWWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, amending the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GARFIELD moved that all debate on the pending section of the tax bill in the Committee of the Whole be closed in five minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOWWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the tax bill as the special order.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FARQUHAR. I raise the point of order, that having moved this proposition I am entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has already spoken.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question to the interest of the revenue laws and of our western distillers; and for myself I should not oppose the proposition if I believed it would have the effect to injure honest distillers in the West. But if I understand this question, without professing to have any practical knowledge of the subject, for I have none, the difficulty in placing the necessary instruments within the establishment for the distillation of alcohol is found in the fact that illicit whisky may come into the distillery without paying any tax and go out of it again branded as alcohol or rectified spirits without paying the tax. I do know that such was the case in one instance in my own city under the tax law prior to August, 1866. Now, the object of this amendment is to prevent at least one source of fraud, so that if there are any honest distillers who desire to conduct the business of rectifying whisky they can do so by erecting alongside of the distillery another establishment which will enable them to do it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman let me call his attention to the fact that I am not proposing to allow rectifying under this amendment, but redistillation.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand perfectly that the proposition is to manufacture alcohol by continuous distillation. But I say by allowing that process to go on in one building you open the door whereby alcohol may be distilled, not in the original still which distills the first-proof spirits, but for whisky that is brought illicitly into the building; and it is for that purpose that it is deemed dangerous by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and by the special commissioner appointed for that purpose, to have such processes carried on in the same building.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman propose to legislate to prevent the pursuit of honest industry because some illicit whisky is introduced into distilleries?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course we do not intend to prevent a man from conducting an honest business, but we do propose to throw around the business of manufacturing whisky every possible precaution for the prevention of fraud. And those who are familiar with the subject do say this is one of the greatest avenues of fraud in the internal revenue. For myself, though it may inconvenience the distillers, yet if it is necessary to prevent fraud I am for prohibiting any process of distillation being conducted in a building where proof-spirits are distilled.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. If whisky is brought into the distillery illicitly and made into alcohol, and is inspected and found to be three times the original strength, do you not get three times the tax?

Mr. ALLISON. You would if it was done honestly.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Your machinery will indicate the proof as well as you can indicate the temperature of water.

Mr. ALLISON. Those who have had experience in this matter say it is done dishonestly, and I do know it opens a wide door for fraud where alcohol is distilled in the same building. Now, if the distiller is compelled to remove his proof-spirits from the building to another, and then allow it to pass through this further process of distillation, there are officers who can detect him in any attempt at fraud, because every barrel must be inspected and marked in accordance with the provisions of law. I doubt very much whether there can be a continuous process of distillation; it is a redistillation, and nothing more or less.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

The amendment of Mr. FARQUHAR was disagreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to add at the close of the section the following:

And provided further, That the tax shall not be collected from spirits manufactured in the State of Tennessee and consumed prior to the 1st day of August, 1866.

It is the same proposition I offered to a previous part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BUCKLAND. I move in line three to strike out two dollars and insert fifty cents.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk commenced reading section fourteen.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I move to strike out two dollars and insert one dollar.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that it is too late.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That proof-spirit shall be held and taken to be that alcoholic liquor which contains one half its volume of alcohol of a specific gravity of seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-nine ten thousandths at sixty degrees Fahrenheit; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to adopt, procure, and prescribe for use such hydrometers, weighing and gauging instruments, meters, or other means for ascertaining the strength and quantity of spirits subject to tax, and to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to insure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, and gauging of spirits subject to tax throughout the United States. And in all sales of spirits hereafter made, where not otherwise specially agreed, a gallon shall be taken to be a gallon of first-proof, according to the foregoing standard set forth and declared for the inspection and gauging of spirits throughout the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend that section by inserting after the word "tax," in line nine, the words "or for the prevention or detection of frauds by distillers of spirits;" so that it will read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to adopt, procure, and prescribe for use such hydrometers, weighing and gauging instruments, meters, or other means for ascertaining the strength and quantity of spirits subject to tax, or for the prevention or detection of frauds by distillers of spirits, and to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to insure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, and gauging of spirits subject to tax throughout the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert after the words "United States" the following:

And whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall adopt and prescribe for use any meter or meters, it shall be the duty of every owner, agent, or superintendent of a distillery to make application to the collector of his district for such meter or meters to be used in his distillery, and the same shall be furnished and attached to the distillery at the expense of the distiller, whose duty it shall be to furnish all the pipes, materials, labor, and facilities necessary to complete such attachment in accordance with the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby further authorized to order and require such changes of or additions to distilling apparatus, connecting pumps, or cisterns, or any machinery connected with or used in or on the distiller's premises, or may require to be put on any still, tub, cistern, pipe, or other vessel, such fastening, lock, or seal as he may deem necessary.

Mr. BUCKLAND. I rise to oppose that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to say a word in favor of the amendment. The object of it is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select from a number of meters that are now in process of examination a meter whereby the amount of spirits distilled can be detected either after it assumes the form of distilled spirits or before it assumes the form of distilled spirits, in the shape of wort or mash, and when such meter is selected by the Secretary of the Treasury—of course it will be after approval by scientific men—it is proposed to attach this meter or whatever it may be to the several distilleries.

Mr. BUCKLAND. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa may be all right enough; but I wish to say that I think the great mistake in all this legislation is the attempt to heap burden upon burden on the distillers, instead of directing the attention of the committee to the laws regarding those who administer the revenue laws and infusing into the administration of the law more energy and more honesty.

Now, I can say to gentlemen, that unless they contrive some system by which everybody who desires to do so can enter into the business of distilling, you may rely upon it you cannot for any great length of time sustain this tax upon spirits. I know that to-day, under the present administration of the law, the corn which is raised around the distilleries in my district is taken to New York and there distilled, and the whisky is transported back to Ohio and sold for less than the tax. Why is that? It is not the fault of the law, but it is the fault of the manner in which the law has been administered. It seems to have been administered for the benefit of eastern distillers entirely. Now I wish to state one instance which has occurred in my district, which is pretty largely engaged in distilling.

Mr. DARLING. I would like to ask the price of whisky in the gentleman's district.

Mr. BUCKLAND. I do not know what the price is generally, but I state the fact that alcohol and other spirits have been brought from New York into my district by druggists and others for sale within five and ten miles of the distilleries.

I wish to give one instance of the manner in which the internal revenue department has administered this law during the last year. An inspector at Monroeville went to some four or five distilleries and inspected their high wines, making a deduction, as he claimed, of five gallons on a cask for shrinking. He did this at his own instance, but afterward it was found out by the assessor, and those distilleries were all seized. Now, here is the point in the case: the inspector was arrested and taken to Cleveland, but was discharged from custody and continued in office afterward for months. He was relieved from all blame, although he did this at his own instance, as is asserted by as honorable men as any that sit upon this floor, for I know some of these distillers, and know them to be honorable men. He was continued in office, and these distilleries, which were seized nearly a year ago, are still under seizure and are not allowed to run. Now, I say that just as long as you administer the law by such means and through such agents, and those agents are sustained in frauds of this sort, and the whole penalty is imposed on the distillers, you cannot expect to collect the tax.

Now, I know that some of these distillers pay their taxes honorably and honestly. As I said before, some of them are just as honest men and would just as soon undertake to cheat the Government in any way as any man upon this floor, and no sooner. But they are compelled now to stop their business, because the law is administered for the benefit of eastern distilleries and refineries, so that our western distillers are ruined. You may pass what law you please; but unless it is administered honestly and justly it will fail.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, for the purpose of replying briefly to what has been said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUCKLAND.]

Members will bear in mind that this law went into operation on the 1st of August last. It was a law which had been carefully prepared by a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Members will also bear in mind that about that time came our political troubles, and we had a change of nearly all the revenue officers in the country; and I say here without the fear of contradiction that those changes, in my opinion, cost the people of this country a loss of at least $50,000,000 in the way of revenue.

Mr. HILL. Yes, and $100,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know but the loss was $100,000,000, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. HILL] says. A great deal of the trouble in the administration of this whisky law is to be found in the fact that dishonest men were appointed by the President of the United States to administer the law, and I will say here that I have been informed that in most if not all of these cases these appointments were made against the protest of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, I believe this law would be successfully administered if there was somewhere a power to remove dishonest officers. But I am informed and believe that that power does not lie with the Secretary of the Treasury nor with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but is controlled and directed by the President to destroy the party that elected him; and a great deal of this difficulty arises from that fact.

Mr. CONKLING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Secretary of the Treasury is compelled to submit to the appointment of men to discharge duties like these, which men he believes to be unfit for the places they occupy?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not say that precisely. But I do say that I have been informed that these changes were made against the protest of the Secretary of the Treasury; if that is not true, then the Secretary of the Treasury should be held responsible for the $50,000,000 of revenue lost to the people of this country.

Mr. CONKLING. I propose for one to hold the Secretary of the Treasury responsible to this extent: if it be true that there are men who were set to do this work against his protest, work for which he is responsible, and he submits to it, then he holds his place upon terms degrading to his manhood, terms to which he would not submit if he had proper self-respect. That is all I have to say about the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is quite enough.

Mr. PAINE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] one question. I wish to ask him whether he knows of a single instance where the Secretary of the Treasury has permitted a man to be appointed as a revenue officer whom he believed to be unfit for the office to be appointed by the President against his protest?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to waste much time upon this point. I will only say that I know a great many men have been appointed who are totally unfit for their positions.

Mr. CONKLING. So do I.

Mr. ALLISON. And whether with or without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, they should not be in the positions which they now occupy.

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman a moment ago said that he believed the Secretary of the Treasury was honest in his appointments.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not mean to say that is so, because I do not know how that is; I have no precise information upon that subject.

Now, I desire to say just one word in vindication of the action of the Committee of Ways and Means upon this subject. We endeavored to throw around the law penal provisions which would reach dishonest men. I do not know whether we have succeeded in accomplishing that object. But gentlemen will bear in mind that it is impossible if not impolitic to change the entire machinery of the law in a session of three months, especially when that law only went into operation but three or four months before. The object of the committee has been merely to endeavor to perfect the existing law, and leave to another and a longer session of Congress the duty of further investigation and modification.

I now move that the committee rise, for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 1161, amending the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes nineteen; noes not counted.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that when the House again resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the tax bill, all debate on the pending section be closed in five minutes.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1161, to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think that the attention of the officers of the Government having in charge the appointment of inspectors cannot be too often or too emphatically called to the manner in which that power is exercised. Now, sir, I know one appointment in the State of Iowa of a man totally unfit for the position. The reasons upon which I base the statement of his unfitness I have stated in person to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking him to look into the case for the benefit of the revenue. I have not been making any recommendation as to whom he should appoint in place of this improper official; I have asked him to make a removal in the case solely for the benefit of the Government. This was some three or four weeks ago. So far as I have any information that person still remains an inspector in charge of that district. I referred the Secretary also to the proofs, on file in the War Department, of the unfitness of the person for the position. Yet up to this day, so far as I have any knowledge, no attempt has been made by the Secretary to remove that person from office.

I might speak of other cases. So far as I have knowledge of persons occupying these positions, the most unfit persons who have been presented for appointments have as a general rule been selected; and I think that the rule will apply pretty generally throughout the country. Now, sir, that is misconduct upon the part of public officers which deserves at least a thorough airing, if not something more, in this House.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will permit me a word, I desire to say that the only thing which surprises me is that the gentleman is at all astonished at such a circumstance.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I cannot say that I am astonished at it. If I have said so, I take that back. Indeed, I have already negated such an idea by the declaration that I believe what I have stated to be the general rule all over the country. I only make this statement now thus publicly that the country may know and that it may go on record that the Secretary of the Treasury, in permitting the officer to whom I have referred to retain his position, does it with the knowledge that he is not a proper person to hold the office.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say that the case referred to by the gentleman from Iowa is only one of thousands. In my own district a collector who had been most faithful and efficient, and who had collected about a million and a half of dollars in about a year and a half was removed and another man whose sole recommendation for the place was that he had served to the utmost of his ability in the Thirty-Eighth Congress in hostility to the administration of Mr. Lincoln, upon the principle of "not another man nor another dollar for the support of the war," and had been twice beaten since for a place here by the loyal people of my district, and who, in the canvass of 1864, could make use of expressions like the following: "The Republican party has renominated for the presidency Abraham Lincoln, and if they had taken the devil from the fumes of hell they could not have done worse," in a public speech and in the hearing of two thousand people, ladies and gentlemen, of the highest respectability.

A new distillery inspector was appointed, and in a very short time thereafter the distillery, which before had been paying large revenues to the Government, if I am not mistaken more than one half the entire revenue of the district, was seized for violation of the revenue laws by the Government authorities.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy a minute or two in putting a further fact upon the records of the House and endeavoring to illustrate by a circumstance which came directly within my knowledge, why the revenue laws are not efficiently carried out and why the taxes of the Government are not properly collected.

In the district which I have the honor to represent upon this floor, within the last four weeks, nine men, nine of the best, of the most intelligent, the most upright and most industrious in my district, were displaced from the positions of assistant assessors simply for political purposes. I make that charge against the Secretary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLISON's amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation who distills or manufactures spirits or alcohol from grain, who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, for distillation or the production of spirits, shall be deemed a distiller under this act. And the making or keeping by any person of grain, mash, wort, or beer, prepared or fit for distillation, together with the possession by such person of a still or other apparatus capable of use for distilling; upon the same premises, shall be deemed and taken as presumptive evidence that such person is a distiller within the meaning of this act.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved in the third line to strike out "from grain;" in the fifth line to strike out "under this act;" in the sixth line after the word "wash" to insert "wort;" and in the tenth and eleventh lines to strike out "within the meaning of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wines by any process, or who, by mixing distilled spirits or wine with other materials, manufactures any spurious, imitation, or compound liquors for sale, under the name of whiskey, brandy, gin, rum, wine, "spirits," or "wine biters," or any other name, shall be regarded as a rectifier under this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall carry on the business of a distiller or rectifier without having paid the special tax, as required by law, he shall for every such offense be liable to a fine of not less than double the tax imposed upon the spirits distilled, or double the special tax due for the spirits rectified by such person, or found upon the premises hereinafter mentioned, and to imprisonment for a term not less than one nor more than two years; and all spirituous liquors so distilled or rectified, or owned by such person, or found as hereinafter mentioned, and all materials for making or preparing the same, and all vessels containing the same, and all stills or other apparatus capable of being used for distilling, owned by such person, or found upon any premises where such business shall be carried on in violation of this section, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized by the collector or deputy collector of the district within which such offense is committed.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in, or intending to be engaged in, the business of a distiller or rectifier, shall give notice in writing, subscribed by him, to the assessor of the district within which such business is to be carried on, stating the name or style under which the name or names, and the place or places of residence of the person or persons by whom, and the place where said business is to be carried on, and whether of distilling or rectifying. In case of a distiller, the notice shall also state the kind of stills, boilers, and other implements to be used, and the capacity of each. In case of any change in the location, form, capacity, ownership, agency, or superintendence of such distillery, stills, boilers, or other implements, like notice shall be given, as aforesaid, within twenty-four hours of such change. Such person shall also give bond, in form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with sureties approved by the collector of the district, who may approve the same if he shall be satisfied, by affidavits made on said bond, of the sufficiency of said sureties, conditioned that he will comply with all the requirements of the law in relation to distilled spirits. The penal sum of such bond shall not be more than double the amount of the tax on the spirits that can be distilled by such still or stills or other implements during a period of fifteen days. Said collector shall refuse to approve said bond when, in his judgment, the incumbrances upon the distillery and premises are such as to impair the security for the collection of the tax, or when the refusal of the distiller would enable the distiller to defraud the revenue; and in case of such refusal, the distiller may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final. A new bond may be required in case of the death, insolvency, or removal of either of the sureties, or in any other contingency, at the discretion of the collector. Any person failing or refusing to give the notice or bond hereinbefore required, or giving a false or fraudulent notice, shall be liable to the fine and forfeitures provided in the last preceding section.

Mr. ALLISON moved in line three to strike out "and rectifier;" in line eight to strike out "or rectifying," and in line eleven to strike out "of each" and insert "thereof," meaning thereby the total number of wine gallons of spirits which the entire distillation is capable of producing in each day of twenty-four hours."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That no person shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel, for the purpose of distilling in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors, vinegar, or either, are manufactured or produced, or where sugars or syrups are refined, or where liquors of any description are retailed, or any other business is carried on, or in any dwelling-house; and every person who shall use such still, boiler, or other vessel, for the purpose of distilling, as aforesaid, in any building or other premises where the above specified articles are manufactured, produced, or other business is carried on, or in any dwelling-house, or who shall procure the same to be done, shall forfeit such stills, boilers, or other vessels so used, and all the spirits distilled, and pay a fine of $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than one year, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall manufacture any still, boiler, or other vessel, to be used for the purpose of distilling, shall, before the same is removed from the place of manufacture, notify the collector where such still, boiler, or other vessel is to be used or sent, and by whom it is to be used, and of its capacity, and the time when the same is to be sent or set up; and no such still, boiler, or other vessel shall be set up without the permit in writing of the collector for that purpose; and any person who shall set up such still, boiler, or other vessel, without first obtaining a permit from the collector of the district in which such still, boiler, or other vessel is intended to be used, or who shall fail to give such notice, shall pay in either case the sum of $500, and shall forfeit the distilling apparatus thus removed or set up in violation of law: Provided, That saleratus may be made or manufactured in any building or on any premises where spirits are distilled: Provided further, That any boiler used in generating steam or heating water to be used in such distillery may be located in any other building or on any other premises to be connected with such still or boiling tubs, by suitable pipes or other apparatus, or the steam from such boiler in the distillery may be conveyed to other premises so used for manufacturing or other purposes.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved in line three to insert "distilled spirits;" in line three after "premises," to insert "lot, farm, or tract of land adjoining and owned by such person;" and in line five to strike out "there are" and insert "there is."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move in line twenty to strike out "such" and insert "any."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I am not certain that is correct. "Such" refers to something specific.

Mr. DARLING. "Any" refers to any still anywhere. I withdraw the amendment, however.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that this section be reserved for future amendment.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That every person making or distilling spirits, or owning any still, boiler, or other vessel used for the purpose of distilling spirits, or having such still, boiler, or other vessel so used under his superintendence, either as agent or owner, or using any such still, boiler, or other vessel, shall, from day to day, make or cause to be made daily true and exact entry in a book, to be kept in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of the number of pounds or gallons of materials used for the purpose of producing spirits, the number of proof gallons of spirits distilled, the number of proof gallons placed in warehouse, and the number of gallons sold, with the proof thereof, and the name and place of business or residence of the person to whom sold; and shall also on the first, eleventh, and twenty-first day of each month, or within five days thereafter, render to the assessor or assistant assessor an account in duplicate, taken from his books in the particulars hereinbefore recited, and verified by oath, of all the facts occurring after the last day of account preceding. The entries to be made in the books of the distiller as aforesaid shall, upon the several days when the returns are made, as provided, be verified by oath or affirmation of the person or persons by whom such entries shall have been made, in the presence of the assessor or assistant assessor, or other proper officer, who shall append thereto his certificate of the execution of the same. The owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery shall, in case the original entries required to be made in his books by this act shall not have been made by himself, subjoin to the certificate of the person by whom they were made the following oath or affirmation: "I do certify that to the best of my knowledge and belief the foregoing entries are just and true, and that I have taken all the means in my power to make them so." Said book shall always be open for the inspection of any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, revenue agents, or inspectors, and any premises where distilling shall be carried on shall be open to said officers, or either of them, at all times. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall for every such offense be liable to a fine of $500. Any person who shall render an account under the provisions of this section which shall be false or fraudulent shall be liable to a fine of not less than $500, and to imprisonment not less than six months.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the word "and," in line thirty-two, and to insert in line thirty-three, after the word "so," the following:

And that no more spirits than are entered therein have been distilled at the distillery during the time covered by such entries.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend by adding the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint inspectors for all establishments for redistilling or rectifying, the same as are now appointed for distillers.

I simply desire to state that it was announced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the law as it now stands authorizes the appointment of inspectors. My understanding was then, and is still, that he was mistaken.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I put the question directly to him, and he insisted that the law did authorize the appointment of inspectors for these rectifying establishments or redistilling establishments, if there are any such. I can see no reason for making a difference between distillers and rectifiers. These parties who are committing frauds in the rectification or redistillation should be detected and punished the same as you detect and punish frauds in distillation.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That amendment does not come in here properly; we have got past the provision to which it relates.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope the gentleman will not defeat the proposition by an excuse of that kind.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to strike out the word "certify," in line thirty, and substitute therefor the words "swear (or affirm,)" so as to make it conform to the previous language. It is an oath, and the language should be "I do swear (or affirm,)" and not "I do certify."

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That the owner of any distillery shall provide, at his own expense, a warehouse suitable for the storage of bonded spirits of his own manufacture only; or he may provide a secure room in a suitable building to be used as such warehouse; but no dwelling-house shall be used for such purpose; and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls thereof, leading to any other room or building used for any other purpose, or into the distillery; and such warehouse or room, when approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, on report of the district collector, is hereby declared to be a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be used only for the storing of spirits manufactured by the owner, agent, or superintendent of such distillery, and shall be under the custody of the inspector, as hereinafter provided; and shall be kept locked up by the officer in charge, at all times, except when he shall be present; and the tax on the spirits stored in such warehouse shall be paid before removal from such warehouse, unless removed in pursuance of law. And the owner of such warehouse shall execute a general bond to the United States, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the collector; and such bond shall be for not less than the amount of taxes on the spirits to be covered thereby, and in such form, and containing such conditions, as shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be changed or renewed from time to time in regard to the amount and sureties thereof as the collector, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require.

Mr. McKEE. I move to strike out the whole of the foregoing section on these grounds: first, there is already a provision in the law for bonded warehouses for storage of whisky in each one of these districts; and secondly, it compels every small distiller all over the country to expend several hundred dollars to build a bonded warehouse, when within a mile of his distillery perhaps there may be such an establishment already for the storage of liquors.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery established as hereinbefore provided, shall erect, in a room or building to be provided and used for that purpose, and for no other, two or more receiving cisterns, each to be at least of sufficient capacity to hold the spirits distilled during the day of twenty-four hours, into one of which shall be conveyed each day the spirits manufactured in said distillery during that day; and such cisterns shall be so constructed as to leave an open space of at least three feet between the tops thereof and the floor or roof above, and of not less than eighteen inches between the bottoms thereof and the floor below, and shall be separated in such a manner as will enable the inspector to pass around the same, and shall be connected with the outlet of the stills, boilers, or other vessels used for distilling by suitable pipes or other apparatus, so constructed as always to be exposed to the view of the inspector; such cisterns and the room in which they are contained shall be in charge of and under the lock and seal of the inspector; and on the third day after the spirits are conveyed into such cisterns the same shall be drawn off into casks or other packages, under the supervision of the inspector, and shall be immediately inspected, gauged, and proved; and the casks or packages marked as herein provided shall be removed directly to the bonded warehouse before mentioned: Provided, That the spirits may be drawn off from said cisterns at any time previous to the third day, if so desired by the owner, agent, or superintendent of such distillery; and all locks and seals required by law shall be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the expense of the owner of the distillery or warehouse, and the keys shall always be in the custody of the inspector or assistant inspector, or the officer having charge of the distillery or warehouse.

Mr. McKEE. I move to strike out the whole of that section, and I desire to make a few remarks in support of that motion. This section provides for the building of receiving-cisterns, which are to be connected by pipes leading from the distillery into another department outside, a department over which the distiller has no control whatever. Now, sir, the manner in which whisky is made throughout my country requires the actual superintendence of the distiller over the product of his manufactory from the time it begins to run until it stops. He has to be constantly there to test the liquor. These men have not all these improved scientific arrangements that are contemplated in this bill, and it is not probable they ever will have them. The Treasury Department has not yet succeeded in fixing upon any set of instruments by which this thing of proof can be directly ascertained without continued inspection.

A very large majority of the House, and I think certainly a large majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, seem to possess very little practical knowledge in regard to the manner in which whisky is really made. They are probably far better posted in regard to the manner of destroying the article than the manner of producing it.

This section, in addition to that, provides that these cisterns shall not be under the control of the distiller, so that he can have no knowledge and no power of ascertaining whether he is making whisky or not. It is not possible he can ascertain or know anything in regard to it.

The section provides furthermore that the spirit shall be run into this cistern continually for three whole days. As I said before, the distiller must constantly test this whisky, and when it gets to a point which does not show proof, then he must cut off the pipes, or the whole whisky he is making will be ruined and destroyed forever.

This system would destroy all the small manufactories, and I trust, therefore, that the section will be stricken out.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will only say that this section is word for word the law as it now stands, with the exception of three small words, which have been stricken out to make it more perspicuous.

Mr. McKEE. I understand that it is the old law, and therefore I hope it will be stricken out.

The question was taken on Mr. McKEE's motion, and there were—ayes 22, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that by general consent the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, to strike out this section, be agreed to, and then we can have a vote upon it in the House. [Cries of "Agreed."] The question was again taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury an inspector for every distillery established according to law, who shall take an oath faithfully to perform his duties; and who shall take an account of all the meal, vegetable productions, molasses, sugar, or other substances received into the distillery, or upon the premises, and the quantity put into the mash tub or otherwise used; and shall inspect, gauge, and prove all the spirits distilled, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and shall take charge of the bonded warehouse established for the distillery in conformity to law; and such warehouse shall be in the joint custody of such inspector and the owner thereof, his agent or superintendent; and when any spirits shall be placed in such warehouse, an entry therefor, in such form as shall be prescribed by regulations, shall immediately be made and signed by the owner of said spirits, and shall have indorsed thereon a certificate of the inspector, that the spirits mentioned have been duly inspected and received in said warehouse, and such entry and certificate shall be filed with the collector of the district; and said inspector shall not engage in any other business while employed as an inspector, and shall be paid five dollars per day for the time during which he is engaged; and the amount of his compensation shall be assessed by the assessor upon the distiller, and returned to the collector monthly for collection. And in case the duties of such inspector shall be greater at any time than he can perform, upon the joint application of the inspector and owner of such distillery, the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint an assistant inspector; and upon the refusal of the distiller to join in such application, the collector shall decide as to such necessity; and such assistant inspector shall qualify in the same manner and be subject to the same penalties as the inspector, and he shall be paid in the same manner as the inspector, at a rate not exceeding the sum of three dollars per day while so employed; and in case of disagreement as to the necessity of retaining the services of such assistant, between the owner of the distillery and the inspector the collector shall decide as to such necessity, and his decision in the matter shall be final. And in case of absence by sickness, or from any other cause, of such inspector or assistant, the collector may designate a person to take temporary charge of such distillery and warehouse, who shall during such absence perform the duties, receive the same rate of pay, and be paid in the same manner as said inspector or assistant for the time he may be so employed; and the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery who shall use, cause or permit to be used, any materials for the purpose of producing spirits or shall distill or remove any spirits in the absence of the inspector or assistant, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of taxes on the spirits so produced, distilled, or removed, and, in addition thereto, be liable to a fine of $1,000, to be recovered in the manner provided for other penalties; and any person who shall ship, transport, or remove any spirituous or fermented liquors or wines, under any other than the proper name or brand known to the trade as designating the kind and quality of the contents of the casks or packages containing the same, or who shall cause the same to be done, shall forfeit the same, and shall, on conviction thereof, be subject to pay a fine of $500: Provided further, That such inspectors may be assigned to duty at other distilleries than those to which they were respectively appointed.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I move to amend that section by inserting after the word "Treasury" in the second line the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" so that it will read:

"That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an inspector for every distillery established according to law, &c."

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the gentleman that he better strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "President of the United States." I do not think the Secretary of the Treasury could appoint officers by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. It cannot be done under the Constitution.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. McKEE. I move to strike out in lines twenty-four, twenty-five, and twenty-six the words "and the amount of his compensation shall be assessed by the assessor upon the distiller, and returned to the collector monthly for collection" and to insert in lieu thereof "and the amount of compensation shall be paid by the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I move to insert after the word "law" in the third line the following proviso:

And provided further, That such distillery as does not manufacture more than two hundred gallons per day no inspector shall be appointed, but the same to be under the supervision of the assessor, to whom the manufacturer shall make returns, under oath, of the daily transactions; and the expenses of the supervision to be borne by such manufacturer; not to exceed, however, five dollars per day; and that all inspectors, appointed under the provisions of this act, shall give bonds in the sum of not less than $1,000, with security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury or assessor of the district, for the faithful discharge of his duty.

I am willing to modify my amendment so as to conform to that just adopted on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE,] so that this payment shall be made by the Government; but my main object is to dispense with some of the inspectors in the small distilleries in the country, and to prevent irresponsible persons from being appointed unless they give security; because, as it now is, the hardest cases in the country are appointed to these offices, and they not only defraud the Government, but everybody else.

Mr. CONKLING. I oppose the amendment and ask for a vote upon it.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out in the second line the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert in lieu thereof the words "President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

I would merely remark in regard to this amendment that I would have been content to associate the Senate with the Secretary of the Treasury, but gentlemen of this House who are lawyers, and very good ones, have entertained doubts whether that could be done.

We all know that this office is a very important one, and I have reasons to know that men are placed in offices of this sort who are entirely incompetent and unworthy of trust and who never could be confirmed by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits shall, before the same are removed from the distillery to the bonded warehouse, be inspected and proved by the inspector of the distillery, after the same has been drawn into casks or packages, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons, wine measure, and said inspector shall mark by cutting, branding, or otherwise, upon the cask or package containing such spirits, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the quantity and proof of the contents of such cask or package, with the date of inspection, the collection district, the name of the inspector, and the name of the distiller, and also the number of each cask in progressive order, such progressive number for every distiller, to begin with number one with the first cask or package inspected after this act takes effect, and subsequently with number one with the first cask inspected on or after the 1st day of January in each year, and no two or more casks warehoused in the same year by the same distiller shall be marked with the same number, and no cask or package of spirits shall be taken therefrom on which has not been marked all the several particulars aforesaid, in the manner required by law. And the inspector in charge of any distillery shall make a prompt return of the name of the distiller and of all spirits inspected by him in accordance with the provisions of law, to the collector, and a duplicate thereof to the assessor of the district.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That general bonded warehouses, for the storage of spirits or other merchandise allowed by law to be placed in bond to secure the payment of the internal revenue tax thereon, or the exportation thereof, may be established under such rules and regulations, and upon the execution of such bonds, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and shall be in the immediate custody of storekeepers who shall be appointed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, whose compensation shall be paid monthly to the collector of the district by the owners or proprietors of such warehouse, and shall not exceed the rates which may be allowed to storekeepers of bonded warehouses established under the laws and regulations relating to customs: Provided, That any article manufactured in a bonded warehouse established under the one hundred and sixty-eighth section of the internal revenue act of June 30, 1864, and located in any of the Atlantic States, may be removed therefrom for transportation to a customs bonded warehouse at any port on the Pacific coast of the United States, for the purpose only of being exported therefrom, under such rules and regulations and upon the execution of such bonds or other security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in every collection district where the same be necessary, one or more general inspectors of spirits, who shall be required to inspect, gauge, and prove any distilled spirits to be removed from any bonded warehouse before such removal, or received in or delivered from any general bonded warehouse, and make prompt return thereof to the collector under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed, and such general inspector shall be entitled to receive such fee as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for each and every proof gallon gauged and proved by him; and any owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery or bonded warehouse who shall refuse to admit such inspector upon such premises, so far as it may be necessary for the performance of his duties, or who shall obstruct any inspector in the performance of his duties, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500, to be recovered in the manner provided for recovery of other penalties imposed by this act.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax upon any distilled spirits, by changing any marks upon any such cask or package, or in any other manner whatever, or who shall put into such cask or package spirits of greater strength than that inspected and certified to by the inspector, shall pay double the amount of tax on each proof gallon of the quantity of such spirits, to be assessed and collected as in case of other taxes, and forfeit and pay as a penalty the additional sum of $500 for each cask or package so altered or changed, to be recovered as provided by law; and any person who shall defraud or attempt to defraud the United States of the revenue or tax arising from distilled spirits or any part thereof, or who shall, with intent to defraud the United States of such revenue or tax, make any false or fraudulent entry, certificate, or return, or place any false or fraudulent mark upon any cask or package, shall, on conviction thereof, pay a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned for not less than two nor more than five years; and any person who shall fraudulently use any cask or package bearing inspection marks, for the purpose of selling any other spirits than that so inspected, or for selling spirits of a quantity or quality different from that so inspected, shall be imprisoned for a term of not less than six months, and shall pay a fine of not less than $100 for each cask or package so used, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall knowingly purchase or sell, with inspection marks thereon, any cask or package, after the same has been used for distilled spirits, or who shall fraudulently omit to erase or obliterate the inspection marks upon any such package or cask at the time of emptying the same, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $200 for every cask so purchased or used, or on which the marks are not so obliterated. And any person, other than the inspector or his assistant, who shall use any inspector's brands or plates upon any cask or package containing or purporting to contain distilled spirits, or any person who shall knowingly make or use any counterfeit or spurious brand or plate upon any cask or package of distilled spirits, as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall pay a fine of $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than two nor more than five years, and such cask or package, with its contents, shall be forfeited to the United States. And any inspector who shall permit any person not employed by him to use any of his brands or plates, or who shall negligently or willfully leave such brands or plates where they can be used by any other person than those who may be in his employ, shall pay a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, in the discretion of the court. And any inspector who shall employ any owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery or warehouse under his supervision, or who shall employ any person in the service of such owner, agent, or superintendent, to use his plates or brands, or to discharge any of the duties imposed by law upon such inspector, shall, for each offense so committed, be subject to the fine last mentioned. And every owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery shall, at all times when required, supply all assistance, lights, ladders, tools, staging, or other things necessary for inspecting the premises, stock, tools, and apparatus belonging to such person, and shall open all doors, and open for examination all boxes, packages, and all casks, barrels, and other vessels not under the control of the inspector, when required so to do by any duly authorized officer, under a penalty of $200 for any refusal or neglect so to do.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend this section by adding the following:

Provided, That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, inspectors for all establishments for rectifying the same as for distilling.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I move to strike out the entire section.

Mr. McKEE. Why?

Mr. TRIMBLE. I do not think it ought to be there.

The motion was not agreed to.

No further amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That any distilled spirits which have been inspected, gauged, proved, and marked by the inspector, according to the provisions of law, may be removed without the payment of tax from the bonded warehouse owned by the distiller, under such rules and regulations, and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, and may be transported to any general bonded warehouse used for the storage of distilled spirits, established under the internal revenue laws and regulations, after having been branded as follows: "U. S. bonded warehouse, — district, —; for transportation to — district, —" (inserting in each case the number of the district and name of the State); and immediately after the arrival of such distilled spirits in the district of the collector to which it was to be transferred, it shall again be inspected by a general inspector, and placed in a bonded warehouse; and the tax shall be paid on the difference between the number of proof gallons as stated in the bond given at the place of shipment, and the number received at the warehouse, less the allowance for leakage, as established by the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and, except for actual destruction by unavoidable accident, by the elements, or by the public enemy, no other allowance for loss shall be made; and any distilled spirits entered in a general bonded warehouse shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and be chargeable with the same costs and expenses, in all respects, to which imported goods deposited in public store or bonded warehouse may be subject, and shall be in charge of a storekeeper, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who, with the owner and proprietor of the warehouse, shall have the joint custody of all the distilled spirits so stored in said warehouse, and all labor on the same shall be performed by the owner or proprietor of the warehouse, under the supervision of the officer in charge of the same, and at the expense of said owner or proprietor. And the same fees shall be paid for the execution of all papers, instruments, and documents relating to the exportation of any spirits or other merchandise, as are charged to exporters for like services in the custom-house; and all expense and services required in the removal, transfer, and shipment of the same for export shall be paid by the owner thereof: Provided, That any distilled spirits may be withdrawn from a bonded warehouse, after having been inspected and gauged by a general inspector, and after the payment to the collector of internal revenue for the tax imposed by law; and when so delivered, shall be branded "U. S. bonded warehouse, tax paid," or may be removed from said warehouse without the payment of the tax for the purpose of being exported, or for the purpose of being rectified, or redistilled, canned, or put into other packages, after the quantity and proof of the spirits to be removed has been ascertained and inspected as required by law, under such rules and regulations and the execution of such bonds or other security as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe; but such removal of bonded spirits for the purpose of being rectified, redistilled, or put into other packages, shall be allowed but once on the same spirits; and all spirits so removed for rectification, rectification, or change of package, shall be returned to the same warehouse, and shall again be inspected; and the tax shall be paid to the said collector on any deficiency or reduction beyond three per cent. And upon spirits removed under bond for the purpose of being rectified or rectified, or change of package as aforesaid, as herein provided, the duty upon such allowance shall be paid, together with the taxes imposed by law upon such spirits, in case such spirits shall be withdrawn for consumption or sale, or for transportation without being exported.

And no drawback shall be allowed on any distilled spirits on which the tax has been paid; but nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent the manufacture in bond for exportation, without the payment of taxes, of medicines, preparations, compositions, perfumery, cosmetics, cordials, and other liquors manufactured wholly or in part of domestic spirits, as provided by law.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That any distilled spirits may be removed from bonded warehouse, for the purpose of being exported, upon the order of the superintendent of exports for the port whence the same are to be exported; and such order shall state the port to which such spirits are to be shipped, the name of the vessel, the number of proof gallons, and the marks of the casks or packages; and such spirits shall be branded "U. S. bonded warehouse, for export," and shall be put on board the vessel in or by which they are to be exported, under the superintendence of a general inspector, and placed under the supervision of an officer of the customs, after a bond with good and sufficient sureties shall have been given in such form and containing such conditions as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. And such bond shall be canceled upon the presentation of the proper certificate that said spirits have been landed at the port named in said bond, or at any other port without the jurisdiction of the United States, or upon satisfactory proof that after shipment the spirits have been lost. And at any port where there shall be no superintendent of exports, all the duties and services required of superintendents of exports and drawback shall devolve upon and be performed by the collector of internal revenue designated to have charge of exportation.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall remove any distilled spirits from the place where the same is distilled, otherwise than into a bonded warehouse as provided by law, shall be liable to a fine of double the amount of the tax imposed thereon, and to imprisonment for not less than three months. All distilled spirits so removed, and all distilled spirits found elsewhere than in a bonded warehouse, not having been removed from such warehouse according to law, shall be forfeited to the United States, or may, immediately upon discovery, be seized, and, after assessment of the tax thereon, may be sold by the collector for the tax and expenses of seizure and sale. And proceedings upon such seizure shall be according to existing provisions of law in relation to distraint, and in conformity with any regulations which shall be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant of said spirits to show that the requirements of law in regard to the same have been complied with. And any person who shall aid or abet in the removal of distilled spirits from any distillery other than to a bonded warehouse as provided by law, or shall aid in the concealment of such spirits so removed, shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, and to imprisonment for not less than three nor more than twelve months. And any person who shall remove, or shall aid or abet in the removal of any distilled spirits from any bonded warehouse, otherwise than is allowed by law, shall be liable to a fine of not more than $1,000, and to imprisonment for not less than three nor more than twelve months.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who shall add or cause to be added any ingredients to any spirits before the tax imposed by law shall have been paid thereon, for the purpose of creating a fictitious proof, shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of $1,000 for each cask or package so adulterated, and be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than two years, in the discretion of the court; and such cask or package, with its contents, shall be forfeited to the United States.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 32. And be it further enacted, That every rectifier or wholesale dealer in distilled spirits shall enter, daily, in a book or books kept for the purpose, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the number of proof gallons of spirits purchased or received, of whom purchased and received, the name of the distiller, the names of the inspectors, the number on the cask or package, and the number of proof gallons sold or delivered, and to whom, and shall mark with a stencil-plate, on each package of five gallons or more of distilled or rectified spirits sold by him, his name and place of business; and every rectifier or wholesale dealer who shall neglect or refuse to keep such record, or shall omit to mark each cask or package as aforesaid, shall forfeit all spirits in his possession, together with the apparatus, tools, and implements used, and be subject to a fine of $500, and imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 33. And be it further enacted, That any person owning any distilled spirits intended for sale, manufactured prior to the time when this act takes effect, exceeding fifty gallons altogether, shall notify in writing the collector of the district wherein such spirits may be stored, held, or owned, within sixty days thereafter, to gauge and prove the same; and upon the receipt of said notice the collector shall cause said spirits to be gauged and proved by a general inspector, and the casks or packages containing the same to be marked by him in the following manner: Manufactured prior to —, 186—. And, Inspector.

— District. Inspected —, 186—. And no spirits so manufactured, held, or owned, shall be gauged, proved, or marked in any cistern or other stationary vessel, but shall be gauged, proved, and marked only in barrels, casks, or packages in which the same shall have been placed. Upon the receipt of the return the collector shall immediately forward to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a copy thereof; and any person holding or owning such spirits, and refusing or neglecting to notify the collector, as in this section provided, shall forfeit the same and pay the sum of $500, to be collected in the manner provided by law for the collection of other penalties. No distilled spirits on which the tax has been paid shall be stored or allowed to remain on any distillery premises, under the penalty of a forfeiture of all spirits so found. And all spirits, after being removed from the original packages in which they were inspected and gauged into other packages for purposes of rectification, redistillation, or change of proof, shall again be inspected and gauged and properly branded; and the absence of an inspector's brand shall be taken and held as sufficient cause or evidence upon which any spirits so found may be forfeited. And any person who shall change the character of any spirits, either by rectification, mixing, or otherwise, after they have been duly inspected and marked as hereinbefore provided, and place the same in other packages, for consumption or sale, without first stamping or branding upon such package, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the word "rectified," shall forfeit such spirits, and the same may be seized by the collector or deputy collector of the district where such spirits may be found, or by such other collector or deputy collector as may be specially authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for that purpose. And any person who shall so brand any package containing spirits, knowing the taxes thereon have not been paid, shall forfeit such spirits, and be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned for not more than two years, at the discretion of the court.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 34. And be it further enacted, That the owner of any oil refinery may provide, at his own expense, a warehouse, in conformity with such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and such warehouse, when approved by the collector, is hereby declared a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be used only for storing refined coal oil or naphtha, and be under the custody of the collector or his deputy. And the duty on coal oil or naphtha stored in such warehouse shall be paid before it is removed from such warehouse, unless removed in pursuance of law. And all distilled or refined coal oil, distillate, benzine or benzole, and naphtha, upon which an excise tax is imposed by law, may, after being inspected, gauged, proved, and marked by the inspector according to the provisions of this act, be removed, without payment of the tax under such rules and regulations, and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The said oil or naphtha so removed shall be transferred directly from the distillery or refinery to a bonded warehouse, established in conformity with law and Treasury regulations, and may be transported from such warehouse to any one other bonded warehouse used for the storage of coal oil or naphtha. And after the arrival of such coal oil or naphtha at the bonded warehouse within the district of the assessor to which it has been transferred, it shall be again inspected, and the tax shall be assessed and paid on any deficiency or reduction of the number of gallons beyond such allowance or leakage as may be established by the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, received at the warehouse from the number of gallons as stated in the bond given at the place of shipment. And any coal oil or naphtha in the public warehouses shall be subject to the same rules and regulations and be chargeable with the same costs and expenses in all respects to which imported goods deposited in public store or bonded warehouse may be subject; and shall be in charge of a proper officer, to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, who, with the owner and proprietor of the warehouse, shall have the joint custody of all the oil or naphtha so stored in said warehouse, which shall be at the risk of the owner of the said oil or naphtha. And all labor in the same shall be performed by the owner or proprietor of the warehouse, under the supervision of the officer in charge of the same, and at the expense of said owner or proprietor of the warehouse; and the same fees shall be paid for exports as are charged to exporters for like services in the custom-house. And no drawback shall in any case be allowed on any coal oil or naphtha, upon which a tax shall have been paid, either before or after it shall have been placed in a bonded warehouse: Provided, That any coal oil or naphtha may be withdrawn from the bonded warehouse after payment to the collector of internal revenue of the tax imposed by law, or may be removed without payment of the tax for the purpose of being exported, or for the purpose of being distilled or naphtha to be removed has been ascertained and inspected according to the provisions of law, under such rules and regulations and the execution of such bond or other security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. And any oil or naphtha so removed for distillation shall be returned to the warehouse, and shall be again inspected, and the tax shall be paid to the said collector on any deficiency of reduction beyond the allowance for loss by redistillation established by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in the number of gallons received at the warehouse for the purpose of being exported as aforesaid.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 35. And be it further enacted, That spirits of turpentine may be transferred, without payment of the tax, to a bonded warehouse established in conformity with law and Treasury regulations, under such rules and regulations, and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, said bonds or other security to be taken by the collector of the district from which such removal is made; and may be transported from such a warehouse to any other bonded warehouse established as aforesaid, and may be withdrawn from bonded warehouse for consumption on payment of the tax, or removal for export to a foreign country without payment of tax, in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the removal of distilled spirits, all the rules, regulations, and conditions of which, so far as applicable, shall apply to spirits of turpentine in bonded warehouse: and no drawback shall in any case be allowed upon any spirits of turpentine.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 36. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who shall execute or sign any false or fraudulent bond, permit, entry, or other document, required by law or regulations; or who shall fraudulently procure the same to be executed; or who shall connive at the execution thereof, by which the payment of any internal revenue tax or duty shall be evaded, or attempted to be evaded, or which shall be executed, or purport to be executed, for the purpose of placing in, or withdrawing from, any bonded warehouse any spirits or other merchandise for any purpose whatever, or which shall in any way be used or attempted to be used in fraud of the internal revenue laws and regulations, on conviction thereof, shall forfeit all property in such spirits or other merchandise to which such instrument relates, or purports to relate, and shall be imprisoned for a term not less than one nor more than five years, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the committee better rise now; we cannot take this bill out of the committee to-night.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Let us finish reading the printed bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 37. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall knowingly and fraudulently use any false weights or measures in ascertaining, weighing, or measuring the quantities of grain, meal, or vegetable materials, molasses, beer, or other substances to be used for distillation, or who shall fraudulently make false record of the same, or who shall destroy or tamper with any locks or seal which may be placed on any cistern, rooms, or buildings, by the duly authorized officers of the revenue, shall on conviction thereof be imprisoned for the term of two years, and pay a fine not exceeding $1,000, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall use any molasses, beer, or other substances, whether fermented on the premises or elsewhere, for the purpose of producing spirits, before an account of the same shall have been registered in the proper record-book provided for this purpose, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000 for each and every offense so committed.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 38. And be it further enacted, That all boilers, stills, or other vessels, tools, and implements used in distilling or rectifying, and forfeited under any of the provisions of this act, and all condemned material, together with any engine or other machinery connected therewith, and all empty barrels, and all grain or other material suitable for distillation, shall, under the direction of the court in which the forfeiture is recovered, be sold at public auction, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the expenses of sale, shall be disposed of according to law. And all spirits or spirituous liquors which may be forfeited under the provisions of this act, unless herein otherwise provided, shall be disposed of by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes, exclusively from such of the provisions of this act relating to the manufacture of spirits as in his judgment may seem expedient. And any word or words in any and all parts of this act, and of all acts to which this act is additional, indicating or referring to person or persons, shall be taken to include partnerships, firms, associations, bodies corporate or politic, or any other party whatsoever, when not otherwise designated, or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 39. And be it further enacted, That no spirits shall be removed in any cask or package containing more than ten gallons from any premises or building in which the same may have been distilled, redistilled, rectified, or manufactured, nor from any place of storage, at any other times than after sun-rising and before sun-setting, on pain of forfeiture of such spirits, and every person who shall violate this provision shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each cask, barrel, or package of spirits removed. Any officer of internal revenue may be specially authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to seize any property which may by law be subject to seizure, and for that purpose such officer shall have all the power conferred by law upon collectors of internal revenue, and such special authority shall be limited in respect of time, place, and kind or class of property as the said Commissioner may specify.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any internal revenue officer to seize and detain any barrels, casks, or packages containing or supposed to contain, distilled spirits, when such officer has reason to believe the tax imposed by law upon the same has not been paid, or that they are being removed in violation of law; and such packages may be detained by such officer in a safe place until it can be satisfactorily ascertained by the proper officers whether the articles so seized are liable to be proceeded against for violations of the internal revenue laws.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 41. And be it further enacted, That whenever any distilled spirits so found elsewhere than in a bonded warehouse, shall be sold, or offered for sale at a less price than the tax imposed by law thereon, such selling or offering for sale as aforesaid shall be taken and deemed as prima facie evidence that said spirits have not been removed from a bonded warehouse according to law, and that the tax imposed by law on the same has not been paid, and the same shall without further evidence be liable to seizure and forfeiture: Provided, That this section shall not apply to spirits sold at public sale by an auctioneer who has paid the special tax as such under such rules and regulations, and upon such public notice as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 42. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every person who empties or draws off, or causes to be emptied or drawn off, distilled spirits or other article subject by law to tax, from a cask, barrel, or package, bearing any of the marks or brands required by law, or marks intended for or purporting to be, or designed to have the effect of such marks, immediately upon such cask, barrel, or package being emptied, to efface and obliterate said marks or brands; and any person who shall violate this provision shall be liable to a penalty of ten dollars for each offense; and any such cask, barrel, or package, from which said marks are not so effaced and obliterated as herein required shall be liable to forfeiture, and may be seized by any officer of internal revenue wherever found.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 43. And be it further enacted, That in case any transportation bond is forfeited by failure to furnish or produce at the proper time the evidence required by law or regulation that the articles named in the bond were duly received and actually stored in the warehouse or district to which they were shipped, or other breach of the obligation, the obligors in the bond shall pay the total amount of duties upon the articles removed under the bond, together with fifty per cent, upon that amount, and the collector of the district in which such bond is or may be given may forthwith distrain upon any property, real or personal, subject to distraint or seizure, belonging to said obligors; and in case no such property can be found, the collector shall immediately forward the bond to the United States district attorney for the proper district for suit, and notice of the breach of the obligation of any such bond shall be forthwith forwarded by the collector of the district to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 44. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall falsely represent himself to be a revenue officer of the United States, and shall in such assumed character demand or receive any money or other article of value from any person for any duty or tax due to the United States, or for any violation or pretended violation of any revenue law of the United States, such person shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to a fine of $500, and to imprisonment not less than six months and not exceeding two years, at the discretion of the court.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 45. And be it further enacted, That no distilled spirits which have been forfeited to the Government in accordance with law shall be sold for a price less than the amount of the tax required thereon by law at the time of such sale. And if the officer having such spirits in charge shall have been unable, for a period of ninety days, to sell the same for the price equal to the tax, such spirits shall be destroyed under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the committee now rise. We have had read all but one section of the bill; but that is a very pregnant section. I notice that it proposes to repeal no less than twenty-six sections of the old law. Now we ought to ascertain what those sections are. And I think there are other sections which should be repealed. I therefore move that the committee rise.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope that motion will be agreed to. It cannot be expected that we can report this bill to the House to-night.

Mr. CONKLING. It is not expected that we will report the bill. But I hope the remaining section will be read; and then the bill can be left in committee until to-morrow.

Mr. HILL. Will the bill then be open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If the last section is now read, that section will be open to amendment, and the bill will also be open to amendment by way of additional sections; but it will not be in order to return to any other section for amendment except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

No amendment being offered,
The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 46. And be it further enacted, That sections sixty and one hundred and fourteen of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and sections twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, forty, forty-one, forty-two, forty-three, forty-four, forty-five, and sixty-one of the act amendatory thereof, approved July 13, 1866, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the first line of this section by inserting after the word "sixty" the word "ninety-seven."

Pending this amendment,

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 1161, to amend the existing laws relating to internal revenue, and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. CONKLING, (at eleven o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:
By the SPEAKER: The petition of T. and Eliza Chantams, of St. Petersburg, Russia, complaining of injustice and wrong perpetrated by the American minister.

Also, the petition of Jonathan Lawrence, of New York, in relation to paper money.

By Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio: A memorial of G. W. M. Reed and 142 citizens of Arkansas, praying for the impeachment of the acting President of the United States.

Also, the petition of C. M. Mason and over 200 citizens of the State of Arkansas praying Congress to impeach and remove the acting President.

By Mr. DEAMAN: The remonstrance of Moses W. Field and others, citizens of Detroit, Michigan, against a contracting of the currency.

By Mr. BROOMALL: The petition of citizens of the United States, residing in Chester county, Pennsylvania, praying for the impeachment of the President of the United States.

By Mr. LAFLIN: The petition of S. D. Hungerford and 20 others, citizens of Adams, Jefferson county, New York, adverse to the withdrawal of the national currency.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Alfred L. Kennedy, president, and the members of the faculty of the Polytechnic College of the State of Pennsylvania, asking that all books, maps, &c., intended for the use of libraries, colleges, and other public institutions be continued free, as a repeal of that provision in the law would be attended with results disastrous to the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Also, the petition of W. J. Horstmann, president, and the other officers of the German Society Library of Philadelphia, asking that all books, maps, &c., intended for the use of libraries, colleges, and other public institutions be continued free, as a repeal of that provision in the law would be attended with disastrous results in the diffusion of useful knowledge.

Also, the petition of Hon. J. R. Ingersoll, president, and the other officers of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, asking that all books, maps, &c., intended for the use of libraries, colleges, and other public institutions be continued free, as a repeal in that provision in the law would be attended with results disastrous to the diffusion of useful knowledge.

By Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts: The petition of W. F. Weld & Co., and others, merchants of Boston, for an amendment of the warehouse bill, approved March 16, 1866.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 18, 1867.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 14th instant, the report of General Newton in relation to the encroachments in the harbor of New York; which, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 1001) for the relief of William B. Todd; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1142) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate a Newsboys' Home," and also for the relief of abandoned children in the District of Columbia.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 899) in relation to the revenue-cutter service;

A bill (H. R. No. 937) to authorize changes in the location of lights and other aids to navigation on the southern coast of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1166) to authorize the building of light-house, therein mentioned, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the Secretary of State to present to Captain James G. Smith, of the British brig Victoria, a gold chronometer in token of appreciation of his services in rescuing from death the master, officers, crew, and passengers on board the American brig E. H. Fidler; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) authorizing examinations of improvements in vessels, and for other purposes, in aid of navigation, &c., for the protection of life and property at sea.

The bill (H. R. No. 878) to quiet title to land in the town of Santa Clara, in the State of California, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that that bill be laid on the table for the present; a similar bill is with the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 347) to change certain collection districts in Maryland and Virginia; which were in section three, lines seven and eight, to strike out "Oxford" and insert "Oxford," after "Anamessit," in line twenty-four to insert "and Deal's Island," and after "discontinued" in line twenty-five to strike out the residue of the section.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

TOWING ON THE LAKES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 605) to amend the twenty-first section of an act entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," approved July 18, 1866, which was to add to the bill the following proviso:

And provided, That any foreign railroad company or corporation whose road enters the United States by means of a ferry or tug-boat may own such boat, and it shall be subject to no other or different restrictions or regulations in such employment than if owned by a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSEL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 159) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the owner of the yacht Mayflower to change the name of the same to that of Silvie. The amendments were to preface the resolution with the following preamble:

Whereas the yacht Mayflower is a pleasure-boat not engaged in the transportation of passengers or freight of any kind, and whereas the steam-yacht Glance of about thirteen tons burden being also a pleasure-yacht not engaged in carrying passengers or freight: Therefore.

And to add to it these words:

And to order a register of the steam-yacht Glance to be granted to William Levering, jr., the owner thereof, from the collection district of Buffalo, in the State of New York.

And also to add to the title the words "and to issue an American register to the steam-yacht Glance."

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented a memorial of the Maine Historical Society, praying that the library and historical collection of Colonel Peter Force may be purchased by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Lucretia B. Johnson, mother of Alfred Osgood Johnson, late first lieutenant company G, forty-second regiment Illinois infantry, who died of a wound received in the battle of Missionary Ridge, November 25, 1863, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOWARD presented resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of an appropriation for the construction of a harbor near the mouth of Galion river, at New Buffalo, Berrien county, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lac La Belle to the cliff mine in Keweenaw county, and thence along the mineral range to some point on the Montreal river; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York, expressing sympathy for the Greeks in their struggle for freedom, and in favor of a protest by our Government against the barbarous and inhuman system adopted toward them by the Turks; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLEY presented the petition of Milton B. Duffield, praying compensation for services rendered and expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties as United States marshal in the Territory of Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RAMSEY presented resolutions of the Legislature of Minnesota, opposing any further reduction of the national currency; which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of a treaty with the Sioux Indians which shall provide for the right of way through the Sioux country to the Missouri river; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a mail route from Awatonna to Albert Lea, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SUMNER presented resolutions of the Pennsylvania Peace Society, in favor of the establishment of an international tribunal, to be composed of representatives from all nations, to which may be referred all matters in dispute between different nations; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Finck, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and moved that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of William Jones, praying compensation for the capture and destruction of his vessel at Mobile in March, 1861, reported adversely thereon; and its further consideration was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 140) to restore Lieutenant Joseph P. Fyffe to his grade in the active service of the Navy; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 216) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander S. L. Breese, United States Navy, to the active list from the retired list.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred two petitions of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying an examination of the waters and harbor of Washington, District of Columbia, with the view of the location at that point of a naval depot for iron-clad vessels of the Navy; and a petition of William H. Maries, praying to be assigned to duty in the Navy, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 567) for the relief of James Fulton, paymaster United States Navy, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Eliza Wells, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 611) to extend to and for the benefit of Eliza Wells letters-patent heretofore issued to Henry A. Wells, deceased. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of James Tetlow, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 612) for the relief of James Tetlow. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1170) for the relief of Colonel L. C. Houck, of Tennessee, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Dyor B. Pettijohn, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 175) for the relief of Dyor B. Pettijohn; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommended the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a petition of the delegates of Utah and Arizona Territories, praying for the establishment of assay offices at Great Salt Lake, in Utah Territory, and at Prescott, in the Territory of Arizona, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 173) to facilitate the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers, have directed me to report it back without amendment. It is a resolution containing but a single section; it is recommended by the Department, and I hope it will be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal so much of an act to provide for the more prompt settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers, approved July 17, 1862, as provides that such accounts, with the vouchers necessary for their prompt and correct settlement, shall be rendered direct to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, and to direct such accounts and vouchers to be sent hereafter to the bureau to which they pertain, and after examination there to be passed to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for settlement.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 176) relative to the post office and sub-Treasury of the city of Boston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in a joint resolution (S. R. No. 177) to provide for the payment of certain awards for losses sustained by loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1154) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes. The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GENERAL HUMPHREY'S REPORTS.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand copies each be printed for the use of the Senate of the following documents, to wit:

1. Report upon the physics and hydraulics of the Mississippi river; upon the protection of the alluvial region against overflow; and upon the deepening of the mouths, based upon surveys and investigations made under the acts of Congress directing the topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi river, &c., submitted to the Bureau of the Topographical Engineers, War Department, under date of August 5, 1861, as prepared by Captain A. A. Humphrey and Lieutenant H. S. Abbott; and
2. The report of Brigadier General A. A. Humphreys on the same subject, submitted to the Secretary of War under date of May 31, 1866.

APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to know whether that bill is to take time? The reason I ask is that there was a very distinct understanding, when what is known as the military bill was taken up, that the Senate should proceed at once, without interposing any other business, to the consideration of the measure known as the Louisiana bill.

Mr. HARRIS. My impression is that the bill will not take much longer than the Senator has just occupied.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I give notice that at one o'clock I shall move to take up a couple of appropriation bills, which I wish very much to dispose of to-day. I desire to have them out of my way, because I expect to be detained in my committee-room the greater part of the week. I think both of them will not take more than an hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 576) relating to appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. It will only be necessary to read the substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom this bill was referred, have reported an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a substitute. Only the words proposed to be inserted will be read, unless some Senator calls for the reading of the original bill.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That where any appeal or writ of error has been brought to the Supreme Court from any final judgment or decree of an inferior court of the United States for any judicial district in which subsequently to the rendition of such judgment or decree the regular sessions of such court have been suspended or interrupted by insurrection or rebellion, such appeal or writ of error shall be valid and effectual, notwithstanding the time limited by law for bringing the same may have previously expired; and in cases where no appeal or writ of error has been brought from any such judgment or decree, such appeal or writ of error may be brought within one year from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary; but I had not examined this proposed amendment, and the bill did not strike me very favorably when it was before the committee. If I understand the first part of it, it is objectionable. It provides—

"That where any appeal or writ of error has been brought to the Supreme Court from any final judgment or decree of an inferior court of the United States for any judicial district in which subsequently to the rendition of such judgment or decree the regular sessions of such court have been suspended or interrupted by insurrection or rebellion, such appeal or writ of error shall be valid and effectual, notwithstanding the time limited by law for bringing the same may have previously expired."

Why so? If an appeal has already been brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, why should that appeal be now made valid? If it was brought within the time of course the appeal was good. What is the object of the provision I do not see. In cases where an appeal was brought to the Supreme Court, if the appeal was brought within the time allowed by law, it is good. If it was not brought within the time, is it intended now to make it good? If five years had transpired before the rebellion broke out and an appeal was not taken, is it now intended to make valid an appeal taken afterward, subsequent to the expiration of the five years? Where parties had five years to take an appeal, is it now intended to give them more time? The provision is that where an appeal or writ of error has been brought to the Supreme Court "from any judicial district in which subsequently to the rendition of such judgment the regular sessions of such court have been suspended or interrupted." What has the interruption of the sessions of the district court in Louisiana to do with an appeal that has already been brought to the Supreme Court?

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to answer?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I am surprised that the Senator should have found this objection now after the thing had been very fully discussed in committee and this question had been raised, and I was authorized to draw this substitute and present it by the Senator as well as others. But, sir, let me answer his difficulty. Suppose a judgment rendered in the circuit court at New Orleans just before the breaking out of the rebellion, and the party against whom it was rendered desired to take an appeal from that judgment. The State of Louisiana was in the possession of the rebels. How could a party bring an appeal under those circumstances? Now, after we have acquired possession of that rebel territory an appeal is brought, but the objection is taken that that appeal is brought too late; more than five years have elapsed from the rendering of the judgment before it was possible to bring the appeal, and yet some parties have, to my knowledge, brought an appeal under those circumstances. Now, this bill is intended to validate that appeal and to give it effect, although more than five years have elapsed from the rendering of the judgment to the time of taking the appeal. Parties have been vigilant, diligent, and brought the appeal as soon as they could; but they were interrupted by the rebellion, so that appeals could not be brought year by year.

That is the effect of this bill. Will anybody say that it is wrong? Will anybody say a party ought to lose the benefit of an appeal because the rebels were in possession of the country, so that the appeal could not be served on the proper court or officer? The Senator from Illinois will not pretend that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Does the Senator from New York then mean to say that if a judgment was rendered in the State of Louisiana forty years ago, and an appeal has now been brought for the first time, he is going to give the right to prosecute that appeal? This is that provision; there is no limitation to it.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there any harm in that, I will ask the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think there is.

Mr. HARRIS. Where the bringing of the appeal has been interrupted by the rebellion, if the five years had elapsed before that, I do not wish to give an appeal.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is not this bill. The Senator is speaking of one thing; the objection I make is to another. The Senator speaks of this bill having been agreed to by all of the committee. It never was agreed to by me. The Senator from New York was authorized to prepare an amendment to the bill, but I have never agreed to it. The objection is that there is no limitation. The Senator from New York does not mean to authorize an appeal to be taken now where the full five years had transpired before the rebellion. Does he mean that? I do not think he does. I do not think that the Congress of the United States is prepared to say that you may bring an appeal in a case that was decided twenty years ago. The intention of the bill, if I understand it, is to give the party the same right to take an appeal now that he would have had if there had been no rebellion. Now, suppose his right to take an appeal had transpired before the war began, would he not under this first clause, if he brought up an appeal since, although the five years had transpired, have a right to prosecute the appeal still? It seems to me so.

Mr. HARRIS. If this chance to bring the appeal had been interrupted by the rebellion it would be so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is not one word about its being interrupted by the rebellion in this part of the section. If the Senator from New York will look at it he will see that it is so; let me read again the first lines:

That where any appeal or writ of error has been brought to the Supreme Court from any final judgment or decree of any inferior court of the United States for any judicial district in which subsequently to the rendition of such judgment or decree the regular sessions of such court have been suspended or interrupted by insurrection or rebellion.

Now, what has been interrupted? The session of the court from which the appeal is brought:

Such appeal or writ of error shall be valid and effectual, notwithstanding the time limited by law for bringing the same may have previously expired.

I suppose this bill is to fit some particular case. Let me name a case: suppose that in 1850 a judgment was rendered by the circuit court in a district of Louisiana, and now for the first time an appeal is attempted to be prosecuted from that decision.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest that everything desired can be reached by adding a proviso that the provisions of the bill shall not apply to any case where the right of appeal had expired before the rebellion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think that would correct it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think there can be objection to that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It certainly is not intended to open all the cases back in the past.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then add a proviso to that effect, and we shall be relieved from all this trouble.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the latter clause of it would want a limitation, too:

And in cases where no appeal or writ of error has been brought from any such judgment or decree, such appeal or writ of error may be brought within one year from the passage of this act.

Suppose the judgment was rendered twenty years ago, is it intended to give a year to bring an appeal now? There ought to be an amendment to this clause.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Senator suggest an amendment and we will agree to it at once.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I could have time to prepare an amendment I would do it. It ought to be amended so as not to give the right of appeal in a case where it was barred before the rebellion.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the bill be laid aside informally for a few moments, and while something else is being considered an amendment can be prepared.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By common consent the bill will be laid aside temporarily.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, subsequently resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I have prepared an amendment which relieves the bill from the criticism of the Senator from Illinois, and is satisfactory to him. It is to add to the amendment already adopted:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to any case in which the right to bring the appeal or writ of error had expired before such suspension or interruption of the regular sessions of the court.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to take up House bill No. 1099, to provide for the election of a Congressional Printer.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to know if that bill is to occupy time?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not see why it should occupy time.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not wish to antagonize with any bill in which the Senator is interested; but there is a measure to which the Senate is to a certain extent pledged, and that is the Louisiana bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not wish to antagonize this or anything else against that bill, but I should like to have a chance to get this bill disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1099) providing for the election of a Congressional Printer was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on Printing was in section one, line three, to strike out the words "House of Representatives" and insert "Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out "viva voce" after "elect" in line three of section one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The first section as amended provides: "That the Senate shall elect some competent person, who shall be a practical printer, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office."

The next amendment was in section two, line two, to strike out "selected" and insert "elected;" in lines two and three to strike out "House of Representatives" and insert "Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines four and five of section two to strike out the words "and shall hold his office for two years, and until his successor shall be elected."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines five and six of section two to strike out "print and bind" and insert "superintend the printing and binding of;" in line seven, after "documents," to insert "as shall be;" and in line eight to strike out "execute" and insert "superintend the execution of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The second section, as amended, reads:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the person so elected shall be deemed an officer of the Senate, and shall be designated, "Congressional Printer." He shall superintend the printing and binding of the Journals and such other documents as shall be ordered by each House of Congress, and shall superintend the execution of all the printing and binding for the respective Departments of the Government now required by law to be executed at the Government Printing Office, and shall in all respects be governed by the laws in force in relation to the Superintendent of Public Printing and the execution of the printing and binding.

The third section provides that, from and after the passage of the act, and the election of a Congressional Printer in pursuance of it, the office of Superintendent of Public Printing shall be abolished.

Mr. ANTHONY. One other amendment should be made to come in at the end of section three:

And the salary of said officer shall be at the rate of $4,000 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will state very frankly what the object of this bill is. It is to place the printing of Congress under the charge of an officer who shall be elected by, and immediately responsible to, Congress. It is deemed impracticable that such an officer should be elected by the two Houses of Congress; and it is exceedingly inconvenient that he should be elected by the House of Representatives, because in that case the tenure of his office must necessarily be for two years only; whereas if he is elected by the Senate, and becomes an officer of the Senate, he holds his office during the pleasure of the Senate under the general rule. For this reason the committee have proposed amendments, to which the Senate have assented, changing the election of the officer from the House of Representatives to the Senate.

The object of this bill is, as I have stated, to make the Superintendent of Public Printing, called by this bill the Congressional Printer, immediately responsible to Congress. The President of the United States during the recess of Congress removed the Superintendent of Public Printing, and appointed another man in his place. It is not for me to question the motives which actuated the President in that act, which he was certainly constitutionally entitled to perform; but I know of no reason except that the man removed sympathizes with the majority of Congress; and the man who was appointed in his place is upon the other side. There may have been other reasons, but if so, they have not been communicated to me. I think there are many reasons why an officer whose relations are so intimate with Congress should, if not elected by Congress, at least be in accordance with the sentiments of the majority. Both the gentlemen are perfectly competent to perform the duties of the office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill if he is entirely clear that there are no constitutional objections to its passage. The Constitution provides that the President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint all officers of the United States except those whose appointment the law may vest with the heads of Departments, or with the President alone, or with the courts of law.

Now, I should like to hear from the honorable Senator whether he regards this Public Printer, or this Government Printer, or whatever he may be called, as an officer of the United States; and whether this attempt to provide for his election by the Senate is not an evasion of that provision of the Constitution. I have not particularly examined the question; but the Public Printer manifestly performs duties besides those imposed upon him by the Senate of the United States. He performs duties that are imposed upon him by both branches of Congress, and he superintends the printing for the other departments of Government, and has heretofore been regarded as an officer of the United States. It may be that there is no difficulty of that kind in the way; but it occurred to me that possibly there might be.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not suppose my opinion on a matter of constitutional law would be of much value by the side of that of my honorable friend from Oregon. I suppose that it would not be competent for the Senate to elect a Superintendent of Public Printing; but I suppose it is competent for the Senate to elect a Congressional Printer, who shall be deemed an officer of the Senate. It is so stated in the bill. Then, I suppose it is competent by law to devolve on that officer of the Senate any duties that we see fit. I suppose a law might be passed devolving on the Secretary of the Senate duties which are not strictly in the line of the services which would be required ordinarily from a Secretary of the Senate. But I will leave the lawyers of the Senate to settle the constitutional point; it has not distressed me any.

Mr. LANE. I think the Senate has a perfect right to elect this officer by virtue of express power granted by the Constitution. By the Constitution of the United States each House is permitted to elect its own officers. By the Constitution of the United States each House is required to keep a Journal of its proceedings. These duties, surely, may be legitimately devolved upon an officer elected by the Senate. After the Senate has elected a Public Printer, an act of Congress may transfer into his hands all the duties which are now by law devolved upon the Superintendent of Public Printing. I think these two express grants of power in the Constitution cover the whole case—the right of each House to elect its own officers, and the constitutional obligation to keep and publish a Journal of its own proceedings. These provisions seem to make a Public Printer for each House necessary, and after having elected one under these provisions of the Constitution, we may by law devolve upon him the charge of all the public printing if we choose. I dislike to go over the morning hour, and will, therefore, take up no more of the time of the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the passage of the bill I should like to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the yeas and nays are to be called, I desire to state that I was inclined to question the propriety of this bill; but the present Superintendent of Printing said it was all right, and desired me to go for it.

The aspirant for the office also seems to be very desirous that it shall pass; and if it is the pleasure of the Senate to pass it, it is satisfactory to me. I merely say that as a matter of explanation; and I shall interpose no hostility to the measure except by casting my single vote against it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Fogg, Foster, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hendricks, Nesmith, and Patterson—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cattell, Cowan, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Guthrie, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wade—17.

So the bill was passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the West Point Academy. I will say to Senators that it will take but a very short time and I shall soon be out of their way. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. There is another bill which is at this moment much more important than that. I am in favor, substantially, of the bill moved by the Senator from Maine. I take it nearly all of us are in favor of it; but it is a bill that will surely pass, and when it passes, there can be no question with regard to its approval in another quarter. That bill will take care of itself. But, sir, there is another bill which has already passed the House of Representatives which is of immense importance. If the two measures are to be considered in that connection, there can be no question that we ought to proceed with that other bill; and there was, unless I am very much mistaken—Senators about me can correct me if I am mistaken—a distinct understanding when the Louisiana bill was displaced to proceed with the consideration of what is called the military bill, the Louisiana bill should be proceeded with at once after the disposition of the military bill. I think I am not mistaken when I say that was the understanding, certainly among Senators about me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say that so far as I am concerned I had no understanding of that kind. I only signify this without meaning to interpose in this contest.

Mr. SUMNER. I did not mean to attribute to Senators anything that they did not understand. I had supposed from the statement made by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] who moved the Louisiana bill, that there was between him and other Senators with whom he had conferred, and who were particularly interested in the military bill, such an understanding.

Mr. WADE. I can state substantially what took place before the Senate when those two bills were taken up. They were not antagonized really, but I moved to take up the Louisiana bill and proceed with it before the other bill was called up, so that the Louisiana bill was a little ahead in that way. The question, however, arose which of those two bills should be proceeded with first, and I did suppose at that time there was no antagonism between them, one being a local measure applying to a single State and the other to all the seceded States. For that reason, as I said at the time, I cared not very particularly which was taken up first; but I certainly did suppose when we took up the bill which we first considered that we would immediately on disposing of it proceed with this bill. I did not then, however, anticipate that that bill would be so amended as to have some mode of reconstruction attached to it. The two bills as they came here certainly were not antagonistic, but both of them might well stand without interfering with each other. After they became in some measure consolidated, I had my doubts whether the one was not incompatible with the other. I certainly like the Louisiana bill and shall vote for it if it comes up; but I do not know but that the other bill as we amended it is somewhat inconsistent with it. However, sir, I have stated all the understanding there was, and the Senate will decide what shall be done.

Mr. SUMNER. Well, Mr. President, the Louisiana bill is on your table; it seems to me that it ought not to be neglected; it should be proceeded with; we should come to some conclusion about it. If the Senate are not disposed to adopt it let us reach that conclusion; but do not let us pass it by.

The Senator from Ohio suggests that since the adoption of the military bill by the Senate with an amendment on Sunday morning, the occasion for the Louisiana bill may be less. I do not agree with my excellent friend on that point. I think the occasion is more; I think the occasion, if anything, has increased. The bill adopted on Sunday morning distinctly declares the illegality of the existing governments in the rebel States. I take it that declaration has never before been made by Congress, or at any rate so distinctly. There it is. What is the consequence of that declaration? All that people are, then, at this moment without any legal government.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a fact.

Mr. SUMNER. It has never been so declared by Congress before. Many Senators have so regarded it. For one I have always regarded it so, and I did not hesitate many years ago to declare these governments illegal and without any foundation, perfectly void; but I was not sustained by others here. The Senator from Wisconsin near me [Mr. Howe] long ago, I know, occupied that same ground. But you cannot place yourself on that ground without accepting the consequences. You must then go forward and provide a substitute for these illegal governments: otherwise you have the unhappy people there without government. It may be said that they among themselves may get up a government, that they may construct a government. How? You give them no means, you give them no rule, you do not initiate proceedings. All that is needful. Therefore I say out of the very declaration which you place in the forefront of your military bill is derived the duty of proceeding now to some just measure of reconstruction by which you shall provide governments for these States. The duty is urgent; it ought not to be postponed. There can be no other bill before Congress during this session of such urgent necessity.

I do not wish now to go further into the question, merely on this preliminary motion. I merely present as briefly as possible the reason why we should not postpone the Louisiana bill. I hope therefore that the appropriation bill will not be taken up, but that the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the Louisiana bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The West Point bill would probably have been passed in the time the Senator has been talking. It and the other appropriation bill which is to follow will not take much time, but it is absolutely necessary that I should have them out of the way, for I expect bills from the House of Representatives which will keep me in the committee-room, and I hope the Senate will dispose of them today. I am obliged to devote so much of my time to the committee-room, especially at this period of the session, that I cannot have these things in my way. The Senator will have the field clear in an hour.

Mr. SUMNER. "In an hour!" That is a hard thing to say to a people suffering at this moment through want of government. The first duty, I say, at this moment is to proceed with all possible dispatch to establish a government for people who have no government, and not wait an hour. There is no business that can be before Congress equal in importance to that.

Mr. CONNESS. If the language of the honorable Senator from Maine is to be taken as an agreement or mortgage on the time of the Senate, that this other bill can be proceeded with in an hour, I shall object to the arrangement. I do not think we can with propriety consider the Louisiana bill at this time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not make any agreement. I only say that in an hour I think I shall be out of the way; and then it will be for the Senate to say what shall be taken up.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 912) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the bill by striking out lines forty-one to fifty-three of section one, in these words:

Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated by the provisions of this act shall be expended in violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862: And provided further, That no part of the moneys appropriated by this or any other act shall be applied to the pay or subsistence of any cadet from any State declared to be in rebellion against the Government of the United States, appointed after the 1st day of January, 1866, until such State shall have been returned to its original relations to the Union under and by virtue of an act or joint resolution of Congress for that case made and provided.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Does the amendment strike out both provisos?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What is the objection to the first proviso, that no money shall be expended in violation of the law named?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The objection is simply that they come under that law now, and is entirely unnecessary. The same thing was in the bill as it came to us last year, and we struck it out, and the House agreed to our action. The general law applies to it just as well without the proviso as with it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is merely reiterating what is the law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is all. I suppose it was copied in by the Clerk from the bill of last year as passed by the House, without thinking about it. The Committee on Finance deemed the provision entirely unnecessary.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Maine how cadets are selected from these States?

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are not selected at all, and cannot be selected till they have representatives in Congress. That is the reason why the committee struck that out.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Have the vacancies from the southern States never been filled?

Mr. FESSENDEN. They were filled at one time; but a new regulation was made to stop it, and there is now no authority to appoint from those States, except that the President in the ten selected by him at large is not restricted. The same provision was in the House bill last year, and we struck it out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The chairman of the Military Committee has called my attention to an error in lines sixty and sixty-one of section one, on page 3. That clause reads, "for ice-house and additional stove in servants' room, $7,500." In the estimate the item is, "ice-house, stove, and servants' room." I move that the correction be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by adding as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the chaplain at West Point Military Academy shall hereafter be relieved from academic duties, in order that he may devote himself exclusively to the moral and religious training of the cadets. He shall be required to hold daily in the chapel morning prayers, and to form a class in Biblical instruction on the Sabbath day, and all parades and other military duties at the Academy shall be dispensed with on that day so far as is consistent with proper military discipline.

I will simply say that this amendment is in accordance with a recommendation of the Board of Visitors last year. Every provision contained in the amendment is recommended very strongly by the board as necessary to be adopted in the institution. I do not think there can be any opposition to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed; and its title was amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 266) granting certain public property to the State of Ohio, was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2) to amend the act declaring the officer who shall act as President of the United States in case of vacancies in the office of both President and Vice President, approved March 1, 1792;

A bill (H. R. No. 607) to amend an act granting the right of way over the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 1062) relative to the port of Camden, New Jersey; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1167) to authorize entry and clearance of vessels at the ports of Boothbay and St. George, Maine.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move now to take up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 904) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1868, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert "Portugal," in line eleven, among the list of missions appropriated for.

Mr. SUMNER. I am inclined to think that amendment ought not to be adopted. It will be remembered that during the last session Congress in its appropriation bill provided that nothing should be paid to the minister at that time in Portugal, under any appropriation bill or out of any fund whatever. That was a proposition which came from the other House. I certainly had nothing to do with originating it; and I voted for it finally because it was on the bill, and the circumstances were such that this proposition was bound up in many ways with the passage of other propositions that were recommended by the conference committee. However, it became a law, and when it became a law it seems to me that it was practically a notice to the minister of the United States at Portugal that Congress dispensed with his services. Now, the question may arise whether Congress in taking that step went beyond the line of its constitutional duty. I take it nobody will suggest that it did. I believe one of the best principles—I might almost say one of the golden principles—of constitutional law is that the parliamentary power, having control of the purse, may in that way influence public policy in the appointment of officers. If the occasions for the exercise of this power have been rare it is because a difference between Congress and the Executive has been rare; but this difficulty has now occurred; and Congress in the exercise of its constitutional function has undertaken to give notice that the services of a certain minister abroad were not agreeable. It seems to me that after that notice he ought himself to have come home, or the State Department ought to have recalled him. He has not come home, and the State Department has not recalled him. He continues there. The question, therefore, is how shall Congress maintain its proper function in the Government of the country. I do not regard the form adopted by the other House as perhaps the best. They strike out all provision for Portugal. That they can do; but I say I do not think it the best mode, because on its face it seems in some way like a neglect or a disparagement of a friendly Power; but then the act of the House must, I take it, be interpreted with reference to well-known facts. This transaction has a history which must be as well known in Portugal as in our own country, and therefore I believe it cannot be regarded there as a neglect or a disparagement. If Congress had not at the last session taken the step which it did, I should not be ready to make any motion on the subject now. I would not interfere against any foreign minister in this peculiar, but strictly constitutional, way; but it seems to me, after what Congress has already done, there is but one course open before us, which is to persevere.

Mr. WILSON. I propose to offer a new section to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not now in order.

Mr. WILSON. Then I give notice that at the proper time, in order to settle this matter, I shall offer a new section in this shape:

That the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Spain shall be accredited as such to the Government of Portugal, and it shall be the duty of the said envoy to divide his time between the capitals of Spain and Portugal as the interests of the United States shall require; and for the additional duties and expenses imposed by this act said envoy shall receive an annual compensation of $2,000 in addition to his present salary. And the salary of the secretary of legation to Spain shall, from and after the passage of this act, be $3,000 per annum, and that of the secretary of legation to Portugal shall be $2,500, and no additional compensation shall be allowed to either of said secretaries for acting as chargé d'affaires. And the office of minister resident to Portugal be, and the same is hereby, abolished.

I think the adoption of an amendment of this kind, when it shall be in order, will settle this whole difficulty. In six hours our minister can go from the capital of Spain to the capital of Portugal by railway communication, and such a provision will save us a great deal of money. I think we have now eight or nine unnecessary ministers in Europe, which I would dispense with by concentrating our missions in this way. Then there are some of the South American missions which I would treat in the same manner. The truth is that a large number of these places are places to reward worn-out politicians. We may just as well save money in this case and settle the matter by handing the care of the Portugal mission to our minister in Spain.

Mr. GRIMES. I think if the records of the State Department could be examined it might possibly be found that, notwithstanding the failure to appropriate any money last year to pay a salary to the minister at Portugal, he has received his full compensation.

Mr. SUMNER. How can that be?

Mr. GRIMES. I will explain. This bill, I perceive, contains an appropriation of $65,000 "for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse." Up to the commencement of the war, as the Senate will find by referring to the appropriation bills for diplomatic and consular expenses, the whole amount ever appropriated for any such purpose in one year was $20,000. I have before me the act of 1860 appropriating that amount. We increased it to $80,000 during the war. Last year it was cut down to $65,000, and that appropriation in last year's bill has been copied into this bill. There is not to-day a single reason why we should appropriate more money for this item now than we did six years ago. This money is all paid in gold, and the same amount will go just as far to-day toward paying our expenses abroad as at that time. The Secretary of State assumes to himself, as I understand, the right to dispose of this money, this $65,000 for contingent expenses, in such way as he chooses; and I am informed by gentlemen in whom I have confidence, that to one of our ministers he pays as traveling expenses $3,000 a year, while from another minister, who is not supposed to be in as thorough sympathy with him as perhaps some others, he withholds any such compensation. In that way the $65,000 is expended.

Mr. SUMNER. Will my friend allow me to remind him of the text of the statute adopted by Congress at the last session, which was that the actual minister of the United States at Portugal should not receive any salary under any appropriation bill or out of any fund whatever? The very object of the language was to exclude the possibility of any such payment as the Senator from Iowa now imagines. If there has been any such payment as that it has been an absolute, barefaced violation of the act of Congress.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not state that I have been informed that the minister at Portugal has been paid this salary, although I have not any doubt that in some indirect way compensation has been paid to him out of the contingent fund of the State Department. I state as to other ministers that I am informed by gentlemen recently returned from Europe, in whom I have confidence, that such is the fact, that sums of money are paid to them for the ostensible purpose of defraying their traveling expenses. If we want to reach this case it seems to me we ought to cut down the fund for contingent expenses to what it was before the war.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Committee on Finance have no sort of feeling about this matter one way or the other, and not much of an opinion in regard to it. They thought they would propose to put in the word "Portugal," in order to bring the old case of last year to the attention of the Senate; and they will be perfectly satisfied, so far as they are concerned, with any decision the Senate may come to on the subject.

On the one side is the consideration that if "Portugal" is left out of this clause, we, on the face of things, decline to have any further diplomatic connection with Portugal, and that does not look well. On the other side, if we put in that word, we must consider what the result will be. We last year decided that our present minister to Portugal should not be paid anything as long as he was kept there. It was so decided by Congress. He has been kept there. He has been discharging his duties ostensibly as minister at that Court from that time to this. If now Congress should appropriate for a minister at Portugal it would look as if they had changed their opinion, and were willing that Mr. Harvey should remain there and be paid. It is for the Senate to decide whether they will omit to appropriate for the mission to Portugal so long as Mr. Harvey stays there as minister, or whether they will insert "Portugal" among the missions provided for, and let the Administration do as it pleases in reference to retaining that gentleman. How he could stay there for a year without receiving any pay is a mystery to me. He is not a man of fortune; but perhaps he may have enough of his own to support himself there, and he may have trusted that the matter would be set right by Congress. I cannot take it for granted, I cannot suppose that he has been paid anything by the Government, because if the Executive has paid him in any way, it is in plain and palpable violation of a law of Congress upon that subject, directing that he should not be paid. I take it for granted, therefore, that he has not been paid.

I understand that the way in which that business is done with regard to our foreign ministers is this: we keep a fund for the payment of these expenses in London with our agents there, the Barings. When a man is appointed to a particular mission, his name is sent to our financial agents there with a statement of the amount which he is entitled to draw quarterly, and that remains so till contrary information is given—information that he has ceased to be a minister. Hence, unless the State Department chose to inform the Barings that nothing further was to be paid to Mr. Harvey, I suppose they would go on paying him under the original instructions which they received. Whether that has been done I do not know. I take it for granted that it has not been done; because it would be clearly the duty of the Secretary of State to inform our financial agents there that no further payments were to be made to Mr. Harvey after settling up his accounts to the day fixed. But what has been done in relation to it I do not know.

It is a matter of entire indifference to me whether this amendment be adopted or not. If the Senate think it inconsistent with propriety that Mr. Harvey has been suffered to remain there after this pointed rebuke and refusal to appropriate anything, and that we should not withdraw from the position we assumed on that subject, it will be proper enough to concur with the House of Representatives in leaving out Portugal. If, on the contrary, the Senate think a mission to a foreign Power of that importance, with which we have had and now have diplomatic relations should be provided for, they will insert it.

Mr. SUMNER. I have before me now the statute of last year, which I had not when I spoke before. I observe that in this statute Portugal is omitted from the list of places provided for in the way of salaries. Then in another part of the statute we have this provision: "And no money shall be paid to the present minister-resident at Portugal out of any fund whatever on account of further services in his office." No language could be stronger or more positive. If the minister-resident in Portugal has been paid in any way, directly or indirectly, it is in violation of this act. I cannot believe that he has been paid. I shall assume that he has not been paid; but in order to remove all doubt, I propose in a moment to introduce a call upon the Department of State to ascertain the facts with regard to it; but it seems to me, whether he has been paid or not, we cannot now change the position with regard to him that was taken at the last session, especially when we find that the other House has already adhered to that position. We gave notice to him to quit. He ought to have quit and come home; or if he had not delicacy enough to do that the Department of State ought to have given him notice to quit and come home. It should have told him that whatever might be the personal sentiments of the head of the Department toward him he had ceased to have the confidence of the Congress of the United States. He ought not to continue there abroad in these responsible functions: that should have been told him. It was not. It seems that he has continued there. He has continued there in open defiance of an act of Congress; therefore I think I may say in open defiance of the will of the people of the United States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill is for the next fiscal year, and the amendment merely inserts a provision for the mission to Portugal for the next year. The provision referred to in the act of last year is a standing law; so long as the Government keep him there they cannot pay him anything, no matter what we appropriate. This amendment goes upon the supposition that it may be necessary to have diplomatic intercourse with Portugal; but it does not authorize the payment of any money to the present minister nor affect the provision made last year, which is general and applicable as long as the present minister remains there. Then why not restore our diplomatic relations with Portugal and let the present law stand?

Mr. SUMNER. The argument of the Senator is very good. I believe that the provision is applicable to the future, and that until it is repealed the present minister-resident at Portugal cannot get any compensation for services in that office; and yet the last appropriation bill, which contains that very provision, did eliminate the word "Portugal," and my impression is, from my recollection of what passed in the committee and afterward in the Senate, that it was with a view to remove all possible doubt on the question, so that there might be no fund out of which, directly or indirectly, this incumbent could receive compensation; and as we adopted that rule last year I see no occasion to depart from it. If it was of value then, it must be of value now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it was necessary then.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know that it was necessary. However, it was the rule that was adopted; and I am inclined to think that if we should depart from it now it might seem to afford some opening which would be taken advantage of by the present incumbent or by the Department of State. I am unwilling to supply that.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I take it that Mr. Harvey is to-day minister-resident at Portugal. Nobody denies that the office exists and that the officer exists. He has a right to hold the office. The Senate has no right to remove him. Congress has no right to remove him. If Congress had the power, I think there is no doubt what would be done in regard to it; but if I understand the law and the Constitution, Congress is as powerless to remove him as is the common council of the city of Washington. He was appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in accordance with existing laws. He holds the office; he has a right to it; he has as good a right to it as the Senator from Maine has to the office which he holds, and Congress has no more right to remove him than it has to remove the Senator from Maine from his office.

Now, in regard to the question of his payment, I do not know that he has been paid. I have never heard a word on that subject; but Senators have intimated that because Congress has seen fit to omit an appropriation for his payment he was therefore bound to resign, and it is a case of contumacy.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There was a positive provision that he should not be paid.

Mr. DIXON. I am stating what I understand to be the position of the Senator from Massachusetts. Let us look at that for a moment. There have been periods when the Senator from Massachusetts has been in a minority. There have been periods when it was the opinion of Congress that his services were useless in this body—a mistaken opinion, I agree. Suppose Congress at such a time had enacted by law that he never should be paid a dollar for his services; suppose in a bill appropriating for the payment of members of Congress it had been provided that the Senator from Massachusetts should not be paid out of any fund whatever. Sir, it was precisely as much within the power of Congress to do that as it was to do what they have done in regard to the minister at Portugal. I do not say it would be right, but I desire to know what would be the duty of the Senator from Massachusetts under those circumstances? What would be my duty if Congress should provide that I should not receive the compensation given me by law? Would it be my duty to resign? Then, sir, suppose the question were asked how I managed to stay in Washington, as the inquiry is made with regard to the minister at Portugal? He remains there; his bounden duty is to remain there; it would be base and cowardly for him to retire because Congress sees fit to withhold his pay. I do not know what his means of living there are; but I know that if I were in his place, if I were utterly destitute of means I would stay there so long as I could keep soul and body together under such circumstances. I would never consent that by unconstitutional means my office should be taken from me.

I think nobody can deny that Mr. Harvey has a right to his position, that the office belongs to him, and that Congress has no power to remove him. I will not say that it is the duty of Congress to make an appropriation for his payment, though I have my views with regard to that; but whatever I may think on that subject probably would have no weight with this body. I am not dealing with that question now; but I am speaking of the question whether he is now acting with contumacy as regards the Congress of the United States, as has been alleged here.

Well, sir, what has Mr. Harvey done? Let us look at that for a moment. Holding the office of minister at Portugal, he saw fit to write a private letter to the Secretary of State, and that letter, without any act of his, without his consent, express or implied, found its way into the newspapers. I have seen it; I have read it; and I must say that I can see in it nothing improper. According to my recollection there was no attack upon Congress in it. That statement was made, but I believe it was not true. The letter is not very fresh in my recollection; but I understand that it contained no attack upon Congress. There was an expression of his opinions, his views. In my judgment the views were correct. Whether it would have been proper for him to have published such a letter himself is a question; but that he had a right as a citizen of the United States to express his opinion, I think nobody can deny. What have other ministers done with approbation? They have given their opinions, differing, it is true, from those of Mr. Harvey; but if those opinions have been found to accord with the sentiments of Congress, nobody doubts that a minister may with propriety express them; but if they differ from those of Congress it seems he must not.

Now, sir, in point of fact this is an attempt on the part of Congress—and so it must be seen by everybody—to in some way limit the right of an office-holder under the General Government to express his sentiments; and if they happen to differ with those of the majority his pay is to be stopped. If that is the proper way of reaching an office-holder, of course the action in regard to it is correct. I am not now upon that point. I am not here to contend that Congress has done wrong; I suppose what Congress has done must be presumed to be right; but when Mr. Harvey is censured for not retiring from his position, for having the audacity to remain there and pay his own expenses, it seems to me a word may be said in his favor. I do not know that the Senator from Maine would retire from the office if his compensation were withheld. I doubt whether he would think it his duty to resign for that reason. I do not understand that Mr. Harvey has done anything more than barely perform the duties of the office. Was it for him to presume that he would never be paid? If so, he would have presumed a fact that did not exist. I tell the Senate the day will come when he will be paid. How early that may be, I do not know; but justice some day or other will be done him. He has a right to remain there; the office is his, and until he is removed he is entitled to it; and I have no doubt some day justice will be done him and he will receive his salary.

Mr. FOGG. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the points which the Senator from Connecticut has just raised. I do not know what the offense of Mr. Harvey was; I have never read the letter which induced the action of Congress at the last session; but it is to be presumed, certainly in this body, that the action of Congress was just, that it was founded upon adequate reasons. It seems from the law read by the Senator from Massachusetts that Congress passed a law which absolutely forbade that the minister-resident of the United States at Lisbon should be paid out of any fund whatever, and they also dropped the Portugal mission from the list of missions to be supported by the Government. Now, it may be true that Mr. Harvey by remaining there has not committed any offense. It may be true that he was not bound to disregard the wishes of the State Department and retire without their consent, but I beg to suggest to the honorable Senator that it was the bounden duty of the State Department to have recognized and respected the action of Congress, and to have notified Mr. Harvey that his presence as minister-resident at Portugal was no longer required by this Government; and if Mr. Harvey has not been guilty of contumacy, of want of respect to Congress and to the nation whose representative Congress is, the State Department has been guilty of contumacy; the State Department have defied Congress, and in defying Congress have defied the voice of the nation. No matter whether Mr. Harvey has received his pay or not, no matter whether Mr. Harvey shall hereafter receive his pay or not, it was the bounden duty of all Departments of this Government to respect the voice of Congress as the voice of the nation; and if the Secretary of State has treated Mr. Harvey as the minister-resident he has done it knowingly, he has done it knowing that he was defying the voice of Congress and the voice of the nation.

I certainly think it improper for Congress now to insert the word "Portugal" in this clause or do anything inconsistent with the action taken at the last session. If Congress is now satisfied that it did wrong then, it ought not merely to agree to this amendment, but it ought to make an apology to Mr. Harvey, and it ought to make an apology to the State Department and to thank the State Department for having disregarded its wishes, disregarded a solemn law of the land, and defied the will of the nation. I am certainly opposed to any such course.

As I said, I do not know whether Mr. Harvey was guilty of an offense which should have induced the action taken last year. I presume that he was. I have never read his letter. I know him personally, and I do not think him the least worthy of all the men we have got abroad; I do not think him the least worthy of all the men the State Department keep abroad. The Senator from Connecticut says we have no power to remove or recall them. I presume we have not; but I say we ought to have that power. I say we have the power to abolish a mission; and I say that any indication or intimation from Congress that a particular minister abroad does not represent the nation or is unworthy to represent the nation, ought to be respected by the State Department and ought to be a law to that Department.

Mr. DAVIS. I am altogether indifferent what course the Senate may take with relation to the matter now under consideration. I knew Mr. Harvey in former years, and I frankly admit that he is not and never was a man much to my taste. But I will make a remark or two on the precedent which Congress set at the last session in withholding the salary from this officer, and which is now proposed to be repeated. I admit the great principle that Congress may upon extraordinary occasions withhold supplies. That is a principle of English liberty, and it belongs to the privileges of Parliament to withhold supplies upon adequate occasions. I am for retaining that principle in the legislation of Congress and for making application of it on all proper occasions. The Senator from Massachusetts may think that this is an occasion worthy of the application of that great principle of liberty. The necessity for it now may satisfy his great intellect and his great soul that it ought to be applied to this minister to the Court of Portugal. What was his offense? He was guilty of forming an opinion as to the disputes that subsist between Congress and the President, and he committed the offense of giving his judgment to the position and course of the President and condemning that of Congress. He did not express this judgment of his in condemnation of Congress to the foreign Government to which he had been accredited, nor to any agents or officers of that Government, nor, so far as we know, to any of the subjects of the king of Portugal; but his opinion and his judgment in favor of the President and against Congress he wrote in a letter to the Secretary of State, expressing himself at some length. I did not approve of that conduct on the part of this minister, but I think it a very small and insignificant affair; and I thought that Congress put much too large an attention to the subject by the course which it took at the last session, and I am still of that opinion.

But, Mr. President, we have had another minister abroad who held the place of a full minister and was accredited to one of the principal Courts and countries of Europe, who not only has been guilty of the same offense, if offense it be, committed by the minister-resident to Portugal, but a much higher offense. When the Senator from Massachusetts called up, and persisted so pertinaciously in calling up before the Senate a resolution asking for the correspondence between Mr. Motley and the Department of State, and when I made a remark upon that subject to the Senate, I had not carefully read the letter of Mr. Motley. I have since read it, and its admissions, its disclosures of improper conduct by that minister by his own confession, are to my mind palpable and censurable. What does he concede that he did and was in the habit of doing? We have an affair in our country that concerns only our people and our Government, it being a difference of policy between the President and Congress. Foreign Governments have nothing to do with such matters. It is of no interest to them; it is none of their business; and when the Government sends abroad foreign representatives, it is no part of the business or duty of those ministers to introduce the subject of these differences between conflicting departments of our Government, and for such ministers to express their approval of the one department and their condemnation of the other. A minister who is guilty of that line of conduct, of that gossiping, of that revelation of a state of things in our Government, that, I admit, is to be deprecated; and who makes it the subject of conversation and of animadversion and condemnation on his part to the officials of the Government to which he has been accredited, commits a gross and a flagrant impropriety, for which he ought to be removed. If the minister to Portugal had committed an offense as grave and improper as the envoy to Vienna confesses himself to have committed, and articles of impeachment had been filed by the House of Representatives against the minister at Portugal, and he had been convicted upon due inquiry and proof of the offenses which Mr. Minister Motley confesses to have committed, I believe the Senate would have acted properly in removing him by judgment of impeachment from his position.

Then why is the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations so eager in pressing the insignificant chargé or minister-resident to one of the most unimportant Powers of Europe, when he leaves unattended, unadverted upon, without any censure or notice, the much more culpable action of Minister Motley, the envoy to the Court of Austria. That minister occupied an inverse position to the one at Portugal. Instead of taking sides with the President and condemning Congress, he took part with Congress and condemned the President. He did not use the opprobrious language imputed to him, he says, in a letter which had been sent to the Secretary of State, disclosing what he had been at, and I presume that he did not; but he confesses to this: that in a foreign country, in the capital of the empire of Austria, in the presence of officials of that Power, he distinctly and repeatedly animadverted upon the state of relations subsisting between the President and the Congress of the United States, and without reserve condemned and reprobated the President and approved and supported the position and the course of Congress.

Suppose the course of Mr. Harvey had been precisely the same as that of Minister Motley and he had written a letter, as Mr. Motley did, confessing to the opinions and conversations which Mr. Motley confessed to in approving the policy and course of Congress and condemning that of the President, would the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who is so sensitive as to the proper manner in which our ministers abroad shall perform their duties to their Government and their country, have pressed the minister to Portugal as he has been pressing him during the last and the present session? No, sir; the bull then would have belonged to us and the ox to another party, and the goring of that ox by our bull would have been no offense whatever. But when the position of things is changed and the honorable chairman is the owner of the bull, and the ox that is gored by his bull belongs to us, he has no complaint to make. I think both affairs are extremely small; and that a gentleman, a Senator, an American statesman of the lofty dimensions of the Senator from Massachusetts ought to have been too high to have stooped to notice either of them in the way that he has done.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to censure the Senate for the action it took at the last session in relation to the minister at Portugal, nor am I at all solicitous as to what action it shall now take; but, in my humble judgment, the Senate would best consult its own dignity and the dignity of our Government in foreign countries by paying attention to no such small affairs. I read the letter in relation to Mr. Motley very carefully after that subject was up in debate in the Senate, and I read it with much regret, not only in relation to that minister, but other representatives of our Government abroad. The whole letter had a stamp of truth upon it. It made disclosures in relation to various of our diplomatic and consular agents abroad which, in my judgment, were eminently derogatory to them. Our own domestic quarrels, the scandals of our household, the wrangles of the different Departments of our Government, should never be made the topics of conversation abroad between our officials and the officials of other Governments. I think all such conversations and practices on the part of our agents eminently reprehensible. I believe that they are substantially true as disclosed by the correspondent of the State Department in the letter to which I have referred, not only in relation to Mr. Motley, but in relation to every other official who is inculpated by that letter. I had never seen Mr. Motley; but I had read his noble, his magnificent historical work giving the Rise of the Dutch Republic. I felt proud that my country had produced a historian who elaborated such a magnificent work in relation to one of the most interesting revolutions and struggles for liberty that any people upon the earth ever made. I have pored over that work day after day and night after night, feeling my devotion to liberty and to popular government strengthened, warmed, vivified, by all of its pages. That the intellect enriched by such labor, and such careful labor, that had produced such a monument of genius and of historical power, should desecrate itself by becoming a partisan between two conflicting departments of our Government, away in a foreign country, when he was accredited to one of the first Powers of Europe; and that he should have made such a matter a subject of conversation with the officials of that Power, as confessed by his own letter to the State Department, filled me with regret and mortification. That a man who could indite such noble lessons in favor of human rights, in favor of the eternal principle of self-government, and who could eulogize as pen scarcely ever wrote the protracted and heroic and unconquered and unconquerable efforts of the struggling Dutch patriots for their rights, as Motley did, should so far forget his devotion to these great principles of popular liberty and self-government for which the Dutch were contending, as to admit that he was not simply the apologist, but the defender and the advocate of similar oppressions when practised by an American President or Congress on the people of the United States to those practised by Charles V and his execrable son, that tyrant, Philip II, upon the people of Holland and Zealand, is to me amazing.

Mr. HOWE. I really hope this amendment will not be adopted. I was very decidedly of the opinion at the last session of Congress, I know, that we ought not to make any appropriation for the payment of the minister who represented us then and who still represents us at the Court of Portugal. Both Houses agreed then in the propriety of withdrawing that appropriation; but it seems that in spite of the opinion so expressed by Congress the minister has been retained there in the service of the Government. It is suggested here upon the floor of the Senate that, in spite of the prohibition of the act read, the minister has been paid. It is very manifest from the way in which these payments are managed, as stated by the chairman of the Finance Committee, that it is out of the power of Congress to prevent the payment of any man that the Secretary of State may see fit to employ upon any service at home or abroad, unless we withdraw from him all control of all funds, and so disable him from making payments to those ministers who are actually in our employ. But under that act I think no one will intimate that the Secretary of State could use fifty dollars to pay the minister at Portugal without committing a crime of the same kind that the Secretary of the Treasury would commit if he were to put his hand into the vaults and distribute every dollar there is there among just such recipients as he saw fit to select—an offense of precisely the same kind but not to the same extent, because he does not misuse so much of the public money; but it is an absolute misuse of the amount that he does so appropriate. And the question presented to the Senate to-day seems to be whether the Congress of the United States can control the public funds or not, whether we are compelled to make appropriations for just such persons as other Departments of the Government see fit to call on us to make appropriations for. Congress has once deliberately decided that it would not appropriate money to pay the services of this individual at that Court, a question over which Congress had unquestionable jurisdiction, and the only tribunal known to the Constitution which had any jurisdiction. In spite of that declaration the person is still continued there, and we are again asked to make an appropriation for him. One of two things we ought to do: either reject this appropriation again, as not only improvident and unjust to the country but an indignity upon the legislative department of the Government; or we ought to surrender at once and absolutely all pretense of having any control over the resources of the nation, take the estimates as they come to us from the different Executive Departments of the Government, and register them on our statute-books and let it go. We ought to control or let somebody else.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator whether if we should appropriate for next year this amount, there would be any legal right whatever with the present law standing on the statute-book, to pay a dollar of it to Mr. Harvey?

Mr. HOWE. I am very decidedly of the opinion submitted just now by the Senator from Maine, that under that act there would still be no right to use a dollar to pay him who was at the date of the passage of that act the minister of this Government at Portugal; but when it is said that in spite of that act, and in spite of the fact that there was no appropriation in that bill to pay any minister there, payments have been made—

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not said that payments have been made to him.

Mr. HOWE. That is suggested, and a Senator states his belief that such payments have been made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That does not prove it.

Mr. HOWE. I know it does not prove it; but in the face and eyes of such a suggestion as that, it seems to me that instead of lessening the barriers to payment, we ought, if it were possible, which is not possible in the use of human language, to strengthen those barriers. It is not possible, for they are as strong in that act as they can be made.

Mr. DIXON. I believe it was intimated by a Senator, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, that Mr. Harvey had been paid as minister-resident by the Secretary of State from some fund; but that was a mere intimation, or rather a suspicion that such a thing may by possibility have been done. For myself, I have never heard anything of the kind. Whether he has been paid anything or not, I do not know; but this I do know: that he is minister-resident by law, and that there is an act of Congress providing what his salary shall be. I know that the law gives him the office, that he was appointed by the appointing power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and that there is a solemn act of Congress saying that he shall receive a certain amount for his services.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Here is another solemn act of Congress providing that he shall not receive a dollar.

Mr. DIXON. I am coming to that. There is an act of Congress providing that a minister-resident shall receive so much; that is, the salary fixed by law. Congress has seen fit to abstain from making an appropriation to pay that salary. Congress of course has full power over the appropriations. Congress has said furthermore that this particular officer should receive nothing for his services. Whether he has not a vested right to his salary and may not in some way bring a claim for it, I will not now undertake to say. If I were to express an opinion hastily on that point, I should say he had a vested right in the salary so long as he held the office, and that it was the duty of Congress to make an appropriation to pay it. But Congress has decided otherwise, and I suppose the presumption here is that Congress decided right. I have only attempted to express an opinion on the point raised by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Maine as I understood them, who said that inasmuch as there had been a failure to appropriate the salary it was his duty to resign the office he held according to law. It seems to me that it was just as much his duty to resign the office as it would be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States to resign his office in case Congress should see fit to refuse an appropriation for his salary. I do not know that the Chief Justice holds his office by any higher right, though he has a longer tenure I admit, being appointed for life or good behavior; but so long as the minister-resident at Portugal holds the office, it is his, he has a property in it, and I had supposed that he had a right to the compensation given him by law. There is a mode by which Congress can reach him, and that is by abolishing the office. I take it Congress has full power to abolish the office of minister-resident at Portugal; but so long as the office remains a legal office and is held by the officer, it seems to me there is some question whether he is not entitled to the compensation, and I believe the time will come when justice will be done him. At some future day he will be paid for his services, in my judgment. It may not be during his life; it may be to his heirs; but I think at some day the compensation which the law awards him will be paid. Still, that is a point on which I do not wish to say anything. I merely wished now to defend the action of Mr. Harvey in holding the office. I think he acted with propriety. If Congress sees fit to abolish the office, that is another matter; but while Congress sees fit only to withhold the salary it seems to me it would be improper for him to say that he would not hold the office. I do not know why he should be expected to resign his office because the appropriation is withheld any more than we should be expected to resign our offices if the appropriation for our compensation should be withheld. I therefore think—I say it with deference to Senators—that it should not be
